???: "I was wondering if it was possible to try playing Liliana's song through the broadcast. Within this city are many people who have yet to understand your song, so this is the perfect chance."

Singing through a magical device was, for Liliana, a bad idea.

Song should indeed be sung before an audience. And so, Liliana had begrudgingly refused. But he had laughed in a carefree way,

???: "I want to monopolize your figure. However, your singing voice absolutely cannot be monopolized. Songstress to everyone else, Liliana to me. Would that be possible?"

How had that weirdo dared to laugh in her face without malice? If this was how he wanted to convince her, she wanted to snort.

Liliana knew of many love stories of this world, having been chronicled in song.

In those love stories, their hearts swayed, became infatuated with love. She knew which kind of words would charm them, which kind of attitudes would make their hearts flutter, and which kind of love would be fulfilled.

And thus, Liliana was not innocent enough to be persuaded by such words.

Perhaps innocent, perhaps not innocent, but she did appreciate how "Songstress" sounded. It was an exaggeration such that she could not straighten her chest and say it suited her.

Kiritaka Muse expected Liliana to be a Songstress for him. Because that person had turned her into the Songstress of this city.

Liliana: "…"

To communicate, reverberate, tremble, this feeling—

No matter how dark the night was, even were it so pitch-black that seeing forward was impossible. Even then, morning would still arrive, as always.

More resolute than anyone, louder than anyone, she would believe in it and sing it.

The Songstress of the Watergate City of Pristella, Liliana Masquerade.

Liliana: "…"

With that sort of feeling, heat and pain could not be sensed anymore.

Everything of herself was being poured into the wrists that strummed the Lyulyre, the feet that danced in synchronicity, the throat that sang without rest.

Her whole being was being squeezed out, withering away. The entirety of her emotions, the entirety of her singing voice, everything.

Liliana: "…"

Singing, singing, singing, Liliana had not noticed.

That her ears no longer captured the lament of those whose hearts had been whisked away.

On the opposite side of the flaming waterways, those who had been sighing in lament now gazed upward, towards the empty sky.

No, not empty. There was the control tower wreathed in flame, from which a voice could be heard.

A miniature figure at the peak continued to cry out from a great distance.

Eyes could not leave her. Their complete focus was directed toward the ears, everyone holding their breath to listen to the song in rapt attention.

A song that should not have been heard was heard clearly by everyone.

This was no miracle, nor was it a simultaneous hallucination, nor was it the sharing of emotions provided by the Authority of the Sin Archbishop.

—This was the true blooming of the Divine Protection of Telepathy, the gift Liliana had been granted by the heavens.

A Divine Protection that had until now been subconscious, only at this moment was it capable of exerting the influence it was supposed to. Boosted by her singing ability, and by the realization of casting everything aside in this hopeless moment to help, it had become a tremendous force, flowing into the city.

Of course, Liliana was unaware of this. In addition, there was no one there to inform her of the situation.

Liliana only sang with all her heart and soul. Becoming a bard, putting her all into singing, turning everything into this instant.

Echoing here was, for certain, the music of Pristella's Songstress.

3

Priscilla: "—As expected, the arrangement I had prepared came to pass."

Priscilla laughed, holding a flaming sword of crimson, seemingly containing the very sun within.

The song had also reached Priscilla's ears. Liliana had taken center stage on the burning control tower, producing the most brilliant of songs.

Although the Yang Sword controlled what its flames turned to cinders, the heat they emitted was not fake. The inside of the control tower was hot enough to cook, and the stone tower would feel scorching. Even at this instant, certainly it was so hot that she would want to leap off.

Even so, from this song that transmitted all of Liliana's feelings, cries or complaints of pain were practically undetectable.

It was not that the feelings were not there. Rather, the undiluted pain was surpassed by song.

What a foolish conclusion. One which only a fool could reach, a most extreme foolishness. Proof that the zenith of foolishness could yield a foolish result which transcended reason.

Priscilla: "That one's foolishness is truly fascinating. Idiocy and foolishness are not alike. An idiot does not deserve a life, but a fool has the advantage of being amusing. And even more, she has demonstrated a worth beyond joy. Thus, she deserves my reward."

Before allowing Priscilla to finish her soliloquy, burning chains pressed close from overhead and to the left. The snake's jaw bore a flame, moving straight at the stopped Priscilla.

Priscilla snorted at that pinnacle of unsightliness.

Raising the Yang Sword, the crimson blade flashed in a slant. Interrupting the path of the attacks coming from above and from the left simultaneously, the approaching chains were forcibly severed with a single swing. The crisp sound seemed to ring twice nearly at the same time, and the freak's wicked tongue clicked at the sparks.

Sirius: "Both you and that girl are so damn annoying! What is so different about me and her?! The methods are different, but the essence is the same! It is proof that we can communicate with this one thing!"

Sirius shrieked loudly, drawing the burnt-off chains close.

Twisting her arms, angrily generating fire, the bloodshot eyes of the freak whose black cloak swayed violently were directed at Liliana dancing atop the burning control tower.

Liliana's Divine Protection of Telepathy was incredibly powerful, enough that it could affect the monster's perception. To the freak who was so perceptive to changes in the emotions of others, the effects of that song radiated without limit.

The citizens had been freed from that monster's curse of Wrath, which had taken root inside their hearts.

On the other side of the waterways still burning with white flame, within the eyes of the people who stood there were no traces of frenzy. What filled their eyes was not fervor, but only tears that fell gently.

It was impossible for the monster to capture the complex feelings from which those tears stemmed. Because rather than condensing into one feeling, it kept swaying.

Sirius: "That person, as long as that person is, it can be proven…! Why are you appearing before me to intercept my path?! Humans want to pursue, to become one indeed! This is how the world has continued on! And yet!"

Priscilla: "As is the nature of song, the accompanying feelings vary. When listening to a wonderful tune, even the meaning behind the word "wonderful" may differ. Screaming and yelling about emotions, yet displaying such a shallow understanding of what is most vital… This is what is referred to as "idiocy"."

Sirius: "EEEEEEEENOUGH ALREAAAAAAADY!!"

Sirius widened her eyes at Priscilla's merciless speech, and with a howl, her arms were put together. The colliding palms rattled the chains, and each arm violently unraveled the curled chains.

With the skin on arms being peeled off, the very flesh being scraped, with such painful deeds, Sirius spread her arms, forcefully swinging the split chains.

Flame travelled through the rotating chains, the whirling causing it to expand to the maximum of the chain's arc. The scorching flame became a round disk, and even Sirius herself caught alight because of the tremendous heat.

Priscilla: "Could it be, that the bandages are for such wounds?"

The bandages were for burn wounds. If the reason was as what had just been witnessed, then truly it was mere foolishness.

Faced with this greatest force, this greatest danger, Priscilla's attitude did not waver.

Two snakes of flame merged into one mighty flame, achieving greater firepower.

Priscilla gazed upon the vortex of flame that would not leave a shadow behind with an expression of listlessness.

Sirius: "Feelings trembling… these intense emotions of the heart, this passion, this Wrath!"

Leaving herself to hatred and abominated feelings, Sirius's flames turned into waves of heat.

The flames that struck with rotating momentum no longer gave off the appearance of iron chains. In the instant that the flame had blossomed, the role of the chains that had served as conduit had come to an end.

The chains that had performed their role had melted in a flash, and only a mass of fire flew at Priscilla. A mass of heat as if enveloping the entire world rather than merely line of sight, this was a ranged attack no different from a cloud falling from the sky.

Utterly impossible to dodge, the only defense was to be swallowed thus. And so, regarding the flame itself, there was only one option.

Priscilla: “—Should my decree be the decree of the heavens, the aurora of the Yang Sword shall follow as one.”

Faced with the wave of flame pressing close, Priscilla lifted the Yang Sword.

Not as if feeling uncomfortable with the situation, merely raising the blade high.

Sirius: “Disappear—!!”

Priscilla: “…”

In the instant of the collision, Sirius spat venomous hatred at Priscilla, on the other side of the flame.

Priscilla did not regard her fury. The only sound that reached her was the song.

The instant when the heat wave should have consumed her body, the Yang Sword changed.

From the sword which all jewels had previously shone, shine suddenly vanished. Only crimson light and crimson blade remained in Priscilla’s grip.

It was thus, that the sword without its light met the flame.

Priscilla: “…”

Without the radiance of the jewels, the sword became one of ordinary steel, losing its divinity. Therefore, it did not have enough power to repel the approaching flame. If there had been an onlooker at the moment, perhaps that would be impression they would have been left with.

—But the result was the precise opposite.

Priscilla: “—Devour completely.”

Priscilla murmured, sweeping the Yang Sword to the side. She would be consumed by the flames and vanish.

And yet, her existence had yet to vanish after her whisper. Not only that, her body bore no traces of the heat wave's aftereffects, beautiful and constituted as always.

Waves of fire that boasted such power had been swept away without trace. Almost as if only the Yang Sword, glinting with reclaimed light, knew where the flames had gone.

Priscilla: "Hm—"

Grabbing the Yang Sword once again, Priscilla's expression shifted. Where once there had been a confident smile, now were stiffened cheeks as she hastened her steps.

Right in her line of sight was Sirius, sprinting quickly. The freak's fierce sprint pulled her far from Priscilla. Clearly, she had begun running without ascertaining the result of the flame from earlier.

In other words, from the very start, Sirius's target had not been Priscilla.

Sirius: "Stop with that jarring song—! The Wrath I share with that person, you cannot deny it so arbitrarily—!"

Her eyes bloodshot, Sirius rushed straight toward the control tower from which Liliana sang.

The white flame surrounding the control tower was a flame that allowed only Liliana freedom. Once Sirius rushed in, she would surely be burnt by that fire.

Something of this degree, even the freak would understand. Then, the target was,

Priscilla: "Idiot, what are you forcing me to—"

Propelled with explosive momentum, Priscilla's form tore through the courtyard. Although Sirius was fast indeed, Priscilla was superior.

Sirius's initial advantage had gone to waste, and Priscilla directed the Yang Sword's swing at the monster's back. Even if she had wanted to, the freak no longer had a means to defend. Without the chains on her arms, she had no way to meet Priscilla's sword.

Priscilla: "Stop, commoner—"

Sirius: "So annoying, you stop already!!"

Priscilla: "—?!"

Just before the Yang Sword slashed Sirius diagonally, Priscilla's body was stilled in midair. Her entire body frozen as if forcibly fixed in place, Priscilla's throat was caught by the sudden force.

Sirius lifted her leg, and from the hem of her pants, came the sound of chains that had been so familiar during the battle—

Sirius: "RAAAAAAAAAAH!"

Priscilla: "Tch!"

Rather than from the arm, a strike from the chain wrapped around her legs lashed out towards Priscilla, who had been frozen in her tracks.

This time, with her entire body halted, the attack was impossible to defend against.

At the ferocious attack from the chain several times faster than the ones from the arms, the front of Priscilla's dignified visage burst. The sound of steel on flesh rang out, and the clasp which bound Priscilla's orange hair was sent soaring, causing her beautiful hair to scatter.

Her face was left unmarred. However, her pride had been wounded.

Unable to neutralize its power she was flung backwards, increasing the distance between her and Sirius.

During this time, Sirius had approached the control tower, using unconventional movements to shift her strength and body weight to the same leg that had struck its chain at Priscilla, and then released it.

The serpent of flame wrapped around the control tower with violent momentum, and the foundation of stone tower collapsed with a howl. Fragmenting, collapsing, the material of the stone tower's foundation was consumed by waves of fire, tilting from the impact of the huge flame.

—With Liliana still on it, in one motion, the stone tower tilted and collapsed.

Priscilla, with orange hair scattered across her shoulders, watched the tower's demise with widened eyes. Sirius's silhouette was visible. But atop the tilting tower, Liliana's silhouette was absent.

And yet, Liliana's song continued. Even now, after her feet had toppled, after she had been caught up in the destruction.

Liliana devoted herself to her duties, continuing to captivate the inhabitants' hearts.

Priscilla: "—Your devotion is for a great cause!"

And so, Priscilla strode forwards, towards Sirius, without hesitation.

If Liliana's voice were interrupted, the influence over the peoples' hearts would return to Sirius. Making a split-second decision, the Yang Sword shone brighter, and Priscilla split the ground with one kick.

Sirius: "You insensitive egoist! Do not justify your inability to empathize with others! You, who are unable to connect with people, are defective. The natural state of humans is to mutually understand, to merge with one another!"

Priscilla: "You commoner—"

Having chosen to rush forward, Priscilla was cursed by Sirius, the destroyer of the control tower.

She leapt, and with the force of her heel the iron chain stuck downwards. An impact, and flames moving belatedly created an explosion, reaching for Priscilla's body as she ran towards the blast. A pause, and then continued steps.

Bathed in that heatwave, Priscilla's eyes were unwavering.

The same could be said of Sirius's frenzy. The freak could no longer hear any other voice.

A conclusion. Both of them held different senses of value; hence, they were completely incompatible with one another.

Both: "…"

The tilting control tower made a splitting noise, stone blocks caught up in the destruction and scattered, smoke curled and flames spread, and the courtyard became a flaming hellscape.

Those standing at the waterway where the tower had collapsed to shrieked with tears in their eyes as they fled. But not tears of sorrow. For something else, for the sound of song.

Sirius: "To love is to be one—"

Priscilla: "No—To love is to tolerate and to accept differences. For everyone to look at the same person, to feel the same way, to share the same feelings, could be naught else but nauseating and disgusting…"

Priscilla bent down to sweep aside the chain, leaning to meet the rushing attack. Sirius clicked her tongue and created several walls of flame to block the way, yet the Yang Sword mowed them all down, the crimson blade drinking it all.

The distance shrank, the chain attacks increased in speed and number.

The sound of steel colliding with steel was swallowed by the roar of the collapsing control tower. Running through that pleasant sound, Priscilla's power finally reached Sirius's ears.

Priscilla: "It is over."

Sirius: "—Well, how about this?!"

The very same moment Priscilla raised the Yang Sword, Sirius opened her coat.

Around the freak's waist, much like her hands and feet, chains had been tightly bound, and bound by the chains around her torso was a young girl with curled blonde hair.

???: "Mmm!"

What Priscilla had no way of knowing was that name of the girl was Tina. Since the beginning of this turmoil, she had been held hostage by Sirius. Although Subaru had mentioned her during the strategy meeting for Wrath, this matter had been perceived by Priscilla's brain as trivial.

However, without hesitation, Priscilla swung the Yang Sword at the hostage before her.

The Yang Sword did not hesitate in momentum, and, slanted, it ran through Tina's and Sirius's bodies. The blade of the Yang Sword, which boasted fearsome heat, soundlessly cut through the protective chains around her body, severing them in half and achieving its purpose.

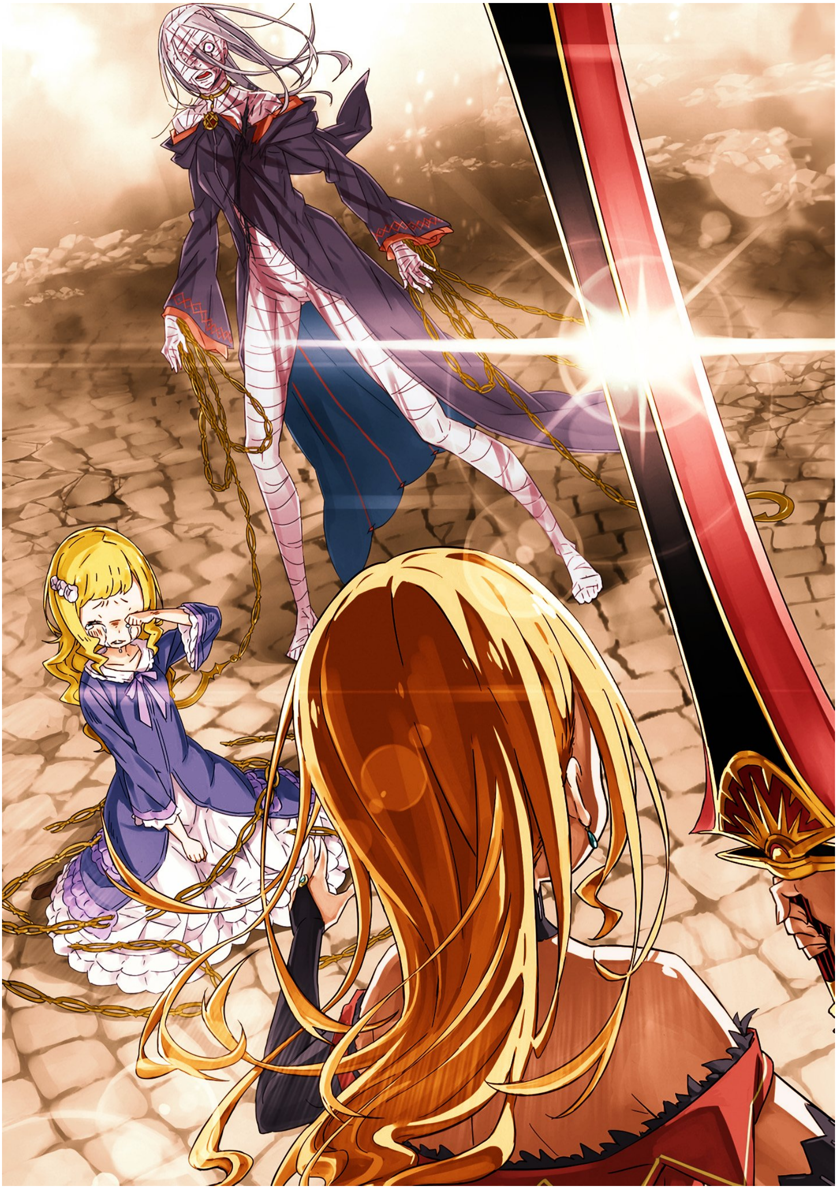
Sirius: "—Oh my, oh my?"

Priscilla: "My Yang Sword burns that which I want it to burn, and cleaves that which I want it to cleave."

The chain had been torn, the body of the bound girl freed. The girl who collapsed to her knees lifted her face, stained with tears, stunned by the feeling of the sword passing through her body.

But the result was that, upon the body of the young girl, no cruel wound from a blade could be seen.

Instead, it was Sirius who had been attacked, now retreating. The freak looked down at her wound, and slowly shook herself while looking back towards Priscilla.



Sirius: “This agony… you…”

Priscilla: “Is there any reason as to why I would feel your pain? I care naught about becoming one. As you continue your delusions, you shall die alone.”

Priscilla struck with her sword again, now connecting sideways with the monster’s neck.

With startling sound and momentum, Sirius’s body convulsed on the cobblestones, sprinkling fresh blood, and was swept towards the waterway, falling in.

The sound of the water rang, and Priscilla looked at the Yang Sword.

Priscilla: “The sunlight has ceased and the sun has darkened? How so very troublesome.”

After she spoke, the collapsing control tower fell apart completely. Most of it became rubble, and the top-most floor where Liliana had been also felt the collapse, becoming rubble.

From the control tower that had toppled onto the waterway—Of course, no song could be heard anymore.

Tina: “…Ah.”

Looking at the pile of rubble, a youthful voice called to the squinting Priscilla.

Tina. Her expression was still one of disbelief at being freed, and Priscilla lowered her head, only to see Tina’s eyes tremble as tears began to drip down.

Priscilla released a sigh at that figure. The Yang Sword had already disappeared.

Likewise, the white flame that lit the waterways was gone, and many people approached it. A few seemed to be headed to the collapsed rubble, searching for the buried Songstress.

Priscilla: “Noisy night, and a noisy crowd. At the place where poem should take the stage, there is nothing but negligence—How tiresome.”

At a glance, that was the same listlessness as always, but some emotion peeked through that listlessness.

That Priscilla turned her back to the sobbing child, looking then at the waterway.

Priscilla: “But, not bad. Have praises.”

4

Slowly, slowly flowing along with the water.

My body was sluggish and my vitality completely drained, how to put it, a body covered in wounds? How can I say it, full of trauma? In other words, it was a feeling something like being unable to even move.

Liliana: “Oh—ah—”

My throat was utterly exhausted, even my fingertips were unable to budge.

Luckily, the outfit of a bard was exposed and had very little fabric, so even falling into and absorbing water did not mean that it would gain weight, increasing my odds of survival.

But right now, I had no physical strength to swim with, so just floating along was barely accomplished. Well, just floating along like this, sooner or later would mean growing cold, wouldn’t that be quite troublesome?!

A voice from within cried out loudly. I was going to fall asleep like this. I’d die.

No, no, no, no, no, no, no, no, no.

Liliana: “Ah—eh—”

Burning control tower, powerful flames.

With my entire body seemingly in a state of being baked, at first, falling into the waterway had been pleasantly cool, but now it was growing cold. Ehhh, that was bad news.

Speaking of which, the attitude of not escaping, but staying in the collapsing tower to sing until it fell in the water, was probably more disastrous.

Because it’d felt nice. It was so powerful that it made me think I’d lived for that moment.

In fact, I hoped I was not mistaken and that everything’d worked out alright. At any rate, my head was still attached, so as long as Priscilla-sama hadn’t been killed, everything’d gone smoothly. If so, that was nice.

Yeah, well, that’s alright, then.

As a bard, I still had a lot of aspirations to fulfill, but in a sense it could be said that I’d been able to accomplish something I needed to accomplish.

Perhaps the goal of leaving songs to be passed down in history had not been met, but if everyone who had been there had indeed been saved, I hoped I had left enough of a mark to be a topic of conversation at a family dinner or something.

Liliana: “Uh—uh—”

By the way, the fact that I’d been repeatedly making strange cries since a while ago, this probably served as a signal that I was still living in this world. Also, because I felt that my whole body was about to collapse from exhaustion if I didn’t shake it off with my lungs…

The proof that I was still me was all in my voice, after all. Something like that. Anyway, it felt like it was about time for it to end.

Although so much had happened, overall it was a happy life.

Well, thank you for everything so far—UWAHHH??!!

Liliana: “Ow! Owwww! The top of my head hurts!”

???: “Ahh?! What was that just now?! Liliana?!”

My head felt as if violently struck, as if having collided with a boat floating on the waterway or something.

What was more, coming from that boat, was the voice of a familiar man.

Liliana: “Is it, Kiritaka-san?”

Kiritaka: “Is that, Liliana?! So glad to see you again! But why are you in the waterway?! No, I’ll pull you from there first. Please wait!”

The boat swayed and swayed as Kiritaka-san flailed about on the boat. To tell the truth, it hurt quite a lot, because the boat was blocking my body from riding the waterway’s current.

Even though it was horribly painful, I was so shocked I forgot to cry out.

Ack, speaking of which, it seems Kiritaka-san picked me up. There was nothing wrong with that, though, really.

Kiritaka: “Alright, almost… alright, got you!”

Kiritaka-san stretched both his hands into the water, pulling my floating form up. At that moment, his hand were touching my breasts, but, eh, there was no strength to be mad at him right now. It was fine.

Being pulled onto the boat, moving still felt sluggish.

Kiritaka: “Your body’s become so cold. Wait for me, Liliana. I’ll use a fire stone right now. Your body cannot be left soaked.”

With a towel, he wiped my hair and face.

His hands were unexpectedly gentle, almost gentlemanly. Suddenly a sense of relief rushed up, and I released a breath, suddenly sighing.

Liliana: “Kiritaka… what have you been up to?”

Kiritaka: “Me… You mean me? Well, there was a lot, but, hmm, playing an active part in retaking the city!”

Pushing back the bangs he was proud of, perhaps his teeth were shining. Since I didn’t have the strength to open my eyes, I couldn’t see it, but it seemed to surface to my mind’s eye.

I couldn’t help but laugh, which seemed to surprise Kiritaka.

I wanted to hear all sorts of Kiritaka-san’s problems, and I had a few things I wanted tell him too. Right now, I was really sleepy, but I just wanted to say this.

Liliana: “I’m really sleepy, so I’m going to sleep for a while, I…”

Kiritaka: “Ah, ah, alright. I’ll take you somewhere safe, don’t worry.”

Liliana: “If you don’t play any pranks on this sleeping me… Then from now on, let’s talk more…”

Kiritaka: “Uehhhh?”

I knew he wouldn’t, but I had to say it nonetheless. When I woke up, definitely some embarrassing words would be exchanged, so please stay troubled until then.

—”To be your Songstress is wonderful”, just preparing to say that much was fine.

Chapter 68:
Name Eating Gourmet

—The ruthless skirmish, which had broken out in the Watergate City of Priestella against the Witch Cult was, at last, approaching its finale.

In the east of the city, stood a single church covered in ice, where stabbing pillars of ice, tall enough to make one raise his eyes, had been erected.

In the north of the city, the waterways flared up at once, and the incandescent stone monument roared up and crumbled down.

In the west of the city, a part of the waterway got destroyed, and the water, flowing into the underground, resulted in flooding.

In the core of the city, the nucleus of the city's faculty, the city hall lost its foundation, and subsequently lost its shape.

The opening up of hostilities caused severe damage in various areas, and etched the menace of the existence known as the Witch Cult in the city. However, there were those who resisted and repelled away the malice, fighting a defensive battle with confined war potential, and tried to fulfill their purpose.

And, amidst the fight for the watergate city, if there was a battlefield to be named where things were not proceeding favorably, which one was it? That could perhaps, be said for this battlefield.

—Yes. Breaking out unanticipated and unforeseen, was the face-off and battle with the Witch Cult Sin Archbishop representing Gluttony, Lye Batenkaitos.

Lye: "Haha~! That, won'tdowon'tdowon'tdowon'tdowon'tdowon'tdowo~n'tdo~! What went wrong with you, what do you want to do, what are you going to do, what happened to you?!"

This place was commonly known as the Waterway Street, surrounded by slender and convoluted waterways.

In the open plaza of the Waterway Street, was a single petite phantom laughing loudly and jumping about quickly and keenly.

Using his short limbs and waving about his long, dark brown hair was a young boy.

The boy, in his mid-teens, had put on only pieces of rags on his body, such that it would not be strange to confuse him with a vagrant child at sight.

However, it could not be said that it was not difficult to dismiss his outward appearance as just a trait of his, but instead, that impression carried onto his true self as well.

On top of that, the very existence of the loudly laughing boy was heterogeneous, distorted, and abominable.

At a single glance, the sense oppressive pressure his entire body exerting could be understood. It was the fatal insanity calling upon parts of instinct which are chipped off and neglected in normal daily life by humans.

By just that, everyone carefully observed the abnormality of his existence.

He was a blasphemer who trampled upon the human realm, human wishes, and the human society.

He was a Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult, the great evil who kicked the human heart and humanity itself.

???: “The opponent is just one child! Surround him and don’t let him escape! Bring him down!”

???: “Yeah, it’s just lone brat! Catch him and tear him apa~rt!”

The commanding loud voice overlapped with the infuriating laughter of the youth.

While glaring at the men approaching him, Lye Batenkaitos of Gluttony stepped ahead and shortened the distance rather lightheartedly, instead of stepping down.

Lye: "—~tsu."

Putting a halt to their words, the white robed men leapt upon Batenkaitos.

Each one of the white robed men were mercenaries of the organization White Dragon's Scales which had been left by Kiritaka. Holding short swords in their hands, they struck Gluttony with their blades from all directions.

Against the synchronous offensive, which had no disorder in its cooperation, Batenkaitos,

Lye: "There are some frayed spots, that won't do."

Sliding into the gap of the "perfectly ordered" attack, he evaded four of the swords with minimal movement.

Positioning his body away and dodging the blades, he slashed one blade down using the dagger tied up to his right arm, and kicking one person's torso, he broke through the enclosure. In front of him, was standing someone with a huge figure, with his arms crossed.

???: "O-O~h! Such desperation, huh, yo~u!"

He was Felt's attendant, Gaston.

Having robbed away one of the Sin Archbishop's daggers using his secret technique, he now, with his physique, dashed towards Batenkaitos and tried to slam into him.

Seeing him, Batenkaitos rounded his eyes, and smiled shortly afterwards. It was a smile befitting his age, however, the sharp canines in his mouth induced uneasiness and anxiety.

Lye: "It seems you're doing well, uncle. Not so bad!"

Gaston: "I've still not reached the age to he called an uncle…

bo~y?!”

Batenkaitos jumped, and his right leg thrust into the side of Gaston’s face, who had come plunging onto him.

Receiving the blow on his cheeks, Gaston flinched, and gave a hateful look to Batenkaitos.

Just like the blow of the dagger, this attack did not pierce through Gaston either. Though the principle was ambiguous, Gaston’s body had been completely killing off the impacts of the attacks.

At the same pace, Gaston stretched his arms, grabbing the continuously moving Gluttony —

Lye: “Palm of the Fist King—”

Keeping his legs raised, Batenkaitos muttered something. His palm came in contact with Gaston’s torso. Compared to a kick, it had no might or velocity, it was a mere action of touching.

However, the moment he lightly pushed in his arm, his body curled and broke down.

Gaston: “Ugh, ghu~e?!”

Kneeling down, Gaston vomited out gastrointestinal fluids.

Walking by the side of the body who had broken down in front of him, Batenkaitos, who had broken through the enclosure, turned back and tilted his neck.

That’s all you’ve got? is what his gesture suggested, and the White Dragon’s Scales could not hide their severe expression seeing their pride get damaged.

White Dragon’s Scales: “You monster…!”

The word that had leaked out of someone’s mouth, was the clear proof of Batenkaitos’s ability.

The agonizing voice may have had dim jealousy mixed into it, or it was simply misheard.

???: "…We have much lower chances of being able to strike a decisive blow, than what I had earlier conjectured."

Observing the battlefield, which could not be called a competition even when painted under favorable light, Otto licked his dry lips and desperately rotated his head.

In the face-off with Gluttony, their war potential, which was directly conflicting with the enemy, was in no way dependable—of course, it was true that all of them were risking their lives, but it was also a fact that it was still lacking.

The White Dragon's Scales left by Kiritaka amounted to seven people, the two of Felt and Gaston in her company, Otto was a solitary force, this made for a total of ten people. If someone who had wrapped up their battle on an early note were to join up with them here, then that would make for a great turn of the tables– that would be absolutely ideal, but,

Otto: "I do not trust my luck enough to be expecting such good fortune to shower upon me."

The life of Otto Suwen, went hand in hand with hardship and unfairness. Otto believed that nothing known as good fortune existed, and the result could be derived only through one's own hard work, preparation and actions.

For him, good fortune would be having a nuisance Divine Protection and being born into an understanding home, and having his life saved by Subaru, who had killed a Sin Archbishop.

As he believed he already ran out of it, he did not get unnecessarily negative regarding his bad luck.

???: "That Water Dragon brought by nii-chan can't be used anymore, right?"

Standing beside Otto, who was sunk in his own thoughts, called out Felt who was also watching the same situation.

What her crimson eyes were glaring at, was at the other side of the sword fighting Gluttony and the others—lying abandoned on the stone pavement, with its long neck twitching, was the form of a dying Water Dragon.

The pitiable Water Dragons, who had been summoned by Otto but thrashed away by Batenkaitos, unfortunately, were unlikely to return to the front lines.

Otto: "Sadly, I don't think they can be pushed any further. These were all of the water dragons I had spoken to before coming here… I could speak to other water dragons and have them do the same thing but, would you like to use them and escape?"

Felt: "That joke hurt. Just that delusional diva escaping is fine, and our trump card isn't just one, it's in two parts. The second one is, well, I'm preparing it."

Saying that, Felt glanced at the long and slender package her petite body had grasped.

Wrapped in a white cloth, her Trump Card seemed to be the magic weapon her attendant had brought. She had stated that even Reinhard could not evade it, but a burdensome mechanism was required for its usage, and until that was fulfilled, it could not be put to use.

Felt: "On top of that, that delusional diva aside, nii-chan or I can't escape even if tried to. Because it seems that bastard is targeting us."

Otto: "If I may be honest, that's the thing I want to be excused from the most."

Otto dejectedly lowered his shoulders, at the words of Felt, who inhaled with her nose.

But, he was unable to deny her words, because he was able to sense the strength of the warm looks being given to them, even amidst the fierce battling.

Batenkaitos leaked out warm sighs, with moist eyes and blushing cheeks, and frequently turned towards Otto.

Though it was a gaze with the color suggesting a desire to harvest, but the true meaning behind it was only the lurking appetite of a hungry ferocious beast.

As per the taste of the beast of prey, drops of blood had realized into top-class flesh, was all there was to it. Though it was not honoring in the least, three people here had realized in the aesthetic-appreciating eyes of Batenkaitos.

Otto and Felt, along with a man with an unkempt beard, who was leading the White Dragon's Scales. Giving orders to his men, he repeatedly clashed with Batenkaitos and quickly returned back to his position here.

The man, with a serious face, jumped out of battle and gave thought to the fight's circumstance, all while taking swift steps around,

White Dragon's Scales: "It's Dynas. It's thanks to him our young master's escape was successful."

Otto: "Being successful in that is Felt-sama's group's achievement. On top of that, having Kiritaka-san escape was also to aid us for our victory. With this…"

If Kiritaka, who had escaped from this place, was to move according to Otto's instructions, a different possibility would rise. Unfortunately, though it was something more like a prayer and had no proof, but in any case, it should not go unfavorably.

Having more ways to win, to reach victory, can never be something negative. Once any of those ways are put to use, what is left is to simply wait for how it turns out.

"…"

Seeing Otto, quiet and shaking his head, the man—Dynas, made an astonished expression, but then changed it. It was the color of being convinced.

Dynas: “I see, it seems like it’s just as how I had heard. As expected of the internal affairs official of Emilia-sama’s place, who had sent one of the Witch Cult’s higher-ups to its death. It seems I can expect you to have your own dish for this Sin Archbishop to taste as well.”

Otto: “Thank you for such an inflated evaluation. Um, I’m sorry, by the way everyone, do you happen to know what kind of work the internal affairs official is supposed to do? I believe it is somewhat different from what I am doing…?”

Dynas: “Such politeness too, huh. Also, our internal affairs officials are going around visiting shelters and taking care of the victims. Isn’t that kind of work internal affairs officials are supposed to do?”

The damage he had done to the image of internal affairs officials was immense.

In the past one year, he had decided to give up on the post of internal affairs official, but he never came to terms with the changes that will result due to that.

Whose fault was it. Was it perhaps because such situations, like natural disasters, kept repeating? It was Subaru’s fault. Once he returned safe, he would definitely set things straight. That’s what he had decided.

Otto: “Well then—”

Let’s put things of post battle for later, and focus on the current situation.

Ahead of Otto’s sight, Batenkaitos repeatedly intermingled with the White Dragon’s Scales and Gaston, and making clear his extraordinary combat strength, he swept his feet.

However, what was utmost perplexing was him not even trying to swing his right arm’s dagger.

Lye: “Even though such nice adults are all ganging up, you ca~n’t even catch a single brat?! That won’t do, that wouldn’t do, will that do, can that do, that could never do!”

Unraveling his fangs, Batenkaitos dodged the men with just the handling of his feet. His free paced movements, with strikingly swaying movements of the upper body, and the swords eventually cut through the sky.

The movements of his upper and lower body were totally different, as if two separate systems entirely. As that eccentricity reflected in Otto's eyes, Dynas unintentionally gulped down his threat.

Otto: "Dynas-san?"

Dynas: "Ah, no… sorry. His movements are just a bit… O~h?!"

Felt: "Don't you get scared with such a huge figure!"

With his mouth shut, Dynas tried to deny the thoughts that were coming up in his mind. Standing behind him, Felt gave a kick to his back.

Dynas turned back, and Felt, who puffed up and reddened her cheeks, raised up her eyes at him.

Felt: "Once you put your hands in pocket, all that's left to do is to choose what to take and what to leave. If you'll be chased after either way, then it's better to just use whatever you got. You get it?"

Dynas: "Why are you using the point of view of a thief?"

Otto tilted his head at Felt's advice, while Dynas, who was right next to him, shook his head. He initiated his words by saying "I guess so", and looked back at Felt,

Dynas: "It's just how miss said. You just have to say whatever comes up in your mind, and find a lead out of it. For the moment, what I feel is just that all this is just odd but…"

Miss, which is how Dynas referred to Felt as, it seemed as if he had not noticed her being a Royal Candidate. But, though he judged the mistake here, Otto decided not to mention it. Subsequently, he carefully listened to Dynas' words.

Dynas: “That Sin Archbishop… he may just look like a brat, but his fighting is good, his movements are good, he has too much expertise, frankly. Leaving it to just our physical abilities… would, again, still not be the correct answer.”

Felt: “—? Isn’t that like being born with good fighting skills? Like how Reinhard was?”

Otto: “I would like to simply give up if he is comparable to Reinhard-san.”

Felt’s knight, the kingdom’s strongest sword, Reinhard.

Currently, he had accompanied Subaru and was supposed to have had been clashing against Greed, but his power was something Otto, who was only on the level of being capable of self-defense, had only felt upon his skin.

Just being beside him could make one feel a sense of absolute safety, and amazement at the same time. Kingdom’s strongest was no understatement. In fact, it would not be wrong to call him the world’s strongest.

On the other hand, a strong sense of revulsion and an unnerving feeling boiled up by simply coming in contact with Batenkaitos. It was unlike from what could be sensed by Reinhard.

Of course, his unnatural fighting strength was unquestionably undeniable.

Dynas : “It’s not like that either. I’ve lived enough, and faced enough battles to say… that brat’s fighting technique can’t be explained by just talent. His movements are that of someone who’s stacked them up for years and years.”

At Dynas’ words, Otto and Felt glanced at Batenkaitos once again.

At just that moment, Batenkaitos had received a short sword’s attack with his arm. Gripping the wrist of the one holding the sword, Batenkaitos gyrated his body, and turning him upside down, he threw his body to the ground.

Furthermore, as the men commenced their pursuit, Gluttony's feet glided on the cobblestone drawing a circle, and freely using his limbs, he destroyed their balance and made them fall.

Unquestionably, that fluent and elegant movement had the power to draw a line between being refreshing and the violent ambience Batenkaitos wore. His undeniable art of having a system of a variety of martial arts, had been cultivated into himself.

The young boy, who looked fourteen, had perfected such techniques which would take years and years to master—?

Dynas: "I suppose, someone called a martial arts genius may be able to do this but… I don't want to think that such a brat was blessed with that talent."

Batenkaitos' mastery was such that Dynas had to say that much. At that moment, Otto realized what the jealousy in the leaked words of one of the white robed men, who were fighting Gluttony, meant. They, who were fighting the battle, had realized this truth before Otto and the rest. That is why, they were—.

Otto: "Dagger handling, unarmed fighting skills, perfect martial arts techniques…?"

Saying that, Otto resumed to doubt the reason behind it once again. "Is that even possible?" was the only thought that came up in his mind.

"…"

He had heard of people being sent to colosseum at a very young age, and the ones who become swordsmen are taught and trained fighting techniques in the Vollachian Empire to the south. If Batenkaitos was to be in such an environment, it may not have had been impossible for him to acquire such skills at this age, but those skills in fighting techniques would again, be different.

The only way for him to learn and cultivate those would be to train under an equally and appropriately apt trainer.

Otherwise—

Otto: “To steal it away… No, to eat it like food?”

Otto had already heard Subaru mention that Gluttony was an existence who ate the Name and Memories of its opponents. The truth is, Otto had the knowledge of the form of a young girl who had both of those eaten, and had gone into a state of not being present in anyone’s memories. Hard to believe, but he surely did not eat something which was visible to the eyes. However, till now, what happens to that which gets eaten, was a thought that did not dawn upon him.

Possibly, Gluttony had been storing the eaten memories of his opponents and using them.

The techniques of a martial artist who had trained for over ten years, or the fighting skills of a warrior well acquainted with the battlefield, or even emulating the attack of a young girl, who had been by Subaru’s side and supporting him—.

Otto: “He’s using magic!!”

Felt: “Gaston!”

Lye: “El Huma.”

As the shocking attack commenced, Otto’s shout and Batenkaitos’ chant echoed at the same time.

A sound resonated in the area as the air crystallized, and the icicles subsequently produced, swiftly moving, aimed for the startled White Dragon’s Scales.

However, against the rain of ice, Gaston stood firm, with his arms spread. The giant, with his normal defense, smashed all of the ice that came in contact with him with his body. Against the destruction, the White Dragon’s Scales dove behind his back, in order to reduce the impairment being inflicted upon them. However, they were still unable to prevent the damage.

Lye: “Onii-san’s judgement was good. It seems it couldn’t become any more of a surprise attack than what we had thought.”

Watching the torment, Batenkaitos, who was behind the magic, raised the edge of his mouth.

Gaston, who had acted as a firm wall, sighed out a hoarse exhale, and the six of the White Dragon's Scales behind his back lay injured. With one bleeding heavily, and two crouching, who had been wounded on their legs. The other three could not be described as uninjured either. Their war potential had been halved, and on top of that—

Lye: "You saying this means, could it be that our trick became clear?"

Otto: "…Well, I wonder."

Lye: "Onii-san, we won't be fooled. Before suffering in pain, can't you stop acting like a merchant."

Responding to Otto, and threatening to make him suffer, Batenkaitos' form disappeared the next instant.

No, he dashed with his swift natural movements, fast enough to make one think he had disappeared.

His petite frame glided by Gaston, onto the side of the immobile White Dragon's Scales.

In the blink of an eye, the mobile three flew away from the spot, but the wounded three were unable to flee.

Lye: "Asta. Lookfelt. Hicks."

Leaking out a whisper, Batenkaitos softly caressed the shoulders of the three.

In front of everyone observing with widened eyes, wondering what he was doing, the bodies of three jumped, once they had been touched by Batenkaitos. And, Batenkaitos turned back, and raised his left hand,

Lye: "Lick."

And, he licked his empty left palm. At his action, Otto was immediately swallowed by discomfort.

What had happened, something had unquestionably happened. However, he was unaware of what had happened, and that was not all he was unaware of.

Otto: “The ones who are lying at his feet… Who are they?”

What Otto’s fingers were pointing at, were the feet of Batenkaitos, who had his lengthy tongue stretched out.

At the feet of the malice which had taken the form of the young boy, lay the figures of three people. Though they were lying there, their identities were unknown. Possibly, based on their clothing, they could be members of the White Dragon’s Scales, but when did they appear, and when did they get defeated?

Lye: “Sad, how sad, so sad, quite sad, pretty sad, because it is sad. Even if our reunion turns only unilateral, we can’t help bu~t want satisfaction!”

Otto: “Dynas-san! Those three are?”

Dynas: “I don’t know! I haven’t even seen them before! But—!”

Even if it was told that the ones wearing the same clothes were unknown allies, it was still not convincing. Even so, neither did Dynas’ voice have any deceit, nor did it have any composure. Charging ahead as if flying, he raised the short swords in both of his hands and slashed into Batenkaitos.

Lye: “Stop it, Dynas. It’s an old relationship. Hometown’s purification is one step ahead, so crossing swords with comrades like this is foolish.”

Dynas: “—?! You, from where did you, about that—!”

Carelessly trampling upon Dynas’ circumstances, Batenkaitos raised the edge of his right dagger. Lightening the blow of the two short swords with his dagger, Gluttony struck Dynas' chest with his knees, and at the same pace, he leapt backwards due to the resultant force.

Dynas coughed as he gripped to his chest, but managed to retrieve the collapsed three strangers.

Seeing Dynas in that shape, Batenkaitos let out a sigh.

Lye: "Don't stubbornly stick to the vessels. What is important is the heart and the inside, no? What lets a person be like that person isn't the outside, but the inside. We know about your hard work, Dynas. It wasn't your fault you couldn't protect Milian and Meili. Your luck was bad."

Dynas: "Shutupshutupshutupshutu~p! What do you! Know about me! Stop saying things per your own wishes! You rotten demo~n!"

Raising an enraged voice, and forgetting the damage's pain, Dynas charged at the enemy again. He angled his two short swords and aimed for Batenkaitos' face, but making a face as if he was acquainted with the attack, Batenkaitos dodged it with ease. At the same pace, Batenkaitos stretched his hand for Dynas' back.

Lye: "Woh?"

Gaston: "How long will you go ignoring us"

Felt: "Is what we're saying, you idiot!"

Gaston aimed directly for Batenkaitos' slim waist from behind. Batenkaitos' elbow thrashed into his nose, but Gaston did not fall back because of the hit's impact.

Furthermore, while Gaston stalled Batenkaitos, Felt jumped in. She crashed her long and slim package which she had gripped in her hands into the susceptible back of his head.

Lye: "Idiot huh, how hurtful. Perhaps we, actually know much more than you do, you know?"

Felt: "Argh!"

But, Batenkaitos bent forward at Felt's attack, and then subsequently received it with his right arm's dagger by raising it. The vigorous strike gave rise to a crushing sound, however, its aim mostly missed, and Felt's stance came to be unguarded.

Seeing Felt and Dynas could leave together, his hands could also reach Gaston—so Batenkaitos' devilish hand, at the same pace, touched the three,

Otto: "I will not let you, though!"

Just when he was about to reach, the cast red hot magic stone reached Batenkaitos' feet. The moment he saw that, Batenkaitos' movement stopped, and Felt and Dynas withdrew with urgency.

Felt: "Don't let go, Gaston!"

Gaston: "I won't forget this, you wicked girl…!"

Gaston, standing firm, was unable to escape from Batenkaitos and was caught up in the magic stone's range. As the magic stone's glowing intensified, and the next instant, it gave rise to an explosion powerful enough to tear off the stone pavement.

Red and white light illuminated, and Felt rolled away from the explosion to the other side. Otto somehow grabbed her, and then glanced at the explosion's span.

These magic stones are what Otto constantly carried "just in case". Ever since the fight with Garfiel in the Sanctuary, he determined it would be better do so for his own safety.

It may be a means painful on his wallet, but its strength was nothing to laugh at.

Otto: "Is your companion alright?!"

Felt: "Hah, don't underestimate my giant. He's my armor. He won't be hurt by a meagre and soft attack. But…"

Just when she said that much, a giant figure emerged out of the smoke. It was Gaston. With his body having taken a sooty color, he smacked his body making a desperate face.

Gaston: “Gha~a~a~! Hot! Hot! Hot hot! I’ll die!”

Otto: “Even if you may be able to take explosions, I guess you can’t stop your body from warming or cooling.”

Felt sighed, seeing the form of her attendant agonizing in high fever. Though he had bathed in the might of the fire magic stone from close proximity, Gaston’s life did not appear to be in a serious condition.

Confirming that much, Otto turned his eyes back towards to smoke. The black fumes were rising at a reasonably good scale, so there was no way Batenkaitos, who was at its heart, had managed to defend himself. On the other side of the black smoke, was Dynas, knelt down, but he seemed to be safe.

And,

Lye: “Bennett. Calcifs. August.”

Otto: “—?!”

A whisper was heard, and all eyes turned away from the hypocenter.

There were visible the forms of three collapsed white clothes, and Batenkaitos in perfectly good health. The youth, once again, raised his left hand’s palm saying “lick”, and inched it closer to his mouth and licked it.

What followed was beyond understanding. Once again, three more unidentified white robed people appeared.

The way he had escaped from the hypocenter, and the unanticipated appearance of three more victims, all of it was beyond comprehension.

Felt: “Shit! What’s with them! From where… no, when…?”

Standing beside Otto, Felt violently scratched her beautiful blonde hair. She also, once again, was beginning to lose understanding what was the meaning of what she was seeing.

What must be considered urgent, even that was something Felt, right now, did not know. However, Otto understood. This, mysterious state.

Otto: “This is, what it means when the Name is eaten—!”

Disappearing from everyone’s memory, and bode only within Subaru and no one else, was a young girl named Rem. That very same phenomenon, was transpiring in front of his eyes right now.

Possibly, the collapsed men, who are supposedly members of White Dragon’s Scales, had gotten their names eaten by Batenkaitos. The result of that, was the disappearance of the memories of them being Present from the minds of Otto and the others.

That was why, it appeared as if they had appeared suddenly, and they did not know who they were either.

“…”

Fright rose within him. Once again, he comprehended the viciousness of the monster in front of his eyes.

If he straddled into the hands of Gluttony Lye Batenkaitos, in the worse case scenario, if Otto and the others were to face complete annihilation here, all traces of this battle, along with the existing evidences, will all disappear.

Of course, all memories of the resistance put up by them, and the fact that they were here itself as well.

The possibility of oneself disappearing, and the disappearance of all people who would look back upon oneself—in other words, isn’t it the greatest fear in this world, far greater than any other fears.

Otto turned pallid. Even though they had not reached the same conclusion, Felt and Dynas’ face complexions were equally bad. He realized how ignorant they had been, and how recklessly they were acting.

It made him believe, that the real choice here was to escape caring for themselves or not—.

Felt: “Damn it, he pisses me off. Should we try the same way, one more time?”

“…”

Otto sighed weakly, while Felt leaked out those words. Without thinking, Otto turned his eyes towards her face.

Felt’s complexion was that of utter stupefaction, in front of the aberrant situation. However, she was not lamenting. As if continuing to strengthen her heart, until she is completely driven into a corner.

Feeling moisture upon his entire body, Otto slapped his cheek.

Just what, was he doing by becoming such a weakling. Even if he went bankrupt, he wouldn’t name it as defeat until he is kicked out of the job. This was the crucial moment, when his future would be determined. There is still hope.

Seeing the form of two, Dynas and Gaston also stood up, making expressions of readiness and determination. And seeing the four stand up with the fighting spirit of steel, Batenkaitos made a satisfied expression,

Lye: “How nice, so nice, very nice, possibly it is nice, isn’t it nice, perhaps it is nice, because it is probably nice! Gluttonous drinking ~tsu! Gluttony ~tsu! You all are worthy of our dinner table! Even if it’s only among the starters, we’ll elevate you to first-class, Gaston. Mo~reover, we’ll pe~rfectly savor Felt and Dynas.”

Clasping his hands, Batenkaitos awarded the three with an unpleasant evaluation. Afterwards, Batenkaitos, with the same look in his eyes, glared towards Otto. Inclining his neck, the blasphemer commenced to give his comments on Otto with the same flow, and contrary to expectations, he made a dissatisfied expression.

Lye: “Seems intelligent, bad at giving up, seemingly mellow onii-san… but even then, huh.”

Otto: “What are you… No.”

Saying that much, Otto understood the reason for Batenkaitos’ dissatisfaction.

As if admiring, Batenkaitos had tenderly voiced the names of Felt and the others. His unique trait of eating Names, and the content of his speech made him realize it.

Batenkaitos, could not eat the Name of an opponent whose Name he did not know.

Henceforth, Gluttony could not eat the Name of Otto, whose name had not been mentioned here even once. His dissatisfaction, was due to that.

Otto: “I have a request for all three of you. Please, absolutely do not call my name.”

If his name is not mentioned, then at the very least, Batenkaitos’ goal will not be achieved.

Or, in fact, the number of casualties at the hands of Batenkaitos till now may have had been his way to try and know his name.

Him allowing Otto and the others such free discussion, may have had been him waiting for them to call each others’ names, and henceforth prepare for his meal—.

Felt: “My bad, nii-chan.”

Hearing Otto’s remarks once he had reasoned, said Felt with a somewhat apologetic tone.

She made an awkward expression, something which had not been witnessed by anyone in the situation yet.

Felt: “I, don’t know nii-chan’s name in the first place…”

Dynas: “Sorry, not-on-first-list-official-dono. Your position aside, your name has slipped from my mind…”

Otto: “Yes yes, indeed! It’s not as if, I’m particularly close to everyone, and neither am I major personality! God, da~mn it.”

Of course, Gaston too, made an expression suggesting his own ignorance, and shrugged his shoulders.

With relief made of both happiness and sadness, at the very least, his fright of his name being revealed to Batenkaitos had been diminished immensely, with this. That alone was unmistakable.

Lye: “Dynas aside, aren’t you two just covering for onii-san. If that isn’t so then we~ll… it seems asking it out would become quite a bother.”

Otto: “Giving up for today and falling back, is also something you can do, you know? Come sometime in the future, one day again… I suppose so. By that time, we can also prepare to give you a warm welcome in Reinhard-san’s presence.”

Lye: “To turn away in front of a feast, don’t make us do something so outrageous. Until our belly is satisfied, we will we will not go back. That’d make Louis a~ngry.”

Of course, Batenkaitos could not be convinced. The battle could not be terminated.

Felt: “Gaston, absolutely don’t let go next time.”

Gaston: “Just because I don’t get hurt, using me how you like…”

Felt: “I’ll go with you next time, for sure.”

Gaston, who tried to state his discontentment for the order, widened his eyes hearing Felt’s words. He then proceeded to laugh rudely, and roughly rubbed Felt’s head and disheveled her hair.

Gaston: “Stop joking around. If that geezer got to know that I made master push herself, who knows what he’ll do to me.

Felt: “Don’t touch my head. The only one who can do that is grandpa Rom.”

Gaston: “That’s why I’m doing it.”

Felt snorted her nose, with her hair disheveled, and standing next to her was Gaston. Next to him was Dynas wielding his two short swords, and Otto counted the number of magic stones in his sleeves.

Three on his left sleeve, two on his right. They must be used carefully.

Otto: “He touches with his left hand, and then eats is what I think. If you get touched, please think that it’s all over.”

Gaston: “That’s, way too difficult even by just the sound of it, no?”

Dynas: “Even one slash at his any of his vitals with a sword should be enough. If we can do that, then it’s no big deal.”

Felt: “When you say it like that, I agree.”

With Felt’s statement conveying that she was convinced, their preparations were complete.

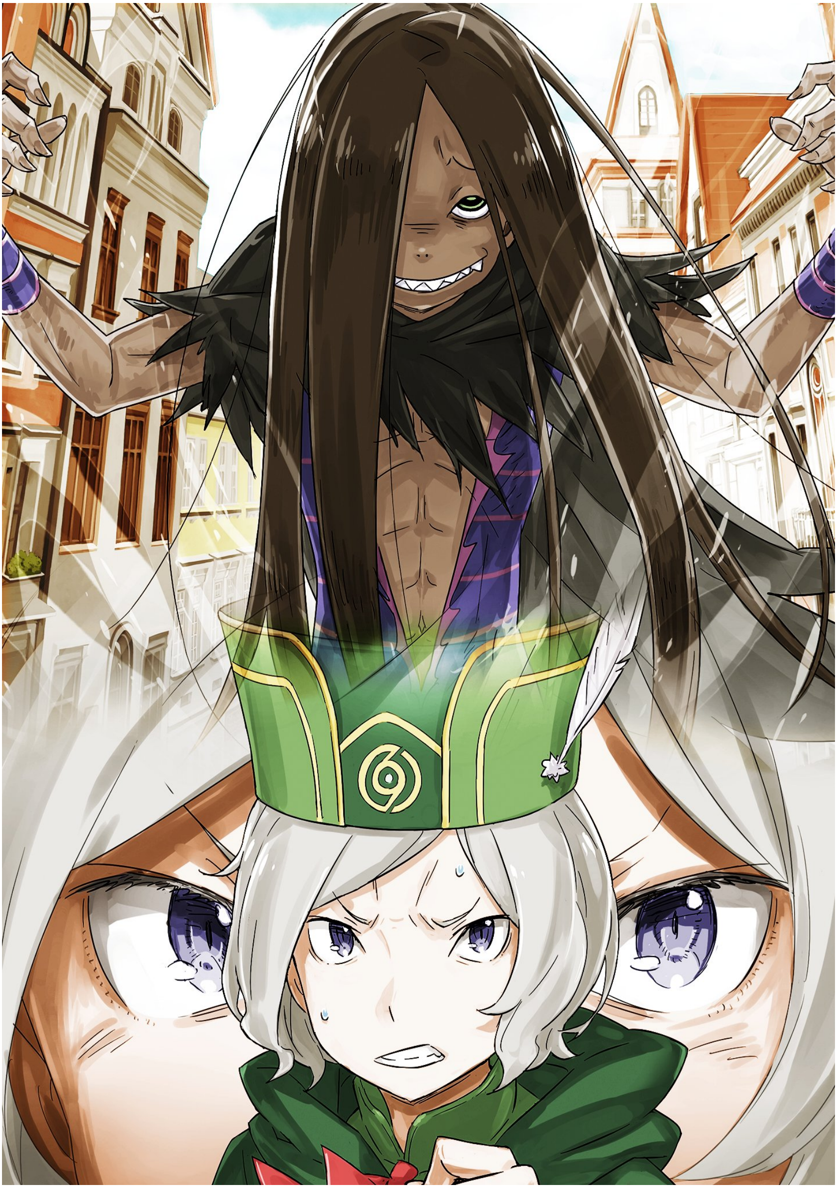
Courteously, watching their preparations end was Batenkaitos. Seeing his politeness, Otto narrowed his eyes, and the blasphemer subsequently laughed.

Lye: “Isn’t it common mannerism to await the finishing of setting up of the table? Roy of Bizarre Eating aside, we a~re Gourmet. We are particular abou~t meals.”

Saying that, Batenkaitos respectfully gestured and bowed.

That gesture, which seemed to put on airs, also seemed frightfully familiar.

Lye: “Well the~n, once again. Witch Cult Sin Archbishop, Lye Batenkaitos of representing Gluttony.”



"…"

Lye: "Isn't it common mannerism, to return your own name when you are given the same?"

Felt: "After everything we've discussed, he'd be an idiot to return his name to you, you bastard."

Among warriors, it is a commonly obeyed custom, to return your own name when someone gives you their own name.

However, Batenkaitos may have had possibly utilized this method, and till now, gotten out the names of countless people, and proceeded to subsequently eat them.

They had no reason to abide by that custom right now. With that being rejected, Gluttony laughed,

Lye: "That's that. —Well the~n, let's eat!"

Signaling his meal, the petite frame leapt ahead, as if flying, and shortened the distance in between. This movement had not been seen before, it was like a strong gale flowing by. Batenkaitos, who had vanquished the offensive and defensive being put up against him till now by mere handling of his feet and dodging, now actually demonstrated his ability to hunt down his opponents.

Otto, a non-combatant, was unable to follow his movement, and respond accordingly.

The other three, however, were different.

Felt: "Don't think you can win in a race, against me."

Against Batenkaitos, who was racing like wind, only Felt was able to catch up comfortably. The moment she had lightly kicked the cobblestone and leapt ahead, she showed mobility, as if she was being carried by the wind at once.

Surprised by at least that movement, Batenkaitos' first slash swept through the air.

Lye: “—~tsu!”

At that point, Gaston and Dynas commenced their attack at the same time.

Dynas’ two single edged katanas, and the short sword which Gaston held, both of then clutched onto their respective weapons. Against the attack of the two, the vulnerable Batenkaitos opened his legs wide and dropped his stance.

With his arms on the ground, Batenkaitos’ body whirled with his legs stretched. The spinning kick swept the legs of the two men, and destroyed Dynas’ balance.

And there—

Otto: “Ua~a~a~—!”

Dynas: “Wa~h?”

Raising his voice, the fourth player, Otto grabbed him.

By coming there, Otto set himself up perfectly for close combat, and without anticipating this turn of events, Batenkaitos raised an astonished call, and successfully managed to wrestle with Otto’s body.

Bind him at this same pace—the very next moment he thought that, forceful pain assailed upon Otto’s guts. Batenkaitos’ left fist pierced in, and sent Otto’s body rolling.

Otto: “Ghue ~hk, gohogh ~hk!”

Lye: “At the right place, with the menu for your strong flavors and blandness available, the appropriate place for that, we must a~bsolutely find out about it, onii-san. Later, we’ll pro~perly partner you…”

When Batenkaitos blurted that out, the two, whose stances had collapsed, moved.

Dynas carried the tumbling Otto in his arms, and the one protecting the two was Gaston. Batenkaitos tilted his neck at that battle formation, and looked down upon what had come upon his tattered clothes.

—At the point where he had wrestled with Otto, two magic stones were dangling.

Lye: “Well we~ll.”

His movements for absconding were slow.

The very next moment of Batenkaitos noticing the magic stones, the two magic stones exploded immensely.

It was the collegiality of a fire magic stone and a water magic stone.

The red and yellow light, and the blue and white light proliferated, and Batenkaitos’ body was enveloped in the light and a shockwave was released.

Lye: “—~hk!!”

Receiving the light from a close distance, Otto also was subjected to harm.

Though Gaston, who was acting as a wall, shielded the majority of it, its impact could still be felt upon Otto’s skin. His skin scorched to the point of freezing, and chilled to the point of burning.

Once the shockwave came to a halt, the second hypocenter was a truly terrible sight to witness. The cobblestone had been torn off, the soil underneath was wide open, and scorched fragments of stone had been scattered across.

Lye: “A~h, that’s so cruel. Our only good dress got spoilt.”

And, once again, Batenkaitos had placed himself at a point away from the hypocenter.

However, it seems this time, at least, he was not undamaged.

The youth's long hair had suffered the attack heaped upon themselves as an aftermath of the blast, and he had a somewhat sullen voice.

It seems the youth had unmistakably gotten caught up in the hypocenter. He lost the rag that covered his entire body till now, and the skin beneath was now unconcealed.

Otto: "—Ugh."

Blurting that out thoughtlessly and reflexively, was Otto.

Gaston and Dynas were also speechless, grimacing while witnessing the same.

—The newly exposed skin of the young boy, was covered with wounds and scars.

Scars of a whip, scars of hot iron, scars carved by an edged tool, scars inflicted by a rough surface, scars of the skin being gouged out, scars of a beast's fangs, scars of repeated hits that had turned the skin bluish black, scars of an innumerable amount.

The youth who wore rags, now wearing only a waistcloth, turned around with his wounded body, and seeing Otto and the others grimace at him, he made a displeased face.

Lye: "Forcibly taking away a child's clothes, and then reacting like that is quite hurtful. Adults like all this, don't they?"

Otto: "…I don't know about the adults you are close to, but normally they do not."

Lye: "Hm~. So, you'll be all compassionate again. Changing your heart and attitude like this, it's because of things like that we can't trust you peo~ple!"

Spreading his arms as if showing his body covered with wounds, Batenkaitos yelled that.

Otto made a wry face at his words, and Dynas made a disgusted expression. Only the two of Felt and Gaston had no alteration in their expressions.

They gazed at the frowning Otto, and sighed.

Felt: “Heyhey, don’t go about thinking strange things. Those things can be anywhere, they’re just not on mine or your body, but can be anywhere.”

Gripping to the package in her hands, confessed Felt. Her eyes did not have even a fraction of compassion. Of course, Otto knew that their opponent was undeserving of that, but it’s not as if he was a Sin Archbishop and insane by birth.

At least, that was the impression Batenkaitos’ body gave—.

???: “—Just boring imagination will be fruitless, in fact. You’ll end up regretting it, I suppose.”

“…”

Out of nowhere, echoed the voice who had not been in the open plaza.

Everyone, including Batenkaitos, raised their heads at the sudden happening.

Everyone’s line of sight turned towards the waterway surrounding this large plaza– and lightly fluttering about midair, was a lone young girl, who then descended and stood.

In a frilled, spread out dress, with beautiful, round eyes and coiled, cream hair. Her clearly stinging attitude had become normal now, as she observed the situation with her large, circular eyes.

And once her eyes met with Otto’s, she sighed suggesting she did not have a choice.

???: “Subaru alone is sufficient for perverted games and sweetness, I suppose. The only one Betty will help is also just Subaru… This time is a special exception, at maximum, in fact.”

Otto: “Yes yes, my apologies, for making trouble for you like this. But, thank you so much.”

At the young girl’s harsh sounding response, Otto, however, tasted a sense of relief, so much so that he wanted to lie down in exhaustion.

The very existence of the girl was one of Otto’s “ways to win”.

???: “Well then, let’s clean up this fuss, and ask Subaru for a hug, I suppose.”

Saying this with a listless face, raising her hand, was the young girl.

No, the Spirit. That too, a Great Spirit among Spirits.

Natsuki Subaru’s Contract Spirit, Beatrice—finally entered the battle as backup.

Chapter 69:
A Repulsive Dinner Banquet

1

Everyone laid their eyes on the young girl who snorted her nose, as her dress' hem danced in the breeze.

The girl—Beatrice, looked around with her eyes, observing the situation. In this large plaza of the Waterway Street, present was the heavily scarred Gluttony Lye Batenkaitos, and Otto and the rest, opposing him.

Looking at Otto and Felt and the others, Beatrice blatantly let out a tired sigh.

Beatrice: "Those are rather pitifully poor faces, I suppose."

Everyone was too worn out to argue back Beatrice's comments, who let out a sigh. However, Beatrice partaking in the fight would surely be a turning point in this progressively worsening battle.

Naturally, feelings of relief were given rise to within Otto's chest.

Otto: "Bea—~hk."

As soon as he was about to call her name, Otto shut his mouth.

Batenkaitos was an existence who ate Names. He had just used to ploy of having Felt and the others not call his name by requesting them. There is no way he could go against that himself.

Batenkaitos' attitude for Otto, who was hiding the name. He was clearly irritated by him being an obstruction in his Meal. In other words, Batenkaitos, in order to eat his opponent's name, must know their Name.

Henceforth, he could not be allowed to perceive Beatrice's name. He positioned his hand, and suppressed his words.

However, Otto’s such forethought ended being futile.

For some reason—.

Lye: “—Beatrice-sama? Wha~t, are you doing outdoors?”

Because that was what Batenkaitos articulated, leaning his neck forward and eyes fixed on Beatrice.

Continuing to observe Beatrice, Gluttony continued his mysterious words.

“…”

Lye: “Even after disliking going outside so much. Aside from the times of meals, or when you were accompanied by the Great Spirit-sama… a~h, so there were so~me exceptions?”

Batenkaitos continued his words, against the quiet Beatrice.

Those seemed like words suggesting closeness, which would be inaccurate to say, but they were unquestionably words of a person having a sense of distance and relationship in the past.

Otto: “That means he’s your acquaintance from the past… Beatrice-sa—~hk.”

The relationship of the past, between Batenkaitos and Beatrice.

Losing understanding before being able to call her name, Otto’s throat choked midway. This time he unconsciously glanced at Beatrice’s face.

Biting her lips, and fury swirling in her large, round eyes, was Beatrice.

It had been rare for this Spirit girl, to show rage. In front of the astonished Otto, Beatrice inhaled very deeply, and scowled at Batenkaitos.

Beatrice: “—Your trick has been understood, in fact. So that’s how it is, I suppose.”

Muttered Beatrice, in a deep and heavy voice.

Her voice was not conveying hostility, but instead it was one suppressing her own emotions.

Hiding her rage from showing on her face, Beatrice locked her gaze into the interior of Batenkaitos' corrupted and muddy eyes, and distorted her lips due to the revulsion resulting from what she had laid her eyes upon.

And,

Beatrice: "You, how many people will you stockpile within yourself until you grow sick of it, in fact?"

Lye: "Who kno~ws? But, the quantity we eat is still better than compared to Roy. Roy is Bizarre Eating so he eats anything, but since we select carefully, the quantities are different ~tsu! We consider the quality of the lives we eat, and that's what conflicts us with Roy."

Eating Names and Memories, stating it to be his Meal was Batenkaitos.

Naming himself Gourmet, and calling someone close to him Bizarre Eating had a peculiar aesthetic sense, both of which were things Otto could never comprehend.

"…"

And, what Otto could not come to understand, was also Beatrice's attitude at that moment.

The young girl's revulsion did not seem to result from simply evaluating the confronting Batenkaitos. It seemed to stem a different from a negative conception, of a different root.

Perhaps that linked to Batenkaitos treating Beatrice like an existence he already knew—and, thinking that far, Otto noticed.

The possible reason, behind why Batenkaitos unilaterally knew Beatrice.

Otto: “…It can’t be.”

Batenkaitos’ combat power, lay in a territory which could be entered by only those who have trained tough and long. Otto had made a hypothesis based on Dynas’ factual remarks.

Otto: “I had anticipated the experiences of the body of an opponent whose Name and Memory had been eaten to be taken over. Your unarmed martial arts and dagger skills, attaining such an extreme level of prowess in them at your age would be difficult. If that’s how it is, then…”

Even the skills of an eaten opponent would serve as food for him.

If that is how it is, then it became conceivable how Batenkaitos had managed to learn abilities rivalling that of a master martial artist in a great number of spheres.

If that hypothesis was correct, not just correct, but held further meaning to it—.

Otto: “However, if what is taken over is not just experiences of the body.”

It meant that it was, something which was even further vicious, different from the threat of fighting strength.

After all, Batenkaitos had said.

—That he was, looking for the one whose speech echoed across the city.

That person, who was weak and fragile, unable to help anything unless someone stood by his side and supported him.

You could sense that and sympathize with that by being with the character of Natsuki Subaru for a long time. That youth had that mysterious part for him, which made those around him think this.

However, those thoughts were of that of someone who had dealt affectionately with him.

The fact that he was aware of Subaru's brittle strength and weak courage, was the proof of him having been close to him.

And if that proof was something which had been stolen by Gluttony at this time, then only one possible candidate, a single young girl came to mind—.

Otto: "—~hk!"

Finally, Otto arrived at the same revulsion which Beatrice was feeling.

Subjected to the changed color in Otto's eyes glaring directly at him, Batenkaitos smiled, and unveiled his fangs.

Lye: "The head maid of the household of Margrave Roswaal L. Mathers… wait wait wait, that's wrong."

Oscillating his neck while pronouncing that, Batenkaitos widened his arms.

On his scarred body, he caressed a single white scar lovingly. That scar, suspended on his shoulder, looked like it had received a sharp iron picket, and was painful to even look at.

Lye: "Now just a lone loved person. —Oneself's beloved person, who will be a hero someday, Natsuki Subaru's supporter, Rem… was it?"

"…"

Lye: "Let us meet him, tha~t beloved hero-sama! Our hero must have had come to cast his judgement upon us, till all the wa~y here!"

Stretching out his tongue, licking that wound, Batenkaitos guffawed.

Without thinking, Otto's blood rose up to his head. As he gnashed his teeth as they made a crackling sound, he was filled with rage enough that he wanted to punch him.

Gluttony’s attitude, tone, smile, everything was ridiculing the feelings of that lone young girl.

Without knowing how much that young girl must have had pleaded for returning safely, now she was only being trampled upon by mockery and scorn. That is what set ablaze within Otto’s heart.

This Gluttony, was an opponent who could never be forgiven—.

Otto: “Beatrice-san…?”

Beatrice stepped lightly and stood in front of Otto, who was counting the number of magic stones left in his sleeves with his finger. Otto was unable to understand why she had shifted towards him. And,

Beatrice: “Get your ideas corrected, I suppose. Good job calling Betty here, in fact.”

“…”

Beatrice: “He is… Only he is someone Subaru must not meet, I suppose. If Subaru meets him, he will be hurt. Certainly, to the point that wound will never heal. That’s why”

Otto: “Let’s stop him here, by just ourselves.”

Pronouncing the end of Beatrice’s words, Otto declared.

Though Beatrice did not turn back, her stance made it clear that she agreed. She was Subaru’s partner, who committed himself to oneself and others. Otto painfully understood how unpleasant it would be for him if the viciousness in front of his eyes was to get close to him.

Felt: “Waitwaitwaitwait, I’m telling you to wait!”

And, the one calling out to the two with a revitalized desire for taking their opponent down—was not Batenkaitos. It was Felt, who had been quietly listening to the dialogue till now beside Otto. She gripped her package, and pointed it towards Beatrice, Felt: “I heard you talk like some big shot, but what can this little girl do in the first place. Though I’ve heard you were a companion of that nii-chan.”

Otto: “Ah, um, I see. First, explaining that would be a bit tricky…”

Felt suggested her own doubts, to which Otto was unable to give a proper explanation.

She possibly already knew about Beatrice being a Spirit and being contracted with Subaru, since that was common knowledge. It was also true that Beatrice’s battle strength was uncertain in Subaru’s absence—.

Beatrice: “A pipsqueak should not call others little girls, in fact. If you have the free time to worry about Betty’s ability, you should better use it for worrying about that futureless deficient body, I suppose.”

Felt: “Quite a harsh brat you are, hey. Let me tell you, I’ve been eating and sleeping properly now, so both my back and my chest are growing. You should be the one worrying over your future.”

Beatrice: “Unfortunately, Betty’s mien is set firm to this design. So… Hmph.”

A conversation befitting the situation started, but Beatrice put a halt to it by pausing her words. What her eyes had caught onto, was the slender package in Felt’s hands.

Felt’s Trump Card was a magic tool, but Beatrice made a surprised expression upon laying her eyes on it,

Beatrice: “No way, is that Meteor, I suppose?”

Felt: “Meteor?”

Beatrice: “Mother… A revered magician a long time ago, used it to pester the Dragon, in fact. It’s whereabouts were supposed to be unknown, but this is fate, I suppose.”

Felt found Beatrice’s explanation, who had corrected a crucial part of it, debatable.

But from Otto's point of view, stating that the Mother Beatrice had mentioned and corrected later on, was a Witch who had disappeared from legends would make for a truly outrageous claim.

He still held his own doubts he wanted to ask about, but if the Witch had truly used it to pester the Dragon, the reliability of its potential was high.

Otto: "I had heard of its convolution in usage, but what can we expect in terms of its strength?"

Beatrice: "It is a staff which boasts having an anecdote of having made the Dragon halfway cry, in fact. It's guaranteed, I suppose."

Her claim was still difficult to believe. However, she had conveyed the authenticity of the weapon.

Though Otto had been swayed by Beatrice's words, Felt was yet unconvinced.

Felt: "I'll teach you about what the hell you're blabbering about later. Rather than that, this little…"

Beatrice: "Your conscience cannot rise above that level, in fact. But, your concern is futile, I suppose. After all"

Felt: "Ah?"

Beatrice: "The attack has already been set up."

In front of Felt, who tilted her neck, Beatrice sketched an enchanting smile upon her face. Her softly upraised right hand pointed towards Batenkaitos, and the throats of everyone were subsequently frozen.

—Violet crystals crystallized, and surrounded Batenkaitos' environs.

Lye: "Ah, Beatrice-sama is so merciless."

Beatrice: "Just holding back and mercy are things which do not exist anywhere in this world for you, I suppose."

El Minya.

A rare offensive magic even within Yin magic, was the reason behind him showing his fangs.

The moment Batenkaitos let out his complaint, the violet crystals did a boisterous dance, and aimed and rushed at his petite body.

The tough and pointed attack struck the thin body standing upright—the crystals shattered, the stone pavement fissured, and smoke was given rise to. This disastrous scene in this huge open plaza, had proved her might.

Beatrice: "Well, what do you think, I suppose."

Showing her magical power, Beatrice turned to Felt with a victorious expression. Though it was an immature gesture for a four hundred year old Great Spirit, but Felt was too speechless to point anything like that out.

Felt: "W-Well, not so ba~d, I guess."

However, despite her speechlessness, Felt refused to admit her loss and mistakes.

Gaston: "Y-Your voice, i~s trembling, Miss Felt."

Felt: "That goes for you too! Stop saying idiotic nonsense, and keep looking ahead!"

Yelled Felt at Gaston, whose voice was trembling, in order to hide the trembling of her own voice. But, not all what she said was deceptive.

After all, the figure of the defenseless Batenkaitos, who should have had received Beatrice's magical attack and had been caught up in its subsequent explosion, was not present where it should have been.

Dynas: "He's coming—!"

Dynas shouted, and everyone raised their eyes and looked in the direction he had his eyes fixed upon. There present was the form of Gluttony, with all four of his limbs on the ground, moving like a spider.

Gluttony smiled, displayed his fangs, as blood streamed down from his eyes.

Lye: “Haha~! As expecte~d of Beatrice-sama! How nice, so nice, quite nice, perhaps it is nice, certainly it is nice, isn’t it nice, surely it is nice, as it is surely nice ~tsu!”

Shaking his head about, disheveling his hair, Batenkaitos leapt from the ground and pounced, charging ahead once again.

Beatrice: “—Five shots, left.”

In response to his charge, Otto heard Beatrice mutter something unsettling whilst licking her lips.

2

The moment El Minya was used, and the attack commenced upon Batenkaitos, Beatrice felt a large Magic Stone shatter in her pocket.

The number of Magic Stones now left with her were six—in terms of Beatrice’s usage, only five could be deployed in the battle.

—In this battle in the city, the preliminary encounter with the Sin Archbishops of Wrath and Greed and the subsequent incidental fight against them in the square.

As a result of that battle, Beatrice had spent her Mana for healing Subaru and the people of the city, to the point that it disrupted her physical capabilities.

The Spirit Beatrice, is an Artificial Spirit created by the Witch Echidna.

Her strength is far greater than those of normal Spirits, but in return for that she has some troublesome downsides.

Even amongst them, her greatest weakness would perhaps be that the only way she could recover the Mana she lost was by receiving it through her contractor.

The Mana present in the atmosphere, or the Mana offered to her by humans other than her contractor, none of them could Beatrice reduce into her own strength. Consequently, the only means she had to refill her exhausted Mana was to take the time of receiving it from Subaru.

Her being mobile right now, is the result of a card being played which normally cannot be put to use.

—As of this situation, Beatrice held seven Magic Stones.

A large Magic Stone is one with Mana having been stockpiled within it over several years. Among them, one had already been shattered, and only six of them were left now. They had been given to Beatrice, who had plunged into a deep slumber, by Kiritaka—who was aware of the progressions in this large plaza, and his actions were for the purpose of providing aid to them.

Kiritaka: “Please, I request you from the bottom of my heart, Great Spirit-sama. Please lend me your strength, and use it to fight for protecting this city. In this city, there are those whom I love.”

All messed up and almost crying, but detachedly pleading to her was Kiritaka. Beatrice responded with no choice to Kiritaka, who had used an immeasurably priceless Magic Stone with no second thoughts in order to awaken from her slumber.

If she were to say the truth, Beatrice wanted to hurriedly reach where Subaru was.

The city’s situation had revolved, and Subaru, too, was under threat. If her self not by his side, Subaru is a hopelessly worrying guy, after all.

That’s why, now that her self was awake, she shall dedicate herself to Subaru—.

Beatrice: “Stupid, I suppose. No, stupid, in fact.”

Beatrice gave up on that desire of hers, once she felt the guilt after realizing her indulgence under the name of concern.

If Subaru had chosen to fight, that too without the presence of her self, then that means he has a way to fight without her.

Subaru does not overestimate himself. Rather, he tends to underestimate himself too much.

He would not recklessly get into a confrontation with an opponent he could not win against, and if he could win against the opponent without using Beatrice, he would somehow or other wake her up.

That's why in this battle, Subaru did not need her self, who had been left alone.

That is why, once Subaru has returned after the battle, she must also have a victorious record under her belt so that she can match up to him.

For Beatrice, who now stood as backup, Kiritaka had offered up seven large Magic Stones.

Unable to use the Mana from her surroundings, Beatrice now, was utilizing the mana of the Magic Stones like an inefficient conductor as a last resort.

In her dress' pocket, the seven Magic Stones were capable of miracles, but their potential was now being wasted on usage of mere magic.

You would normally believe that their strength could be used to invoke not ten, but even a thousand magic moves. However, though there are no limitations to the extent of the magic, but no matter how low scale the magic was, the Magic Stone will shatter at a single invocation.

As one of the six needed to be reserved, only five could be utilized.

—In other words, she must wrap it up in five moves.

Beatrice: "The reunion will Bubby will have to wait, I suppose.

Instead of that, you will be seeing hell, in fact.”

One of the large Magic Stones Kiritaka gave to Beatrice, was originally intended to be occupied by Puck. That was the original purpose of their trip, but now, that being shattered for the purpose of battle is nothing but ironic.

Lye: “We’re tired of seeing hell ~tsu! After all, the ones that got eaten by us, eve~ry one of them tasted tha~t in the end!”

Shouting that, Batenkaitos leapt towards them.

His movement was casual, but his cutting gaze was utmost cautious regarding Beatrice.

He was unaware of the fact that Beatrice would run out of gas after five moves, that she would run out of Mana. In order to give him that impression, she had commenced an attack of a powerful range in exchange of one Magic Stone, that strategy was the best faculty available, and it had passed its exam.

Beatrice raised up her left hand, and pointed its palm towards the mid-air Batenkaitos.

Beatrice: “Al Minya!”

Lye: “—~tsu!”

Beatrice: “Just kidding, in fact.”

At that moment, expecting the extremely high level magic, Batenkaitos toughened up his body. In front of him, Beatrice stuck out her tongue, and flew backwards.

At that point, Gaston and Dynas plunged onto the curled-up Batenkaitos.

Gaston: “U~o~o~o~h!”

Dynas: “Eat this too!”

The shouting two men launch their counterattack attack upon

Batenkaitos, with two blades and a fist.

The weighty and sharp hit struck Gluttony, but Batenkaitos dodged it with preeminent body handling, and in reverse, turned his own dagger towards the dominated two.

The edge of the oscillating steel, took a path which aimed straight for Dynas' neck.

Gaston: "It's dangerous… ghue!"

Dynas: "Sorry!"

Gaston obstructed into the dagger's path, shielding Dynas and taking the strike himself.

A wooden report echoed and the dagger's power was weakened, but Gaston, while drawing back, coughed violently, and red blood seeped out of those lips.

—It was the limit of his Mana-utilizing battle ability, otherwise called Flow Method.

Bearing his tough body, Gaston's way of fighting against blades and blows was his skill known as Flow Method, an alternate method of the utilization of Mana, which is otherwise used for magic.

It is a skill involving far less talent than compared to magic—only training and the amount of training mattered, and the user was required to shed blood for its usage.

Beatrice: "But, it seems he pushed himself far too much, in fact."

In Beatrice's eyes, Gaston's facets and talents were nothing beyond mediocrity.

Him being able to, somehow or the other, take the Sin Archbishop's spears with his partial Flow Method, could only be because Batenkaitos had been going very easy on Gaston.

Lye: "Ta~ke, this ~tsu!"

Gaston: “Ghou, agh?!”

Kneeling down, he kicked right into Gaston’s jaw in the upward direction.

Bleeding from his nose, and collapsing down, immobile, the giant was now unable to battle. With this, their war potential had been reduced by one more.

Lye: “You rea~lly worked hard, Gaston! Pre~tty bravely you fought. —You worked and you worked, but you fai~led! We evaluate such a guy to be worthy ~tsu!”

Felt: “—You, bastard!’

Seeing the form of Batenkaitos mocking Gaston, Felt’s blood rose up to her head, and she aimed the Meteor she held in her hand straight for his head.

If it was put to use the way it should rightfully be, its might was surely that one would expect of a Witch. But, if it were to be used as a mere slapstick, it could not possibly utilize its complete potential.

Lye: “Uh, o~h! Geez Felt-chan, yo~u’re do~ing i~t ~tsu!”

Felt: “Shut, up! Get away, you shit!”

While scuffling to handle the cane, Felt continued to use her physical abilities to try and land a sharp blow upon Batenkaitos. Batenkaitos dodged all of it, with just the elegant handling of his feet, as if doing a magnificent dance.

The Meteor did indeed come in contact with Gluttony’s hair, but it was not sufficient enough to cause any damage to him. There was an overwhelming gap of skill between them. He was completely treating her as a plaything.

Beatrice: “You! Get away now, I suppose! Our merchant has already recovered the big guy, in fact!”

Felt: “Do you think I came here just to mislead!”

The difference in their physical capabilities was evident, and it was certain that she would lose if she was counterattacked.

While Felt attacked Batenkaitos, Otto hurriedly drew the fainted Gaston out of the theater. Dynas too, confirmed the texture of his two katanas, was searching for a gap to break into Felt and Batenkaitos' fight but, there was no certain opportunity.

Even if an alteration arises, Batenkaitos fills in that gap completely. The approach of watching vigilantly for an opportunity and awaiting an alteration, signaled the reality to them that Gluttony, who was outnumbered and should have been at a disadvantage, was the one ruling this place.

Lye: "What, what is it, what is this, what could it be, why could it be, what could it perhaps be ~tsu! Even after jumping in for helping, will Felt-chan abandon this so pathetically?"

Felt: "So noisy! You too, you bastard, just stay put and get hit…"

Lye: "Is that so. —But we're getting bored no~w."

Felt: "Uh, ky~a~a?!"

As Felt yelled while swinging the Meteor, at that moment, Batenkaitos stepped ahead. The distance between the two of them became zero, and Gluttony's palm caressed Felt's svelte chest.

At that moment, the shock impacted the young girl's body and threw her backwards gently, and giving rise to a high pitched shriek, Felt rolled down the stone pavement.

The attack had strength enough to simply throw her body backwards, but that was not the problem here.

Otto: "Oh no! She has been directly touched!"

Otto raised his voice, seeing the coughing Felt, who had received the impact on her chest. Seeing the agony on his face, Beatrice understood the reason for his concern.

Gluttony's meal, had been prepared.

Lye: “Felt-cha~n. —Let’s eat.”

Following the unknown principle, Batenkaitos’ left hand, which had touched Felt, he licked its palm with his elongated tongue.

As if, there was something vital, like the young girl named Felt, present on it.

Placed it on his tongue as if loving it, caressed its rough texture, tasted each and every part of it as if harvesting it, and dropped it down to his breadbasket and mercilessly digested it.

At the moment that was completed, Gluttony’s meal came to an end, and the Name settled within the blasphemer.

And, all traces of the young girl named Felt disappeared from the world—.

Lye: “Ugh, ghue~… ~tsu.”

Felt: “Hu~h? What is it, you bastard. Just how rude can this guy get.”

Felt, shaking her head, was looking at Batenkaitos, knelt down and vomiting.

Of course, her existence had not disappeared, she only tilted her neck in rage.

—That was the moment, when Gluttony’s meal had failed unsightly.

Chapter 70:
Eclipsing

Batenkaitos, who should have had abraded away Felt's name and commenced with his Meal, vomited.

Moaning in agony, spitting out his gastric juices, Gluttony's attitude held no dishonesty. So, though he did not put something with a real form in his mouth, he still squeezed his stomach when vomiting.

It was a mysterious spectacle, which gave rise to that impression, which had no absurdity in itself.

Felt: "Shit, that hurt… Playing around with me…"

Caressing her scoured chest, Felt stood up in a grazed shape. Infuriation and displeasure comprised her expression, but she did not seem to have taken any lethal damage.

The ones she could see from the corner of her eyes, Beatrice and the others, too, had not forgotten about Felt.

Gluttony's meal had failed.

Lye: "Gha ~hk, ghehough ~hk, oghe~e~ ~tsu!"

Dynas: "Don't know the reason for it but… it's a nice chance!"

Dynas waged a raid against Batenkaitos, whose consciousness was completely outside of the battlefield, as he spilled out gastric juices from the edge of his mouth.

Two swords swiped across, and mercilessly plunged into Batenkaitos.

Towards the defenseless neck, the silver blade of the katana proceeded—.

Lye: "Gh, o~o~h!"

Raising the voice of a beast, Batenkaitos sidestepped the blade.

His dodge was slightly late and some of his hair was subjected to the slash, but it wasn't enough to pierce his skin. Rotating his petite body at an extremely fast speed, Gluttony escaped the attack's span with nightmarish behavior.

Beatrice: "Merchant!"

Otto: "I, know!!"

Responding to Beatrice's call, Otto swung his right arm. The two Magic Stones cast from his sleeves, came in contact with Batenkaitos, who had escaped the former attack.

At that moment, light burst through, and the current of magical energy it wielded blew off that body—however, Batenkaitos responded to it with miraculous nerve reflex.

Lye: "Huma~!"

As the rising light, amassed Batenkaitos within itself and its destructive might, at that moment, Batenkaitos cast magic, encasing the magical explosion within ice.

The explosion, resulting from the Magic Stones, lost its area to proceed, and ended up becoming a mere stack of shattered ice, falling down to the ground, giving rise to a noise. It was an extremely high class skill of obstructing colorless magical waves rapidly.

Perhaps even this, would be the ability of someone who was among those whose Names have been eaten by Batenkaitos till now. The mere thought of that Someone, who must have had learnt that ability, was now amassed within his stomach without remaining in anyone's memory was nauseating.

However, this was not the time for such feelings.

What was crucial here was—.

Lye: "Wa~h ~tsu! Dangerous dangerous… but we pulled through ~tsu!”

Kicking the ice that had trapped the Magic Stones, and dropping them straight into the waterway was the laughing Batenkaitos. He swayed around his stomach, as if adjusting the contents inside, and wiping his mouth with his hands, angled his neck forward.

What those corrupted eyes were observing, was Felt, who was swinging around her hands and legs to confirm the extent of her injuries. Noticing Batenkaitos look at her, Felt snorted her nose.

Felt: “What. Just like you, I’m also feeling angry, you bastard.”

Lye: “Nothing like anger at all ~tsu, instead i~t’s impressive. We’re so~rry, to have thought of you not being so capable of intelligence, by just looks.”

Felt: “Hu~h? What are you say…”

Lye: “We never thought, that you’d have the cleverness to use only an alias against us. We got completely deceived. We had intended to avoid devouring greedily until the Name got disclosed but… to~ thi~n~k, this unexpected twist would be harvested.”

“…”

Alias, hearing Batenkaitos say that, Felt went silent.

The reaction of Felt, furrowing her eyebrows, was one which suggested how much had she not expected to hear what she had heard. It could be understood at a glance, that she had no idea what Batenkaitos’ words meant.

Whereas Beatrice, after hearing this conversation, understood the reason behind the earlier failure of Batenkaitos’ Meal.

Batenkaitos held the Authority of being able to eat the Name of a person, whose name he already knew or had gained its knowledge, by touching them—however, it needs to be the person’s real name.

Alias, or nicknames, they do not suffice for its usage.

As just Felt's name did not fulfill the conditions for the Meal, Batenkaitos, who had tasted it, suffered.

With that being said,

Lye: "The onii-san over there and Felt-chan… there are two whose names are unknown, and both were determined to be eaten, how troublesome."

Otto, whose name was purely unknown, and Felt, who seemed to be utilizing an alias.

Dynas, whose name had immediately come to light, and Beatrice, who was known through Rem's memories no longer had any impediments, is what the conduct of Gluttony suggested, which was infuriating but, naming himself Gourmet and being fixated over eating Names, had its own disadvantageous gaps.

Felt: "Hey! I've had enough of listening to you, now shut up and listen, the hell are you saying?"

Beatrice, who was in her own thoughts, and Batenkaitos, who was continuing his torment. While Otto and Dynas were observing the situation, raising a loud and rough voice was Felt.

She had been irritated by the repeated conclusions passed regarding her, and aimed for Batenkaitos with the Meteor, trying to strike him.

Felt: "An alias or whatever, don't kid with me. I've already lived, for fifteen years, with the name Felt given to me by Grandpa Rom. Saying that's a lie is no joke."

Lye: "The type who is unaware of their own alias hu~h. That, means the parents that raised you up did a pretty good job, isn't it ~tsu. For us, it's a boundless nuisance but… In other words, a name before that one had been pro~perly given, to you."

Felt: "The name given by those shit parents who abandoned me in the back alley? Then I must be a "burden" or a "wasteful meal" or "garbage". With that being said, do you still want to stick out your tongue and eat and see it?"

Lye: “Don’t contradict Gourmet’s consciousness by calling it guesswork or something. —A~h, that’s it.”

Showing his protruding teeth, Batenkaitos raised his hand towards Felt, who expressed an enraged smile.

Lye: “After eating the rest beside you, we’ll take careful custody of you. And, how about we go to meet the one who gave you a fake name, Grandpa Rom? Grandpa Rom might know your true name. We are good at making people spell out what they know. You ca~n leave it to us.”

Otto: “…Taking your time out for even that. Do you not have the choice to give up?”

Otto thoughtlessly pronounced, at Gluttony, who spoke of an offensive schedule. Hearing that, Batenkaitos put his hands on his mouth, and ringed his throat, as if enjoying,

Lye: “If the number of lives in the world is finite, then the number of worthy gourmet delicacies is a~lso finite. Then, we won’t miss any chance of meeting these limited gourmet delicacies ~tsu. Gluttonous drinking ~tsu! Gluttony ~tsu! Licking it chewing it slurping it, we will lick and taste unti~l the sauce on the plate lasts. Oops, of course onii-san is no exception either so why don’t you ju~st relax?”

Batenkaitos’ glare made it clear, that he had no intention of missing the four present.

Gluttony’s fixation over meals, was out of understanding for Beatrice and the others, who had been evaluated worthy of Gourmet. However, his look for vindictive impediments had no meaning more to it.

And, that blasphemer’s desire for eating continued to increase, and it brought Felt’s pique to itself.

Felt: “Is that so. I’ll have to do something here, otherwise you’ll ta~ke me to Grandpa Rom, huh.”

Saying that in a quiet voice, Felt swung her feet.

The shoes that she was wearing came off completely, and Felt was just like the other party now. Stepping ahead on the cobblestone with both her feet barefoot, she left the Meteor lying horizontally and drew out her dagger.

Lye: "—? That doesn't make sense, Felt-chan. That, isn't that the trump card?"

Felt: "Instead of devices that I'm not used to, this is much easier to use. There isn't that much difference, in the first place. Instead of devices troublesome to use, it's better to use those which are easy to use, okay!"

Her bare feet curled as if gripping to the ground, and the next instant, Felt's body launched forward. She had gained such speed in the blink of an eye, like wind.

At this, even Batenkaitos widened his eyes, and forgetting the attitude of this just being another blade being held aloft, responded. He fought back by pulling out a physical ability of swinging the arms, handling his body, which had been submerged in memories.

Felt: "Ra~!"

The barefooted Felt's speed was, surpassing any energetic dash by some agile young girl.

It was the support of a power beyond human intellect—unmistakably, it was a Divine Protection. She swung the dagger several times, but it was met by Batenkaitos' own dagger techniques.

Of course, Batenkaitos' tactics in that technique were overwhelmingly superior, but, what had prevented Felt from being overcome was only because Dynas was also backing her.

Dynas: "Don't push yourself too hard, with that vital body!"

Felt: "You too, uncle, just shut up, don't be tardy!"

Skillfully handling two swords, Dynas somehow filled the gap of Gluttony's counterattack. Within that time frame, Felt quickly positioned herself into Gluttony's blind spot, reports of steels clashing echoed, as the shadows of the three intermingled, as sparks danced across.

An exchange where, again, the decisive blow could not be delivered.

However, this time, the decisive blow had been formulated outside of the battlefield—.

Beatrice: "The attack… has passed, this will hit hard, I suppose!"

Otto: "Both of you, please get away!"

While being left out of the event, they had been composing an attack, taking all the time they required.

The operation, which would normally be unnecessary, lengthened their work schedule because of its requirement of meticulous caution, thanks to the attachment of an extra filter.

The result of that labor, was finally going to take form.

"…"

Hearing what Otto had shouted, Felt and Dynas got away from Batenkaitos' position.

Gluttony instantly reached for Felt, but even after touching her, he was not prepared to be able to eat Felt's Name.

Felt: "Let, go!"

Fiercely swinging her ankle, which had been gripped onto violently, and using a single foot, Felt flew backwards to a great distance. Dynas too, as if rolling, left the place, leaving only Gluttony in Beatrice's line of sight.

Aiming there, Beatrice invoked a magic which required the power of a “thousand”, and completed it while respecting the power of a “thousand”.

Beatrice: “This time it’s not a joke, really… Ul Minya!!”

Subsequent to the chant, a torrent of violet radiance glowed, and the light drew a circle with Batenkaitos at its core. Batenkaitos raised his face, to see what was coming up, but that reaction was late.

Not preparing, but escaping regardless of its form was the correct answer.

Lye: “—~tsu!”

In a single breath, the light converged, and shut Batenkaitos down by forming a ring around Batenkaitos’ torso and arms. The ring of light acted like a chain and continued to further lock Gluttony, whose movements of the upper body were in a bind.

At the same pace, if the entire body got encased by ring of light, he would no longer be able to escape Ul Minya’s might.

The crystallizing violet light continued to tighten its grip on Batenkaitos’ upper body. At the same pace, the ring’s control reached out to even his lower body, and Gluttony, who had been rendered immobile, collapsed on the spot.

And, the atmosphere made a noise, as if creaking, as humongous bluish purple radiance emerged overhead of the collapsed blasphemer, with its sharp tips pointing towards Batenkaitos.

Ul Minya’s might, to bind, and lash upon.

The attack Beatrice possessed slapped down in urgency, and the materialized destruction rained incessantly upon Batenkaitos.

Lye: “—!”

A roar could be heard, but in front of the destructive violet light, it had been muted.

The overwhelming light's might tore away the cobblestone, the wind produced by the blast engulfed the plaza in light and smoke, with the skirt of Beatrice's dress waving immensely.

Felt: "Did it do it?!"

Otto: "Did it manage to do it?!"

Dynas: "Did it really do it?!"

In the face of the explosion, the three, lying down, raised their voices at the same time.

Batenkaitos, at the very core of the hypocenter, had no ways of evasion. If he had truly taken the attack right now, then his body's traces will all disappear, not even leaving behind a fragment of his bones—.

Beatrice: "It isn't over yet, I suppose!"

With a loud voice, Beatrice warned them to be cautious, and the color of the faces of the delighted three changed. Beatrice noticing the fault that had occurred, before the other three, was nothing difficult to conceive.

She could sense it.

Beatrice: "—Four, left."

The large Magic Stone, which had been stocked over a long period of time, was unable to withstand the current Ul Minya, and shattered right before Batenkaitos could be crushed.

Although it had provided for the invocation, it had been incapable of its fullest utilization. The radiance had been unable to erode away Batenkaitos, and the body of Gluttony was—.

Lye: "The one right now has probably made us a bit impatient ~tsu!"

"—!"

Piercing through the plume, Batenkaitos flew towards Beatrice from a low angle. It must be the result of him judging who should be taken care of the first, based on the might of the magic just now.

Beatrice had exceptional ability as a magic user, but her physical abilities—just as how it appeared, they were nothing beyond those of a young girl.

She did not have the skills, only for fighting at a close range with Batenkaitos, whose abilities were those of geniuses.

Henceforth, against his charge, Beatrice instantly utilized her third magic stone.

Beatrice: "—Murak!"

Lye: "Another trick—"

Beatrice's chant barely preceded Batenkaitos' hands, who were on the verge of reaching her.

His upraised fingers only had one intention, to not let Beatrice escape, now that all obstacles were clear. However, it got missed yet again.

The instant he thought he had reached Beatrice's dress, Beatrice's body flew backwards, like a leaf floating in the breeze.

"…"

What Beatrice had chanted was Murak, a Yin magic which obstructed with gravity. It was a magic which hindered with the power which attracts one's body to the ground, or one's own body weight, however Beatrice utilized it to reduce her body weight to zero at that instant.

Thanks to that, she was able to levitate in the wind, and greatly avoid the fingers trying to touch her.

Lye: "This, little—?!"

As per she had intended, Beatrice's body distanced from Batenkaitos and jumped to the edge of the large plaza instantly.

Batenkaitos tried to follow her, but he then heard loud footsteps from the direction opposite to the one he was facing, and turned towards them immediately.

Swiping his dagger behind, he tried to slash down the inelegant intruders. However, that strike cut through the sky. For some reason, there stood nobody who could have had made a sound of footsteps.

Otto: "Garfiel or the Bowel Hunter, such people would totally get struck down!"

With the use of Wind magic, Otto had "sent footsteps flying" in an attempt to make Batenkaitos turn around, and he subsequently cast even more Magic Stones.

The exploding wave of heat produced by the Magic Stones was directed straight towards his exposed back, and unable to evade this time, Batenkaitos received an impact.

Dynas: "This time for sure, it's the end!"

Rolling down the plaza, with all of his limbs stretched straight, Batenkaitos collapsed. Swooping down upon that form, Dynas, who had prepared beforehand by tightening his grip onto his two katanas, intended to deliver the finishing blow—

"…"

In a scruffy shape, the collapsed youth whispered something.

Whether that was him pleading for his life, or words of regret, Dynas shall not hesitate. For him, who had lived through the life of being a mercenary, the scramble for life is the result of fierce competition.

There, the problem of being an adult or a child was trifle, and emotions of mourn and repent were feelings one could afford only after surviving, that was all.

Henceforth, it was clear. But, even though the movements of Dynas, who had that clear thought seated within him, held no hesitation, even still, he was unable to keep that mystery, which harbored in his chest, folded within it.

Because what Batenkaitos had whispered just now, sounded like this.

—Lunar Eclipse, and.

???: “—Oh?”

The moment subsequent to that sound’s echo reaching its righteous place, a voice, which had not been present in this interval, echoed.

The moment afterwards, the limbs of Dynas, who had been holding the two short swords aloft, spouted out blood all at once. On each of his limbs, a respective dagger was stabbing through extremely deeply, inflicting wounds, and the tendons had been accurately gauged.

Namely, it meant that the functionality of his limbs had been lost completely, and he was unable to prevent his body from crumbling down and falling.

Dynas: “Kuu, ah?!

Falling onto the cobblestone from his face was Dynas, with his head being stomped upon from above with all of its strength. With his nose crushed by the cobblestone, the consciousness of Dynas, who had gulped down the blow, was blown off.

Dynas was cut down and destroyed, and kicking his body, Batenkaitos stood up, and slowly, turned towards Otto’s position

Otto: “…Ah.”

It was not his first time, exchanging glances with those corrupted eyes.

However, in a single moment, Otto's spirit had been entwined and eaten up within those corrupted eyes.

Because the whirling insanity and resentment, had considerable difference from those which were previously present, and was now even more dusky.

"…"

It was a single moment.

The distance between them was diminishing in the blink of an eye, and when he came to notice, scorching heat pierced through both of Otto's legs. When he looked at it, at the frontage of both of his legs' thighs, were daggers, as if gouging out cruciform wounds.

Like peeling of the skin of a fruit, with his tongue sticking out, he exposed the skin underneath his trousers. The red cross-section and the pink sinews undersurface the skin, and the white nerves and bones creeping within, all of the green blood vessels, had all been exposed, unwounded, and Otto's throat became packed with out-of-place strong feelings.

He was dumbfounded. Till now he had never seen, a technique so beautiful.

The bleeding was minimal—no, there was no bleeding at all. This truly transcendent handling of the blade's edge, destroyed the human flesh with such aesthetical maneuver.

"…"

Crouching down, Batenkaitos kissed that wound. The rough sensation of that tongue underneath, licked all of the vital parts of Otto's leg which lied inside of the skin.

Sinews, bones, blood vessels, nerves, he shivered as he felt all of them get licked, and at the next moment, both, in terms of his sense of vision and his sense of touch, Otto felt a repugnance difficult to bear and violent pain boil up in his brain.

Otto: "Ah, gya~a~a~a~a~—~hk!"

No blood, was being shed. It was incomprehensible.

He could just feel the pain. That too, instead of blood gushing out, the naked bones or nerves were being brushed by the moist wind, and the extreme pain because of it, it felt as if his muscles were being peeled off violently by needles.

His vision flickered, and his brain burst open. The organ that was supposed to comprehend pain refused to comprehend it. The screaming throat trembled violently, as if vomiting blood, and with immobile limbs, he was unable to even agonize.

And, while Otto screamed, Batenkaitos, overlooking him, tilted his neck. With long, dark brown hair sliding down his shoulders, Gluttony sighed, as if tired.

Lye: “Just when we thought it was rest after the meal, this circumstance. Even though gourmet and bizarre eating don’t even matter… Really, nobody understands what eating is aside from us.”

Bringing a close to the insane smile and attitude, which had been there till now, it a voice terribly farsighted.

Batenkaitos slowly rotated his neck, and behaved as if he was mocking himself—just when that impression arose, he nimbly changed his expression,

Lye: “Don’t talk like tha~t. It certainly did get a bit problematic in playing around but, even still, a treat of Louis’ taste ha~s been found.”

Showing his fangs, Batenkaitos turned his neck around, and his line of sight was directed towards Beatrice. At that gaze, and Otto’s terrible spectacle, the two young girls thoughtlessly inhaled. But, seeing the reaction of the two, Batenkaitos’ expression, once again, changed into one that was empty and listless.

Lye: “Certainly it doesn’t look bad but… the vessel would be more guaranteeing than the insides, isn’t it. On top of that, the Gospel’s description hasn’t been read either.”

Lye: “Louis may not be able to see it but, the child inside us i~s informing us. The one over there, Beatrice-sama, is that, probably. If it’s done then both the mind and body will fill, isn’t she just the ideal opportunity ~tsu!”

Turning towards the right and speaking, turning towards the left and speaking, Batenkaitos exchanged words as if he was not talking within his self’s own chest, but with someone as if he could clearly see outside.

It seemed, as if he was conversing with someone else present within himself.

No, the truth is, that was possible.

Within the Name eating blasphemer, Lye Batenkaitos, present were an innumerable amount of souls. Then, it may be possible for him to converse with them, or even properly discuss.

If that was so, only then could his conversation with himself be somehow understood.

Beatrice: “Can you move, I suppose, pipsqueak?”

Felt: “Ah? Right back at you, I hope you aren’t scared, little girl.”

Calling each other out, Beatrice and Felt exchanged a few words. Glancing into the eyes of each other, they confirmed that the fighting spirit of neither of them had been shattered.

Felt slightly snorted her nose, and then glanced towards the edge of the open plaza. Beatrice confirmed the presence there, and reckoned their intents.

Beatrice: “…Now on, they will be coming after Betty, I suppose. They’ll be confined, in fact.”

Felt: “You’ll be stopping them? If it’s hurdling then I’d be…”

Beatrice: “You cannot have an idiotic expectation like making him vomit twice, I suppose. On top of that, regardless of determination, it’s something Betty cannot use. You must do it.”

Upon Beatrice's proposal, Felt showed an expression drowned in thought. But, the next moment, she raised her eyebrows and rotated her neck, swiping through her blonde hair, she let out a voice saying "Ah!".

And, she pointed her fist towards Beatrice.

Felt: "Don't fall through, little girl."

Beatrice: "You too, I suppose, pipsqueak."

Nothing in particular was returned to the pointed fist, they only exchanged insults preceding the accepted decisive battle.

While Beatrice and the other's conversation met its end, almost at the same time, Batenkaitos' self-discussion came to an end. Beatrice did not have the confidence, to collide head-on with the combat power that had slashed down and defeated Dynas and Otto.

Lye: "Well, have your preparations been complete~d, Beatrice-sama~?"

Beatrice: "If the answer is they haven't and you'll offer deferment for that, then that is the answer, in fact. But, if that isn't the case, then there's no point in that question, I suppose."

Lye: "That's exactly how it is. Hm, well then, once again—let's eat!"

From the other corner, with his eyes locked with Beatrice's, Batenkaitos flew straight towards Beatrice. His velocity, was not of the level of the nightmarish threat that had been witnessed earlier. Regardless, it was sufficiently threatening to Beatrice. Her disadvantage at close combat remained unchanged.

That's why, as an expert of Yin magic, it was a convention to not clash head-on.

Lye: "Ta~ke, thi~s—!"

Right before Beatrice, the body of Batenkaitos, who had his hands on ground, rotated vertically. The swinging launched heel drew close to right overhead of Beatrice, and the sharp strike pierced into the crown of her head.

Beatrice: “That won’t happen, in fact.”

—Right beforehand, Beatrice’s body, once again, tilted backwards thanks to the aerial force of the kick. It was the result of letting the effect of Murak, which had been invoked earlier, to continue.

With her body angled backwards, Beatrice then jumped straight up at that point. Freed from the effect of gravity, freed from the effect of weight, the young girl softly levitated.

Folding her dress’ skirt adroitly, Beatrice’s body floated in the wind, moving about.

Lye: “Magnificently done! Howeve~r, the coping is sweet!”

Batenkaitos, with his tongue stretched out, reached the spot of landing, and without waiting for her descent, went towards the mid-air Beatrice and tried to catch her.

With the vigor and accuracy of a bird of prey capturing its prey, those fingers reached for Beatrice. However, at the same time, it was also the proof of the opponent having ascent to mid-air, where there was no way to escape.

Above the remaining count of exercising magic being possible, this was an illustrious focus for striking.

Beatrice pointed her palm towards Batenkaitos, who was advancing from below, and invoked the magic she had been utmost accustomed to, throughout her life of four hundred years, and this one year.

Namely—

Beatrice: “Shamak!!”

Magic Stone shattered in her pocket, while following Beatrice’s chant, black haze effused—the leaping Batenkaitos met with it straight with his head, and got caged within a world of incomprehension.

Lye: “A~rgh—?!”

The black haze reached through, and Batenkaitos’ body fell onto the cobblestone, defenseless. He was supposed to be in a state where he was incapable of doing anything till it shook off but, Shamak’s effect was not so lasting.

The card left with Beatrice now—with the remaining one Magic Stone that could be utilized, if she were to land a fatal blow, he would not be able to take it. That is why, this was the moment of choice for Beatrice.

Lye: “A~h! Aren’t you doing it, Beatrice-sama ~tsu. As if, you are fighting just like that person… Did you receive influence or somethi~ng?!”

Shaking off Shamak, Batenkaitos showed his fangs, turning his body. Looking through the plaza, his eyes were directly upon Beatrice, as if fixed.

The memories of the young girl within him, mustn’t have witnessed the spectacle of Beatrice standing by Subaru’s side. That is why, even after seeing his influence upon her tough fighting form, he did not realize how immense of a meaning it held.

Beatrice: “Here, lavishly feast upon the last Magic Stone, in fact!”

Shaking free from her sentiment, Beatrice pointed her palm towards Otto, who was lying down, with his legs rolling up. Using the magical power of the final Magic Stone, a healing wave was directed towards the wounds of Otto’s legs.

It was far from healing it completely, but still, it just had receded the hopeless pain. The rolled down Otto, who was in tears, coughed violently mingled with sobs and groans.

Lye: “So useless, now, what will happen by reviving?”

Beatrice: “This will happen, in fact!”

Beatrice yelled the consequence of her action at Batenkaitos, who was laughing, saying that she had wasted her card.

The instant after he furrowed his eyebrows at her caustic words, at the rear of Batenkaitos' legs, something snapped its teeth. As fangs thrust deep into his left leg, Batenkaitos' stance crumbled.

Instantly looking down at his leg, seeing that, Batenkaitos widened his eyes.

Lye: "Ha~h?!"

Surprised by the thing beyond understanding, what was present there was a Water Dragon bathing in blood.

With its neck stretched out, the Water Dragon, having rushed madly across the cobblestone, crunched Batenkaitos. The Water Dragon, which had once been cornered into being unable to battle, was persisting to its final willpower.

Of the five Magic Stones, this is how the third one had been utilized.

The first one for the intense Ul Minya, which was unable to be completed, the second one for an urgent evasion through the use of Murak, the third one used for the recovery of the dying Water Dragon before the invocation of Murak.

The fourth one for using Shamak, and the fifth one for taking care of Otto's pain.

That is how Beatrice's five cards, her five Magic Stones for attaining victory, had been utilized.

Otto: "—A~h! Ithurtsithurts, it hu~rts!"

Crying such that his throat was seemingly going to explode, Otto, who had hid his call for the Water Dragon in his shriek, having fulfilled his role, now, finally, screamed for his own suffering.

Otto is truly sharp in things like this, the moment after he had received Beatrice's treatment, he immediately understood what he was supposed to do under the current situation. Only he was capable of serving as the internal affairs official of the Emilia camp, who were often unwillingly dragged out to the battlefield.

Beatrice: “Well done, I suppose, this is your vocation, in fact!”

Otto: “I don’t really understand but I’m not happy to hear that!”

That was the response Otto gave, in tears, to Beatrice’s unusual compliment. And then, before the eyes of the two, Batenkaitos, who had been crunched upon by the Water Dragon, tugged it to the ground and threw it down, and somehow unfastening its fangs, tried to stand up.

However, their reactions were just before the trump card made it in time.

Felt: “—Preparations, all set. You worked hard, little girl.”

A voice elated with success echoed, and the rear of the Meteor knocked the ground, generating a particularly loud noise.

The staff, fabricated to deceive as if it was the back of a cesspool, its tip was pointed towards Batenkaitos by Felt. In her hands, the Meteor got tinged by faint light, and its after-effect blew off its package.

With the white package having come off, the slender white staff was revealed from within.

Its handle was long enough to qualify being the length of a spear, with no exquisite designs, or any eye-catching mechanisms.

It could be said that its dedicated utility and structure was, truly reflecting its creator’s spirit.

The very spirit of the Witch Echidna, who sought no further value of a device any more than what it was supposed to possess as that device.

Beatrice: “Mother…”

They truth is, Beatrice had never seen Echidna use the staff. Even still, she was aware of its purpose, and its might.

To pester the Divine Dragon Volcanica—to think it was a weapon, capable of obstructing even the Divine Dragon.

With that being said, there are some conditions to its usage.

Either fulfilling those conditions could be difficult, or there could be problems with the user, so clearly showing all of its limitless specs was arduous—.

Felt: “A~ll right, the power which connected to even Reinhard, have a taste and see~!”

With the condition fulfilled, if Felt still had stock of Mana, the expected amount should be sufficient.

Sucking out Mana from the user, Meteor limitlessly continued to drain power, and the radiance lighting at its tip had its aim set upon Batenkaitos.

Lye: “—~tsu.”

Even Batenkaitos was unable to prevent the might from coming down upon him.

Judging that there was a possibility of it proving to be fatal, Batenkaitos instantaneously attacked the snout of the Water Dragon constraining his leg, and the moment its fangs loosened, he unbound his legs, and flew, while carrying the gash.

At that moment, the Meteor twinkled conspicuously and potently.

Felt: “Go—~hk!!”

Light distended at Meteor’s tip, and the corona was fired towards Batenkaitos.

Batenkaitos, who had escaped instantaneously from the restraint of the Water Dragon, somehow rolled away from its path with his injured leg. At the same pace, the light missed its aim, and collided with the Water Dragon—at that instant, its trajectory warped. The light drew a complex trajectory, and approached Batenkaitos.

Lye: "Wha—~tsu?!"

With his self escaping from the chasing light bullet, Batenkaitos raised his voice. At the same pace, with carriage and jumping of his sharp body, he got out of the trajectory of the light bullet progressively getting closer.

However, it was futile. Even if Batenkaitos escaped away, rolled away, leapt away, the light bullet drew arcs, drew circles, inched closer, and aimed for a direct hit.

That was the greatest power of the Magic Weapon Meteor, created by Echidna.

Once it had set its aim, it functioned so that it kept track of it.

The weapon created by Echidna to Pester the Divine Dragon Volcanica. If Echidna was truly serious regarding it, and wanted to engineer a device solely for the purpose of Pestering, it is obvious she would not allow for any compromises in it.

Henceforth, that magic tool was, incapable of missing its aim, did not let its aim escape, and became a weapon whose hit always landed.

Lye: "Nuu, ~tsugh… Then, how about this?!"

No matter how much he ran, the unbound light bullet continued its pursuit, and with some observations cooking up, Batenkaitos launched his counterattack. An upsurge of magical power, and Batenkaitos' environs froze.

Various levitating icicles formed, with their pointed tips facing the light bullet, and the stormy barrage rained upon the corona—however, that opposition was a mistake.

The moment the icicles came in contact with the corona, they got reduced to mana starting from their tips, and before the could land a hit, they interspersed into smaller fragments and got swallowed up by the light bullet. Furthermore, the light bullet absorbed all of the magical interceptors that drew close, and as that power enlarged its own scale, it continued to approach the enemy.

Lye: “Shit, no way… no way ~tsu!”

Rolling, somehow getting out of its path, Batenkaitos let out the curse. However, the injury on his left leg was deep, and it did not allow for him to jump completely.

Otherwise, if could be agile enough, it may be possible for him to direct the light bullet towards Beatrice and the rest, or have it aim at Felt herself, but he did not have that much energy left.

The pursuing light bullet traced its path around the rolling Batenkaitos, and disabling the areas through which he could escape, it gradually enveloped the body of Gluttony in its destructive might —

Lye: “No way, by something that looks so stupid, we will we will —!”

Lye: “Shut your mumbling. Right away, Solar Eclipse should be started.”

At the instant of the strike, Batenkaitos raised a wretched voice, which got painted away by, again, a terribly cold voice. And, the light exploded.

“…”

The dazzling corona distended at the core of the open plaza, and gave rise to the largest crater till now.

The expanded light blotted the world in white, and the parts which got blotted vanished, as if losing color.

The open plaza had been hollowed out spherically, and the water flowing in the waterway streamed into it.

However,

???: “Whew, geez. Having an unskilled brother really causes troubles.”

Next to the destructive cataclysm, was a shadow peeping at the waterway.

Having lengthened brown hair, it was someone with a body covered in scars. Needlessly to say, the physical traits, were none other than those of the confronting Lye Batenkaitos.

How did he possibly, manage to evade the attack of the light bullet—however, what was utmost astonishing in this place was not that.

Beatrice: “What does, this mean, I suppose.”

Beatrice’s words, did not stem from the confound of the attack not striking.

First of all, the attack failing to strike was not the problem. As the light bullet was supposed to strike Batenkaitos, and nothing or nobody aside from Batenkaitos.

That is why, it was obvious that it would not strike the muscular and brawny giant man, who had his back turned towards them. The problem was from just where had that man appeared from.

Otto: “Is that… Gluttony?”

Said Otto, raising his agonized face and glancing at the same. Though she wanted to deny it, Beatrice, right now, did not have any words for that. At the gaze of the silent Beatrice and the others, the giant man abruptly turned back.

The one there was the giant man, with a grim countenance, which resembled yet did not match well with Batenkaitos.

With an appearance that suggested he was close to his forties, there were no parts of him that even slightly overlapped with that blasphemer. In front of Beatrice, who narrowed her eyes, that giant man put his hand on his chin,

???: “There is no need to make such a puzzled face. We just, did this.”

And, saying with feminine words, contradicting his appearance, the man relaxedly sliced away his long hair with his sword. As the chopped off strands of hair fell to the ground, Beatrice understood how the light bullet had been evaded.

The Meteor’s tracking functioned till it has established contact with its target.

That was its power. Even if it came in contact with a single portion of the body, its might would be sufficient to amass the whole body. That point had been used in inverse.

The man—perhaps Batenkaitos had, chopped off his hair, and made it seem to the light bullet that it had “come in contact with the body”. And, fleeing from the attack’s span with all of his strength, he had managed to evade the detriment.

On the other hand, the plan also had the potential to not be successful, but this time alone the result had been a perfect one.

By nature, for determining the Meteor’s target, it was necessary to align it towards what would become the target and Aim.

Though it was best to connect to the target’s Od or Gate, but in this case, being utilized as an emergency measure, it got applied to Batenkaitos’ hair, that had fallen amidst the battle. Result of which, the light bullet strayed towards the decoy of the hair.

“…”

Thinking that much, Beatrice gnashed her teeth at how unfavorable the situation was.

She had not expected, at all, that the trump card, Meteor, would get dodged through such a way. Her Magic Stones had been used up, the only one left with her now was the one she wanted to save for Puck.

Otto and the other men could no longer fight, and Felt too, who had gotten the bulk of her Mana drained out by the Mana, had crumbled, breathing hoarsely.

There was nothing left that she could do now—though that idea came up in her mind, Beatrice horizontally shook her head.

It would be better to die rather than accept defeat. Just as Subaru found a way out of even the most hopeless of situations, her self must do the same.

That is why, Beatrice raised her face, and set her eyes upon the man.

Facing the gaze, Batenkaitos rounded his eyes. He then put one hand on his hip, and covered his face with his other palm. And,

???: “Nice, how nice, isn’t it nice, certainly it is nice, perhaps it is nice, possibly it nice, because it is probably nice… we too, we too, see the value of Eating you.”

Beatrice: “—~hk.”

Before Beatrice could rebuke what babbling she had heard, Batenkaitos’ body started to change. His bones distorted, creating a particular sound, with blood gushing out that was painful to even look at, the body of the giant man wilted.

Shedding blood from the newly created wounds, regaining the form of a young boy, was Batenkaitos, breathing hoarsely.

Batenkaitos’ whole body was being wounded, however, he continued to express his insane smile. Gluttony, looking towards this side while ringing his lowered throat, spread his two arms, in seemingly happiness.

Louis: “Our name is, Witch Cult Sin Archbishop representing Gluttony, Louis Arneb.”

Beatrice: “Louis…?”

Lye Batenkaitos, that was supposed to be his name.

Without reading the intention behind suddenly giving a different name for himself, Beatrice furrowed her eyebrows. And, stitching that gap of confusion, Batenkaitos, with just his right leg, powerfully kicked the ground.

Beatrice toughened up her body, observing what he was going to do but, Gluttony flew to the edge of the plaza, recovering the tattered cloth that had fallen there, and wore it, as if hiding his scarred skin.

Above that,

Louis: “Unfortunately, that’s all for today. As both Lye and Roy are too exhausted. Any further will cause hindrances in giving birth. Let’s meet again, cute young miss.”

Beatrice: "—! Do you think, you will escape, I suppose!"

Louis: "Please stop acting strong. Though Eclipse cannot be handled decently in this body, it can still at least completely annihilate. The reason that won't be done, is because the dinner table isn't prepared."

Batenkaitos shook his head and pointed his finger towards Beatrice, who tried to step ahead.

A terribly feminine gesture—no, the truth is, the current Batenkaitos may possibly be a woman. At that part, there was the essence of something difficult to understand.

Batenkaitos nodded at Beatrice, who stopped her feet with unpleasant feelings and wariness.

Louis: "Both Lye of Gourmet and Roy of Bizarre Eating know nothing. After all. A meal is not "what you ate". It's "who you ate with"."

"…"

Louis: "Well then. Next time, come to meet us along with the person dear to you."

Beatrice: "Wai—"

Wait, just when she was about to call that out, Batenkaitos slid into the shadow of the open plaza and disappeared. Going after him was something Beatrice could not do, in this situation full of the injured.

Following him, and diving into a situation where Gluttony was at a clear advantage would be reckless as well.

There no longer was anything that could be done, now that even the trump card Meteor had failed.

Beatrice: "…It's about doing it, in fact."

Enduring her desire to speak out, Beatrice glanced around.

The pain had eroded away much of Otto's consciousness, the mercenaries and Felt's attendant had fainted, swooned. Felt was making a frustrated expression, but she was giving the impression that she could collapse at any moment.

And Beatrice, too, was no exception.

In accordance with Kiritaka's desperate appeal, its completion with no deaths, should only that be accepted as the result of Beatrice's participation in the battlefield.

Regardless—.

Beatrice: "It seems Subaru cannot even be asked for a hug confidently, I suppose…"

In the prey that was allowed to escape—in Lye Batenkaitos, slept the soul of a young girl.

Ascertaining the surety in that, how could it be conveyed to Subaru.

With terribly heartbreaking sorrow, Beatrice turned and stepped towards Felt, calling out to her faintly.

Ironically, the fight of this battlefield came to an end with the withdrawal of the Sin Archbishop—

Only a few battlefields now bequeathed in the Watergate City.

Chapter 71:
Sword Demon VS Former Sword Saint

The various battles across the span of the city, were gradually meeting their end.

The destruction caused in areas now altered into battlefields was immense, and the city's faculty had been greatly impacted.

This very fact, which conveyed the extent of the catastrophe that had transpired in this city of Priestella—could be labelled as the result of the malice brought forth by the Witch Cult into the city.

Within the situation of such devastation continuing to rise and be inflicted, there existed a single battlefield with a different hair color.

Rather, it may not even be appropriate to call it a battlefield.

Only the solemn sound of swords clashing echoed, with each of the coruscating swiping swords aiming for the other's life.

Present here was only the tactless wish of two swordsmen, with the tips of their swords pointing towards each other, shredding everything unneeded with their, what could be at least said, true desire upon them.

"…"

The swords' blades continued to gleam under the moonlight, and the swordsmen continued to exchange love over clashes of steel.

Sharp reports, scattering sparks, grey and red hair continued to dance under the rays of the moon.

A swords dance so magnificent and polished, it would indisputably steal the sights of all audiences, or rob them of their hearts, it was such that even the Sword God would ululate.

The unimaginably lustrous movement of the longsword, as though blading through water.

With a rebound, the twin swords swept through the breeze, striking the other like lightning.

"…"

As though dancing a performance of reciprocated fixation, the swords of the two continued to intertwine with each other.

Wilhelm accepted the sword slash of the one in front of him, of Theresia, who was still as beautiful as when she had been young, from the front, bathed in the sword slash with the same vigor, and woed at the reaction he felt in his palm.

Boiling up from the depths of his body, was the acclamation of his immature self's heart, despite his age.

—He was getting exhilarated.

—He was getting delighted.

—He was blooming.

With honesty, must he affirm.

The Sword Demon Wilhelm thought back to the days gone by, and yearned for a present where he could, once again, connect with his youthful wife. His heart had been scorched by that.

His mind was now occupied by the thought, by how much he desired and how he would willingly renounce everything, if only it meant for this exchange of swords, this tryst, to never come to an end.

Wilhelm: "But—"

Such greed was blasphemy, it was unforgivable for him to even bear it.

Blasphemy, to the untiring days the Sword Demon Wilhelm had dedicated to the sword.

Blasphemy, to his oath of taking away the sword from the Sword Saint Theresia, once he put her to defeat.

Blasphemy, to his sentiments of utmost dedication to his master, as a swordsman.

To detachedly follow the love that lit the chest of Wilhelm van Astrea, would be blasphemy to everything that was living in this world at this very moment.

—Henceforth, he must not defer the cessation.

—Regardless of how much these moments, had proven to be a delightful paradise for the Sword Demon.

Theresia: "…"

Wilhelm: "Hiy, a~a~a~a~!!"

A mute slash of the sword, swept through like a storm, to which he responded with his own barrage of innumerable sword strikes.

With long, deep red hair swaying, Theresia's movements, clad in white clothes, possessed no vacillation.

Like a leaf afloat a stream, the lethal sword was fired from the interior of her completely natural stance.

Up, down, left, right, her sword strikes had no particular angle.

However, as the attacks overlapped, Wilhelm felt something be slightly off. He felt this cogent discordance in her responses as well.

Theresia van Astrea's ability as a swordsman was exceptional.

Naturally, even when his body was at its prime, Wilhelm unmistakably failed to rival that territory in terms of pure swordsmanship.

Even now, that prowess remained abode in Theresia's blade, as she stood in front of him, silent.

The art of the Sword Saint, to mercilessly kill adversaries, that invited both relief and envy onto guardians.

—However, her current self and her self of those days, had a realm of decisive difference in between them.

Wilhelm: "—Light."

As the twin sword and longsword collided face to face and sparks scattered around, the Sword Demon remarked.

Locking swords, Wilhelm acutely stared into the blue eyes on the other side of the sword's blade.

Wilhelm: "Without even a need to compare, it's light, Theresia. —Your sword, which rid itself of its hefty burden, is it something so light."

Theresia: "…"

A certain tone, words mingled with disappointment, yet the eyebrows of her beautiful face let not even twitch.

Theresia, with perfectly clear eyes, lacking all emotion, was returning a look to Wilhelm.

No refutation, no revolt, they did not hold even enmity.

She used to be a woman who used to often smile, often get angry, often sulk.

She used to be a woman beautiful like the blade when she was silent, but the times of her being silent were almost none.

She used to be a woman like a spherical flower, blooming under the sun.

—Thus, her state now, was naught but tragic.

Theresia: "…"

Present there was only the shell of his silent wife.

As he exchanged slashes of swords with the figure he had continued to love, Wilhelm's heart shattered into fragments.

Prancing as if having returned to the days of the past, attenuating as if understanding the days of the past could not be returned to, casting aside the days of the past as if having a dream akin to a bubble on the surface.

—For fifteen years, what kind of a life must Theresia have lead.

When he thought back to the time he had lost her, and dedicated himself to vengeance, the incurable wound on Wilhelm's shoulder ascertained itself.

A wound inflicted by the Divine Protection of Death God, never disappears.

It was the Divine Protection aside from the Divine Protection of the Sword Saint bestowed upon Theresia by the Sword God, in order to bring cease to those days of war.

A single slit could generate a river of blood, a few slashes could pile up a mountain of corpses.

Henceforth, there lay no necessity of superficial cleverness and artfulness for her, in order to sever the thread of life.

Indeed, the only way of defeating Theresia, was through swordsmanship superior to that of hers.

Wilhelm of the past had shred himself to his extreme limits, with such austerity that converted his own self into a sword, by persevering till the very end had he truly managed to accomplish that.

There was no way of defeating Theresia, who, too, got her abilities boosted to their very limit through the Divine Protection of the Sword Saint.

And now, having exchanged swords with her youthful self, Wilhelm understood.

—Her abilities with the sword were transcendent, and lay in the territory of dexterity. However, there was one enormous shadow casted upon her swordsmanship.

Wilhelm: “Even if you felt troubled before holding the sword, you no longer felt troubled after taking hold of it. You were a woman, who knew that even better than myself.”

Theresia: “…”

Wilhelm: “Do you remember the day we parted. At the occasion of the Great Subjugation, you shook me up as I stopped you, and inflicted an incurable wound upon this shoulder of mine. —Your words back then, I have not forgotten even a single one of them.”

She gave no answer. He did not solicit one.

This was simply Wilhelm’s ceremony, looking back onto that day.

Along with the pain of this shoulder, the memory etched within also resuscitated.

Whilst she commenced with the Great Subjugation, a journey she could potentially never return from, Theresia had verbatim let go of herself from Wilhelm, and had expressed.

—When I return, that day, please let me hear the words I could not hear.

Wilhelm: “I have come here, to fulfill the promise of that day—!”

The twin swords roared, and Theresia’s longsword strummed.

The former Sword Saint swung the blade utilizing that recoil but Wilhelm, without even looking at that counterattack, dodged by fully reading through its trajectory.

He knew it.

Where the blade was going to come, so much so that he was in love with it.

Wilhelm: “Ru, o~o~o~o~!”

The habits were the same. The techniques were the same.

Scorched onto his soul, within the austerity of his former self, when he had shred himself, he had painted them in his mind, the sword techniques of the Sword Saint he was in pursuit of.

Defeating her, swearing to take it away from her, reaching that territory, he yearned, yearned, and they were scorched onto his soul.

It was the same, along with her figure, which warmed his chest.

Theresia: “…”

Even against Wilhelm’s implore, the ravishing face of rose did not flinch, even slightly.

As the sword aimed for its prey soundlessly, silently, emotionlessly, Wilhelm shot it down altogether.

He loved it so much, that he knew it even with his eyes closed.

That is precisely why, he now chose to love it without closing his eyes.

Wilhelm: “—~hk.”

—Above, countered the slash, exchanged swipes, raised the blade, slashed the sword diagonally.

Accepting the blade raining down upon him, and sinking the counterattacking strike, dodging the swipe then released, gyrating his body around the leaping point of the sword, both sides, who had slashed diagonally across each other’s shoulders, then entwined their swords as the key performers, and shifted the counterattack.

Surpassing the blows with an elegant safeguard, impossibility arose in Theresia’s swordsmanship.

Theresia, who had accumulated the blows, retreated, and Wilhelm plunged into that interval without any hesitation.

"…"

For a single moment, emotion arose within Theresia's eyes, who was looking at the Sword Demon.

No, it was his misapprehension. His effeminate heart, had pulled out the memory of a situation of the past, identical to this one.

—Within the sights of abundant citizens, Wilhelm had struck and defeated the lead actor of the ceremony, the Sword Saint, and robbed the youth named Theresia from the Sword God.

A facsimile of that situation, identical as this one.

Then, the conclusion too, would be identical once again.

Wilhelm: "Theresia—~hk!!"

Wilhelm attacked the longsword, flying towards her bosom.

The Sword Demon hoisted up his twin sword against it, and unable to bear the pressure, there occurred a fissure in the blade. But, at the same time the longsword repelled it by turning right overhead, and half of Theresia's body largely opened up.

Drawing a wide semi circle, Wilhelm's twin sword made its return.

Since the origin of this tryst till this point, Theresia, who was right before his eyes, produced the greatest interval yet. With the muscles of his arms swelling up, he gripped the handle of the sword, to the point it started creaking.

And wielding the attack with all of his might, now must he put an end to this inconceivable reunion—.

—He attempted to, put an end to it.

Wilhelm: "—~hk!"

Violent passion packed his throat, countless facial expressions levitating in his eyes.

Her face when she was crying, her face when she was angry, her face when she was sulking, her face when she was smiling, levitating were the beloved expressions, of the same woman.

Shaking that off in its entirety, Wilhelm shot down the blade.

The sword slice bolted, straight from the head till the torso of the woman—.

"…"

Before the slash could strike, a person's shadow emerged in the corner of Wilhelm's eyes.

At the utmost limit of focus, it was a fluctuation in his concentration originally impossible. However, that was all there was to it. Without any kind of influence, it was nothing beyond what he could simply ignore.

As a swordsman, with his life on the line, must he cross swords at the border of life and death, no bystanders could ever create any room of doubt in that.

Devoting his everything to the being in front of his eyes, he fulfilled his purpose with a sword slash befitting of the Sword Demon.

That was supposed to be what he was going to do. That was supposed to be what he could do.

—Had the shadow reflected, not been that of a person of red.

???: "—Father?"

There was distance in between.

The doubtful mutter was not at a distance where its echo could reach Wilhelm.

Yet, he felt the voice as though being whispered right into his ear.

Looking towards him, was a man with blue eyes and red hair.

Heinkel Astrea, was observing the final moments of this battle.

Simply dazed, at the denouement of the deadly swordsmanship of his father, Wilhelm, and his mother, Theresia, as they aimed for each other's life.

—At that moment, the glint of his sword became dull.

Wilhelm: "—~hk."

He was supposed to have fired a decisive strike.

Pouring himself into the trends of the fight, a sword strike that was supposed to bring an end to this long dream—the glint dulled, giving birth to a scope for counterattack.

"…"

Theresia bent her body immensely, and reversing her wrist, the rebounding longsword rejected the twin sword away.

The sound of the two blades colliding echoed, and she disarrayed down the strike that had promised to wound her, with her heart, technique, physique, and distanced his purpose further away from fulfillment, as sparks scattered about.

Wilhelm: "Kh… ~hk."

—Why, did he take notice.

Receiving the blow of the sword fluttering in the wind, sidestepping its weight, Wilhelm clashed head-on with his emerging doubts with all of his heart.

Had he not noticed Heinkel's presence, or had he ignored his presence, had he kept focus on Theresia, he would not be in the unsightly shape he was in now.

He had determined to dedicate his entire life, and take Theresia away from the Sword God.

The result of that aggrandized decision, did it have to be this predicament.

Once again, commenced the successive notes of light sword strikes.

However, the blade that had formerly turned transparent after the exchange of blows, had already lost its swords dance.

Foreign impurities had intermingled.

Using all kinds of strengths of all possible limits, further enhancing the purity of the blade, had all been lost by the edge of the sword, which was supposed to have been swung only twice, due to a single appearance on the other side.

All what remained was a solitary strike by the aged Sword Demon at his beloved wife, in front of their son.

Without becoming a sword, without living as a Sword Demon, he was far too immature, far too deficient, as a father, as a husband, as a swordsman, as a man.

Eventually being rendered incapable of a single swing, he realized his immaturity.

He was unable to stop foulness from intermingling with the essence of the swordsmanship pouring into the sword.

Henceforth, this result may have been inevitable.

Wilhelm: “—~hk?!”

Once the two blades were shot down, he then immediately jolted the longsword.

Receiving the power of the sword strike with tactless earnesty, their strengths were being compared within the interval created by Theresia halting her legs□ the moment he overcame the resistance and stepped ahead, the slender body in front of his eyes rotated, creating a vacuum around.

A leg appeared before him, halfway, and an interval was born.

"…"

Immediately afterwards, premonition of demise shadowed him.

He received the supremely mighty sword slash of indubitable coldness, by gyrating his sword towards the rear with not even a millisecond of delay.

Without being able to stop the shattering attack, his sword, that had accepted it, encroached deeply into his own shoulder. Stepping as if on a foot bellow, his body whilst bent forward spouted blood. His bones creaked, his muscles palpitated a lighting in his brain.

His right blade had accepted it. His left blade still remained.

With blood cascading from the edge of his mouth, Wilhelm, using his right blade, as if carrying it on his shoulder, once again deflected Theresia's longsword upwards.

Devoid of inaccuracy, Theresia's longsword was raised overhead.

At the same time, the sword fell from Wilhelm's right hand. He did not mind. If his right hand was now free, he must dedicate all of his strength into the remaining left blade and strike.

With his left blade, he hammered a blow into Theresia, behind him.

Carving a clockwise trajectory, a grim sword strike pierced upright into Theresia—

"…"

Sparks scattered.

A sound echoed, a high-pitched report.

The weight of the blade in his hand was halved, and Wilhelm, wielding his own errs, having innumerably recognized his own weakness, once again took notice.

The moment he struck Theresia with the attack, Wilhelm chose to act subconsciously.

The blade gripped in his left hand, whether he should strike it by gyrating it towards the left or towards the right.

A slight, mere, meagre difference.

But at the same time, it marked a lethal difference for those two, who had attained the extremity of swordsmanship.

If he chose velocity, left, or if he opted for strength, then right.

After getting caught up in that choice, if he managed to realize he had erred in that action, things could still be helped.

Wilhelm, whilst determining whether or not to look at Theresia straight ahead, in that single instant, lost his way.

"…"

Accepting the Sword Demon's attack, was a single swing released by Theresia's grip.

Catching hold of it while it was mid-air, Theresia cut into the trajectory of the attack.

The moment she accepted the sword, and engaged it whilst standing still, she swung it down with immense force. This cracked the belly of Wilhelm's sword, and rejected the steel, faced with no resistance.

The longsword fragmented his sword, and Wilhelm perceived the loss of his special weapon. Instantly gripping to the handle of the fractured sword, he prepared for the following attack, which was in his instinct as a swordsman.

However, that preparedness would bear fruit, only if he differed in the purity as a swordsman.

In that respect, her self, in front of his eyes, was the worst possible opponent.

The Sword Demon who lost his sword, and the Sword Saint loved by the Sword God.

That difference was clear, no necessity for even delineating it.

—During the juncture he forgot to even blink his eyes, Wilhelm saw the longsword pierce through his right leg.

"…"

It was a sword so beautiful, to the extent he was charmed by it.

The blade penetrated into the joint of the aged swordsman's right leg, and the edge of the sword was contaminated by minimal blood.

Without any unneeded destruction, right through the gap between muscle fibers and nerves, taking away only the functionality of the leg, it was the excellence of preeminent swordsmanship.

The lack of resistance was such that it seemed as if the blade was simply swiping through water.

With that performance being held upon his own right leg, Wilhelm's back shuddered.

Was his emotion that of admiration, vexation, infatuation, he himself did not know, which one complied.

What he did know, was only the truth of his defeat being thrusted into his face.

Wilhelm: "Gh, ugh… ~hk."

As the blade embedded in his right leg slid through, the height of his knees was divided.

Just as when the longsword had pierced in, his flesh was drawn out soundlessly, Wilhelm groaned upon the delayed pain and crumbled.

As blood flooded out of his leg's wound, his lower body was rendered powerless.

If the power of the Divine Protection of Death God was invoked, any type of healing magic may be used, but it shall not heal. The closer the distance with the wielder of the Divine Protection, the more its effectivity increased, no matter how marginal the wound, it became a curse that eroded away life and coerced endless bloodshed upon the victim.

"…"

The wound on Wilhelm's right leg, was not so slight as to be labelled a shallow wound. It was a gash that could be life threatening if it was neglected, and the Divine Protection of Death God was obligated to refuse all recovery.

It seemed as if the deadline for his life, had been set for a period excessively short.

Wilhelm: "…Regrettable."

As his brain was being scorched by the pain, he leaked out his grief prior to his anguish.

The sense of pain was stimulating an incessant screech, but Wilhelm revealed it on his face simply via furrowing his eyebrows and nothing else.

He was not frivolously holding it back, or affixing it to his willpower.

The sharp impetus upon his body, could not possible ever outstrip the darkness veiling his heart.

When despair, despondency, and his own cowardliness and worthlessness was being scorched onto his soul, what significance could physical ache possibly hold for this aged swordsman.

"…"

Dropping the sword in his hand, Wilhelm put his hand on the mouth of the wound.

The bleeding was supposed to leak away his life but the defeated had no intention of disgracefully maintaining distance. However, according to etiquette, he must not meet his end by something like blood loss.

He had fought as a swordsman, he had opposed as a swordsman, he had been defeated as a swordsman.

Then, the life of the defeated, was to be taken away by the sword of the victor.

Wilhelm: “Theresia, I am…”

Theresia: “…”

The female swordsman of rose, with her longsword being carried on her shoulder, was looking down towards Wilhelm.

In those eyes, truly, existed no deep emotion. Without remembering anything until the very end, and continuing to not remember anything, she was the death god of the sword who was going to reap Wilhelm’s life.

He looked up at the beautiful face, such that he was fascinated by it.

Theresia, silent, swung the sword before Wilhelm. Once her sword descended, Wilhelm’s life, too, would come to an end.

But—

Wilhelm: “All alone, never will I…!”

The instant of the longsword’s descent, Wilhelm extended his right hand. Lying there, was a fragment of the twin swords—the sword Theresia had cast aside.

Wilhelm picked it up with his fingers, and floundered, unable to accept the moment of his death, till the end of the end.

His defeat, that remained unchanged.

That could not be helped.

But her, in these moments, he must not render Theresia, her, alone.

Unable to stop his wife, who was being made to swing the sword against her will, he could not allow her to advance towards Crusch, whom he was greatly indebted to, or Subaru and the rest.

If his ignition of his life was insufficient, then he did not mind the destruction of his soul after death.

—However, the brandish of that resolution was.

Theresia: "…"

Wilhelm: "Theresia…?"

Keeping her sword held tight, Theresia leapt a great distance backwards.

The blade he held in his right hand, she was a distance that its swipe would not reach her. At a position that would be beyond Wilhelm's reach, whose leg had been injured, Theresia slightly inclined her neck.

Emotionless eyes, seeing a terribly empty color in them, Wilhelm, for the first time, experienced fright.

That fear, was a fear that arose in his instinct, in Wilhelm's instincts as a swordsman.

There lay no necessity to go out of the way and deliver a finishing blow, to a prey bearing fatal injuries.

With the pride of a swordsman long lost, this was the judgement which could only be cast by a calm death god.

Wilhelm: "Wait… Wait, Theresia!!"

Wilhelm shouted, at the dread of being left behind.

His leg did not hurt. Forgetting the ache of his right leg, Wilhelm tried to pursue the distant Theresia. However, the pain, or at the very least, the wound, was real. Without any strength, he tumbled. Potently striking his shoulder, the aged swordsman made an expression conveying how unforgivable this was.

Swinging about her long, red hair, Theresia became further distant.

Ahead of the path of her self's footsteps, was Heinkel, standing upright.

The longsword, with no decline in fighting spirit hitherto, established him as its next prey.

Slashing the man whom she did not know was her husband, she shall next slash the man whom she did not know was her son, for that purpose—.

Wilhelm: "Stop, Theresia! Do you think that is… that is forgivable?! Fight with me! Look at me… at me! Look at me, at me, Theresia~a~a~a~!!"

With a voice as though bleeding, Wilhelm called Theresia.

Innumerable times, innumerable times, that name which he wished to call whilst having her in his eyes, in a form utterly unalike the figure he had thought of innumerable times, rage in lieu of love, insanity in lieu of ardor, devoting it all.

However, the woman did not look back.

Gripping firmly the sword where abode the death god, the woman slowly resumed heading towards Heinkel. Heinkel inhaled at that figure advancing ahead, and unsheathed the knight sword with his own trembling hands.

Heinkel: "W-Wait, I said wait. Y-You… Theresia he said, no way? It can't be possible… It, can't be mother… ~hk."

Theresia: "…"

Heinkel: "No, even if it isn't mother… that's not it! Fa-Father had become like that, so… shit! What is this! Just what is this, what are you doi~ng!"

Looming before his eyes, was Theresia of her youthful days.

That form, and the form of her as a mother within Heinkel, shall never overlap. He shook his neck horizontally in repudiation, and desperately tried to deny the spectacle before his eyes, voicing words he failed to put a halt to.

His knees sneered, his line of sight disarrayed, and his figure, whilst wielding the sword, too, seemed frail.

Faced with the former Sword Saint, he had not even the slightest of chance.

At this rate, unquestionably, Heinkel shall get slashed to his death by Theresia.

That alone was something, which could never be allowed to happen.

Wilhelm: "Theresia! Over here! I am still alive! If you want to kill then kill me first! Heinkel, there's no way you can do it! Right this instant, flee!!"

Supporting himself with the sword, Wilhelm stood up feeling as though he was crunching stones. With no room for grasping his wound, with an increase in pressure further of his blood gushed out.

A cascade of fresh blood, the cobblestone subsequently metamorphosed into a hue of red, and whilst pulling the thread of that blood, Wilhelm pursued Theresia's back.

Distant. Too distant.

Slow. Too slow.

Once again, Wilhelm did not make it. Once again, Wilhelm could not reach it.

Wilhelm: "Hugh… ~hk."

Theresia: "…"

Theresia's longsword drew an arc, and the knight sword of Heinkel, who had tugged his shoulders inward, accepted it.

With not even the slightest stagnation, Heinkel's knight sword left his hands far too quickly, giving rise to a shrill note as it bounced on the cobblestone.

Heinkel: "S-Stop… Please stop, m-mom… ~hk."

Rendered unarmed, the frightened Heinkel fell on his bottom at that spot. Flailing around his limbs desperately, Heinkel tried to escape, as if crawling.

However, his quivering fingers, his terrified heart and Theresia's eyes devoid of emotion tethered his mind and body to fear, and he was rendered nearly perfectly immobile at his locus.

His throat was parched, wiping off the tremendous cold sweat he was perspiring, Heinkel made a pallid face.

There had possibly been some incontinence there as well. However, robbed of the composure to even feel embarrassed about that, Heinkel stared at the tip of the longsword hoisted upward.

—As though slicing the moon, the longsword extended directly towards the heavens.

At the brink of his life, Wilhelm could accomplish naught but witness the spectacle of his wife slash their son to his death in front of his eyes.

He raised his voice. It did not reach.

He stretched his hand. It did not reach.

Wilhelm: "Theresia—!!"

No strength remained in the merely hollering voice of the Sword Demon, who had been unable to dedicate his everything into the sword.

Heartlessly, the longsword was swung to cut off Heinkel's life—.

???: “—That’s as far as it goes.”

That voice suddenly, but distinctly, cut into the seemingly stinging tension.

With a dignified tone and not a single fragment of vacillation in it, it wielded no pardon. Those who heard it were struck with the aura of an overwhelming existence, it was simply natural to abide by its will.

Wilhelm, Heinkel, and even Theresia halted all movement.

Ahead of the line of sight of the three, stood a single youth.

Blazing red hair, like fire, perfectly clear, gleaming blue eyes which captured the blue sky.

Even with his white outfit contaminated by blood and mud, the figure, standing upright, was needless of any words to be adorned with except for heroic.

The youth, steadily, continued to advance towards the location.

In his hand, was a scabbard with the engravings of deep wounds, and a knight sword unsheathed from that scabbard.

A sword blade polished to an extent of aberration, he clutched to the Dragon Sword Reid.

—The voice of the laughter of the Sword God, resonated raucously in the ears of the Sword Demon.

Chapter 72:
Sword Saint VS Previous Generation Sword Saint

—The Dragon Sword Reid was a sword of multitudinous enigmas.

It was indubitable that, across generations, it was a treasured sword handed-down in the lineage of the Astrea family, which had given rise to Sword Saints one after another, but the origin of where that Dragon Sword had been granted to them was something that had not been passed down.

A treasured sword of a tenebrous past, and furthermore, the deviousness of being incapable of being unsheathed by anyone but the Sword Saint. To be precise, even by the Sword Saint, it was could be unsheathed only in times necessary.

The treasured sword that defeated the Divine Dragon Volcanica, by the hand of the first generation Sword Saint, Reid Astrea.

In the past, when dragons had advanced upon in immense numbers, this legendary sword slashed all of them down altogether.

Or perhaps it was instead but a simple, dull blade, a magical sword which augmented its might by breathing the blood of the enemy.

Countless were the anecdotes enshrouding it, all devoid of evidence, akin mere fairy tales.

Regardless, nothing was firm, neither existed any way to confirm anything.

If there was one thing, that could be asserted,

—The Dragon Sword Reid was a supreme sword that transcended treasured swords, legendary swords, or magical swords of any disposition.

—It was the extremity of the realization of steel titled the sword, there existed no steel surpassing it.

Even for Wilhelm, who had been bestowed with the honor of a swordsman, Van, this was only the third instance across the entirety of his lifetime that he was laying his eyes upon the uncontaminated white blade.

Wilhelm: "—Reinhard."

With the jet-black scabbard bearing engravings carved by the claws of the Dragon in his left hand, and the Dragon Sword gripped in his right hand, was he.

His red hair swaying in the wind, lording over the situation earnestly ahead with his blue eyes, it was nobody else but the current generation Sword Saint, Reinhard van Astrea.

Even Wilhelm was overwhelmed by the noble, majestically stood figure.

Inheriting Sword Saint, and becoming the sword of the kingdom as an imperial knight, was his real grandson—this in fact was Wilhelm's first time, seeing his form to step into the battlefield.

Upon losing Theresia in the Great Subjugation, Wilhelm left the Astrea family. His dispute with his son and grandson from back then, yet held sway even after fifteen years, unburied.

Henceforth, for these past fifteen years, Wilhelm continued to pursue his wife, and averting his eyes away from his family. Therefore, let it be the deterioration of his son, or the growth and accomplishments of his grandson, he had not been witness to anything.

—That is why, right now, he was overwhelmed by Reinhard's figure.

The one standing there, was the Sword Saint.

A being recipient of the love of the Sword God, blessed with the honor of possessing the ability to unsheathe the greatest sword, standing atop the wishes of swordsmen of all dispositions—that could only be, the Sword Saint.

Beholding that figure, Wilhelm remembered.

He had long forgotten his agony. What he remembered was a different emotion. The deep emotion Wilhelm had felt when far, far back in the past, he had been spectator to the swords dance of the Sword Saint, of Theresia.

Back then, Wilhelm felt a distance he would never be able to cover.

A territory he would, by no means, be able to reach, and Wilhelm lamented the trifling nature of his sword talents.

Yet, without decline, he swung the sword, continued swinging it, and at last managed to grasp the edge of that territory. No distance was too distant, that was what he was supposed to have proven.

—Such a tapered, puny outlook.

The qualities were different. The statures were different. The weights were different. The things were different. Anything and everything was different.

That was not an existence capable of being debated over whether it was within or beyond reach.

It was an existence verbatim residing in an entirely different dimension itself.

"…"

Theresia, gradually, lowered the hoisted longsword. The sword had been on the verge of slaying Heinkel, but stopped in face of the newly appeared enemy.

The heartless, mobile cadaver of Theresia van Astrea, had already lost the pride of a swordsman, the style of a warrior, anything and everything.

What she had right now, were only the orders of the caster who was moving her dead body via some secret arts.

The optimum judgement for executing them, and defeating those posing as obstacles, that was all.

And if those orders prioritized those who could prove to be a threat, her judgement was simply natural.

Robbed of his ability to resume the battle, awaiting only his demise through blood loss, was the aged swordsman.

Having lost all fighting spirit, unable to even flee, was the deputy commander of knights only in name.

Both of them, no longer registered as threats or anything in such wise to Theresia.

Therefore, turning her longsword, tilting her skills as the former Sword Saint, towards the present Sword Saint, was a judgement devoid of doubt.

Wilhelm: “Wait! Theresia! Look here, at me! Theresia~a~a~!”

Dragging his leg, pulling the thread of blood, wailed Wilhelm.

As though not hearing that cry, Theresia paid him no heed. As if the exchange of sword slashes until now had all been a lie, she treated him as something not even present.

It was humiliating. However, it was even moreso saddening.

However, he had no time to drown in grief. He would never forgive such stagnation, of his current self.

He must shout, now. He must stop her, now—.

Theresia: “…”

Ignoring Wilhelm’s racing heart, Theresia leapt at once and shortened the distance.

Establishing her aim at Reinhard before her eyes, Theresia cavorted, with her long, red hair waving in the wind.

The longsword sketched a semi-circle, painting an artistic diagonal across Reinhard—however, in the short interval wherein unforgivable was even the blink of an eye, Reinhard nullified the sword slash.

Reinhard, who was positioning himself backwards and sideways, was pursued by the tip of the longsword, as though it were a living creature wielding a definite purpose. As it slashed the air of its trajectory to its death, even against the advancing slashes, Reinhard's complexion did not manifest even the slightest of change. Simply taking distance with half a step, he remained unfazed.

"…"

Realizing how unfavorable her position was, Theresia silently flew towards the front. Confronting Reinhard with half of the body exposed, would be naught but suicidal.

Turning back, Reinhard looked straight at Theresia, whose longsword had set its aim at his eye.

Immediately behind Reinhard, was the form of Heinkel. Reinhard confronted his grandmother whilst seemingly shielding his father. Via that alone Wilhelm noticed this brief offense and defense had been for acquiring these positions.

Heinkel: "Stop it… what is it, just what is it… what have I, what have I done…!"

His countenance pale, clutching his own hair, Heinkel shan't notice.

It did not matter, if his own son was standing before him in order to protect him. The preceding truths he had faced, had already surpassed the capacity of his heart.

He could not possibly be expected to overcome the situation either. That was how it was from the beginning.

Hence, he had no choice but to raise his own voice.

Wilhelm: “Stop, Reinhard! Look at me! Theresia is in the middle, of fighting with me! You are not permitted to cut into a battle, between two swordsmen!”

“…”

Reinhard glanced sideways towards Wilhelm, who had hollered they were still in the midst of battle. With his blue eyes, he looked at Wilhelm’s right leg, yet bleeding.

Reinhard: “…With that state of your leg, you cannot continue to battle.”

Wilhelm: “What do you mean if my leg can’t move! These hands that grasp the sword, are still alive… if my hands die then my mouth! If my mouth will be ineffective then my soul! As long as I’ve not lost my life, I have not been defeated!”

Reinhard: “If you’ve not lost life… then, what do you make of her, who is in front of your eyes?”

Wilhelm: “—~hk.”

Upon Reinhard’s question, Wilhelm’s throat choked.

Theresia, expressionless, with emotionless eyes, with sheer silence, was looking at her opponents. Keeping her stance at the corner of his eyes, Reinhard sought an answer from Wilhelm.

Reinhard: “A dead body devoid of self-consciousness merely moving in accordance with the wishes of the caster—I do not believe there is any meaning in involving the styles of a swordsman with a deed seemingly toying with the dead.”

Wilhelm: “Styles of a swordsman you say… ~hk!”

Seeking to duel with a mobile cadaver, was foolishness.

Wilhelm was unable to refute, Reinhard’s reasoning. It was the truth that Theresia had already distanced away from Wilhelm, and the battle had come to an end.

No matter how much the loser, Wilhelm, may yowl, the swordsman’s wish shall not be granted.

Furthermore, neither could Wilhelm himself loudly assert being a swordsman at present.

Standing with support of the sword, the circumstance at hand entrusted to words instead of steel, wishes instead of sword might—where did the pride and dignity of the Sword Demon remain in this Wilhelm van Astrea.

Nothing in such wise existed anywhere. He was empty.

Reinhard: “—The deceased do not move. The deceased have no future. I will not forgive, that absurdity.”

Enunciated Reinhard before Wilhelm, who had lost his voice.

His eyes had averted from his grandfather, and now closely observed solely the cadaver of his grandmother, standing before his eyes.

In gentle motion, the Dragon Sword Reid was held to aim for her eyes.

Oddly, that stance was identical to that of Theresia’s, as she bore the longsword on her shoulders, as though a reflection in a mirror.

“…”

The unclouded blade of the Dragon Sword, was visible as inordinately shimmering with glamour.

That was the ovation of the sword. At having attained a chance to be swung, it felt deeply moved, felicity, and at having to oppose one who was its former bearer, the supreme blade was adorned with voiceless delight.

Reinhard: “…”

Theresia: "…"

Soundlessly, the blue eyes of the two swordsmen, intertwined.

The Sword Saint, wielding his sword, did not offer his name as he was originally supposed to.

It was natural. Since that sought an opponent with the value that they would pay back the pride of a swordsman, and the style of a warrior.

Against an opponent antithetical to that, against an opponent who did not possess the value to be equal, he shan't do so.

The atmosphere froze, tension donned with hue and weight crushed the world.

Feeling his entire body get heavier, dominated by a sense of compactness, Wilhelm opened his mouth.

Ignorant of the words he should pronounce, compelled by the sense of exasperation stemming from the feeling that he must interject.

—Ironically enough, that acted like a signal for the two swordsmen.

Wilhelm: "Stop—~hk!"

His voice did not reach.

Bequeathing even voice behind, the two swordsmen clashed.

"…"

Stepping ahead, swinging, Theresia's longsword roared and rended the atmosphere, as her greatest sword slash, at the perfect angle, assailed upon Reinhard.

In fact, this may have been the slash with utmost refinement and beauty coming from Theresia, amongst all which Wilhelm had seen till now.

Under normal circumstances, Wilhelm may have had been envious of the fact that his self had not been the one to hale out the entirety of the sword abilities sleeping within Theresia.

However, at this instant, the emotions distending within Wilhelm's heart were disparate.

And that volatile something weighing his chest, overflowed out by taking the form of certain words.

Wilhelm: "Don't kill her…!"

The emotions he had restrained, the passion he had suppressed, the things mustn't have wished for and the love he had admonished, rushed forth as though breaking Wilhelm's barriers.

Theresia, of the days of youth.

The woman who had caressed Wilhelm's heart, who had made him take notice of the world beyond the sword, the only one in his lifetime, one he won't give up on even in exchange for the world, was right there.

The beloved woman, to whom he had not conveyed his love to her even once, was right there—.

Wilhelm: "She is my, Theresia—~hk!!"

Words, he shouldn't have ever vocalized.

Should he become perplexed, in a state wherein he might forfeit his life, it would be inexcusable of him to prioritize his emotions.

It was a deed that polluted, the pride of a swordsman, the style of a warrior, the nobility of battle.

That was only, the voice of a man. Of a man only desperate, to not lose the woman he loved.

And, that call prepared for death was—

Reinhard: "—Grandmother, was killed by me fifteen years ago."

A voice, quiet and whispering.

A voice so soundless, uncertain whether it would even reach.

It was however, indubitably, naught but a response to Wilhelm's cry.

"…"

Theresia's sword slash, directly smited Reinhard.

The Dragon Sword, was yet to enter the trajectory of a swing.

It struck. It severed. That was how it would look to anyone, and yet.

Reinhard: "The one over here, is a mere fake."

—Dragon Sword Reid drew a locus.

A single swing, the Dragon Sword was soundlessly swung, and the clear sword blade, as though in flow, settled within the scabbard.

The guard of the sword came in contact with the scabbard, and only a faint metallic report was heard.

With just that, the battle came to an end.

It was the end.

Chapter 73:
Theresia van Astrea

1

Theresia van Astrea was twelve years old when she received the Divine Protection of the Sword Saint.

It was a sudden and unforeseen change that begat immense distress in her life.

In the midst of her ordinary, everyday life, it abruptly swooped down upon her.

“—? Could it be, that I got chosen?”

This was an honest emotion, the emotion she greeted the Divine Protection with.

And Theresia continued to keep this truth a secret for some time.

—The renowned Astrea family’s forte was the sword, and had given rise to Sword Saints for generations and continued.

Thanks to the achievements accomplished hundreds of years ago by the first generation Sword Saint Reid Astrea, the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica recognized the sword of the Astrea family as an indispensable existence and asset.

This tradition had been passed down for centuries, including in Theresia’s times.

Henceforth, it was halfway cemented that all those born into the Astrea family, regardless of possessing the Divine Protection of the Sword Saint or not, were to live a life of commitment toward the sword.

This of course, appertained to her father, her two elder brothers and her lone younger brother, the youngest sibling, as well. Regardless of becoming a swordsman or attaining the Divine Protection or not, they were supposed to acquaint themselves with the sword the moment they achieved awareness of mind per convention.

When it came to how Theresia, who was born into the Astrea family where this route of upbringing was natural, was maturing—she was spending her days utterly parallel from the sword.

Of course, those born into the Astrea family, regardless of gender, were supposed to take the sword in their hands.

There were days when Theresia and her brothers were all made to swing the sword under strict tutelage. There were such days indeed, but Theresia had absolutely no notable aptitude for the sword.

Rather, it would be more so precise to say she had not even the slightest orientation for facing the sword.

Like many girls, Theresia held no interest in the sword.

It was not a matter of competency. Unmotivated swordsmanship, shiftless training accompanied with a defiant attitude. It was unsurprising that her parents would eventually come to notice it was futile to make her keep swinging the sword if she continued to act like this.

—The Divine Protection of the Sword Saint was bestowed only upon those who had proven themselves worthy of receiving the love of the Sword God.

Generations were witness, only the members of the Astrea family were capable of inheriting the Divine Protection of the Sword Saint. At the very least, that was the common belief, since no actual details regarding the inheritance of the Divine Protection were known.

It was only when the swordsman faced the sword with absolute earnestness, that the Divine Protection recognized him and bestowed itself upon him.

A girl child, possessing no interest in the sword, the firstborn daughter who continued to avert her eyes away.

It was all an inevitable course of events that as the possibility of Theresia being the Sword Saint quickly diminished to abandonment, her greed of freedom was permitted.

Theresia forcibly snatched her freedom from the sword training, but she too, had her own respective say with regards to it.

Of course, both her absolute disinterest in the Sword Saint, and failure to devote herself to the sword were causes for the shiftlessness of her training, but her greatest cause was unrelated to these.

—Theresia was aware that she had been born with the Divine Protection of Death God.

The wounds she would inflict onto others would ceaselessly bleed, incapable of healing.

Upon realizing her forte lay in taking the lives of others, what took birth within a young Theresia, was the dread of what could result from her very palms.

Something like sword training was perfect for augmenting her horror.

Let it be simply practice or training, Theresia's Divine Protection, over which she had no control, would pay no regard to the situation. Even if the wound she may inflict were to be as meagre as a scratch, the fact that it shan't heal made it no trivial affair.

Especially considering that a wound which might accidentally get inflicted during sword practice could prove to be deadly.

Henceforth, liberated from the sword training, the secretive Theresia felt alleviated.

To live without hurting others, was something astoundingly difficult should one remain conscious of it.

Even if one were not to intentionally, actively seek to hurt others, accidental mishaps or unwitting deeds could be committed by anyone. How could she ever determine whether the Divine

Protection would activate or not, in case of getting a cut on the finger due to a piece of shattered dish.

The young girl named Theresia, inadvertently eluded from having relationships with people.

If she never made contact, if she never came close, she would not have to worry about hurting people. She naturally evaded gazes, she started spending more and more time with flowers.

Having attained the freedom to discard the sword, she made a flower bed in the garden of her mansion for solitarily herself, growing seasonal blossoms there, she became a girl who loved admiring them.

Her brothers who used to swing the sword in utter distress, were repeatedly subject to strenuous and agonizing training.

It wasn't as if she did not feel left out or sorry for them, seeing their figures. Merely unable to communicate about her Divine Protection, the only ones she could confide in were solely the flowers her own self had nurtured.

"I wonder, if someday, even I would be able to live by someone's side…"

Her distress, her doubts, the only ones she could confide such feelings of hers in were solely the flowers as well, as their petals danced to the rhythm of the gentle breeze.

Like many people, Theresia too was an ordinary young girl who desired to love, and to be loved.

However, days of soliloquy as she questioned whether her self, who had flouted the intents of her brothers or her parents, and had the awareness of a Divine Protection that may hurt and rob someone, had the right to stand by someone's side, met no end.

—In the midst of such days, the love of the Sword God was showered upon Theresia.

"—? Could it be, that I got chosen?"

Without warning, that cognizance dawned upon Theresia.

It enshrouded her far more akin to a sense of incongruity rather than consciousness like that of her Divine Protection of Death God.

It was natural.

To her, awareness of the Divine Protection she had been born with was a matter of course, like eyes providing vision, and ears providing hearing.

Something like suddenly gaining a new Divine Protection would feel something like the emergence of wings on her back. What could she possibly greet novel faculties that originally did not exist with, except for incongruity.

—I must not, take the sword in my hands.

So thought Theresia, harboring abhorrence and nausea towards her new Divine Protection.

She thought back to the times when she had been coerced to swing the sword. She realized how pointless, meaningless, senseless and aimless her actions had been back then.

She was now instinctively able to apprehend how to swing the sword the best, the optimum, the ideal, the finest way.

Her self, whose forte lay very much in killing people, now fully gained the proficiency in killing people.

"—~hk."

This was terror. This was despair. This was the day the world ended.

Kneeling down, she came to realize that she was a death god who had taken the form of a girl, and that her days of impersonating a young girl had come to an end.

Theresia did not tell anyone about the Divine Protection she had obtained.

She intended to conceal her possession of the Divine Protection of Death God and the Divine Protection of the Sword Saint for all eternity, and hide it within her heart that she was a monster whose only purpose was to kill others.

Imploring that she was unwell, she shut herself in her room in the mansion.

Forgetting to look after even her flower bed, Theresia hid within her shell. Doing naught but sleeping, painting a childish reverie that if only one day upon awakening out of breathlessness, that it would all turn out as a dream, she continued to enclose herself in her shell.

But that was ultimately, just the immaturity of a child, refusing to face what she did not wish to face.

—It immediately became clear, that Theresia had inherited the Divine Protection of the Sword Saint.

“Nii-san… The next Sword Saint, is your daughter. This child.”

The head house of the Astrea family—Theresia’s birthplace, and the base of the family line of Sword Saints.

Stepping foot into mansion, revealing that Theresia, curled up in her bed, would be the next Sword Saint was her uncle, the preceding Sword Saint.

The Divine Protection of the Sword Saint was an exceptional Divine Protection, capable of only being inherited by members of the Astrea family, with this trend continuing for generations.

That Divine Protection was inherited by the next Sword Saint from the preceding Sword Saint on a certain day without any prior notice. And once the inheritance was completed, the previous Sword Saint was freed from his responsibility, and lost the Divine Protection.

Once the current Sword Saint lost the Divine Protection, it was natural that the identity of the of the next Sword Saint would be searched for thoroughly by the kingdom.

And the previous Sword Saint could identify who the next Sword Saint was at a single glance.

Theresia's days of enclosure met their end.

"Take the sword in your hands, Theresia."

Having become dreadfully skinny, her hair in shambles, Theresia was dragged out into the garden.

Barefooted, in sleepwear, with her consciousness drifting between dreams and reality, yet there she was, dragged outside by her uncle by force, and coerced into holding the wooden sword.

With her now skinny fingers, she gestured her resistance along with shaking her head several times.

However, the protests of her opposed self went unheard. Her uncle made her regrip the wooden sword again and again, pushing Theresia's back once she clutched the handle in surrender.

Before Theresia, stood the eldest brother of the four siblings.

Her eldest brother, his features tender and amiable, stood there with an addled expression. His puzzlement could be understood at a glance, unable to accept the events transpiring before his eyes.

—Far too many unknowns.

Pondering so, Theresia was startled by her own self ruminating so.

That confoundment directly smiting her heart, Theresia simply kept her eyes open, speechless.

Ignoring Theresia and her condition, her uncle called to her eldest brother in a deep voice.

To hold the wooden sword, and clash with Theresia head-on, he ordered. To prove his abilities of swordsmanship by striking down and defeating his younger sister, he ordered.

There is no way he could do that, her eldest brother clamored.

Her brother was very kind. He had trained strenuously with the sword, and held no dubiety in the way of the Astrea family, but her brother could be nothing but kind towards his younger sister, Theresia.

She was afraid of hurting him, so she was never the one to initiate physical contact, but she loved being hugged and held up in her brother's arms and that large body of his. He was a kind, kind brother.

Then echoed the damning voice of her uncle, calling her brother a coward.

Upon the deriding of the preceding Sword Saint, her brother made an expression terribly hurt by his words, who admired his form. Theresia knew who it was that her eldest brother, her elder brother, and her younger brother admired and had thus continued to swing the sword.

Reviled by that person, her eldest brother was immensely wounded. Her two other brothers, standing at the edge of the garden having also come outside by hearing all the commotion, also made similarly hurt faces.

Ultimately, her eldest brother, preserving a wounded visage, wielded dreadful readiness in his eyes.

Straightening the wooden sword he held in his hands, ceding all his energy into it, he set his eyes upon his target.

Through the shivers in the tip of his sword, and a certain sharpness in her eldest brother's eyes, Theresia discerned.

Her brother, sought to knock down Theresia's sword using the wooden sword clutched in his own hands such that she would remain unscathed. His stance, his line of sight, and the essence of swordsmanship enveloping his body.

At her brother's level of skill, it would certainly not be a difficult task against an inferior opponent.

Ample to prove his ability as a swordsman and taking the sword away from Theresia.

"…"

Her uncle vociferated, marking the beginning of a spar neither side wished to partake in.

Her eldest brother bellowed vigorously, as the honed essence of swordsmanship slashed into Theresia.

Swordsmanship with solely the strength to dwindle the opponent and control their movements. If she were not to even upraise her sword, it would be a facile affair to knock the wooden sword down.

From the onset, the very foundation of this fight was erroneous.

Neither did Theresia possess any reason to fight, nor did her brother possess any reason to hurt Theresia. With the interests of both the sides aligned, there shan't be any discord.

Thers shan't be, yet—

"—That's it."

A wooden sword, that had been sent flying, landed on the garden some distance away, echoing a report.

Upon returning to the awestruck voice of her uncle, what was visible was the figure of Theresia, the wooden sword in her hand lunged forward, and its edge touching the throat of her staggered brother, who let out a hoarse exhale.

—She recalled intercepting her brother's sword strike descending upon her, and taking his wooden sword away.

She then appended the edge of her sword to his neck, conveying she could kill him at any instant, proving the disparity between their proficiency.

Overwhelmed by what had transpired, her eldest brother fell to his knees. Witnessing this, Theresia turned back, lips quivering, gazing at her second elder brother, her younger brother, and her parents who were watching the duel.

Expressions stunned, everyone was watching over the results in disbelief.

“The next Sword Saint is Theresia. Indeed, unquestionably.”

An aver, only the solitary voice of her uncle echoed, exceedingly unavailingly so.

“Ah… ah, a~h…”

Theresia dropped the wooden sword she held, glanced at her hand, and then proceeded to pull her red hair with the same. Pulling them off so violently that she would bleed, giving rise to a wail akin to that of a beast, she screamed.

Screaming, losing sanity, despairing to the extent of vomiting blood, regretting.

Theresia, became the Sword Saint.

2

The time her brothers had devoted to the sword, Theresia’s virtuosity with the sword had callously trampled upon all of it.

Things like time and effort dedicated held no purport whatsoever in face of overwhelming sword prowess.

In Theresia’s eyes, having become the Sword Saint, the flaws in her brothers’ swords were pellucid. She was now rather surprised, for failing to notice these flaws at an earlier note despite spending so much time with them.

Nonetheless, in spite of the manifest disparity between their strength and Theresia’s, her brothers continued to pitiably train with the sword.

Neither her eldest brother, nor her second elder brother, nor her younger brother possessed passion for anything other than the sword.

Because of having been born into the Astrea family, having grown up in a distinguished household esteemed for their swords, and having dedicated much of their life to the sword, thus even if their younger sister, his elder sister robbed them of their zenith, they had no choice but to continue resuming forth.

Despite knowing, that they could never possibly reach that territory.

—How, truly stupid.

She couldn't help but conceive that thought.

They could just do what they loved, and yet. Even though the sword did not even matter anymore, and yet.

Since they could no longer forgive Theresia, they could just live in worlds of their own liking, and yet.

"Theresia-sama, preparations for leaving are complete. It's about time, we ought to head out now."

As Theresia gazed out the window, observing her brothers swinging their swords in the garden below, a voice called to her.

Turn around and ahead stood a young girl of identical age as her, her beautiful blonde hair cut short.

She was Carol Remendis—a member of the Remendis family, acclaimed for its superlative knights, and acknowledged for her exceptional swordsmanship, she had been appointed as Theresia's attendant as one of close age.

Verily, her abilities as a swordsman were indeed exceptional.

Though a comparison she would rather not pronounce, her sword might could rival that of her elder brothers.

A solemn personality, and a devout of swordsmanship, she could not help but feel uneasy as a fellow female.

"Yes, let's go. For today we have the tutoring of the people of the castle, isn't it."

"Yes. Everyone in the castle also has their hopes up for being educated by Theresia-sama. Though of course, I also hold the same sentiment."

"…I think you are sufficiently strong, Carol."

"Not at all. Someone as myself, is incapable of even reaching the feet of Theresia-sama."

So elucidated Carol her own ability, as though denigrating herself.

An exceedingly idiosyncratic appraisal by Theresia's perspective. After all, Theresia had never even once, upheld the sword before Carol until now. No, that was far from everything.

Theresia's hands had last held a sword on the day she sparred with her eldest brother using wooden swords.

For more than two years since, Theresia lay not even a finger upon the sword.

Nonetheless, the responsibilities as the Sword Saint came to pass.

Her own self being the Sword Saint alone was a truth beyond veil. She couldn't go as far as to inconvenience the entirety of the Astrea family, so she was willing to perform solely her duties diligently.

"It shall be understood upon seeing what ought to be seen. Even if I have not gotten the opportunity of seeing that form, should Theresia-sama take the sword in her hands, she shall surely haul out strength unrivalled by anyone."

She gave a wry smile in response to Carol's conviction.

In her company, Theresia went to tutor on-duty soldiers. Even in the name of tutoring, she had not achieved anything remarkable.

She would simply go around and have them wield their weapons and train, and point out flaws in their battling as always, nothing unusual.

A fearsome aspect of the Divine Protection of the Sword Saint was perhaps how it honed all instincts in battle. This did not pertain solely to swords. Let it be spears or axes, were they connected to battle techniques and maneuvers, Theresia was aware of the entirety of their strengths and weaknesses alike.

If the soldiers' mistakes were pointed out to them one by one, their movements would alter to an indiscernible degree.

However, from Theresia's perspective, though unmistakably conduct abound in defects, even that smidgen of an alteration marked an immense difference for those untalented. Theresia bore guilt when she was thanked, respected, esteemed.

I want to run away, right this instant.

I want to go away, from this place, a place where this power unwished for is requisite.

Just as when she had undertaken the Divine Protection of the Sword Saint, Theresia despaired for the present.

She lapsed into shutting herself in her room, enclosing herself in her shell, seeking to hope for the tides of fate to change direction.

—It may have been punishment cast upon her, for weighing her own desires onto others, for escaping her liabilities.

In the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica, a clash occurred with the great demi-human alliance.

Deeply tied to the custom of discrimination against demi-humans that remained pronounced within the kingdom, in but a heartbeat, it intertwined with multitudinous years' worth of discontentment of the demi-humans in the kingdom and flared up.

The greatest and worst civil war in the history of the kingdom, the Demi-human War broke out.

3

Originating from the east of the kingdom, this civil war worsened by the passing day.

A small force of demi-humans at first, one which seemed easily suppressible, but the kingdom made light of the depth of relationships between demi-humans behind closed doors.

Furthermore, there seemed to exist those acting as intermediaries between respective races lacking relations, and the blaze of the civil war distended its radius in an instant.

The flaring vortex of warfare ceaselessly permeated the kingdom, and after an entire year of fruitless attempts of extinguishing these flames, the kingdom acknowledged this was a situation unprecedented at last.

“Inform Theresia van Astrea, the current Sword Saint. Along with the knights and soldiers currently scuffling to subdue the civil war, great feats are expected by the lord as well.”

The higher aristocrats, who put together a force unlike anything before, having accepted it as a predicament of the entire kingdom, could not possibly save the strongest being videlicet the Sword Saint for last.

As a matter of course, Theresia was also informed of the orders for partaking in the civil war.

—Theresia attained unprecedented despair at the arrival of the conforming inevitable.

This was unlike her days of selfishly refusing to take the sword.

What was expected of her now was not to wield the knowledge as the Sword Saint, but to wield true swordsmanship and might as the Sword Saint.

She had no choice, but to grasp the sword.

This was also the first time she had been accorded the Dragon Sword Reid, which solely the Sword Saint was allowed to wield across generations.

"However, that sword can be drawn only when it is fit to be drawn. I believe you will have to carry another sword aside from that one too. You can choose one as per your suitability."

Her uncle, the former Sword Saint, gave her advice from seeming experience.

Her uncle, whose waist was once saddled with the Dragon Sword, was acquainted with the whimsical nature of the sword. Abiding by her uncle's advice, Theresia chose a single-swing longsword—one also favored and of habitual use by Carol, her attendant, after seeing through at once as having good compatibility with herself.

—In her first battle, Theresia's first unit consisted of Carol, along with her brothers and her uncle as well.

Theresia's first battle from her perspective, though she wouldn't go as far as to call it an opportunity for honor and altruism.

Even so, it was indisputably an event she mustn't avert her eyes from. An ideal opportunity to make the sword of the current generation Astrea family known across the kingdom.

No matter Theresia's state of mind and heart, her surroundings progressed capriciously.

Anyone and everyone nursed an arbitrary expectation, that defeat was impossible should the Sword Saint be there.

The unrestrained, insensitive faith by those surrounding her which fusilladed upon her, terrorized Theresia.

As always, divulging it to no one, repressing it within her heart, Theresia simply, earnestly trembled prior to her first battle.

And, in the midst of her plight—

"Are you scared, Theresia?"

Yes, the one to reach out to her with this benign voice was nobody else but her eldest brother.

As she awaited her first unit and battle in a tent, her tender brother's words rendered Theresia astound.

Theresia had purposively been avoiding contact with her eldest brother.

No, her eldest brother had not been the only one she had been avoiding. Her second elder brother, her younger brother, as well as her parents and her uncle, she had desisted from coming into contact with all of them.

After a span of nigh two years, she exchanged words with her kind, truly beloved brother.

Lost for words, Theresia could do naught but resume looking downwards.

However, her brother sat down next to Theresia, a forlorn expression bedizening her face, proceeding to hug her and gently caress her head.

Her brother's palm, yet the same as before, confounded Theresia.

"I am well aware, that you harbor a feeling of indebtedness towards me or the rest of our brothers. It's not like I didn't think anything after losing to you that way either. But…"

Severing his words, her brother showed her a faint smile.

That was her brother's very smile, one which Theresia had continually looked up to, time and again.

"You are my precious little sister. So if you think you don't want to, if you are scared… then I must protect you. Because I, am your big brother."

"Ni… Nii-san…"

Tears overflowed. She mustn't leak any cavils.

More than anyone else, nobody else but him, solely the brother whom she had defeated with her own hands, mustn't hear it. So she believed, yet she made that brother repudiate it.

"After losing to you, it was vexing, there were times I even considered quitting. But, even still, I loved the sword after all. I am grateful that I was born into this family, I had our little brothers, and I had you, my little sister. I am grateful, to the sword."

"…"

"That's why I, am glad that I swung the sword."

How, truly foolish her thoughts had been, Theresia was enlightened to her own idiocy.

Watching her brothers pursue training with the sword even after their defeat against her, she thought that they had no alternative path, because they were ignorant regarding all else, they were swinging the sword and continued to cling to the sword since they had no choice, surmising so, she looked down upon them.

That he should just do whatever he loved, Theresia arbitrarily put her brother on her own scale and conjectured about him.

The brother she ought to have looked up to, ought to have esteemed and respected, whom she dearly loved, she mocked him on sole terms of swordsmanship.

Who was stupid here. She was far more stupid here. And, the Sword God himself was utmost stupid here.

Why, did he not shower his love upon the human, who loved him this much.

Why, did he bless a human like herself, who continued to avert from the sword.

Her brother, or other people like her brother were the ones upon whom that blessing rightfully should have hailed upon, yet.

"There is no need, for you to fight. —After all, you are a kind girl, who wouldn't dare kill even an insect."

Dreading the might of the Divine Protection of Death God, she had lived her life making certain she hurt no one or no thing.

Her brother's understanding was slightly unalike, but her brother had been kind enough to understand this state and way of his little sister.

This granted her such joyfulness, for her heart trembled the most in these past many years.

In the end, she presumed upon him. She cried to him, clung to him, in the end, she entrusted all up to her brother.

—In this first battle of Theresia's, her brother perished protecting their troop headquarters.

Not even once, did Theresia swing the sword. She could not.

And once again, for years to come, never did Theresia ever even so slightly touch the sword.

4

—It had been five years since the Demi-Human War started, and Theresia had turned nineteen.

The Divine Protection of the Sword Saint remained unvarying, resuming to silently breathe within her.

Yet the pivotal Theresia drifted away from opportunities of brandishing that force, abstaining from involvement with the civil war en route deterioration, spending her days sedate and lackadaisical.

Theresia's first battle, where she had been unable to battle.

The war front anticipating the Sword Saint's strenuous efforts utterly crumbled, and amidst martyred her eldest brother. Disconcerted by the impact of her brother's death, Theresia was thereon rendered incapable of touching the sword.

The actuality of the current generation Sword Saint having such a dishonorable first battle was entirely concealed from the public. The existence of the Sword Saint also stood as a spiritual pillar for the kingdom. They could not possibly reveal she had wept and cried on her first battle, and had enclosed herself away upon letting her brother die.

Henceforth, without letting the public be aware of it, Theresia's dishonor was erased from all records.

Furthermore, as Theresia enclosed herself without fulfilling her duties as the Sword Saint, her second elder brother and younger brother hurled themselves into the battlefield, seeking to battle in a way that shan't dishonor the name of the Astrea family, and perished.

Her eldest brother, kind to a fault, who would listen to any wish of her's with a troubled expression, as well.

Her second elder brother, who was slightly mean, but was always the first one to apologize when they made up, as well.

Her younger brother, adorable and endearing, a scaredy-cat and a crybaby who would always walk behind her, following her path, as well.

All of them lost their lives, fighting in Theresia's stead, who failed to do so.

"—I made you go through a lot of things you didn't want to, didn't I. Sorry, Theresia."

Her uncle, the former Sword Saint who was the source of motivation for their troops, also martyred.

Fighting battles after battles, pushing through his injuries, and finally acting as the rear unit guard of retreating friendly troops, martyring heroically was what it had been.

It was not as though she didn't hold anything against her uncle.

Had it not been for her uncle's revelation, perhaps nobody could have ever realized that Theresia had inherited the Divine Protection of the Sword Saint. Had that never been brought to light, her brothers may not have had to resolve themselves for their own deaths in this civil war, and may not have died.

In that course of thought, she surely did harbor a grudge against him. She did, but she also felt like she didn't.

Her uncle must have himself known better than anyone else, the weight of the title of Sword Saint. Since he was the previous Sword Saint, naturally, the same things must have been sought from her uncle as they were from Theresia.

In his personal way, he must have acted for the optimum operation of the name of the Sword Saint for both the kingdom, as well as Theresia.

Should that not work, then there were the words he said whilst parting ways when she met him for the final time.

Hearing those words, Theresia was no longer able to resent her uncle.

Thus, if she were to look for someone to resent, the only option left was solely herself.

Her weak self, doing naught but weep and cry, despite inheriting the title of something like the Sword Saint.

"Theresia-sama is someone who will surely stand one day. That time has simply not arrived yet."

Carol, her associate, never did once try to abandon Theresia, who was engulfed in the repeated deaths of her loved ones, her brothers and her uncle.

Baring her first unit and battle to unsightly defeat, proceeding to drift away from following opportunities due to childish selfishness, the now solitarily enclosed Theresia, within her shell, was someone Carol yet strived to have faith in.

Nowadays, there were even such instances that she undertook even the orders given to Theresia from the royal castle in her stead, exposing her own self to hazard.

Yet, despite knowing how perilous a bridge Carol was treading, Theresia failed to respond to her feelings.

Yet was her self, blessed with the talent of killing people.

Her self had never, ever even envisioned there shall come a day wherein she shall agonize over her inability to kill people. Nowhere could she find, a reason to fight. She couldn't possibly, fight.

"…"

Once away from Carol's monitoring, Theresia aimlessly left the mansion and started walking in the capital.

It had been five years and the civil war yet resumed without cease, and the capital's vibrancy too had been desaturated, as a somewhat dreary atmosphere proliferated across. With no bright topics about, neither shall any gleam glisten the expressions of people. Naturally, avoiding crowded locations, Theresia sought solitude.

The place which Theresia had recently taken a liking for and frequented her trips to, was an unfinished block of land in close vicinity from the capital.

A block of land whose construction had been thrown aside midway through the process with the onset of the civil war. Through aisles and paths befitting of the descriptor narrow, and through gaps of buildings suitable for being labelled ruins, she headed towards the area deep behind.

Faintly opening up, the space unworthy of even being categorized as an open plaza, was Theresia's favorite.

Her heart wouldn't become particularly ebullient. However, this bare space idly existing amidst all this desolation, felt alike and conforming with the state of her own heart and simply calmed her.

In the morning breeze, cool and fresh to an ironic extent, Theresia headed for the back of the area.

Sitting on a flight to stone steps connecting to no place, what could be seen on the other side was a spanning flower garden with abounding yellow blooms.

The rays of the sun shining in, and soil unnecessarily adequate for the growth of flowers.

In this clandestine setting beyond the calls of anyone, Theresia had deftly sown the seeds of these flowers. She was scarce of willpower to tend to the flower beds back in the mansion which had entirely withered.

But, she did solely bear at least the sentiment of watching over the results of the flower seeds she had whimsically sown.

“I haven’t even watered you… yet you have grown this much.”

Flowers, are strong.

Whilst Theresia reflected on her own weaknesses, the flowers, gazing only towards the sky, their petals unfurled, bloomed in arrant magnificence.

She formerly admired their splendor, but now harbored longing for their strength.

There were things in her heart that welled up, and she verged onto crying.

Her hand on the canthi of her eyes unwittingly warming, she frantically suppressed her tears.

—Such was the moment, when a honed presence drew close.

“Ah, I’m sorry.”

A swordsman, had barged into Theresia’s morning sanctuary.

Verging on showing her tears, Theresia articulated so, deliberately in an attempt to act strong. And then, she glanced at the one standing in the plaza.

She saw, and was completely wonderstruck.

Trimmed brown hair, elegant yet fierce eyes, a flexible, slim and fit body, and his brimming clear skin dazzling so bright to a frightening extent.

It was a fact that his attitude, affable by no means, possessed astonishing traits.

However, what had astonished Theresia at that moment was not anything so trifling.

—To Theresia, the youth was visible as though a single unsheathed sword.

She felt as if firm, sharp steel molded with heat itself had his eyes upon her.

In face of that phantasm, Theresia's heartbeats faintly tangled. Placing a hand on her chest, Theresia contemplated what had happened to her.

However, she simply thought she did not wish for the youth to discern this entanglement of her heartbeats.

Henceforth, in order to veil that, Theresia pronounced.

"So, there are people who would come here so early in the morning. All the way here—"

"…"

Quite the greeting, that was.

Theresia spoke to him sociably, but the youth narrowed his eyes, as though sharp, honed essence of swordsmanship piercing her. An essence of swordsmanship so stable and prime, that it did not seem like a threat.

Perhaps he perceived Theresia as unpleasant, an indication of his desire to repel her.

Abruptly, it became unentertaining.

If that was the card he was going to play, then neither would Theresia hold anything back. She shall forge it into him that the essence of swordsmanship he was so proud of, was kaput.

“…Did something happen? You’re making such a scary face.”

At Theresia’s words, the youth made an expression as if he had tasted an under-shoulder swing down.

He seemed to have judged Theresia as a laywoman at swordsmanship, and not just that, at fighting entirely and nothing more. The truth was, he was not wrong.

Theresia lacked any experience of actual fighting, nor did she possess any records of swinging the sword.

For she was a young girl inevitably a laywoman, supposed to be stronger than anyone else shall she fight.

“What’s a woman doing here so early in the morning.”

The youth responded, his words crass and insolent.

The voice of the youth, having heard it for the first time, was sullen yet simple and easy to listen to.

—And once again, she felt the rhythm of her heartbeats go a shade off-note.

5

Ever since, Theresia and the youth started seeing each other often.

It apparently seemed the youth used to come to the plaza on fixed holidays.

It did seem like he was bothered by Theresia’s presence, but never forced her to vacate nonetheless. Perhaps he regarded approaching her as being a greater bother.

Theresia used to walk up to the plaza, in order to view that yellow flower garden.

There were times the youth was the first one to arrive, whereas on other instances, Theresia came first. Whilst Theresia seated herself on the stone steps and beheld the flower garden, the youth devoted himself to training with the sword, his sword of prime quality, and these activities became the promise between the two, who used to spend time in that location.

"…"

A secretive glimpse at the swords dance of the youth.

Inadvertently, she verged on leaking a sigh. For Theresia to observe the swordsmanship of others, and feel this way, was something exceptionally rare—no, this may have been the first time.

She had initially bore revulsion toward the form of the youth gripping the sword.

Rather than the youth being at fault, it was an issue of Theresia's own disposition of heart. She shall get chased away even from the refuge of comfort she had finally gained. Such pathetic anxieties, were overwritten the day she first witnessed the swords dance of the youth.

The sword which the youth swung, couldn't be appraised as refined even for the sake of flattery.

In the eyes of Theresia, who possessed the Divine Protection of the Sword Saint, there present were easily discernible imperfections in it as well. Being revolted by the far too many a blemish in the swords of others was also a bad habit of Theresia's, but in the youth's case, despite the presence of said flaws, his passion alone more than amply made up for them.

Theresia's brothers too, must have devoted their entirety to the sword as well.

Even when it pertained to the swords of her brothers, elder or younger, Theresia failed to remain without revulsion.

Yet, why did she not feel simply the same in the youth's sword.

The answer to that, was simple to a staggering extent.

"How stupid…"

—There were absolutely no impurities in the sword of the youth.

Dedicating, devoting everything, to the sword.

Easily put and expressed in words, and until now Theresia believed her brothers had done the same, truly outrageous.

Right here existed the fervor of the youth who, truly, possessed nothing but the sword.

He had naught but the sword. He loved naught but the sword. He shall love naught but the sword, a single swing of steel.

"…How, stupid."

Observing the youth's swordsmanship beside, Theresia felt warmth enter her cheeks.

Theresia was the Sword Saint. Immersed in the love of the Sword God, a being made to stand atop the pinnacle of the sword.

Ahead of his unrelenting goal, stood her.

Although it was unquestionably her own delusion, she felt as though he sought for her.

The Sword Saint Theresia, could comprehend everything about the sword with but a glance.

She could perceive its essence and quintessence, no matter what kind of treasured sword, magic sword, dulled sword, or even a Dragon Sword it was. She could freely maneuver them all. There existed no steel unbare within Theresia's hands.

He was the only one.

He was the only steel, who shan't bend per Theresia's free will.

He was a sword, yet his limits could not be determined by her self, who was the Sword Saint.

That was indubitably why, her self had grown to care so much about him.

“It’s Wilhelm Trias.”

Three months after meeting him, she had exchanged names with the youth—Wilhelm.

Even though they had happened upon each other on a multitude of occasions, never did they once inquire about each other’s names.

The truth was, Theresia had awaited the opportunity several times, but Wilhelm wholly failed to notice that wish. They had finally managed to exchange names solely because Theresia got impatient and initiated it, Wilhelm merely gave the appropriate response.

“I had called you the “flower woman” in my mind till now.”

Just how impolite could he be, this man.

His words had not a fragment of solicitude, nor his mind preoccupied with his own self possessing no regard for her, conversed for a bit and upon satisfaction arbitrarily returned back, so Theresia’s heart was nothing but toyed around with.

“Do you like flowers?”

“No, I hate them.”

This was his reply, despite seeing the magnificence of Theresia’s special flower garden so many times.

Undoubtedly, he was incapable of merely playing along with the other party or uplifting their spirits.

Despite feeling angst toward that, she could not help but ponder “But, this is precisely what makes him such a sword-esque person too…”.

During these times, the realization of the existence of her self who was saved, by the presence of a sword that shan't alter the way she wished it to, to whom something like the Sword Saint was nothing noteworthy, eluded Theresia.

"—Why, do you swing the sword?"

Ever since they exchanged names, the words they exchanged commenced varying as well.

They used to talk about flowers, followed by other miscellaneous topics, then parted ways. What conceived malaise in their usual exchanges, was surely due to the dolefulness on that day.

The attempts to subdue the demi-human war had failed, and Theresia had heard about the skirmishes on the battlefield.

Scattered across the kingdom, the demi-humans who were at the core behind all of the destruction precipitating were outstandingly strong, and among them was a Witch commanding immense supernatural strength, whose existence had also been confirmed, is what she had heard.

She abruptly became uneasy.

Long before, she had heard from Wilhelm that he was a soldier for the kingdom. He was, regardless, an extraordinary swordsman. In addition, his eyes seemed terribly starved for blood.

A kingdom jostled by civil war, he was truly suitable to be its soldier—regardless, he was not undefeatable whatsoever. He may cease coming to this morning plaza someday.

This disquietude, made Theresia enquire.

Putting a finish to his swords dance, the sweaty Wilhelm straightforwardly focused into Theresia's eyes. He then paused and contemplated for a brief moment, and shrugged his shoulders, gesturing how foolish he deemed her enquiry as,

"Because this, is all I have."

So he responded, befitting of a single swing of steel.

That was truly, the answer Theresia had precisely hoped for, and yet.

Theresia became cognizant, of the sensation of her chest being whittled by trepidation and isolation.

“Have you come to like flowers?”

“No, I hate them.”

“Why do you swing the sword?”

“Because this, is all I have.”

As time went by, it had become a solemn promise between the two, to assuredly reiterate this exchange alone.

Theresia herself, did not know what answer she sought to the unremitting, recurrent questions. She was unaware whether it was fine to be soothed by the answers remaining unchanged, or whether she ought to anticipate alteration in his self who resumed being like unvarying steel, she knew naught.

Imprudently leaving things she did not know the way they were, was the very essence of Theresia.

Just as how she, whilst entrusted with the title of the Sword Saint, had sent her brothers to their deaths, had saddled Carol with responsibilities, and now continued to live a time of indolence.

That is why, change always paid a call, all whilst ostracizing Theresia from itself.

6

The one to arrive at the plaza first, primarily used to be Theresia.

Wilhelm’s visits, formerly irregular, she had gotten a grasp on now and was fully equipped with what greetings and conversations to exchange when she met him.

Theresia also came about to realize, how she had been indulging in his being.

By exchanging words with Wilhelm, by having her eyes upon he who had dedicated his everything to the sword, Theresia was briefly able to forget the burden of the Sword Saint placed upon her.

Because she was the Sword Saint, she had been beguiled by him, and as he seemed to be telling her that being the Sword Saint was all guff, she was being saved by him.

Whether she wished to remain being the Sword Saint, or whether she did not wish to, that alone was mendacious.

Within the lukewarm water devoid of an answer, unabating, illimitable guilt submerged her.

His presence, made her forget even that.

"—Wilhelm."

As usual, sensing the presence almost easy to discern, Theresia turned backward.

Standing on the entrance of the plaza, was a youth of the sword.

Her lips unwittingly moved, manifesting a smile which Theresia cast toward him.

"…"

The moment of an unforeseen collapse of emotions, was then.

Eyes distended, lips quivering, Wilhelm concealed his face with a trembling palm. Theresia too was astonished by his dramatic response, undergoing shock.

Questioning where she erred, Theresia rushed over to him, as he covered his face. However, she was ignorant of what to say.

To this day, Theresia did her utmost to decline connection in order to not hurt others.

Thus even when she hurt someone’s heart, she knew no way of handling it.

She despaired. Toward her own self, who knew naught, and never endeavored to know.

Toward her own self, who failed to pronounce a word, before the distressed Wilhelm.

“Wilhelm…”

Unknowing of what to say, Theresia’s fingers reached for Wilhelm. Just how long had it been, since she had initiated physical contact with anyone.

Petrified of wounding others, she became incapable of touching anyone.

Yet in these moments, to walk away from him without touching him was far more petrifying.

Theresia touched Wilhelm’s hand, which was covering his face via her fingers. As he trembled terribly dishearteningly, tasting a sensation warm to an implausible extent, she noticed.

Sword, steel, when bathed in daunting heat then struck, metamorphosed into further strengthened steel.

Though Wilhelm was a sword of a single swing, he was not a perfected sword.

And now, having conceived heat, Wilhelm was now in the midst of metamorphosing after being struck as steel.

And the role of striking the steel for that purpose, was now solicited of Theresia.

—If the subject was a sword, then her self, the Sword Saint, must be au fait with it.

Pertaining to this person, pertaining to this sword, she surely wished to understand.

“Have you, come to like flowers?”

Spontaneously, she vocalized her usual question.

Had there perhaps been a bystander observing the two, they may have ruminated on how nonsensical a consolation it was. However, only between the two, this was for the better.

“…I don’t, hate them.”

And, came a different answer to her unchanged question.

This was what the former Theresia had thought, about this.

Someday, when Wilhelm’s answer shall change, would Theresia be once again left to taste dejection, despondency, and the dread of being left behind.

That did not occur. She simply loved his changing self.

Metamorphosing, the steel seeking to become stronger, the sword of solitarily a single swing, was dear.

“Why, do you swing the sword?”

Thus, surely, this question too had a different answer.

And possibly, that answer shall be the one that brings about salvation to Theresia—

“Because this is all… I could think of, for a way to protect.”

So responded Wilhelm, that he had naught but the sword.

Yes, this person, had naught but the sword.

It is alright, because that is how he is. This person.

—That’s all it was, their routine conversation, was no longer requisite between the two.

However, that did not mean they forfeited opportunities to exchange words at the plaza.

Rather, in terms of solely exchanging words, opportunities for that were more than before.

Wilhelm, who visited the plaza for swinging the sword, came to kindly prioritize speaking to Theresia above swinging his sword.

As he sat on steps surveying the panorama of the flower garden, she inclined her ears to Wilhelm's words, unfailingly destitute of topics. Limitlessly maladroit art of conversation, yet listening to his voice alone soothed her.

"There was talk of conferral, and I became a knight."

The way he commenced the topic of the day, and his gaze vaguely conceived with heat.

Though Theresia was poor at socializing and had continued to maintain distance from others, she was so stupid as to not realize the meaning behind those words of the youth, who mustered up such courage.

A mere commoner, being deemed accepted as a knight for his labor on the battlefield, was exceptional.

Just how many feats the Sword Demon, Wilhelm Trias had accomplished, was something the worthless, cowardly, disenchanting Sword Saint was painfully aware of.

As well as for what he, having been bestowed with the honor of knighthood, had attained this status for.

"I see, congratulations. You've gotten one step closer to your dream, isn't it."

Because she was aware of his true intent, Theresia responded deliberately with a casual attitude.

Should she act casual, she could not help but blush for an instant. Devoting self-restraint into the entirety of her nerves, Theresia beamed a smile at Wilhelm, who had the expression of having tasted an under-shoulder swing down.

“Dream?”

“You clutched the sword to protect, didn’t you? A knight is someone who protects others, after all.”

Upon Theresia’s reply, Wilhelm nodded with a humbled countenance at once.

Even though he’s normally rebellious, he sometimes showed a childishly meek side of him.

—She wished her existence to be within what he wanted to protect.

Despite partly possessing conviction, she hated her self, who assured herself this way.

Despite knowing their sentiments were surely transmitting to each other, her self who abstained from undertaking action was truly, truly stupid, abhorrent, repulsive, irredeemable, henceforth yet again, Theresia erred.

To the extent she deduced that upon consideration, never had she done anything correctly, ever.

7

His hometown set ablaze, Wilhelm hurled himself into the battlefield all alone.

Carol’s report, out of breath, informing her of the unpredicted steadfast fight being put up by the Sword Demon, commenced pillaging Theresia of her body heat, nearly collapsing her to her knees at that very spot.

Theresia, her countenance paling by the second, could comprehend Carol’s swivet. She could comprehend it, but no vitality was incited within her. She knew, the situation was that hopeless.

"…"

Someone's inapposite voice entered Theresia's ears, who had her eyes focused onto the ground.

It was not Carol. Nor was it someone in the house. But, she was acquainted with the voice, as though it belonged to someone who had been close to Theresia for long, and hence she noticed.

That it was the voice of the Sword God's laughter, ridiculing her self who had always dissipated affection and love.

"—I have to go."

Whilst hearkening the Sword God's laughter, Theresia slowly stood up.

Even now, the derision yet persisted to echo within Theresia's small skull. However, whilst being mocked by the Sword God, she must not relinquish everything this way.

She had entrusted her elder brother with everything, and led him to die.

Bedeviling her second elder brother, younger brother, and her uncle by pressing her own responsibilities onto them, she had led them to die.

But, only him—only Wilhelm, shall I not concede.

Because that sword, that steel, only that person, belongs to solely me.

"Carol, prepare."

"Theresia-sama…? However, your body's condition is…"

"—Prepare."

Carol, anxious about Theresia's physique, straightened her back upon the second order. Moving quickly, she immediately made all preparations required for Theresia.

The battle suit which had not been worn ever since the time of her first unit and first battle, and the longsword stranger to blood.

“This time for sure, I won’t make any mistakes.”

Pledging an oath to the longsword she clenched, Theresia hastened Carol and jumped into the dragon carriage.

The dragon carriages heading for Wilhelm’s aid, were of a greater number than Theresia’s conjecture. These were many who were in the same unit as him, or those reciting debts of favor and gratitude towards him for having been saved by him.

Though he was an unsheathed sword, that nothing but stinging youth was nowhere to be seen.

By now, that youth had become a treasured sword, alluring many with his brilliance and sharpness.

—The front lines of Wilhelm’s hometown, had entirely crumbled by this point.

Screeches and bellows reverberating, the battlefield pervaded by the scent of blood and burn.

Amidst the far too ghastly, harrowing circumstance, Theresia’s chest nauseated. She had envisioned herself standing on the battlefield countless of times. How, the reality painted out the grisliness of her imagination with ease.

In the battlefield, where wounds were inflicted, lives were taken, as blood and death ran rampant, something like resolve stood worthless.

“At any rate, search for Wilhelm!”

The one to raise his voice was Bordeaux Zellgef, leading an army of veterans. Upon his roar-esque command, the unit, wearing armor akin to rock, commenced moving in unity.

“Theresia-sama! What should we…”

Carol's voice resounded, asking for instructions, yet Theresia did not hear it.

Bordeaux's group clashed with the enemy soldiers, who had laid waste to his hometown. Amidst the fearsome scrimmage, she faintly sensed him.

"Theresia-sama?!"

The instant she noticed, her legs moved.

Theresia's feet bolted the battlefield melded with warriors, with not a smidgen of incertitude. She need not even look to know, where to head.

Trode the soil, traversed through the heaps of corpses, and headed for the point where hollers of rage and wails of death converged.

And upon reaching the locus saturated by the pungent odor of blood, Theresia saw.

Right in those moments, before the collapsed Wilhelm stood a green demi-human, with a humongous sword upraised to be swung down.

His face drenched in blood, Wilhelm was glancing up toward that humongous sword. His lips moved. With a debilitated, weak voice, he muttered something.

"I don't want to, die…"

"…"

It's alright.

It's alright, I assure you.

"…"

No longer could she hear anything.

Theresia solely ruminated over what she had last heard, Wilhelm's whisper.

She swung the longsword gripped in her hand. It was light.

Making no sound, rather, making not even any impact, the demi-human was easily beheaded.

She kicked the gargantuan body collapsing whilst holding the humongous sword, such that it didn't fall on Wilhelm. At the same time, shots of animosity and bloodlust advanced towards Theresia's slender frame.

All of their trajectories, she could sense them. She could read them. On her skin, she could feel them.

Dodging them, Theresia followed a mysterious ray she could see, with her sword.

Unknowing of when they appeared, mysterious white rays levitated across the air. What was further mysterious, was that her instincts knew all she had to do was to trace those rays with her sword.

Tracing, tracing, her sword glided over the white rays.

Her sword glissaded like wind, slashing the bodies of the demi-humans atop the rays from next to the next.

Severing their limbs, decapitating their heads, stabbing their abdomens, reaping their lives.

The Divine Protection of the Sword Saint, the Divine Protection of Death God, detonated upon the opportunity attained at long last.

Upon losing the wrist, that wound shan't close.

Upon impaling the abdomen, the bleeding shan't cease.

Even the shallowest of wounds, their pain shall eat away and corrode for eternity.

"…"

A glance, from the corner of her eyes she glimpsed Wilhelm being held up.

A youth bearing a shield, and beside him stood Carol. They were seeking to shoulder the dazed Wilhelm, and withdraw from this theatre.

Yes, that's good.

Hurry, and please take Wilhelm away from a place like this.

"Theresia-sama… ~hk."

Carol clenched the pendant worn down her neck, beholding Theresia whilst she swung the sword. Her gesture, akin to prayer, verged Theresia to a little smile.

I guess so. It was just as Carol had said, isn't it.

I am indeed, stronger than anyone else, and better at killing than anyone else.

—If only, I had noticed this a bit sooner.

"…"

The youth hurriedly took Wilhelm away, who was writhing in an attempt to remain here.

Wilhelm, scraping the soil in resistance, failed to succeed due to the injuries veneering his entire body.

His presence faded. By which, she was relieved.

Whilst feeling relieved, she plundered the lives of one, two, three. Easily, effortlessly.

Gashing, rending, slashing, washing away the hollers of rage and wails of death.

Washing away the everlastingly irksome, loud voice of the God of the sword.

Just let me hear solely his voice, he, who desperately clung to life.

Kindly etch my reason, for fighting like this.

Please, make me believe, that my sword can save Wilhelm—.

8

The battle had come to an end.

Theresia's purpose for plunging into the battlefield was achieved, and Wilhelm had returned alive.

However, Wilhelm's goal could not be fulfilled, having fought to defend his hometown.

His hometown burnt to ash, lost of even his parental home, he was now all by himself.

Wilhelm, who had swung the sword retaining his rage, had a kill count of over three hundred.

An unforeseen and atypical count for a single swordsman, in a single battlefield.

—For that reason alone, Theresia's aptitude with sword, itemizing over a thousand heads, deviated from normalcy.

The existence of the Sword Saint, was here—.

Her disgraceful first battle covered up, this instance became etched into history as Sword Saint Theresia's first battle.

The battle itself may have amounted to unquestionable defeat, but she had managed to prove her overwhelming sword skill.

The name of Theresia van Astrea became widely known across the kingdom and potently boosted the morale of the warriors continuing to engage in combat on the battlefield.

Of course, the Sword Demon youth must have hearkened it as well.

"It's humiliating."

There had been no promise between them to meet again.

Yet, the two had conviction, should they head the square they would meet each other.

And as a matter of fact, it came true.

Wilhelm, having arrived at the plaza, swung his sword down with aim set upon Theresia.

Intercepting its trajectory with a hand, she halted it with three fingers.

The optimal angle, the optimal degree of strength, Theresia was aware of it all.

His sword strike arrested, what Wilhelm declared whilst crudely distorting his lips were words smeared in frenzied emotion unbecoming of this reunion.

"—Is that so."

"Were you, laughing at me?"

"…"

"Answer me, Theresia… no, Sword Saint!!"

She had no such intentions.

Neither was that excuse anything meaningful.

It was true that in a certain manner, Theresia had looked down upon Wilhelm's swords dance. She had seen through his flaws, never relayed them to him and shut them within herself, that was all true.

And it would be meaningless to discuss her intent.

"…"

She swept the lunging Wilhelm's legs, violently toppling him. He inched closer with an expression grown frantic, but Theresia evaded it altogether and counterattacked.

Before long, the struggle became one-sided, and in Theresia's hands was his treasured sword worn from use. The treasured sword which briefly unveiled the traces of his effort blotted by blood—a full swing, she had it glide upon the white ray, aim set at Wilhelm's torso.

The sword's pommel scythed his torso, and Wilhelm collapsed, his breathing clogged.

"I won't be coming here anymore."

She could not bear him looking at her, with hatred, with mercy, with earnest cynicism.

Theresia shook her head, and chose the option she had chosen countless times, to run away.

"With a face, like that… you shouldn't, hold a sword."

Face to the ground, Wilhelm frantically wrung out in a rueful tone.

The one to have espoused and believed in the beauty, the sublimity of the sword, was nobody but him. The ability of her self was to kick and trample upon his all.

"I am, the Sword Saint. I never understood the reason for it, but I understand now."

The congenital Divine Protection of Death God.

The bestowed albeit unwished for Divine Protection of the Sword Saint.

It seemed she had achieved a compromise as to why she possessed them.

"The reason…"

"To swing the sword to protect someone. I think that's nice."

To swing the sword, to protect someone.

She wished she had noticed something so simple much earlier.

Although even upon realizing that, she may not have been able to choose whom to protect.

Now, she could.

—Protect, Wilhelm.

With this might, with this abominable, dreadful might of slaughter, protect Wilhelm as much as possible.

Protect him, protect her family, protect Carol, protect a greater crowd, and ultimately protect something even as humongous as the kingdom, she shall become a fine Sword Saint.

Because I, am the strongest. Because the Sword Saint, is the mightiest.

I may trample upon his feelings, I may betray what he believed in, but I solely cannot abandon the fact that I am the Sword Saint.

“Just you, wait, Theresia…”

No longer present were any words to be exchanged.

The voice reached Theresia’s back, who stepped forth surmising this would be the last.

“…”

She verged upon halting her legs. She desperately withstood that emotion.

Whilst Theresia desperately withstood, Wilhelm’s voice yet entered her ears.

“I will, take away the sword from you. I don’t care, about the Divine Protection and duties bestowed upon you… swinging the sword… the blade’s beauty, don’t you dare look down upon them, Sword Saint!”

“…”

She was forewarned, it would be taken away from her.

And once again, echoed the voice of the Sword God's laugher within her skull.

As if to sneer at the youth, blazoning such abandon.

As if to sneer at the beloved child, heart cradled by such spirit of fleeting hope.

9

—A period of two more years had been needed to end the civil war.

Ever since her parting with Wilhelm, Theresia cast herself unto all kinds of battlefields.

And intently repeating perfervid and acute labor, she contributed to diminishing the Demi-Human Alliance's war potential.

The alliance too lost seniors who comprised its mainstay, its foundation weakening.

It could be stated they had no choice but to comply with the proposal for peace the kingdom had offered.

Henceforth, the greatest civil war of the kingdom, the Demi-Human War, diverged from its gruesomeness in its midst and ended identically exceedingly swiftly as how it had outbroken.

"It's… over?"

She was resolved to tackle the next battle, the battle after the next, the battles with no end in sight.

Thus, upon hearing the abruptly brought report of its denouement, Theresia lost her balance.

"Yes, it is over. The civil war has come to an end. —It is, Theresia-sama's achievement."

Catching the tottering Theresia in her arms, Carol pronounced innocently.

Having grown to display such tender expressions more oft lately, Carol firmly supported the bewildered Theresia and gently caressed her back.

"Achievement you say…"

Those words didn't really hit her.

All Theresia did was to continue nothing but slashing. Believing that it would consequently connect to protecting someone.

Believing it would save the youth who had arbitrarily left the troops by himself and gone to someplace.

Theresia's such actions devoid of self-awareness, however, just as Carol had stated, shall be commended as of greatest service to the kingdom.

A ceremony was held for her, wearing a formal dress with a sword of courtesy in her hands, Theresia failed to dispel the sensation that she was walking within a dream from the beginning to the very end.

No, if this was a dream, then Theresia had always been walking within a dream.

Ever since she had been blessed with the Divine Protection of the Sword Saint, ever since she had first felt the Sword God's presence near herself, Theresia's heart had been within the dream shown by that great being.

Hence this too, was a dream. The dream shown by the love of the Sword God, sunless evermore, never to be dispelled.

Therefore, if there were to come a time she was liberated from this dream, then—.

"…"

A commotion splintered the wild enthusiasm of the excited crowd in the ceremony.

That being aimlessly stepped into the ceremony hall, in spite of all the voices calling for his restraint.

In his hands, an unsheathed, decayed, tattered, rusty sword.

He wore a dark brown, soiled tunic, the color of his visible skin also besmirched in dirt and filth. But before knitting brows to his state, there was something everyone could instinctively sense.

—Emanating from that being, the essence of dread.

—No, the essence of swordsmanship.

"…"

Before the being wordlessly bracing himself, Theresia too faced him with the sword of courtesy.

The king, standing on the same altar, halted the palace guards attempting to surround the outlaw. She was grateful for that. With this, no obstruction would come in the way.

Nobody would now get in the way, of her tryst with the Sword Demon here.

—No signals given.

However, as though arranged for beforehand, the blades of the two simultaneously eloped, giving rise to a shrill note.

The rightfully dull blade directly collided with the unmistakably holy sword, albeit one for courtesy. Sparkles danced exuberantly, slashes tore the air, and two shadows intertwined on the stage as though in dance.

"…"

Whilst swinging the sword, Theresia was struck with admiration. Her mind enlivened, her heartbeats hastening.

In Theresia's eyes, as ever, were the white rays concocted in the midst of battle. All she had to do was to trace those rays, all she had to do to kill was to trace those white rays, such guidance of the Sword God's could she see.

The itinerary to triumph shown by the pinnacle of the sword, forged by the Sword God, was being broken through by mere devotion and maddening ardor of the Sword Demon.

The floating white rays were rended by the rusted sword as though they were visible.

Intercepting every single one of the countlessly emerged white rays, the Sword Demon roared a war cry, and stepped towards the pinnacle of the sword he couldn't ever reach.

Heartbeats palpitated. Each and every time, each and every time, they exchanged blows.

Each and every time their swords overlapped, each and every time the contour of white rays was severed, each and every time their gazes entwined.

She was in love, with the demon of the sword before her eyes.

Each and every time, each and every time, each and every time, the Sword Saint fell in love with the Sword Demon.

She loved him. She loved him. She loved him to an unbearable degree.

—She was in love with this person to an unbearable extent.

"—~hk."

The ceremony utterly disordered, amidst the attentive gazes of a crowd so great, Theresia couldn't help but find it comical when she thought of what she was doing.

Her cheeks, hot. Her chest, palpitating. Each passing moment, her love aggravated.

The truth is, I want to throw away my sword right away, and jump to his chest.

There is nothing to take away from me. Ever since a long time ago, precisely when we first met, ever since my heartbeats first rose because of you, I have—

"…"

The option for her to run away into comfort, refusing to face him, was thwarted.

Not by the reprimanding voice of the Sword God, but the glint in the eyes of the demon before her, repudiated it with all of his soul.

That he shall take it away through his own strength, borrowing not the hands of anyone else, not even yours.

With solely his own strength, with his own tenacity, with all he had proffered to the sword, he shall take the girl away from the Sword God.

Just how much, for how long.

Just how many times, hundreds of times, tens of thousands of times, hundreds of millions of times, must he have thought of her self.

The sword slashes melded, locked against one another, their tips shimmered, and exchanged blows however many times.

And, the swung strike accompanied by the Sword God's enraged voice was—

"…"

The rufous blade fractured, its tip twirled into the air and bounced upon the altar.

The one to achieve this, with not a smidgen of uncertainty, was the Sword Saint's soulful strike.

All or nothing, the singular strike of the Sword Saint with nonpareil might.

However,

“My”

“…”

“My, win.”

The treasured sword, had been taken from Theresia’s hands.

Her palm numbed by the impact, the treasured sword fell to her rear with a shrill report. And, positioned by Theresia’s fair neck was the halfway broken dull tip.

The beautifully bedecked Sword Saint, lost, to the uncouthly trained Sword Demon.

That was the moment the treasured sword was defeated by the dull blade, and the phantasmagoria known as the Sword Saint was shattered.

“You’re weaker than me, so you no longer have any reason to wield the sword.”

The voice smote.

Upon consideration, it’s been quite a while since having heard his curt voice.

And to think his first words, would be this.

“If I don’t wield the sword… who will.”

“I’ll succeed your reason for swinging the sword. You simply become my reason for swinging the sword.”

His reason for swinging the sword, was to protect something.

You become that reason, whilst enunciating so, he took his tunic’s hood off.

As the sullied, sour face glared at her self, Theresia shook her head.

To take it away from her, to protect her, in spite of having come to say such cool things, he truly didn't understand the female heart. Although he's a sword, so it could not be helped.

"What a harsh person you are. To render all of someone's resolve and determination useless."

"I'll succeed all of that too. You just forget that you ever held the sword and carefreely… let's see. You just live in peace behind my back, raising flowers or something."

Ah, that is so, so—.

"Whilst being, protected by your sword?"

"That's right."

"Will you protect me?"

"That's right."

If he were to count her self amidst what he cherished, and, if he were to respond to her love.

Theresia smiled at the words of the Sword Demon, of Wilhelm.

Subsequently touching the sword at her neck, she took a single step forward.

By touching the sword blade, she felt Wilhelm's two years.

Pondering that all this time, if he had been thinking of her self, her chest warmed.

With the rise of emotions she could not bear, tears appeased Theresia's eyelids. They slowly brimmed over, and trickled down the smiling Theresia's cheeks.

"Do you, like flowers?"

"I don't hate them anymore."

“Why do you, swing the sword?”

“To protect you.”

Her patience, at its limit.

Ever since she had relinquished the sword from her hands, she could no longer hear the Sword God’s voice.

She saw nothing but Wilhelm.

She felt nothing but Wilhelm.

She had nothing but Wilhelm.

Gently nestling close to his chest, she faintly tilted her head upward.

Her eyes closed, Theresia’s lips imbricated with the lips of Wilhelm. Love surged upon the soft, warm sensation, and Theresia’s world revolutionized.

With her cheeks dyed, she gazed at the man, her beloved, before her eyes.

Wilhelm said nothing, silently awaiting her words.

Such odd conduct. She was the one waiting. He seemed to not understand that, so once again, just like before, she initiated,

“Are you, in love with me?”

“—You know that.”

A brusque reply, and he averted his face.

The moment she rounded her eyes upon the answer, in the world ensconced only by the two entered sounds. The temporal pause of the spectators came undone, and a large number of palace guards advanced towards them.

Present there were the figures of personnel well acquainted with Wilhelm.

“Goodness gracious.”

As Wilhelm formed a somewhat relieved expression upon seeing them, she puffed her cheeks.

To look someplace else when she is standing right before his eyes, just what impudence was this.

She had not even heard him say the words he ought to yet.

“There are some things I want you to express in words, you know.”

“Ah.”

Wilhelm turned his head, scratching his cheek as though to varnish the situation over. However, before long he yielded to Theresia’s gaze and sighed, embracing her slender waist closer to himself once again.

And gently drawing his face close to the astonished Theresia’s ear,

“Someday, when I feel like it.”

—It felt it would take a long time for him to feel like it.

Bearing such displeasure in her mind, she nonetheless avidly anticipated that day’s befall.

Her weakness being what she lost her heart to, Theresia forgave the words of the one she loved.

10

—After that, looking back on it now, a lot happened.

Welcoming Wilhelm as her husband, who had cut into the ceremony and had perpetrated unprecedented recklessness by asserting he would take away the leading lady was one tribulation.

Succeeding Theresia, who had quit being the Sword Saint, Wilhelm enrolling in the Royal Guard with the recommendation of Bordeaux and the others as well was one tribulation.

Having affirmed a lifetime of service to Theresia, Carol entered a relationship of love with one of Wilhelm's comrades and the question of whether she would marry him or not was one tribulation.

Having accumulated an exceeding number of large-scale feats in battle, Bordeaux being provided a seat in the committee that settled major political situations was one tribulation.

With so much, truly so much happening, those days were really fun.

"I'm in love with you, Wilhelm. What about you?"

"…"

In the end, never did he ever pronounce the words that followed. Though he did prove through his actions in his words' stead.

Only either a kind woman, or a woman who was head over heels in love with the man could have been swindled by that—since both held true for Theresia, she kept on getting swindled.

Their time as a couple, passed in tranquility and carefreeness.

Just as Wilhelm had promised Theresia, ever since that ceremony, never even once did he make her grip the sword. Neither did Theresia bear any lingering sentiments towards the sword. The Sword God's voice had long become inaudible.

Yet, the Divine Protection of the Sword Saint did occasionally come to surface.

For example, when cooking, upon gripping a kitchen knife she spontaneously understood the optimal angle for striking and such. Above all, having an ability to cut aptly comprised merely the first step in preparation, as she began to learn more about what followed she started to realize that being a housewife was much tougher than being a swordsman.

"…Ah."

In addition, this was also about the time she learnt how to control the Divine Protection of Death God. She accidentally cut her finger with the shell of an ingredient whilst cooking.

Voluntarily created wounds were anyhow subject to the Divine Protection. Pallid from the wound she had carved onto herself, as she panicked in an attempt to somehow stop the bleeding, the bleeding ceased immediately.

—Was it really so easy, she thought, nigh revolted.

Accepting the Divine Protections' existences, and controlling their power.

Despite of having been conferred a title so immense as the Sword Saint, in reality she was merely a little girl without even a grasp on the things she possessed.

If only, had this happened much earlier—such mighty emotions, brimmed her heart reminiscing the images of her brothers.

"Theresia."

"—Hm."

At such junctures, Wilhelm returned as though willfully.

And as Theresia concealed her deepest heart, he removed her tender robes, and domineeringly advanced.

On such moments, was she saved.

"Are you, in love with me?"

"…"

Only that question did he stubbornly refuse to answer, though.

11

After that, again, a lot happened.

Truly, a lot happened.

The couple’s son was born, Heinkel.

The lady whom Heinkel welcomed as his wife, and she gave birth to who would be Theresia’s first grandchild, Reinhard.

—Nobody at all, was to have been at any fault.

Not Heinkel, whom she proudly called her son, who devoted greater sincerity and endeavor towards the sword than anyone, with full earnesty and effort.

Nor the bride, who was afflicted by the illness called Sleeping Beauty, depriving Heinkel of any opportunity for vindication and left the child Reinhard all alone.

Nor Reinhard, who was blessed with talents capable of sending shivers upon a single glance, his childish frame crammed with preordainments of an unneeded extent.

No one was at fault.

That’s why the one at fault, just as always, was her self.

Heinkel distorted, the bride was taken prisoner to dreams, and Reinhard endeavored to be loved by such parents.

She found her self, having been the first one to take notice of this and fail to do anything, to be the utmost foolish and good-for-nothing.

“There’s a battle called the Great Subjugation… the battle to bring down the White Whale. Over there, I’ll…”

A knight of the Royal Guard only in name, and a weighty mission only in name.

The trembling voice of her son accreted upon the submitted proposition, and Theresia, alone and solitary, cemented a decision.

The longsword she once favored and habitually used, had since always been under Carol’s care, retained in condition identical to back then.

"I am against it. What are you thinking!"

Though she was well aware this would happen, Wilhelm was against Theresia's decision.

She was pierced by a sharp glint infused with will.

His hair mingled with white, his voice lost of its former youthfulness, even so, Wilhelm's foundation shan't change.

His dignity, his zeal, his clumsiness, everything continued to be the way Theresia had fallen in love with, and continued to love.

"—I, have made my decision."

"All arbitrary! Just who asked for something like… could it be."

Wilhelm realized on whose proposal Theresia's obstinate attitude came to be.

His face tinted red with fury, his insuppressible essence of swordsmanship split open.

"That idiotic buffoon… feel some shame… ~hk."

"Neither you nor I, have the right to say that."

"…"

Wilhelm identically lamented for their son. His furious expression fading, Wilhelm bit his lips.

His fury persisted, yet suppressing his anger and feigning composure was something he had become adultlike in.

"I too, will take charge…"

"You have your own duties to fulfil. You must be aware, Wilhelm. —It cannot be that you have forgotten, Ford-sama's grief."

"…"

The daughter of the king's younger brother Ford, had been kidnapped by someone who intruded into the royal castle. As the commander of the Royal Guard, Wilhelm had the duty of retrieving her at once.

It was impossible to have the Sword Demon travel alongside to the Great Subjugation.

The call made in substitution for him was for Theresia, the currently active successor of the Divine Protection of the Sword Saint, requesting her participation in battle.

She could not refuse. Her days of tranquility lived in relinquish of the sword were solely concocted upon her own selfishness.

She could not, presume upon that any longer.

“Theresia, something like this is…”

“Wilhelm.”

Theresia called her husband, who attempted to persuade her all the more. Before his face, his breathing faintly halted, she enquired with a smile.

A question, after a long time.

“Are you, in love with me?”

“Wha… ~hk.”

Unrest—the same emotion as the past, she saw.

Whilst smiling, Theresia used her hand like a sword and swiped Wilhelm’s shoulder. An attack that slashed the air, cleaved the skin.

Bared defenseless before his wife, Wilhelm was unable to react to the strike coming from beyond the bounds of his attention, as the wound on his shoulder started to bleed.

“Theresia… What are you doing?”

The power of the Divine Protection of Death God was activated on the shallow wound of his shoulder. It wasn't severe, but the bleeding shall subsist. As long as Theresia remained next to him like this, as long as she didn't take distance from him.

"Theresia?"

Her body gently leaned onto his chest.

Whilst feeling the sturdiness of the arms that caught her, Theresia placed her lips on the wound on Wilhelm's shoulder.

The blood dyed her lips in scarlet, she felt the taste of her husband's blood for the first time.

"With this, you can no longer come after me. Because if you're close to me, that wound will not close."

"You did something so stupid for something like that… Let me make it clear, even if the bleeding does not stop I will still"

"If you do then there'll be no point."

With a faint smile, Theresia let go of his body.

And, whilst pointing towards the wound on Wilhelm's shoulder,

"I shall leave that wound as is. So that you do not follow me. I will close it once both of our jobs are done."

"…"

"No need to worry, who do you think I am? I am the strongest swordsman in this world, the most powerful after you."

"Even if you compare yourself in your mid-forties to in your youth …"

"Don't say anything so redundant."

She flatly shut the mouth about to articulate discourtesy.

Geez, this was how it was after more than twenty years of marriage.

The steel remained yet unchanged. Hence,

“I’m in love with you, Wilhelm.”

“…”

“Yes, that’s correct. Answer that afterwards.”

“Afterwards?”

Wilhelm furrowed his eyebrows, to whom Theresia nodded.

And, whilst pledging their reunion upon her husband’s wound—.

“Upon my return, that day, please let me hear the words I didn’t get to hear.”

12

Her memories, were evanescing, dissipating.

Visibility disturbed within the sandstorm, sounds of the environs became sporadic and difficult to grasp.

“—!”

Someone’s wrathful roars, shrieks, screams, could be heard.

One plane of her visibility was saturated in verdant green—no, it was the ground. It was the hue of a grassland. Upon surveying the surroundings, a dense fog locked the world in its entirety less than ten meters from her.

The subjugation forces had suffered halfway decimation, and her unit faced annihilation.

A desperate stampede began, and failed to perceive which direction to run into amidst the thick fog.

However, solely a vague sense of titanic pressure from the other side of the fog could be felt. Hence, voices flew, fleeing to its opposite direction.

"…"

All of a sudden, she was unable to remember what had occurred.

Within the severe, violent clash, the engagement should have nevertheless progressed in their favor, and despite having long retired from battling, her might should have also served to be useful, that was how she ought to have felt—.

"—?"

Her thoughts went only so far before she took notice of faint malaise.

She glanced down to her palm. Something, was off.

There was no problem in her limbs, her eyes, her feet.

But she somewhat felt as though, she had lost her wings—.

"The Divine Protection…"

She realized.

No longer could she anywhere feel, the sensation of the Divine Protection of the Sword Saint. All the same for the Sword God, who had remained beside her no matter how estranged and distant from the sword she was.

That scorn, was no longer anywhere either.

"Reinhard—!"

Theresia simultaneously had a hunch to whom the Divine Protection had gone after vanishing from her body.

Was this the same feeling her uncle got when he sensed Theresia had inherited the Divine Protection. Otherwise, it may simply be that Theresia was aware of Reinhard's limitless natural talent.

Whichever it may be, Theresia did not doubt that the generation of Sword Saint following her would be Reinhard.

That intuition was perhaps traitorous to her own son, Heinkel—but no longer remained either anyone she could put the blame on, or the time for her to put blame.

"—Oh my, for a lone lady to remain in a place like this, quite gallant indeed."

The graceful voice of a young girl, unbecoming for the time and space, resonated.

Turn back and Theresia saw a petite shadow within the dense fog.

White clothes, platinum tinted hair.

Intimate and affectionate, an amiable gaze imbued with sympathy boundlessly extolling togetherness towards the unacquainted—misdirected love, to an odious extent.

"…"

"It seems I have not quite been taken a liking to."

Bracing her longsword, Theresia stepped forward.

Had she been in peaceful times, she may have bore concern for the young girl. However, this was the world of death ruled by the dense fog of the White Whale.

A young girl emerging here, transcended mystery.

Even without the Divine Protection of the Sword Saint, Theresia's body bequeathed part of a former genius with the sword. Manifesting adequate ability of the zenith of swordsmanship, the bolting slash rended the young girl's petite figure into two—

"—I wish to, understand you."

The young girl's voice tickled her eardrums, and her consciousness was impeded.

With a splintering sound.

Within the darkness, her consciousness descended.

As though sinking within lukewarm water with her limbs bound, Theresia's body submerged, wilting.

The future of her grandson, the heart of her son, the bride who connected the two, worries and disquietude ran past her as though in haste.

And, in the end,

"Wilhelm"

Calling the name of the man she loved, her consciousness ceased in its entirety.

And—.

13

Theresia: "A pathetic, face…"

Steadily opening her eyelids, there she saw a crumpled face

His head had become completely white, and more wrinkles of ageing had proliferated on his face, but she could not help but think that this was handsome in its own right.

There was no way she could have mistaken.

It was the face of her husband. Though it seemed quite some time had passed since that parting.

"…"

She inhaled, a deep breath.

There were others close by, could it have been Heinkel, and Reinhard. She could feel their presence.

All three men of the Astrea family had assembled here, perhaps gone out of their way just to meet her, just to give her a sendoff.

Because everyone, is so kind.

Wilhelm: “Theresia, I am…”

Wilhelm choked on his breath, his face etched with wrinkles.

Exceedingly unseemly before their son and grandson.

Just where did he forget his dignity and majesty. Above all, looking back at it now, such weaknesses of his surprisingly stood out always as well.

Theresia: “Listen, Wilhelm…”

Her voice was husky, yet peculiarly youthful.

As if it wasn’t hers—no, it was unmistakably hers, but she was supposed to be a proper grandma now.

It seemed like her voice back from when she had first fallen in love, how embarrassing.

“…”

When she had first fallen in love, she felt awkward upon feeling so.

There was not much time left, yet they wasted time simply gazing into one another.

But, even still, that’s alright.

Theresia had sufficiently conveyed the words she should have conveyed. Wilhelm, too, must realize that.

Therefore, the one in need of time, of opportunity, of words was him.

Theresia should simply, quietly wait for those words.

Albeit she will have to wait, her hopes will assuredly be fulfilled. That’s the kind of man Wilhelm Trias was.

That’s the kind of husband Wilhelm van Astrea was.

Wilhelm: “There is something I must tell… you.”

“…”

Wilhelm; “I-I am a poor speaker… I fail to convey my thoughts well, and caused hardship to you as well… that’s why even in more than twenty years, never even once did I…”

“…”

Wilhelm: “For twenty years, I may have made you feel distressed. But, I am…”

Theresia: “—A stupid person.”

Seeing him struggle to speak, as he clumsily fumbled to form words, she could no longer bear it.

Ended up laughing. Truly, just what was this man saying.

Theresia: “Did you really, never notice?”

Her hand reached for the cheek earnestly seeking heartbreak, the countenance verging on tears even now.

Her body was terribly heavy. There was not much strength left in her body, but pouring all of her remaining strength into her fingers, she wiped away the tears trickling down his face.

Theresia: “You had always, been saying it.”

“…”

Did he perhaps intend to hide it.

Did he perhaps intend, he could conceal it by simply never expressing it in words.

Theresia: “Your eyes, your voice, your conduct, your actions, had always.”

All of what Wilhelm, had directed towards Theresia.

Had been, more than anything, clearly conveying this person’s heart —.

Wilhelm: “I am, with you”

Theresia: “You are, with me”

That’s why, it was sufficient.

“—In love.”

14

From the beginning till the end, my life was surely one filled with blessings.

I had my brothers whom I was cordial with, I had a female friend who was always warm towards me and took tender care of me, I was saved by many people, I met Wilhelm.

I'm sure, lots of problems still must be remaining.

But I have faith, that you all will be alright.

But, the truth is, just one thing.

There was just one last thing, left in my heart that I regret I didn't get to ask.

—How surprised would you be if you got to know, that it was actually love at first sight?

15

Their exchange of words of love with one another, was the end.

Smiling in satisfaction, her cheeks dyed with the tint of love, and eyes glistened with tears, Theresia van Astrea's form lost its shape and crumbled in the blink of an eye.

Within the arms of the kneeling Wilhelm, no longer visible was the figure of a bloodied, gasping woman, what was bequeathed was only a wreath of ashes—and that alone, gave credence to the sentiment that she was here.

"…"

Her life incinerated within his arms, Theresia had become a wreath of ashes. Wilhelm looked down towards such vestiges of Theresia's, his gaze simply casted down, wordless.

???: "…Are you, satisfied now?"

And, instead of the silent, immobile Wilhelm, a man raised his voice.

The red-haired middle-aged man—Heinkel, aimed a glare pervaded with hatred at Reinhard, who was standing beside him.

Reinhard slowly met that gaze, and shed a sigh.

Reinhard: “Satisfied, what do you mean?”

Heinkel: “Don’t play dumb, it’s just as how we saw it! Are you satisfied? You must be satisfied now! Both in name and in reality, the position of Sword Saint is all yours now, congratulations! The rumors of you robbing it by killing the previous generation, are now true without a speck of doubt too. Tell me, aren’t you satisfied? Hey!”

Reinhard: “I don’t quite understand, what you are saying.”

Heinkel: “Don’t you make that blank face! You shitty brat!”

Exhaling a hoarse breath, Heinkel tried to grab Reinhard.

However, Reinhard avoided his fingers, and constrained the body of his real father through his palm, as the latter stomped the ground to a paining extent.

There remained not a scintilla of impact on the form of the current generation Sword Saint for slashing the previous Sword Saint to death. The truth is, it didn’t serve to be an opponent either.

As though that truth was shoved onto him, Heinkel’s throat faintly shuddered.

Heinkel: “Don’t get carried away, Reinhard… ~hk.”

Attempting to inveigle such tremors of his own heart, Heinkel grew further frantic, and spat out whilst pointing a finger towards Reinhard.

Heinkel: “No matter how many sweet nothings you line up, what I saw won’t change. It is fact that you slashed down mother…

Theresia van Astrea. I'll proclaim it. I'll spread the word, such that nobody approves of you as the Sword Saint anymore!"

"…"

Heinkel: "No matter how unconcerned you look, there's no way you'll let go of your honor as Sword Saint. You may have dubiously managed so far, but not anymore. The one slashing his own blood relative to death is the Sword Saint? The sword of the kingdom? Hah, don't make me laugh! You murdere~r!"

Reinhard: "Deputy Commander, no matter how many times you say it, I do not understand what you mean. —It is the Deputy Commander's misunderstanding, that I slashed the previous generation to death."

Heinkel: "Hu… h…?"

To Heinkel who argued vehemently, Reinhard gave a quiet response. Heinkel rounded his eyes upon those words, but Reinhard did not seem to intend deception or making excuses.

Reinhard did not seek to opine. Reinhard, was stating the truth.

Reinhard: "The enemy just now was merely a corpse mobilized via some secret arts. It could not have been the previous generation Sword Saint … grandmother. Did you not misconceive something?"

"…"

Heinkel made a stupefied expression at Reinhard's words.

He then rammed his hands into his red hair, tearing them off violently. A faint laughter leaking him, Heinkel, with an unhinged smile,

Heinkel: "Then, what was that at the end? When she was, talking to father?! When she was glaring so bitterly at you and me… what was that, if that wasn't mother!"

Wilhelm: "—Enough, now stop, Heinkel."

Canines bared, Heinkel burned with emotion transcending hatred. The one to halt Heinkel's fury was Wilhelm, having maintained silence until now.

The aged swordsman, remaining in his crouched stance, tore a sleeve of his coat and treated the wound on his right leg—the locus impaled by the longsword.

The wound that shouldn't close to due to the ability of the Divine Protection of Death God, had started losing its efficacy since the moment Theresia's being was lost. —No, prior to that, it had stopped from the juncture the sane Theresia had returned.

What ached instead was the wound carved onto his left shoulder at their parting.

The sane Theresia on his left shoulder, and the demised Theresia on his right leg.

With the loss of both, the wounds carved with the Divine Protection of Death God dispelled in their efficacy.

Heinkel: "Stop, you say… father! Are you fine with that?! This guy is…!"

Wilhelm: "Stop, Heinkel…Stop."

As Heinkel attempted to snarl again, Wilhelm forbade him once more.

Taking off his coat now lost of a sleeve, Wilhelm wrapped Theresia's ashen vestiges in the opened cloth. It would be far too lonesome to abandon her to the wind's mercy as is.

He believed he must, at the very least, return her ashes back to her grave.

Heinkel: "—~hk."

Seeing the state of his father, Heinkel gnashed his teeth in vexation and swallowed his words. And, retrieving the ashes, Wilhelm stood up on a teetering gait.

Even if his bleeding had ceased, his body had lost a considerable amount of blood. The wound on the joint of his right leg was deep, making it feel uneasy to let him walk by himself. Reinhard instantly attempted to support his tottering shoulders.

However,

Wilhelm: "—Stay away!!"

"…"

Wilhelm's bellow abjured those fingertips about to touch him.

Reinhard halted his raised arm, and Wilhelm did not attempt to turn towards his countenance. Gazes never intertwined, the Sword Demon inhaled silently.

Wilhelm: "Reinhard…"

Reinhard: "—Yes."

Contrasting Wilhelm's quivering voice, Reinhard's voice was confident and dignified.

Closing his eyes upon hearing his tone, Wilhelm articulated.

—It was, a question.

Wilhelm: "Do you regret, that you slashed your grandmother… Theresia to her death?"

"…"

A faint interval sojourned in the answer to the question.

Or perhaps, this dialogue may have gotten deemed meaningless, similar to Heinkel's earlier.

However, following a pause, Reinhard responded.

Reinhard: "No. —I did the correct thing. I, shan't regret it."

Wilhelm: "…I, suppose so. That's right."

"…"

Wilhelm: "You are correct. I am mistaken. —That is why, there is no longer anything to talk to you about."

Responding with a quiet voice, Wilhelm turned his back to Reinhard.

The grandfather and grandson, without ever facing one another, concluded the decisive dialogue.

And, with a single upraised finger Wilhelm pointed towards the city's center,

Wilhelm: "I am worried about the City Hall, to which Garfiel-dono is headed. If it would be possible, then I would request you to head there to provide support. Sword Saint Reinhard-dono."

"…"

Terribly formal and unduly distant, upon his polite words Reinhard looked in the direction his finger was denoting. He then nodded, and finally glanced toward Heinkel.

Heinkel, yet charred with hatred, faintly paused his breath to those blue eyes, but Reinhard let pass such trivial terror of his,

Reinhard: "The outdoors are dangerous. Deputy Commander, if it would be possible then head to a shelter. —Along with Wilhelm-dono."

Heinkel: "Y-You just shut the hell up! Hurry up and disappear!"

Hurled with the words of a seeming sour loser, Reinhard turned his face away. He then bolted towards the waterway, leaping as though to kick the water's surface, with momentum enough to bound over a building he disappeared in the direction of the city's center.

Witnessing his inhumane talent and ability, Heinkel spat. He subsequently rushed to Wilhelm, who was steadily dragging his right leg as he walked. However,

Heinkel: “Father-dono, going alone is…”

Wilhelm: “Please leave me alone. I don’t want anyone to see my face, right now.”

Heinkel: “Father…”

Wilhelm: “There is no need for you to worry about me. You should just worry for your own safety. Hide yourself in a suitable building or shelter… You, should be fine.”

Leaving solely his opinion behind, Wilhelm walked, deserting Heinkel.

His wife’s ashes wrapped in the coat he carried, he dragged his feet and faded into the distance.

“…”

Left behind, unable to call for his halt, or walk by his side.

Left behind, as Wilhelm dwindled out of view, Heinkel was—.

Heinkel: “What’s, your problem… what’s your problem, what’s your problem, what’s your problem, what’s your problem, damn it, what the hell is your problem!”

In the plaza bereft of anyone, glaring at the stone pavement, Heinkel spouted his fury. Tearing at his head, roaring his rage inexplicable in words, he hurled the sword fastened to his waist to the ground.

Strummed by the ground with a solid echo, the beautiful knight sword glided across the floor and fell.

Heinkel: “Shitshitshitshit, god damn everyone…! Everyone just go die…! Just go die~e~e~e~e~e~ ~hk!!”

In the deserted plaza bereft of anyone, only Heinkel’s bleeding screech resounded in solitude.

The screech, melding boundless, ceaseless resentment and grief, echoed far and wide—.

Grandfather, father, grandchild, the battlefield uniting the Astrea family, thus drew its conclusion.

Once a lady, a grandmother, a mother, a wife.

The end of Theresia van Astrea engraved wounds upon the hearts of the respective three.

—With this, all of the battlefields in the fight for the Watergate City of Priestella drew their curtains.

Chapter 74: Fruits of the Battle For Priestella 1

1

???: “The heinous Witch Cult, which had captured the four control towers and threatened the city, have been repelled. With this, the safety of the city is affirmed—The triumph goes to the Watergate City Pristella!”

Subaru heard the broadcast that resonated throughout the city as he hurried to the City Hall along with Emilia.

The cheerful announcement was transmitted through a magical device that conveyed one’s voice to the city.

Although there were parts where the sound broke, those were only the fluctuation of the voice of the person making the broadcast. There was no reason to doubt the contents of the welcoming announcement.

Emilia: “Subaru! Just now they said…!”

Subaru: “So it seems. Somehow or other, it seems like it’s over.”

In front of the suddenly bright-faced Emilia, Subaru relaxed his cheeks as he dropped his shoulders.

The reason for his listlessness was relief, and a little bit of anxiety.

Subaru: “…At any rate, it’s because the enemies are who they are…”

There was Capella of Lust who possessed the Authority of variation and change; in the worst-case scenario, there was the possibility of the broadcast voice being a ploy to cast false hope over the citizens. There was no guarantee they would not go that far, and that malice was what made the Sin Archbishops so frightening.

However, the voice of the broadcast—it had introduced itself as Kiritaka Muse, and though the statement had been consciously respectful, faint emotions and joy both had not been concealed. Upon hearing that voice, one did not have any reason to worry about being fooled by such wicked trickery.

Subaru: “That means, that everyone did it…”

The broadcast had stated that the four control towers occupied by the Sin Archbishops had been recaptured.

At least, with this, it was safe to assume that the ending in which all the floodgates would end up being opened, and the city would end up being both flooded and annihilated, had been avoided.

On that point, they could be sincerely relieved. If there was one problem which fueled Subaru’s concern—It would be the victims.

Subaru: “Miraculously, Regulus didn’t end up causing any casualties.”

Although they had a somewhat powerful lineup as well, their enemies were Sin Archbishops with one or two peculiarities to them. The only reason they had overcome the crusade against the invincible Regulus was because he himself was lousy in battle.

There were the cunning Lust and Wrath, whose defeat he had not been able to witness. And Gluttony, with whom he was connected by fate; simply calling them difficult enemies or threats was simply not enough.

Even though they had won, the possible damage—it was frightful.

Emilia: “According to what Subaru said, there were also Sin Archbishops of the Witch Cult in the other control towers. All the others, I wonder if they’re okay…?”

Those were the words of Emilia. Accompanied by the same unease Subaru felt, she could not put on a joyful face.

Subaru shook his head, biting his lip, in front of Emilia who had cast her gaze down.

Subaru: “I also feel troubled about that, but… All we can do is trust in the others. I want to confirm that they are fine as quickly as possible.”

Emilia: “Yeah, that’s right…”

He could not dispel Emilia’s distress with such simple words of comfort.

If they considered how powerful the enemies had been this time around, they could not avoid the possibility that there were victims among their allies. Still, it could not be said that the massive destruction to save the city was the result they had desired.

Thus, although it depended on the circumstances, considering the use of Return by Death as one of his options was a resolution which Subaru had held ever since the start of this operation.

Personally, Subaru did not like the strategy of relying on his Return by Death.

Of course, he was opposed to choosing his own death, but it was also related to the Trial he had witnessed at the Sanctuary, the world after Subaru’s death.

In fact, it was not known whether or not the world continued after Subaru’s death, but the Trials had revealed that such a possibility existed. So Subaru had firmly decided that he would not use Return by Death to increase the number of attempts.

Even so, if Subaru were to willingly choose Return by Death, it would be when the unacceptable result of having to continue with a loss awaited him.

And this time, Subaru was considering such a possibility.

Those who swore to recapture the city and challenged the Sin Archbishops, the Royal Candidates, their Knights, and their allies.

In order not to lose those he did not want to lose, he was prepared to repeat the pain and suffering.

Emilia: “…Subaru, your brow is reaaally wrinkled.”

Subaru: “Eh?”

Emilia was gazing straight ahead at Subaru, who had a grim and serious expression on his face. She had shot Subaru and his wrinkled brow a look, causing him to reflexively open his eyes up wide.

As her amethyst eyes filled with gloom, Emilia spoke to him,

Emilia: “After all, no matter what you do, you still care. I’m sorry. Although it’s a difficult time, thanks to those who captured me…”

Subaru: “No, it’s not Emilia-tan’s fault. Even without Emilia-tan, it was necessary to defeat Regulus. If Emilia-tan hadn’t been there, I don’t know if we could have saved the brides.”

To save the brides from Greed, they had to temporarily stop their hearts which carried the Lion’s Heart.

Emilia was probably the only one from their existing lineup who could have done it. Ferris perhaps could also have been a possibility. In any case, without her, it would have been necessary for the brides to become sacrifices to defeat Regulus in the worst-case scenario.

Subaru: “Well, I didn’t want to make that choice either, and Reinhard wouldn’t have allowed it.”

Even if it were a necessary sacrifice to face such great evil, he could not accept that.

That young man, who was a bundle of justice, could never allow even a few sacrifices. In that situation, the affair with Regulus might not have been resolved so quickly.

Subaru: “Or, I may’ve ended up dying half-way through, in the case I’d been the only one that’d end up getting involved.”

First of all, if Emilia had not been kidnapped, there was the chance that the formations of the teams to defeat the Sin Archbishops would have been very different. Since no one knew what the right answer was, it was useless to think about.

But, hopefully—

Subaru: “After we split up, Reinhard went to the others. That will lessen the damage… That is what I want to believe.”

Emilia: “Yes, that’s true—We have to make sure of that as soon as possible.”

In response to Subaru’s reply, Emilia nodded with a serious look on her face.

And, as he resumed his step towards the City Hall next to her, Subaru gently placed his hand on his own chest. He felt that his heart was beating slightly faster—There lied another concern that Subaru had apart from his preparation for Return by Death.

The sensation of a strange black force callously curling in the immediate vicinity of his heart.

It was a perverse impurity that had slipped into Subaru at the same time the death of Regulus was confirmed. Subaru vaguely knew the identity of that impurity.

—A Witch Factor.

That was the true identity of the impurities that connected Subaru to the Witch Cult.

Just after defeating Petelgeuse Romanée-Conti of Sloth, Subaru had felt the same discomfort inside his body. The identity of the foreign force he had felt was a Witch Factor, and the first person who told him that was the Witch, Echidna.

The Witch Factors had a profound connection to the Sin Archbishops and the Witches of Sin.

And for some reason, it also affected Subaru, as if it were consuming him. If so, this was surely related to the Witch of Envy who induced his Return by Death.

It was not something that could be considered positive.

Subaru: “No matter how many creepy things possess me, I’m me… That should be fine.”

No matter how much the influence of the Witch Factors increased, he would never let it affect him. Even if a Witch Factor consumed Subaru every time he took down a Sin Archbishop.

Plus—

Subaru: “If Beako wakes up, she’ll get mad at me for not having told her.”

No matter what the Witch Factors were, there was no need for Subaru to worry about them alone. He had companions who would work together with him to try to solve the problem if he confessed his concerns to them.

He was sure he would find a way to get over it.

Emilia: “Subaru? Did something happen?”

Worried about Subaru who spoke awkwardly, Emilia turned her glance to him. Subaru said “No”, and shook his head, and after thinking a little,

Subaru: “By the way, while listening to the broadcast before, I think Kiritaka’s doing all right. Liliana surely would be glad if she gets to know that.”

Emilia: “Kiritaka-san disappeared?”

Subaru: “He protected Otto and it was unknown whether he was dead or alive. For some reason it didn’t feel like he was dead, so I wasn’t that worried.”

Emilia: “Then cheer up more, or I’m going to end up feeling sorry for you.”

As if she were casting away the anxiety that hung over her, Emilia pouted at Subaru.

Instead of being anxious about the possibility that someone had been hurt, he should have been glad that someone had been saved.

Perhaps that was also a necessary attitude for his current state of mind.

2

And so, the two of them rushed on trying to avoid triggering each other’s anxieties as much as possible, but the scene that awaited them was not something optimistic.

Subaru: “…This is… terrible.”

Subaru was stunned to see that the City Hall before his eyes had collapsed and turned into a mountain of rubble.

The words that came from his dry lips gave off a candid impression of that scene.

The City Hall was a five-story tall building, something rare to see in the buildings of this world, but its greatness had crumbled without a trace. The marks of destruction extended as far as the foundations of the building, the center of the plot of land where the City Hall had been located had been crushed thoroughly, the large sunken hole looking like an open mouth.

This collapse likely would not have happened unless the foundations of the buildings had received a major blow.

Subaru made this assumption from the remains of the building; Emilia, who witnessed the same thing, gazed around with a restless expression on her face.

Emilia: “The broadcast from before, it should’ve used the magical device in that building, no? Yet, with the building in this state…”

Subaru: “—! Now that you say it, that’s right…”

Faced with Emilia’s concern, Subaru looked around his surroundings in a hurry.

The collapse of the City Hall was not an unimportant matter. It was undoubtedly the result of having been breached by the evil grasp of the Witch Cult. In addition to that, in the City Hall there was not only the magical device, but Otto and the others who did not join the groups to recover the control towers, as well as the victims of Capella's Authority.

Since the City Hall had suffered so much damage, it meant that there had been a battle. If so, what had happened in the City Hall, where only the non-combatants had stayed behind?

Kiritaka's transmission, even the fact of that matter had become suspicious.

But, Subaru's concerns—

???: "Ah, the moment I think there's someone coming, it finally ends up being Subaru and Emilia, in fact."

Subaru: "…Beatrice?"

The girl's familiar voice reached Subaru and Emilia who had frozen in their tracks.

When he looked up, Beatrice was at the top of the rubble looking at the two of them, and she walked down holding the hem of her fluffy dress. She went down to Subaru's side who opened his eyes in surprise, and looked at him from top to bottom to check the condition he was in,

Beatrice: "Hmm, you don't seem to be injured. I'm relieved, I suppose. If you'd been hurt while Betty was absent, I wouldn't have been able to leave you alone even to go to the bathroom, in fact."

Subaru: "I'm not a kindergarten-age kid who needs that much care… Or rather, what I should be saying is, Beako, why are you here?"

Subaru was surprised by Beatrice, who had crossed her short arms and held her head high with an aloof expression of composure on her face. That flippant attitude was exactly the same as always.

Subaru: “Weren’t you supposed to have spent all your Mana and left the frontlines? At least, you shouldn’t have been able to participate in this battle.”

Beatrice: ““Spent” sounds like you’re blaming Betty for doing something wrong, so stop, I suppose! If it weren’t for Betty’s devotion, your leg would be a little thinner now, in fact. Your thanks, your appreciation, and your hugs aren’t going to be enough, I suppose!”

Subaru: “I know, I know.”

Subaru gently stroked the furious Beatrice’s head the way he always did. Beatrice puffed her cheeks in dissatisfaction, but even so, she took a step closer to Subaru, quietly enjoying his caresses.

And, following this interaction between Contractor and Spirit, Emilia gently butted in.

Emilia: “Beatrice.”

Beatrice: “…Thank goodness, Emilia seems to be fine too, in fact. If something had happened to you, Bubby would’ve been distraught, I suppose. Thanks to that, Subaru risked fighting without Betty, in fact. If you’ve learnt anything out of this, don’t let yourself be captured again, I suppose.”

Emilia: “Mhm, thank you. I’m sorry for making you worry.”

Beatrice: “In particular, Betty was only a little bit worried for you, in fact!”

Emilia looked at Beatrice, who had moodily turned her face away, with a smile on her face. Then, Emilia gazed over Beatrice’s entire body, and gently narrowed her widened eyes.

An ornate dress, and carefully manicured curled hair. Both were slightly stained with mud and blood. This was the proof that this Spirit-girl had not recently woken up from her peaceful dreams.

Subaru’s absence, and the collapse of the City Hall.

Beatrice waking up was certainly not unrelated to these unexpected events.

Emilia: "…"

Emilia directed her gaze, which was full of such thoughts, and Subaru tucked his chin in. And, whilst looking down at Beatrice, whom he was still stroking, he said,

Subaru: "Thank you, it seems like you were hard at work during my absence. I'm sorry for everything. I only ever cause you problems."

Beatrice: "I'm pretty used to Subaru causing me problems, so you don't have to worry about that, I suppose. No, do worry a bit about it still, in fact. Worry about it, and give me your thanks, I suppose."

Subaru: "Yeah, yeah… But, even if you were hard at work, it was a bit over the top. Crushing the entire building is a bit too much."

Emilia: "Huh, Beatrice did this?"

Emilia looked at Beatrice in bemusement whilst she pointed at the mountain of rubble.

Emilia: "I wonder how much it'll take to repair a building like this… Subaru, do you know?"

Subaru: "With Beako's pocket money, I know it'll be a big project that'll take a few decades."

Beatrice: "What are you two saying with those serious faces, in fact?! What Betty did is different, I suppose! Betty saw this building only after it became rubble, in fact!"

Subaru: "I know, I know. If you'd struck it, we'd be able to hear it from really far away. Such a cute girl."

Subaru cackled as Beatrice tried to defend herself from the false accusations. At this exchange, Emilia said, "Eh, eh, which one is it?" They were unsure what to say, but that was fine for now.

If they'd encountered Beatrice near the remains of the City Hall, then…

Subaru: “At least, it seems like we won’t have to worry about the Witch Cult trying to get up to no good around here. So, what happened to Otto and the others who were supposed to be in the City Hall?”

Beatrice: “Hmm, explaining that will be complicated, I suppose. But, those who were in the City Hall are…”

???: “We were able to escape as well, so ya don’t need to worry.”

A voice with a Kansai accent, or rather, more accurately, a Kararagi accent, jutted in between Beatrice’s reply.

As they turned around in response to that, they saw a petite figure which was walking around the mountain of rubble. For a moment, they felt something peculiar about that person’s appearance, as the color of their hair that she was adjusting with a hand comb was of a different color than the one they were used to.

Subaru: “Is that you, Anastasia-san?”

Anastasia: “What’s up with the doubt in the way you’re callin’ me… Eh, ahhh, must be this, right? It’s ‘cause my hair color’s different right now.”

Her soft light-purple hair was now dyed dark-green.

With Anastasia in her kimono, their impression changed a bunch. She looked at Subaru and Beatrice, and then, when she looked at Emilia, she gracefully nodded in satisfaction.

Anastasia: “Seems like ya were able to get Emilia-san back without any problems, Natsuki-kun. The Sword Saint told me, so I wasn’t too worried ‘bout that.”

Subaru: “So Reinhard was able to rendezvous with the others without any issues?”

Anastasia: “He came whooshin’ outta the sky. Right now, he’s lookin’ for any stragglers from the Witch Cult… Or rather, I should say that he's taken Ferris-san to visit the evacuation shelters."

Subaru: "Visiting the shelters… That sure is the duty of a Healing Arts User."

Even if they'd repelled the Sin Archbishops, considerable efforts would be needed to repair the damage the city had received. Ferris's role would be quintessential for the quick recovery of the functions of the city. It looked like Reinhard was being used in place of Ferris's own feet to get about.

Emilia: "I'm sorry, I also caused him a lot of trouble… But, what happened to you, Anastasia-san? Like, with the color of your hair, or with this building."

Subaru: "Indeed, indeed. Did you have a makeover, changing your hair to a color more pleasing to the eye? I think it suits you as well, but knowing the original Anastasia-san, it feels strange after all."

Anastasia: "Natsuki-kun, you're pretty skilled at spewin' out nonsense. However, I only dyed it for a lil' strategy. Besides, it didn't pay off… On the contrary, it went bad as far as I could see."

Anastasia sighed as she twirled her hair around her finger, and looked on at the remains of the City Hall. From the words she was saying, it seemed like she had been involved in the collapse of the City Hall.

Subaru: "Ferris is fine, right? What happened, and what happened with the others?"

Anastasia: "The story's simple… After everyone left to defeat the Sin Archbishops, a bad guy attacked, takin' advantage of yer absence. They screwed things up a bit."

Subaru: "It doesn't look like they screwed things up only a bit…"

It was clear that it'd been a ferocious battle, quite in contrast to Anastasia's lackadaisical tone.

The attack on the City Hall—a malignant trick that took advantage of the departure of the combatants, he felt like it was probably Lust or Wrath who had been behind this, however, the one he felt was most likely was…

Subaru: “Was the one who came here Lust?”

Anastasia: “She was as I’d heard; her personality’s the worst. My encounter with her gave me the willies.”

Her opponent should not have been so frivolous tantamount to only giving someone the willies, but Anastasia’s attitude did not show any signs of fear or shock. It took real guts to have encountered a Sin Archbishop.

He wanted to flatter her with an “As expected of you”, but more pressing than that, Subaru had something gnawing at his mind.

Subaru: “I’m sorry. We left for the control towers, and after that there was a surprise attack on the City Hall… I should have taken more care.”

Anastasia: “Don’t worry ‘bout it. We just did as we fancied while Natsuki-kun was missin’. Moreover, it’s embarrassin’ that we didn’t get anythin’ out of it.”

According to Anastasia’s words, it seemed like she had been expecting a surprise attack, that was what Subaru felt. She had probably dyed her hair green as a strategy for that.

When he thought to the relation between dark-green hair and the person Capella was likely interested in, he could vaguely understand the strategy they had devised.

Subaru: “Anastasia-san, you dressed as Crusch-san and dangled them the bait, is that what you mean? If just you and Ferris managed to repel Lust, then that’d leave us in a fix.”

Anastasia: “It would’ve been cool if we did that, but we had someone else there. Priscilla-san’s esteemed Knight.”

Subaru: “…Al?”

On hearing the unexpected name come out from her mouth, Subaru widened his eyes in surprise.

Al had been the one least interested in the battle to recapture the city. And to begin with, he was supposed to have gone with Priscilla and Liliana to defeat Wrath.

If he had indeed stayed to defend the City Hall, the Wrath capture team would be in a state which invited uncertainty and anxiety about their combat force and combination.

Anastasia: “Just so ya know, the team that faced Wrath came back safely.”

Anastasia explained this to Subaru, seeing the doubt etched all over his face. Whilst giving a wry smile, she looked over in the direction of the control tower that Wrath had occupied, and said,

Anastasia: “Priscilla-san came back unharmed. The Songstress Liliana came back along with her prince, to everyone’s surprise.”

Subaru: “Her prince… Do you mean Kiritaka? Those two went to battle, and came back with a guy who we didn’t know whether he was dead or alive; what happened?”

There were too many mysteries, like Priscilla coming back unharmed from the battle with Wrath, and Kiritaka and Liliana reuniting. He would have liked to hear more details about that story, but he had to put the general gist of things at a higher priority than that.

Subaru: “Can I believe in the broadcast from Kiritaka before?”

Anastasia: “…”

Subaru: “The recovery of the control towers was a success. What follows that is the status of everyone who fought. What happened to them?”

The City Hall had collapsed, but they had probably taken the magical device out from it. So, it did not mean that he had to doubt the possibility that the broadcast was a trap. The other problem was that in the end, they had only considered the damage to things from the start.

And, to Subaru's question, Anastasia said,

Anastasia: "You needn't worry. Natsuki-kun, you 'n y'all were the last to come back."

Subaru: "We were the last ones… And what about the others?"

Anastasia: "Don't worry."

Emilia and Beatrice anxiously watched along with Subaru, who was showing slight traces of impatience. In front of those three, Anastasia nodded her head whilst smiling, and said,

Anastasia: "Everyone came back safely. Not a single person was missin'."

And that was her response.

3

Garfiel: "Captain! Ya came back safe!"

The nearest evacuation shelter had become the new rally point, in place of the City Hall that had collapsed.

A blond boy came running and called out with a cheerful voice as he looked at Subaru and the others who had joined him—It was Garfiel.

Subaru: "Oh… Garfiel… Eh."

When he tried to raise his hand, he was surprised by the figure that came running.

Though Garfiel's upper body was naked, his whole body was covered in blood. Nonetheless, his expression was somewhat radiant; it seemed that even though he had had a rather difficult battle, he had fulfilled his duty.

Just by seeing that, Subaru immediately changed his expression from surprise to a smile,

Subaru: “Heya, it’s you who doesn’t seem well. Your face looks terrible.”

Garfiel: “Don’t wanna hear that from ya, Captain… But that’s somethin’ I can’t say. But Captain, ya were the one who showed his guts. Ya rescued Emilia-sama without any problems.”

Subaru: “Of course.”

When Subaru proffered out his fist, Garfiel bumped it with his own. That was enough to honor each other’s good fight.

Subaru: “But, I heard Lust showed up at the City Hall. You, where and with whom were you fighting?”

Garfiel: “‘Tis obvious, with Kurgan, the Eight-Arms… Although, dunno to what extent he can be called by that name.”

Subaru: “—? What do you mean?”

Garfiel: “My amazin’ self was fightin’ only with a dead-body. Surely he wasn’t like that back when he was alive. That’s why I don’t feel like I won.”

It was a secret technique to manipulate the bodies of the dead and use them as warriors.

There was no doubt that this time, this secret technique had been used in the secret maneuvers of the Witch Cult. However, it seemed that the warrior’s ability was in a deteriorated state compared to when they were alive. Perhaps warriors like Garfiel were able to perceive that difference.

Whether that was bothering him, as apart from the victory itself, it somewhat seemed like Garfiel felt as if he had failed to obtain the desired result.

That feeling, it was not something Subaru did not know about.

Emilia: “The enemy wasn’t strong, is that why you’re down?”

Emilia, who had been listening to the conversation, tilted her head, as she did not understand the feeling.

At her words, Garfiel first gave a “Good thing yer safe”, glad that she was back, then he violently scratched his short blond hair.

Garfiel: “To be down ‘cause he wasn’t strong… That ain’t it. Somehow, I can’t explain it. ‘Cause Emilia-sama’s a woman.”

Emilia: “It’s something women don’t understand? So, Subaru understands?”

Subaru: “Just a little, though. But, even for men there’s something like an unknown barrier between the strong and the weak… But, I think the result is that Garfiel’s strong. Aren’t you overthinking this?”

Garfiel: “Am I… overthinkin’ it?”

Emilia had a face that showed her lack of understanding, and Subaru’s response was not entirely positive. At that, Garfiel nodded with a sorrowful look on his face.

Garfiel already had his head full of worries in respect to Strength. There was the question of having challenged Reinhard to a duel, and also that he had received a painful initiation in the way of the Witch Cult afterwards.

Even if he mulled over it, no matter how much he thought, the answer to his problem would not come into view. It was possible that it was something like that. That was why, in regard to that—

Subaru: “Hey, Garfiel. If you think about it…”

???: “Oh! There’s Gaaarf~! Itzuuuuu!”

Garfiel: “Guahhh—!”

In front of Subaru who was trying to give him some advice, Garfiel’s body fell down with a loud thump. He barely noticed the little figure colliding against Garfiel’s waist, but his hand did not come out in time to stop him from letting out a groan of pain and tumbling down.

Subaru gazed at the collapsed Garfiel; the one who sat on his unguarded chest was a feline girl wagging her tail.

The girl pricked her ears up as she put on a cheerful and adorable expression on her face,

???: “Fuhaha! You let your guard down, Gaaarf~! Your real enemy’s in your heart! And within your heart, you already have important people in there! I mean, it’s filled.”

Garfiel: “Yer knockin’ and climbin’ ‘n a person’s chest…”

Mimi: “Hehehe, the lady told Mimi! That slapping a man on the butt can attract love… Or something like that? The lady said that it’s attractive or something! Slapping him on the butt is what the lady said!”

Mimi squealed with laughter, on top of Garfiel.

She was no longer in a state where she was losing blood from a deep wound that could not be healed. Before the face of the girl who had completely recovered, Subaru touched his chest and bent down.

Subaru: “You look lively, Mimi.”

Mimi: “Oh, onii-san, welcome! Welcome! It seems like a lot of complicated things happened while Mimi was sleeping, goodjob! Mimi slept very soundly! But it seems that Gaaarf~ also tried very hard, didn’t he? Goodjob!”

Subaru: “Y-You don’t seem to have changed, that’s the most important thing. Isn’t that right, Garfiel?”

He had heard that Mimi’s wounds had been sustained from protecting Garfiel.

Garfiel had been shook to the core by the wound that refused to heal, and he had carried her back on the verge of death. He wondered whether he was relieved to see Mimi better or not.

But, at Subaru’s call, Garfiel, who was still sitting on his butt, rubbed his nose.

Garfiel: “Haa, it would’ve been problematic if she changed too much. I’ve said it many times, but makin’ a fuss while yer recoverin’…”

Mimi: “Hm, what? Did you say something, Gaaarf~?—Ah!”

Mimi, who brought her face close to Garfiel’s, raised her voice and glanced down at her own chest. Mimi checked the inside of the white robe, and, opening her eyes wide with surprise,

Mimi: “Gaaarf~, this is terrible! The wound’s reopened! Blood’s streaming out!”

Garfiel: “Idiot! That’s why I told ya, again and again! Damnit, if I don’t bandage it again and apply healin’ magic, it won’t heal! Ay, come here!”

Mimi: “Ukyaa! It huuuurts~! It huuuurts~!”

Due to the wound getting worse, Garfiel, who remained composed, took Mimi’s hand and took her to the inner part of the shelter. Faced with this exchange as noisy as a typhoon, even Subaru remained speechless.

Emilia: “Pfffft… But, if Garfiel stays like this, he may not have time to worry.”

But, next to Subaru who remained stunned, Emilia placed her hand on her lips and said that suddenly. Whilst gazing at the back of the pair walking away, she referred back to Garfiel’s prior worries.

“I see”, thought Subaru, in agreement with that opinion.

Subaru: “Despite everything, they make a good pair. Those two, that is.”

Emilia: “Mimi is cute, and it seems she reaaally likes Garfiel… It seems that Garfiel likes Ram, so I don’t think it’s going to be that easy.”

Subaru: “Yeah, for sure… Wait, did Emilia-tan make a comment about love between men and women?!”

Even though the example was easy enough to understand, Subaru was surprised that she could make that kind of conversation. Emilia, who even before Subaru’s confession had been in a state where she did not understand the love between men and women, had been able to comment on the love of others.

Emilia: “Hmph, Subaru, I feel like you just said something reaaally rude.”

Subaru: “Alright, though I’d thought that was an accurate recognition… No way, did Emilia-tan change without me noticing? And she’s dressed in a wedding dress!”

Emilia: “Even though it’s ended up very much in tatters.”

Due to the fact that it was difficult to move around in, she had torn her wedding dress; it seemed like she did not need to worry much about that around here.

Beatrice: “My my, in fact. They’re all a bunch of children, it seems like they only grew up in size, I suppose.”

Subaru: “I don’t want to hear that from you, who most resembles a child here.”

When Beatrice threw out her jape to cap things off, Subaru cleared his throat. Then, if Mimi had recovered, that meant that—He looked around the shelter in search of the answer.

Subaru: “…”

In a corner where there were people rejoicing at their reunion, he found the figure of the elder swordsman standing in silence. Subaru held his breath for a moment at the figure of the Sword Demon who had his eyes closed in silence.

Emilia: “Subaru…”

Subaru: “Sorry. I’ll be right back.”

Replying back to the anxious-looking Emilia, Subaru left both her and Beatrice there, and slowly walked up to where he had pointed his gaze to.

First of all, what should he call out to him? However, that worry ended up being unnecessary.

Wilhelm: “—Is it Subaru-dono?”

Subaru: "…Yeah, it is."

Wilhelm, who opened one of his eyes, caught sight of Subaru, who had approached him, hesitant to speak out first. Seeing those silent blue eyes, Subaru realized that keeping his silence was pointless.

Wilhelm was resting his back against a cold stone wall, blending into the landscape. Subaru stood beside him and saw his figure from the corner of his eyes.

A figure full of wounds, that made him feel the echoes of a violent battle.

There were traces of cuts all over his light garb without his jacket, and the grey hair that he kept tied back had come loose and was flowing down his back. What looked more painful was the bloodstained cloth that was wrapped around the top of his right leg —That was enough to know that it was a deep wound that threatened his life.

But what caught Subaru's attention the most, was not Wilhelm himself.

It was the jacket that was right next to him which had something that seemed important wrapped inside it.

Subaru: "Wilhelm-san, that is…"

Wilhelm: "…"

He had tried to check what was wrapped up in his jacket, without giving it any thought. Receiving Subaru's words, Wilhelm directed his gaze to the bundle.

The wisened swordsman kept his silence for a moment, and then moved his parched lips,

Wilhelm: "…It is as you have guessed, it is my wife."

Subaru: "…"

Wilhelm: "Immediately after she lost her life, her body turned into a pile of ashes. It would have been too wretched to leave her exposed to the wind this way, even though it is shameful that I put her in my jacket… Even if she has been reduced to mere ashes, I want to place her in a grave, and mourn her.”

It meant that—the secret technique that moved the corpses of the dead, the corpses turned into ashes upon their demise.

It was a sacrilege towards one’s soul after death, and the impact it had on the people who had ended up being the target of this secret technique was immeasurable. He could not even imagine what was going on in Wilhelm’s heart if he gave it some thought.

Wilhelm: “I am really sorry. It’s a rather unmanly, meaningless attachment.”

Subaru: “Don’t say such a thing!”

Wilhelm: “…”

Subaru immediately raised his voice on hearing Wilhelm’s self-deprecating tone.

Whilst unaware that he had gotten himself worked up, Subaru looked straight ahead at Wilhelm. Wilhelm opened his eyes a crack, and looked over at Subaru as well.

Subaru: “I don’t think you’re wrong, Wilhelm-san, not now, nor back then against the White Whale. You’re an incredible person whom I respect. What’s so wrong about appreciating the people you care about? There’s nothing to be ashamed of, thinking like that is no good.”

Wilhelm: “Subaru-dono…”

Subaru: “You’re incredible, Wilhelm-san. Your wife… Placing her in her grave, mourning her, those thoughts are no mistakes. I can’t really express myself well, but you’re amazing.”

Those were his true feelings.

Those were, without a doubt, Subaru’s true feelings, his true thoughts that he did not wish to be denied.

Back at the time of the White Whale, and now, during his sorrowful reunion, destiny had been really cruel to Wilhelm.

Yet even so, the Sword Demon had gone against destiny to his utmost; he had traversed it with his own willpower, and tried to reach love. Not all results may end up being rewarded.

His repentance and remorse might remain sempiternally. But, that should be correct.

Wilhelm's love in loving the one he loved, it all should end well.

Subaru: "It's nothing to be ashamed of. Please, duly place her in her grave. And, if the opportunity presents itself, and it's not too much of a nuisance, please let me visit her grave as well."

Wilhelm: "…"

Subaru: "I want to do so, I think that's what a person ought to do."

He was not wording himself well, and furthermore he was getting emotional; Subaru grew vexed at himself. In pushing his own egotistical feelings, he would not be able to help it if Wilhelm burst into laughter. It would be quite natural for him to say that it was none of his business and refuse him.

However, Wilhelm abruptly let his lips slacken before Subaru.

A small gap broke through on his stiffened, tense face. And, he said,

Wilhelm: "…Yes, please do, Subaru-dono. I also want you to dedicate some words to my wife, I think. If it's you…"

Subaru: "—! Y-Yes, I will. I'm honored."

He had gotten his permission; or, more accurately, it was thanks to Wilhelm's generosity.

After hearing Subaru's egotistical wish, Wilhelm let out a soft sigh. Guessing by his face that he did not want to talk anymore, Subaru bowed his head down.

He should leave Wilhelm alone with his wife for a bit.

But before leaving this place, he wanted to make sure of one last thing. And that was,

Subaru: “Wilhelm-san—About your wife, uh, did you manage to?”

Wilhelm: “…”

Had he reached closure with her? Had he ended up reaching a result he had not sought?

Naturally, confronting his dead wife could not have been the result he wished to acquire. Even so, no one other than Wilhelm could have been permitted to face her; after having took in that situation, Wilhelm had sought closure.

Thus, Subaru should not be the only one who wanted that at least.

Wilhelm: “My wife…”

Wilhelm started to speak to Subaru, who had stopped in his tracks to look at him. But, his words stopped there. Wilhelm’s gaze moved slightly away from Subaru. He directed his gaze to his jacket that had his wife’s ashes wrapped up within.

For a split second, a huge swirl of emotions floated through his irises. And, he spoke out,

Wilhelm: “—Yes. I exchanged words with my wife, and certainly, I said goodbye.”

Words, it was a figurative expression, most likely.

Wilhelm’s wife had been the prior Sword Saint. Clashing swords with her was a conversation like no other for the Sword Demon. Their blades of closure themselves should have been their final words of goodbye.

That was why, surely that closure had been the result of Wilhelm’s choice—

Wilhelm: “I love my wife—I should have gotten that across.”

Subaru: “I see.”

Wilhelm’s quiet confession of love.

In contrast to the modest tone in his voice, there was a zeal which scorched the hearts of those who listened to it, and Subaru’s chest grew hotter. Taking a deep breath, Subaru closed his eyes.

Pouring out of him were raging billows of emotions. Keeping each one in check, he opened his eyes.

Wilhelm, who was in front of him, had a lonely smile on his face. However, since he had allowed himself to break into that smile, it felt as if he had been saved, and Subaru too allowed his lips to relax.

Subaru: “Wilhelm-san. Thank you for your hard work.”

Wilhelm: “…”

Subaru: “Perhaps everything will get hectic very soon I think, but until then, please rest. I’ll go around a little more to see what happened.”

Subaru spoke too quickly and was not sure whether the last words were right or not. He scratched his cheek with one of his fingers, and felt embarrassed as he turned his back on Wilhelm. Behind his back,

Wilhelm: “Subaru-dono—”

Subaru: “Yeah?”

As he was called while he tried to leave, Subaru stopped and turned around. Then Wilhelm, who had a slight trace of surprise on his face, immediately said “No”, with a shake of his head.

Wilhelm: “My apologies. It is something trivial… Please do not fret about it.”

Subaru: “Is that so? No, when you say it like that, it makes me feel the opposite… But well, right, yes. I’ll see you later.”

Subaru walked away from there, with a bitter smile adorning his face due to Wilhelm’s atypical reaction.

Seeing what Subaru looked like when he returned, Emilia and Beatrice seemed to express relief on their faces. In that regard, Subaru’s expression had probably changed quite a bit between the time he’d left and the time he’d come back.

Subaru himself was well aware of that.

Since reuniting with the dead was not something to be happy about.

But at least, Wilhelm had ended it with his own hands, and he was satisfied with the result. He felt that that fact was a modest salvation.

4

As he narrowed his eyes, the Sword Demon stared at the back of the dark-haired boy who walked away.

His lips were firmly pursed together so as to hold something back.

It was a breakdown in his camouflage, which until a little while ago had masked his real intentions with firm willpower. A frenzy of emotion which was likely to gnaw through his pursed lips if he were to disregard it, even now.

Surely, what he kept hidden from that boy in his chest until then was—

Wilhelm: “Subaru-dono… You are…”

Only within his mouth, whispering in a hoarse voice, did the Sword Demon say the boy’s name,

Wilhelm: “You could be, my—”

Having said that, the Sword Demon closed his eyes as if his own feeble heart were closed off. The continuation that made no sound was never heard by anyone.

It was also something that would never come out of the mouth of the Sword Demon.

That was the only thing, which the Sword Demon would never allow.

Chapter 75:
Fruits of the Battle For Priestella 2

1

After ending his conversation with Wilhelm, Subaru quietly felt relieved.

Along with Garfiel, the two of them that should have been tasked with Lust—They were supposed to be the combination which should have had the most difficult fight.

In actuality, Lust had abandoned her control tower, and it had been Wilhelm’s wife, Theresia, along with the former hero, Kurgan, who had ended up blocking their path. However, it was already confirmed that there were no casualties in these three spots.

Subaru: “…”

Of course, Garfiel and Wilhelm should have much to reflect on.

In fact, Garfiel had spoken about the reservations he had left, and it was easy to imagine that wounds too difficult to express in words lay within Wilhelm’s heart.

And yet, even so.

Subaru was happy that the two of them had returned safe and sound after finishing up their battles.

If there had been casualties amongst his acquaintances, Subaru had resigned himself that he may have ended up having to use his Return by Death. That was why he had been relieved that the two of them had survived without him needing to use it.

However, the sense of relief he had gotten from the fact that they had not died was also connected to another conviction of his.

Namely that he would not have to once again depend on an unnatural power like his Return by Death.

He had made full use of his Return by Death, and challenged things many times to try and secure a better future. After depending so much on that power, at this point, maybe he could not speak ill of it, however it was for this reason.

It was a conclusion that only Subaru could reach, precisely because it was Subaru who had died many times, and each time, he had overturned the future.

To begin with, something like Return by Death should have been unnecessary.

Surely there was a way to secure the future he wanted, even without his Return by Death. Like right now, a time when everyone had worked with each other for the same objective, as to secure that.

Emilia: “Subaru, was Wilhelm-san okay…?”

Coming out to greet Subaru, who had returned, Emilia asked about the wisened swordsman who had been standing in a corner of the shelter. To her words, Subaru jerked his chin into a nod, without looking back,

Subaru: “Yeah, I think he’s alright. He’s wounded quite a bit, but… it seems like he managed to take care of the wounds within his heart, which were the most alarming.”

Emilia: “I see… Although it’s obvious, he’s a strong individual, isn’t he?”

Subaru: “Indeed. He’s a strong individual for sure. That’s why he’s okay.”

Subaru nodded his head up and down multiple times at Emilia’s prior statement. Emilia opened her eyes wide upon seeing Subaru’s gesticulation, and then burst into a smile.

Seeing Subaru frown at her unexpected reaction, she placed her hand on her mouth, and said,

Emilia: “I’m sorry. Subaru’s behavior around Wilhelm-san’s reaaally different compared to when you're with other people. How can I put it, in truth, I think you act with every fiber of your being."

Subaru: "Who even says "every fiber of your being" these days…"

After a long absence, Emilia's antiquated words from the Showa Era made their reappearance, to which Subaru gave a wry smile. Following that, he scratched his cheek with one of his fingers.

Even if it appeared like he was teasing her, he understood what Emilia was trying to say. And that was plenty enough for Subaru himself to be aware of it.

Subaru: "Wilhelm-san is, how should I say it, special. Because he's an amazing person whom I can sincerely admire, well, that's what I feel anyways."

Emilia: "I know that he's an amazing person too, but that being the case, Reinhard and the others have to know that too, right? And yet, despite all that."

Subaru: "The perspective changes between someone of the same age and someone from a different generation. The disparity you feel with those of the same age has rather large implications on you that end up making you feel miserable. But, the differences you feel with those older than you can be set as a goal for yourself. Someday, when I'm a sullen old man, I want to be as imposing as Wilhelm."

Emilia: "…Hmm, I get you. Hehe. If you say so."

Emilia nodded, her face full of understanding, at the frivolous manner Subaru had adopted to hide his embarrassment.

Subaru felt defeated by that attitude. Speaking seriously about it, not even Subaru knew how he should express the deep emotions he felt in words.

Though, probably, almost certainly, he thought that it was a good thing that he did not need to put them into words.

Beatrice: "Betty believes that growing out his beard wouldn't suit Subaru, in fact."

Subaru: “I didn’t think it was this sort of conversation, but well, whatever, it’s okay too. I’ll grow out a beard when Beako deems it appropriate.”

Beatrice: “…Well then, if such a time comes, I suppose. The elaborate co-existence between furriness and adorable-ness is an area that cannot be sustained without Bubby’s elegance, in fact. Devote yourself to it, I suppose.”

Emilia: “Yeah, yeah, I say.”

Emilia and Beatrice exchanged their feelings in a manner that was typical for them, but at the same time—Subaru pointed his eyes over towards a corner of the shelter which had suddenly grown noisy.

The evacuees who were gathered in a corner of the shelter, all the individuals there had been released from their fear and unease that had been born from the city being occupied. However, they had inexplicably cheerful looks on their face. And that was because—

Liliana: “Well then, well then! Allow me to sing again! Please listen to my new song—The Burning Song of the Flaming City!”

Subaru: “That racket is Liliana, huh?”

There was a short, young girl with brown skin in the middle of that kerfuffle. He could see the lively figure of the bard strumming her Lyulyre, shaking her blonde hair.

Her appearance had caused an unmistakable impact, it had an originality to it that shot out so askew that he did not think even Lust could imitate; it was Liliana without a doubt.

Beatrice: “She’s a truly strident girl, in fact.”

Emilia: “But, Liliana was also one of the people who fought against a Sin Archbishop, right? Erm… I can’t imagine at all how she managed to fight…”

Taking notice of the same thing as Subaru, Emilia and Beatrice relaxed their shoulders too.

If she was acting so lively, then no doubt Liliana had made it back with no injuries as well. Her, and the others' battlefield—Their battle against Wrath was a place which he could not imagine, neither the strategy nor the fighting strength needed, or the most proper result.

Subaru had already considered the possibility that Liliana's song would have been useful for confining Sirius's Authority, however, it was unknown how they'd been able to put it into practice. He was determined to hear what the hell had actually happened in their place of battle.

Subaru: "It won't be easy to get close to Liliana right now. Let's postpone it for later."

Emilia: "Yeah… Besides, now's definitely the time where Liliana's songs are most necessary. Us taking that away wouldn't be good. Let's postpone talking to her until much later."

Beatrice: "I agree, I suppose. Betty would like to pass on talking with that irritating girl, in fact."

Subaru and the others made this conclusion whilst they watched Liliana strumming out a tune, singing at the top of her lungs with utmost passion. The song that slipped into his ears was soothing, seemingly permeating his wounded heart.

In reality, if they only took into account her singing voice, she was worthy of the title of Songstress. He concurred with Emilia's opinion that, right now, the city needed her.

???: "…"

Then, he noticed Kiritaka's figure right next to Liliana as she delivered her performance.

His expensive suit was covered in mud and blood everywhere, and there were also traces of rips left on it. It was the outcome of having fled through scenes of carnage, and according to Otto's story, it had been unknown whether he was dead or alive.

Subaru: "No one's ought to have had a comfortable scene of battle…”

Taking note of Subaru’s gaze, Kiritaka bowed in his direction. Subaru waved at him, and started to walk further into the shelter once again, in search for the next of his companions.

Then, Beatrice, who was walking right next to him as he broke into a walk, said,

Beatrice: “It’s not too important, but it was that man who woke me up when I was sleeping, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Kiritaka?”

Beatrice: “That man even went as far as crushing some of his precious Great Magic Stones, in fact. Betty doesn’t care if it was down to his sense of responsibility, or if it was for someone, I suppose. But, that’s what happened, in fact.”

Subaru: “…I see, I see. That’s great, Beako. You did well to say it.”

Beatrice: “Hmph, I suppose.”

Having heard this story that help had come from this unexpected source, Subaru stroked Beatrice’s head. Beatrice puffed out her cheeks, seemingly in dissatisfaction, but it went without saying that this was just a facade.

According to the story he’d briefly heard from Anastasia, Beatrice’s actions after she had woken up had also been an indispensable contribution in regard to the current results. If Kiritaka had truly been the one to play a role in that, then it could be said that he had fulfilled his duty corresponding to his position as a city executive.

Emilia: “Subaru. It seems like those who got injured are in the furthest part of the shelter.”

As she gazed at that part of the shelter, Emilia spoke towards Subaru as he chatted away with Beatrice. Upon looking towards the dingily lit area she was pointing, there, in the middle of the bustle, was an area that was being used as a field hospital.

There were mats and blankets spread out directly on the ground, and several injured people were laying there. This was supposed to be the first evacuation center which Ferris had visited, so even though the people lying down had yet to completely recover, their lives probably were in no danger.

Subaru: “Does that mean that treating so many people to their full is difficult, even for someone like Ferris?”

Beatrice: “It doesn’t matter how skilled you are at healing magic, there’s a limit to the amount of Mana a person can hold, in fact. If you go around healing everyone you see, then you’d run out of it pretty much at once, I suppose. It was a wise decision, in fact.”

Beatrice, who had replied, looked faintly vexed as they gazed at the rows of the injured. Even though she hid it on the surface, she was a tender-hearted Spirit whose feelings ran deep. Beatrice’s healing magic was quite effective, even if it didn’t even get close to Ferris’s. But, even if you were to say she had any Mana, the quantity which Subaru supplied would never get anywhere near that.

It was inevitable that she was vexed, and lamenting her lack of strength.

Emilia: “In truth, I would also like to go around helping everyone with my healing magic, but…”

Subaru: “You have another role, Emilia-tan. That’s why you need to put that aside for now.”

Emilia: “Yeah, I know.”

If they let themselves be carried away by the emotions of the moment, they wouldn’t be able to reach their goal, and would end up losing everything. Subaru called out to Emilia so she’d restrain herself, and as they walked in between people who were groaning in pain from their wounds, they searched for their companion amongst them. And soon after, they were able to find the guy they were searching for.

???: “Natsuki-san, over here!”

Subaru: “Heya, Otto!”

In the last row of the injured, there was a person who waved his hand. Noticing the young man’s familiar figure, Subaru and the others approached him with a sense of relief.

Lying on a ready-made bed, a faint smile on his pale face, was none other than the proud Warrior-Grade Internal Affairs Minister of the Emilia Camp, Otto Suwen.

Otto: “Though now, it feels I was given an evaluation that I really cannot let slide by.”

Subaru: “That’s your imagination, Warrior-Grade Internal Affairs Minister. It’s the same ol’ story all over again, wandering around the city seeking blood, in search for foes. You love doin’ that, don’t’cha.”

Otto: “And yet again starting with the strange rumors, will you stop with these completely false claims?!”

Instead of a greeting of reunion, Subaru exchanged jokes with Otto, who was lying down. Otto shouted and dropped his shoulders in resignation, and Subaru crouched beside him to check his condition.

He did not seem to have lethal injuries, but both of his legs looked painful. They must have been sealed up with the application of healing magic and then bandaged, but despite that, the thigh area had red dampness soaking through.

Emilia: “Otto-kun, how’re your wounds?”

Otto: “It seems that walking will be a little bit difficult until I have recovered, but apart from that, there is no visible trauma… When it comes to these situations, Emilia-sama’s should have been more difficult, so it is rather pathetic of me that I have been severely injured.”

Emilia: “That’s not true. It’s proof that you fought with all your strength, isn’t it? Otto-kun’s job isn’t to fight, so it’s good that nothing terrible happened to you.”

Otto: “So far, Emilia-sama is the only one who has decent common sense regarding the work of an Internal Affairs Minister.”

Emilia: “Eh?”

Before Otto who murmured deeply, Emilia tilted her head with a confused look.

Putting that aside, Subaru asked Otto for an explanation of the situation in which he got injured. Initially, Otto was supposed to stay at the City Hall, and await the reports from various places at their headquarters.

Subaru: “You didn’t get this injury because you got caught in the collapse of the City Hall, right? According to what Anastasia-san said, those who stayed at the City Hall were Anastasia-san, Ferris, and Al.”

Otto: “I do not know exactly what the three who remained have done. When I left the City Hall and went through the waterways of the city… I bumped into Gluttony. This is why I have ended up like this.”

Subaru: “Gluttony… That bastard. Damn, there’s also Lust, how much more do they intend to mock us…”

Subaru’s heart started boiling once again when he heard the name of his despised enemy.

The wickedness of the Witch Cult altogether had derided and undermined every preparation and every assumption they had put into place. Their behavior in ignoring the control towers was a mockery towards those who had gotten onto the stage.

Otto: “Fortunately, thanks to Felt-sama, and the people of the Scales of the White Dragon, we managed to oppose them somehow. However, without the help of Beatrice-san, I do not know what the outcome might have been.”

Beatrice: “Despite us outnumbering them, I couldn’t bear to see it, in fact!”

Emilia: “Yes, yes. I’m reaaally thankful.”

Emilia gently stroked Beatrice, who had puffed out her small chest.

That exchange was pleasant, but what interested Subaru were Otto’s actions. Leaving aside the result of the meeting with Gluttony, why had he left the City Hall in the first place?

Even if he had been out of the formation to intercept Lust, he should have stayed in the shelter and nothing more. It should not have been necessary for him to leave the shelter and traverse the city.

Otto: “There was a request from the Witch Cult… Priority was given to a certain book’s safety.”

Guessing Subaru’s questions, Otto spoke quietly.

He spoke about the book requested by the Witch Cult rather hazily, probably as a consideration for the fact that Emilia was listening in behind Subaru. Subaru nodded at his concerns,

Subaru: “The restoration specialist, what’s-his-name’s place?”

Otto: “It’s Mister Darts. No one should know that it was commissioned to be restored by him… But, to make absolutely sure, I tried to collect it. In the end, I encountered Gluttony before I met up with Mister Darts, and this is the result.”

He understood the reason why Otto had left the City Hall and walked about the city, in spite of the threat of the Witch Cult. Again, it looked like he had tried to fill a gap Subaru had not been attentive about.

The attack on the City Hall, and the recovery of the Book of Wisdom, were not things that he had even thought about.

Subaru: “At least consult with me first. We’re friends, right?”

Otto: “Emilia-sama was kidnapped, and you also carried the fate of the city on your back like a hero, did you want me to put yet another annoying burden on top of that? Sorry. But I did not intend to pressure my friend with these stupidities.”

Subaru: “Keh.”

Though he had intended to joke around, he had unexpectedly ended up reciprocating with happy words, making Subaru grunt. Seeing their exchange, Emilia and Beatrice exchanged glances and gave a deep sigh.

Beatrice: “These guys aren’t honest, I suppose.”

Emilia: “I think it’s normal for them. But, then, that book…? It’d be better if we collected it. Erm, where…”

Subaru: “Ah, I’ll take care of that. Or I’ll get Garfiel to do it. Emilia-tan doesn’t have to worry herself too much about that book.”

Emilia: “Yeah?”

He did not wish to let Emilia get involved much with the Book of Wisdom.

It had backwards compatibility with the Gospels, and was also a sort of relic that a Witch had left behind. Keeping Emilia away from it as much as possible was one of Subaru’s silent resolutions.

Subaru: “But, those who met Gluttony were Felt and the Scales of the White Dragon, right? Leaving aside the mercenaries in white, shouldn’t Felt have been hiding somewhere?”

Emilia: “But, I can’t really imagine that girl staying quietly in one place…”

Subaru: “Agreed.”

Felt and the others had arrested Reinhard’s father—Heinkel, and he had heard that they were standing guard over him. Therefore, they should not have participated in the recapture of the control towers, although there was probably no one to communicate that decision to.

Subaru: “So, what about Felt?”

Otto: “She was exhausted, but she did not really sustain any injuries like these. She went rushing out of the shelter just now, to pick up the subordinates she had brought along.”

Subaru: “Tonchinkan, right? I heard about that, it seems like those guys are doing surprisingly well.”

He had both a good and a bad impression of the trio, but it was best safe rather than sorry. They had an acquaintanceship, and he had been killed once by them, but instead of taking revenge someday, he had tried to leave it in the past.

In any case, it was a good result that he was able to confirm the safety of that camp. After that, they would take care of the task related to the Book of Wisdom, so the next issue was—

Otto: “Natsuki-san—Be careful in the adjacent shelter.”

Subaru: “In the adjacent shelter…?”

With a low voice, Otto spoke to Subaru, the latter immersed in his thoughts. To the turbulent emotions in his speech, Subaru’s voice also naturally lowered in response.

Otto gave a small nod on hearing Subaru’s reaction. And,

Otto: “One of the Sin Archbishops is being held there.”

2

???: “What is it, commoner? How dare you show your wretched face in our presence. That impudence is worthy of admiration beyond awe.”

He had left the shelter that had been made into a field hospital, and headed to the next shelter following Otto’s words. Compared to the shelter from before, the scale of that shelter was quite small. If the previous shelter was like the parking lot of a shopping center, this one was like a bicycle parking lot at best.

Immediately after he had gotten the vague impression that despite it being likewise a shelter, it probably had a different purpose, the woman in red who had set herself up at the entrance of the building called out to him.

The woman's name was Priscilla Barielle.

Among the candidates of the Royal Selection which had gathered in the city, she was someone who completely lacked a cooperative personality.

Even so, even someone like that had undoubtedly been a reliable ally in this situation. After all, it had been Priscilla in charge of the unknown monster, Sirius of Wrath. The ability to destroy that threat ever-so-splendidly and make it back, that was a result that had to be praised sincerely.

Subaru: "That you don't like my face is your personal opinion, so that's okay. For now, good work to the both of us. I'm relieved that you came back safe. I'm not flattering you."

Priscilla: "My personal opinion is the aesthetic sense which must be revered most in the world. It is not even worth evaluating what words you might utter… Well, it is. However, there are no words you can say in defense for your blindness in saying "safe" upon seeing me."

Subaru: "Ah? Are you injured or something?"

Priscilla was sitting on a chair at the entrance of the shelter, fanning herself. Looking at her upper and lower extremities, he could not find any injures or anything like that.

No, it was not about whether she had injuries or not. Priscilla's white skin did not have even a single scratch on it, even the dress she wore did not possess a speck of dust or dirt. If there were any differences before and after the battle, those would be the ornament around her neck, and the fact that her hair had come loose.

Emilia: "Your necklace and hair clip, have you lost them somewhere?"

Priscilla: "Hm. So even a commoner with such an undiscerning eye shall take notice of it, if it's a woman? Even so, I do not enjoy that boorish manner, calling it a necklace. It seems to bring resentment.”

Emilia: “You were actually talking about your accessories when saying you weren’t safe…”

To Emilia’s naive and innocent words, Priscilla snorted in response.

Certainly she had now lost her luxurious gem-encrusted necklace, as well as the hair clip which kept her orange hair in place. The aroma of her charm increased, having let loose the hair that was normally held in place, what a sinful woman she was.

To being with, Priscilla’s radiance was rather like that of a poisonous flower. If one approached, they would end up getting stung.

Subaru: “So, I’ll pass on getting stung. Why are you bothering to stay at this shelter? I didn’t think you had such an admirable personality as to volunteer to keep guard.”

Priscilla: “Foolish japes. I should not be forced to engage in the sort of tasks performed by commoners. It is not my actual intent to be in a place like this, but I cannot allow others to gaze upon my sense of beauty now. So I am avoiding the public’s gaze as a compromise. Besides, Al insisted.”

Subaru: “I think he’d try to quickly deny that if he were here.”

Whilst he imagined the exaggerated motions of denial from the iron helmet, Subaru directed his gaze towards the shelter’s entrance. He did not catch any glimpse of said iron helmet, but he had heard that he was in this shelter. In other words, he was not outside, but rather inside the building—next to the Sin Archbishop.

Subaru: “Is Al keeping guard inside?”

Priscilla: “‘Tis so. We don’t know what an evil thing like that would do, were we to leave it alone. Hence why Al is keeping guard over them. When it comes to him, he ought to do a good job.”

Subaru: “…You didn’t think he’d try to kill them. That’s unexpected.”

Priscilla: “He is permitted to do so if he so wishes. I would not stop him.”

Had she felt bored answering him? Priscilla yawned whilst covering her mouth with her fan. That seemed to be her way of expressing indifference at Subaru’s question.

She had no intention of stopping him from entering the building. Subaru gazed at the entrance of the shelter, and placed his hand on his chest, where his heartbeat had gotten slightly faster.

Emilia: “Subaru, if you’re too scared to go in, you don’t need to force yourself to…”

Beatrice: “Indeed, in fact. I don’t think we’ll get anything out of it, I suppose.”

Emilia and Beatrice both gently expressed their opinions to Subaru, who had stopped in his tracks. He felt like he desired to let himself be coddled by their concerns. However, as soon as that thought popped into his head, he noticed Priscilla’s cruel gaze looking over him from the corner of his eye.

It was a gaze that regarded all of Subaru’s doubts and hesitation as a boring farce.

Whether he went forward or backward, Priscilla’s evaluation of Subaru likely would not be altered. For Subaru, who had still been given a completely unsparing, lowest evaluation, that was fine. He did not care about it, but he regretted that the two accompanying him had also been evaluated that way.

Subaru: “I’m going. In any case, it isn’t a problem that I have to escape from.”

Emilia & Beatrice: “…”

Subaru made up his mind, and the two of them did not present their opinions for or against it. They just stood by his side, so as to respect his will.

Then, with the two of them accompanying him, Subaru stepped into the dark shelter. Priscilla was not even looking at their backs anymore. It was rather like her, he would say.

With the parched pitter-patter sound of their footsteps, they moved forward into the stone building. Soon, they could see the end of the passageway, ahead of the path which turned to the left,

???: "—Is that you, bro? I heard the Princess's voice, so I thought she was talking with someone."

Crouched down in the passageway, carrying his dao on his shoulder, the iron helmet—Al awaited them. Upon seeing Subaru and the others heading towards him, he turned his attention to Emilia.

Al: "Oh, it seems like the miss is alright, too. Good work, bro."

Subaru: "It's because Emilia-tan's well-being was my minimum requirement for victory. Moreover, regarding you, I've heard you ran into many problems. Priscilla's irrationalities in particular were crazy."

Al: "Ah, you're being completely serious. Still, I too was wondering what was going on with her this time. Well, no, I'm almost always wondering what's going on, so I've got no persuasive power."

Emilia: "But, it doesn't seem like Al dislikes that…?"

Al: "…"

Al, who had grumbled out something like a complaint about his mistress Priscilla, was hit right on the nose by Emilia's innocent words. Subaru could not see that which was concealed behind the helmet, but he felt like Al had shaped his lips into the form of a arc on the other side.

In reality, he was a man that was always dragged around everywhere by Priscilla, and despite that, he still wished to be her servant. It was to be supposed that they possessed a relationship others would not understand.

For a little while, Al twisted his neck in an environment which felt like it had devoured him, he clapped his shoulder with the ridge of his dao and abruptly directed his gaze towards the back of the passageway,

Al: “It’s a little bit late considering you’ve come this far, but… Did you come to speak with the Sin Archbishop?”

Beatrice: “Do you think there would be another purpose, I suppose? Do you think we’d bother coming to chat with the guard, there’s no way we’d waste our time, in fact.”

Al: “This little girl sure is scathing, huh? Don’t get yourself so worked up, uh… Beako, was it?”

Beatrice: “…”

Before Beatrice’s cold, sharp gaze, Al deliberately shook his head. Keeping Beatrice in check, who seemed like she was about to grab him regardless of their difference in height, Subaru glared at Al who had started with the unnecessary provocations.

Subaru: “I more or less get that you’re upset, but please, don’t provoke her. Beako, you too, don’t fall for them. Deal with it with the dignity of an adult.”

Beatrice: “Betty will only allow Subaru to refer to her that way, I suppose. The next time you call me that, extremely terrible retribution awaits you, in fact.”

Al: “Yeah, yeah, I understand. You couldn’t be any colder.”

As he spoke, Al moved closer to the end of the corridor, making way for them. A door came into view ahead of them upon them moving further into the passageway. Most likely, the Sin Archbishop had been locked up there.

Suddenly, the back of Subaru’s neck started to tingle, complaining out of a tense feeling.

Al: “The Sin Archbishop is within. They’re restrained so that they can’t get up to no good, so for now, I don’t think it’ll end up becoming a massacre—Also, I’ll give you just one piece of advice.”

Subaru: “Advice?”

Al: “Bro, the miss and that Spirit too. It’d be better if you went back home without talking to them. Nothing good will come from getting involved. Leave this be, and go home.”

Subaru: “…There’s just no way we can do that.”

Dropping the tone of his voice, his opinion was an earnest one, his tone serious as he spoke. Denying those words with a shake of his head, Subaru replied that he could not do so, and rejected the suggestion.

And, to Subaru’s reply, mingled with a sigh, Al spoke “I guessed as much”.

Al: “No matter what I say, I don’t think I ever get much credibility. This time, my behavior here was in the wrong, I ain’t got any excuse for it.”

Subaru: “That’s really not the reason why. Well, it’s true that you weren’t cooperative, but that doesn’t mean I’m saying I won’t listen to you. Don’t get the wrong idea.”

Taking into account Al’s terrible words of self-castigation, Subaru pointed at the door at the end of the passageway. The task he had at hand with the person within, was one that was Subaru’s problem alone.

Perhaps his intentions had been transmitted, as Al sat down with a plunk on that spot. And, whilst he pointed to the door at the end with merely his head, voicing,

Al: “I hope you don’t lose sight of yourself whilst you speak.”

Subaru: “OK, don’t hesitate to help me if something happens.”

Al: “If that comes to pass, I’ll send in the Princess, so no matter what happens, she’ll send them straight up to heaven.”

Exchanging a final conversation, Subaru and the others said goodbye to Al and headed towards the door. There was something drifting about, something that made them feel a strange sense of oppression in regards to the door leading to the closed room.

With the determination after deciding it was no use getting cold feet after having arrived here, Subaru grabbed the doorknob and forcibly pushed the door open.

—It was a narrow room; the air within smelled of dust.

Its light source was small and dim; even for a shelter, it only had the barebones. It was a narrow room that could fit at most five or six people in it, if you jam-packed it; the lack of air could be felt inside it. And, in the middle of this room,

???: "—Aha. So you came, my dear. My apologies for the inconvenience? Thank you."

On top of an old chair, with her whole body completely bound by chains, was the monster—Sirius was awaiting them.

Chapter 76:
Fruits of the Battle For Priestella 3

1

The Sin Archbishop of Wrath. A bandaged monster who claimed to be the wife of the madman, Sloth.

Sirius Romanée-Conti had her entire body tied up with the chains that had been her own weapon, and she was locked up in a room of the shelter, unable to move about.

Sirius: "I was bored because no one came, nor would they come close. But, they went to call you, my dear. Thank you, my apologies? Thanks to everyone, it seems like we can have a happy reunion… Even though it appears like there are some nuisances as well."

Upon seeing Subaru enter the room, Sirius's voice called out in greeting. However, the final words of that statement were filled with an intense anger towards Emilia and Beatrice.

Subaru: "…"

As always, it seemed like Sirius was mistaking Subaru for a body possessed by Petelgeuse, or something like that. Of course, that was just what she wanted to believe.

Whilst overwhelmed by the monster's powerful gaze that radiated with madness, in which she had clearly lost her marbles, Subaru shrugged his shoulders so to mask that, and said,

Subaru: "You're quite composed for someone who's been captured. I don't know if Priscilla thought to try and capture you on some whim of hers, but we definitely won't be releasing you safely."

Sirius: "Even if you say that, they cannot get rid of me so easily either, right? Thank you. I know you care about my well-being. But, my apologies? You took the trouble to worry, but that makes no sense to me. Because that is correct, is it not?”

With this peculiar thought, Sirius interpreted Subaru’s threat as a positive. The monster kept its quiet posture on the chair, and only let its slightly cracked voice quiver,

Sirius: “So long as there is Love with which to think of others and want others in everyone’s hearts, no one can deny me. Even for that prideful girl, the same applies.”

Subaru: “…Your Authority should not have worked with Priscilla and Liliana. It’s not like there’s no one capable of hurting you.”

Sirius: “But that someone is not you. Whatever does not come from you yourself, no matter what it is, ultimately makes no sense to me. Thank you, my apologies?”

Subaru: “—Tch.”

He gritted his teeth at Sirius, who had relaxed her bandaged lips into a smile. It seemed like a conversation had been established, but in reality, there was no mutual understanding between them.

The resolute values within Sirius did not accept even a modicum of external stimuli. The more it struck him, the more the stricken Subaru got hurt.

Beatrice: “Subaru, it’s pointless, in fact. It’s meaningless to expect human emotion like introspection or empathy from such people, I suppose. These guys are nothing but malevolent, in fact.”

Sirius: “…Spirit in the form of a girl, do not get closer to my precious Petelgeuse.”

When Beatrice pulled Subaru’s sleeve as he clenched his teeth, Sirius bluntly began to take a sullen attitude. Beatrice snorted her small nose to the words of that monster, and tugged Subaru’s arm even closer to her.

Beatrice: “That’s too bad for you, I suppose. Betty belongs to Subaru, I was needed here, and here I am, I suppose. Don’t you call Subaru by that disgusting name, in fact. You don’t even know the true meaning of holding that name.”

Sirius: “Do not get carried away, little brat. That person’s side is the place which I snuggle up to in heart and flesh. Do not dare to point your mistaken, arbitrary devotion to that person. I will set your backside on fire, burn the inside of your belly to cinders, and turn you into fertilizer for Od Lagna.”

Emilia: “Both of you, don’t get worked up and start fighting. It’ll make me angry too.”

After the creation of a stormy atmosphere by Sirius and Beatrice, Emilia intervened, gaze sharp. Subaru was in a situation where he was surrounded by three women, being pulled by his arm, but he did not have the liberty to joke about it right now.

Such was the strong feeling of oppression he felt in his soul by being next to Sirius. He was not sure if it was caused by the Authority that monster possessed.

Subaru: “Emilia, Beatrice, step back. Perhaps she’ll only talk with me. Although, regardless if there’s someone here or not… I have doubts as to whether that’ll happen.”

Emilia: “But…”

Subaru: “Please—An unexpected chance to speak with the Witch Cult has come around.”

If it were not for this situation, he would not have had the opportunity to sit down and talk with the Witch Cult.

Emilia let out a sigh at Subaru’s request, and both she and Beatrice exchanged glances with each other; they took a step back so as not to interfere with his conversation with Sirius.

Then, Subaru, who had been entrusted with this situation, turned to face the bound monster once again.

Subaru: “As you wish, I will speak with you. So, you’ve been making your chains creak since a while ago, stop moving. If you slip free from your bindings, we’ll be forced to beat you down.”

Sirius: “You too have your standpoint. I understand that. That is fine. These chains will not come loose or break so easily. Thank you.”

The captive Sirius was delighted with the attitude of Subaru, who was attempting to converse with her.

It was not that Emilia and Beatrice’s figures were out of sight, but it seemed like she had completely expelled them from her awareness.

Sirius: “So, what should we talk about? Because of your relationship with me, there is hardly anything to say between us… We can just exchange Love, do you not believe likewise? Just kidding, my apologies?”

Subaru: “Your purpose… Yes, your purpose. The purpose behind why all of you Sin Archbishops attacked this city at the same time. You don’t need crap like the book or the Artificial Spirits. At least, we know quite well that all of your purposes weren’t really to steal them.”

Sirius: “It is a misunderstanding that we really did not intend to create. Though, it is certainly true that I personally did not wish them here. I do not know about the others, but I was just following the Gospel’s writ.”

Subaru: “The Gospel… That again? It was the same with Petelgeuse as well. Why do all of you follow that strange book? Petelgeuse followed it as well.”

And as a result, he lost his life.

The Gospel’s writ showed the path of the future that an owner must follow—Even knowing such circumstances, it was not omnipotent, that much was clear if he thought about the final moments of that lunatic.

Subaru knew that the path of the future which could be seen was not absolute. Yet even so,

Subaru: “Why does the Witch Cult follow exactly what the book says? Is it because that book will help with the resurrection of the Witch… Of your beloved Witch of Envy?”

Sirius: “—Please do not misunderstand, darling.”

Subaru: “Misunderstand?”

Sirius’s emotions of joy suddenly disappeared from her voice on hearing Subaru’s accusatory voice.

Whilst the monster looked into Subaru’s eyes with her glittering eyes, on her face which was wrapped in bandages, she twisted her lips so as to bare her yellowed teeth.

And then, she spoke.

Sirius: “You are the only one I love. The only one. I do not care about the Witch. Everything, they are all just necessary steps to get to you.”

Subaru: “…”

Sirius: “The other Sin Archbishops are similar. All of them have worthless, insignificant, repulsive desires, and merely cling to their Authorities. For me, my only reason is Love, and for my beloved dear, it is different. My apologies? It is different in every way.”

—The Witch Cult’s purpose was the revival of the Witch of Envy.

Subaru had believed without any doubt that it was so, considering Petelgeuse Romanée-Conti’s behavior and utterances, and in addition, the creed and acts of barbarism he had heard about the Witch Cult up until now.

However, that principle—the very foundation for the existence of the group known as the Witch Cult had been shaken here.

Of course, Subaru had also met Regulus Corneas, and they had exchanged words too.

As soon as he thought on whether that conceited and egocentric man, who looked down on everything besides himself, would have idolized the Witch, the sense of incongruity rapidly became stronger.

Now that he mentioned it, it was obvious. The more he thought about, the more he could come to a better conclusion. But, if it was like this, then what purpose did the Witch Cult have in existing?

Subaru: “Then, why the hell are you all in the Witch Cult…”

Sirius: “Because you are.”

Subaru: “…”

Sirius: “That is my sole reason. I am here to exchange my Love with you. I do not know about the others. If we become one, I think you would understand.”

Becoming one, in brief, probably meant melding their hearts with each other with the power of her Authority.

But that was not understanding, it was forced conformity. It was not possible to call forcing a heart against its will by binding it to the same emotions a way of understanding each other, let alone becoming one.

Subaru: “What are the purposes of the other Sin Archbishops? What is the ultimate goal of the Witch Cult?”

Sirius: “Well, who knows? My apologies. Regrettably, it’s something that doesn’t interest me.”

Subaru: “In general, where does the Witch Cult meet? Is there a leader?”

Sirius: “…No. Especially such established routine. You know it too.”

Whilst still putting on a crazed smile underneath her bandages, Sirius avoided Subaru’s questions. No, she probably did not even intend to dodge it.

The monster would sincerely answer in a monster-like way to her husband, “Petelgeuse’s” questions. Due to her behavior so far, there was no reason to doubt that Sirius was aberrantly devoted to Petelgeuse, on top of her dependance.

In other words, just like the monster had stated, she really did not know anything.

Sirius: “—At any rate, in the end, it seems it is like that?”

Subaru: “—?”

Sirius grumbled that out whilst looking at the pensive Subaru from below.

Subaru reacted a little slowly to the frigidness of those words. The monster took advantage of the momentary gap born from it.

The small chair creaked as it tilted, and Sirius’s face drew close to Subaru’s visage. From up close, her bloodshot eyes stared at Subaru, who held his breath reflexively.

Sirius tilted her chair, still bound up to her ankles, and balanced herself up using only her toes which hung barely free. Her body fell forward with an injection of momentum so to lean against Subaru.

Subaru: “…Oh.”

Sirius: "I had thought something was strange ever since the time we reunited back at the clocktower, but I am sure of it now. The passion of that day is nowhere to be found in your eyes—My dear, are you being swallowed?"

Subaru: "…"

Sirius: "You are being eaten up by a soul, by a body which was supposed to be a temporary abode, and you have ended up unable to move about… Really, you are such a useless person without me."

Sirius's long tongue suspiciously licked Subaru's cheek as she breathed out a fevered sigh. Feeling the rough tip of her tongue on his skin, every single hair on Subaru's body stood on end.

A growing sense of discomfort erupted within his chest, and the back of his eyes became dyed in deep red. It was crazy to think that this phenomenon had simply been caused from her vile action.

It was crazy to think, but he did not feel like he could consider anything else. And then—

Emilia: "ICE BRAND ARTS!"

Sirius: "Guh—Pffff."

The blow of an ice hammer came swooping diagonally and struck Sirius's body, who had been clinging to Subaru, and launched her to the back wall along with her chair.

The sound of an impact was raised, and Sirius, who had received this icy blow while defenseless to stop it, fell down. Dust blew up across the narrow room, and bits from the ceiling came pattering down.

Subaru: "Oh, oh…?"

Standing next to Subaru, who had ended up falling to his knees, Emilia dematerialized the ice hammer she had created. Subaru, slow to notice that it had been Emilia to let loose that blow without any forewarning, let out a long sigh.

He really could not comprehend what had happened at this moment.

Beatrice: “Subaru’s such a big idiot, I suppose.”

Subaru: “—Tch. Beako?”

Amidst the impact and the parched sound, Subaru blinked, noticing that his cheek had been slapped. The one who had struck his cheek was Beatrice, who had nestled up close to him. She looked at Emilia out of the corner of her eyes, and said,

Beatrice: “If Emilia hadn’t interrupted that now, Betty would have done the same, in fact. You were too careless around someone like that, I suppose. In the worst case, she could have ripped your throat apart with her teeth, in fact.”

Subaru: “…”

Subaru became aware of his own carelessness thanks to Beatrice’s words. It was no exaggeration or something he could laugh at. In reality, Sirius had licked Subaru’s cheek with her tongue.

Putting to one side the repulsiveness of that action, if that tongue had been a fang, and if instead of his cheek, it had been his neck, Subaru would not have been able to stop it.

Emilia: “Don’t try anything strange. I’m a little scatterbrained, so I can’t hold myself back very well. The next one will surely be a reaaally painful blow.”

Emilia declared that she did not intend to go easy, whilst keeping her guard up against the collapsed Sirius.

Sirius was completely bound, such that she was incapable of moving about—The excessive precautions they had ended up taking against this opponent, kept as a prisoner in this state, were proof of the monster’s fiendish being.

It seemed like he had forgotten about it, putting the threat of its Authority at a higher standing, however, this Sin Archbishop of Wrath stood out from the rest, even in looking at its combat strength alone. At a first glance, one would think that the strongest in the Witch Cult would be Regulus the Invincible, but in reality, since Greed relied entirely on his Authority, his threat had been low.

A strength that did not depend on an Authority, along with the threat of an Authority—In this sense, the other Sin Archbishops were much more powerful than Regulus.

Beatrice: “Subaru, you should have already known this, I suppose. You won’t get anywhere, even if you talk to this person, in fact. She’s not the type that you can have a proper conversation with. I don’t know what she knows, but even if you wish to get something out of her, you aren’t going to be able to have a sane conversation to find out what she knows, I suppose.”

Subaru: “If it’s impossible to converse with her…”

Beatrice: “Pose the queries to her body, what I mean is torture, in fact. Though that isn’t something which Subaru should do, I suppose. It’s something which the Kingdom does sometimes after having caught someone, in fact.”

Beatrice tugged at Subaru’s arm to get him to stand up as she expressed that cruel point of view.

Torture, Subaru felt an indescribable feeling of uneasiness in regards to that word. Along with death and brutality, they were not words which were heard or spoken in his everyday life.

Although he did not know the actual situation, he knew how such gruesome things were practiced, because they were within reach of his imagination. Along with the anguish of the people who were exposed to that.

Subaru: “I don’t think it’s what they deserve.”

Subaru’s mentality was not so naive to believe that human nature was fundamentally good.

He did not think that everything had to end up with death when it came to settling a battle; the thought of wanting to finish things up without killing as much as possible had always been in his nature. That was a moral value which he had brought in from his original world, and that in itself was a naivety which Subaru could not detach himself from.

—But, even so, there had always been a conclusion that had stepped past the boundaries of those morals.

He would have preferred to finish things up without killing if he could. In the end, that thought meant that he would have to kill any opponents that necessitated it.

That had applied to both Sin Archbishops, Petelgeuse and Regulus. And the other Sin Archbishops, Sirius, Capella and Alphard of Gluttony, would be no different when push came to shove, as well.

He felt hatred, and a lust for revenge. But in a different sense, there was an intent that had determined that those guys were people he would have to kill.

Subaru: “I’ll be excusing myself from talking with you anymore. When we separate here, I probably won’t get another opportunity to talk with you. I don’t think that’s a pity, nor commiserable. But, hurry up and spit out what you have to say, and then you can rest in peace… That’d always be helpful.”

Telling someone to die right to their face had brought him a difficulty breathing.

Subaru said merely that, and made a motion to leave the room since there was nothing else left anymore. As Beatrice had mentioned, if they wished to try and get information on the Witch Cult from Sirius, they had no other way but to pose the questions to her body to get more out of her. That was a different task, one which Subaru could not do.

When Subaru showed his intention to leave, both Emilia and Beatrice’s faces broke into relief. Both of them had been against entering the room from the start. It was a regrettable situation, in that they had just been put in a foul mood without reaping any results. However, thinking about it in a positive light, it had become clear to them that the way those guys thought was incomprehensible; it seemed they should be content with that.

Subaru: "…"

There was no telling what would have happened if he had gotten close.

Subaru and the others made their way to the entrance without bothering to lift Sirius back up, who still lay toppled over thanks to Emilia's blow. It definitely was not a laudable attitude, but, with that—

Sirius: "…"

Subaru: "…Wait up."

Subaru stopped in his tracks due to an unpleasant sensation that grated against his skull just when they were about to reach the entrance. Then, he looked down at Sirius who was lying on the floor. The source of that unpleasantness came from over there, from the collapsed Sirius.

The monster was lying on her side, breathing crudely from her nose whilst pressing her face against the cold floor. Her breathing was so awfully ear-piercing that it had drawn his attention to her.

—Just before leaving the room, he had realized that she was humming a tune.

Subaru: "Stop that song, what are you trying to do?"

Sirius: "…"

She was out of tune, her pitch and rhythm were both in a state of chaos. This dissonance did not come to a halt there. It was nothing else but a declaration of Sirius's intent, regarding Subaru's words.

In other words, a refusal, a rejection.

Subaru: “I told you to stop! This song is grating through my head!”

Sirius: “—My apologies? Ah, but songs sure are great, are they not? They taught me that songs are wonderful. That’s why I wanted to try and sing all of a sudden.”

Subaru: “Liliana…?!”

Sirius should have heard the song while squaring off against Priscilla and Liliana. He had no idea how Song had managed to seal her Authority during their fight.

In the midst of battle, the monster had not hated the song, and instead she had learnt something from it. However, the monster’s understanding of the song definitely was of different strokes to the feelings which Liliana had put into hers.

Hers was something more eerie, and distorted.

Subaru: “Don’t compare her song with yours. Yours is different, it’s something else.”

Sirius: “—I could say the same about you. You are different. You have changed. You are definitely different from that person whom I love. Even if you are the same, you’re different.”

Subaru: “Huh?”

Sirius: “Petelgeuse is inside you. Soul and soul shall melt together, flesh and flesh shall become one, and like that, that beloved person shall surface, though it shall take some time. What I ought to do is help that. To see that person’s awakening, by your side.”

Still collapsed on the floor, Sirius twisted her neck and looked up at Subaru.

An endless swirling storm of emotions surged up in her crazed eyes. Anger, joy, sorrow, and a longing that she was unable to conceal, all continued to swirl in Sirius’s eyes.

Sirius: “I will drag that person out from inside of you—Thank you, my apologies? Please, until that day arrives, take care of your mind and body.”

Subaru: “—Tch.”

Sirius certainly understood that Subaru and Petelgeuse were different things.

She should have understood that, but yet the monster hid under a convenient fantasy, such as overwriting him. Petelgeuse, who slept inside of Subaru, would someday come out to greet him, she had stated.

There would be no such thing. That would be impossible.

It was likely true that Petelgeuse’s Witch Factor, which he had absorbed, was inside him. However, there was no way that Petelgeuse’s soul would be safeguarded. Where did this monster find these similarities between Petelgeuse and him, to have repeated such bullshit?

—Or was it that Subaru and that lunatic had some similar parts when seen from the outside?

Sirius: “One last thing, I am going to give you some advice so that you do not end up doing something unnecessary.”

Subaru: “…Advice? You, to me?”

Sirius: “Yes, so that I do not lose my beloved darling—Be careful around Gluttony. Bizarre Eating, Gourmet, and Satiation will eventually try to snatch you away. If that happens before he wakes up, no one will be able to remember my darling.”

Subaru: “…”

From the place he had least expected, Wrath had mentioned the name Gluttony and given him information on them. Although, the content itself was nothing unusual, it was just information which he already knew, but—No.

Subaru: “Wait. Gourmet, and who else?”

Sirius: “Gourmet, Bizarre Eating and Satiation. Being eaten and taken in without anyone noticing what was lost is an act of barbarity against Love which must melt together, blend together, and become as one. If you get the chance, please kill Gluttony. Since they are a obstacle.”

She had revealed the secrets of Sin Archbishops in the same position as her and, moreover, had indifferently wished for their death. It was great that, in this case, there was a fatal discrepancy in the relations between the top brass in the Witch Cult.

The issue was what Sirius had said about Gluttony—No, about the Gluttonies.

Subaru: “I totally thought that the Gluttony which Otto came across was the Gluttony who’d been in the control tower, since they’d been prowling about like Lust, but…”

What if that was not the case, and it was just one of the Gluttonies from the two additional ones. What if all three Gluttonies had been lurking in the city, and not just that one?

And what if the Gluttony in charge of their control tower had continued to protect its post?

Subaru: “—Tch. Shit, I need to make sure…!”

Subaru clasped his head in dismay at his own stupidity, kicked the floor and headed towards the entrance. Now was not the time to continue talking with Sirius.

Subaru had to ensure, with his own eyes, the safety of everyone who had participated in the battle to defend the city. He had to make sure that no one had disappeared because their names had been devoured by Gluttony.

Subaru: “Emilia! Beatrice! Go straight back to the shelter we were at before. I’ve got to make sure of something.”

Emilia: “Subaru? I don’t know what’s blown into you, but calm down…”

Subaru: "WHEN THIS IS OVER! I'll calm down all you want. I'll calm down, so please let me do what it takes for me to calm down. It's something urgent."

Subaru hurriedly replied that to Emilia who had touched his shoulder. Emilia gulped seeing Subaru's behavior, and then nodded saying "I understand."

From the start Beatrice had not intended to interject in Subaru's behavior, looking shocked. Subaru had already forgotten about Sirius, and had hurriedly jumped out of the room.

Emilia: "Wait up, Subaru. I'll go too."

And so, Emilia hurried after him, and both of their sets of footsteps moved away at a quick pace.

As she listened to them, Beatrice turned her head back at the door, pointing her gaze at Sirius, who was still face flat to the floor, and then pointed her palm at the monster.

Beatrice: "To tell you the truth, it's not like I don't think turning you into smithereens here would be proper, I suppose."

Sirius: "—So, why do you not do so? Spirit whore. It would be most welcome for me as long as that person's awakening is hastened."

Beatrice: "…"

Beatrice let out a sigh at the provocative Sirius's manner of speech, and then lowered her palm. The little girl held the hem of her dress with the hand she had lowered, and her eyes became filled with strong emotion,

Beatrice: "If you make Subaru sad, Betty will definitely kill you, in fact."

Sirius: "Of course. My beloved Petelgeuse's resurrection should only be welcomed by feelings of joy."

It was uncertain how much she understood, or if she was done here or not, but regardless of that, the doddering conversation ended, and Beatrice left the room, closing the door behind her.

Just before she did, Sirius's distorted hums slipped into Beatrice's eardrums.

A harassment and severity of sound that grated against one's sense of hearing with its distorted rhythm, like trampling the concept of music underneath it. A completely new kind of music that planted unpleasant feelings in others—It was the "Song of Resentment".

The door was closed, and the Song of Resentment was cut off.

But, no matter where she was, that distorted rhythm remained in her ears. Beatrice chased after Subaru and Emilia at an adagio pace, whilst tasting that unpleasant sensation.

2

After leaving Sirius's prison, Subaru rushed over to Al who had stayed in the corridor. Al, on standby with his dao held in his one hand, was taken by surprise by Subaru's fierce attitude as he stormed his way over.

Al: "Hey, bro. I heard a super loud noise, you didn't kill her, right? Punching and kicking also counts as prisoner abuse, so they ain't things you can really praise."

Subaru: "I didn't kill her, afterwards I'll give you a proper explanation about the prisoner abuse, but more importantly, I need to confirm something. Al, no one died where you were, right?"

Al: "—? Well, if you're asking about the whole city, I don't know. But at least, me, the cat-eared sis, and the miss with the Kararagi accent are all fine. I thought you already knew?"

Subaru: "I know, but… Ahh, shit. I won't get anywhere like this!"

It was natural that it had been an inconclusive answer.

Following with Subaru's concerns, on the chance someone had ended up as one of Gluttony's victims, that person would have disappeared from others' memories, just like Rem. Asking "Is there a person you don't remember?" in such a situation was completely senseless.

The easiest way would be to tell Al and Emilia everyone's names, one-by-one.

Subaru: "—Tch."

That was scary, that was terrifying.

Although this was not the time to cower, it would be terrifying to hear it from someone's mouth. It would be much more reassuring to go back to the shelter, and check the safety of everyone with his own eyes.

Subaru: "I'll go back to the shelter. Please keep an eye on it until Reinhard comes back, for whatever reason."

Al: "Alright then, but… Well, no. I won't ask the details about what went on inside. Gives me the chills."

Shaking his hand, Al avoided pursuing the real meaning behind Subaru's behavior. Rather than being considerate, it was about avoiding trouble; and so Subaru went back through the passageway, and left the shelter.

Looking at Priscilla from the corner of his eye, who seemed bored as ever, "That's the second one," he counted.

Priscilla: "Ha. Commoners sure are of small caliber, hence why your hearts get perturbed by such trivial matter, such a hassle. If you are going hither and thither, at least focus your attention like you are sightseeing as much as you can."

Subaru: "That you haven't changed doesn't relieve me one bit. See you later."

Without time to stop, Subaru quickly passed by in front of Priscilla. It was an attitude, or rather, a disrespect which might have fouled Priscilla's mood, yet she stayed silent on that matter, and only muttered "How boring", whilst fanning her skin.

Emilia: “So Subaru, what do you want to do? What is it that you have to make sure of?”

While returning to the shelter full of injured people, Emilia called out to Subaru, the latter restlessly looking around. To her call, Subaru hesitated for a moment on whether to ask for her help.

Recalling Rem’s case, Emilia did not possess any resistance in regards to Gluttony’s meals. Subaru had yet to forget the shock upon learning about the loss of Rem’s Name from her mouth.

He had resigned himself to the possibility of that wound reopening once more, and held the courage to explain the situation to Emilia. Because this was an unconscious blade, one which Emilia was unable to take into account.

Subaru: “…”

Till now, Subaru had confirmed the names of several of his companions who had fought in the defensive struggle.

Beatrice and Anastasia first. Then Garfiel and Mimi were added to that, then Wilhelm and Otto, Liliana and Kiritaka as well. Felt’s being was confirmed too from Otto’s words. According to the girls’ story, Reinhard and Ferris should also be fine. And Priscilla and Al, whom he had been with just a little while ago.

In other words, so far, it had yet to be possible to check the safety of—

???: “—Subaru, it seems we have met up safely.”

Subaru: “Reinhard?”

A refreshing voice called out to Subaru, whose thoughts were spinning around rapidly, from his side. When he turned around, there was a red-haired young man raising his arm in greeting: Reinhard.

Only a scant few hours had passed since last Subaru saw him, who, after Regulus’s defeat, should have gone around to provide reinforcement to the other camps. Nevertheless, now that he was looking around for his acquaintances, he felt honest relief in being able to see his face.

Reinhard: “It is a relief that both Emilia-sama and Beatrice-sama also reunited safely.”

Emilia: “Thank you, Reinhard. You should have been running around the city, right? Thank goodness you’re alright. Yeah, truly.”

Reinhard: “No, it is no big deal. Besides, even without me, everyone fulfilled their roles steadfastly. My modest power was only a little bit useful.”

Reinhard replied politely back to Emilia, and then looked at Subaru. Reinhard narrowed his sky-blue eyes, and as if seeing through to the depths of Subaru’s heart, he said,

Reinhard: “So, Subaru, did something happen? Right now, you look like you are in a hurry.”

Subaru: “Right now I just want to check if something happened—Reinhard, have you met with Felt? Felt, and the others… Well, Rachins and the others, that is.”

The trio of Tonchinkan—now that it had come to this, they also belonged in the framework of comrades. He had heard from Otto that Felt was fine, he had also heard that her servants were safe, but that did not mean he had mentioned the names of the three servants as to confirm them. He was not able to feel relieved.

To the desperation of Subaru’s question, Reinhard gently placed his hand on his chin, and said,

Reinhard: “Yeah, they are fine. Felt-sama, those three, Rachins, Gaston and Camberley are all safe and sound. Rachins and Gaston have injuries, but those are not serious enough to cause worry. In regards to Felt-sama having acted independently, I think she will have to reflect on this later, do you agree?”

Subaru: “There seems to be a pretty big chance that our Internal Affairs Minister was saved thanks to Felt, so do take that into account, I beseech for a lenient punishment… Anyways, there wasn’t anything else in addition?”

Reinhard: “Anything else?”

Subaru: “Anything else… No, sorry. It wouldn’t really be a specific question. So, hmm, after we separated, did anything happen? Any problems, or anything that worried you.”

Even if he thought about it again, he still had no specific question to ask; Subaru felt miserable. However, Reinhard did not laugh in reply, instead, he quietly mulled it over and shook his head.

Reinhard: “No, my apologies, but nothing is coming to mind. Nothing particularly problematic happened after I left you and Emilia-sama, that I can think of.”

Subaru: “I… see. My bad. It’s not that. Well, erm… Yeah, there’s a lot I’d like to talk to you about, so when you can, can’t you go fetch Felt? I’d like to consult with the people involved about what happened now, and what will come after. May I leave that to you?”

Reinhard: “—Sure, since it is a request from you. Right now, I just asked Felt-sama to stay quietly in the standby area once again, so it will probably sound sarcastic to her, though.”

Subaru: “…Yikes, that’s bad. Afterwards I’ll apologize as well, so for now, I’ll rely on you.”

Giving a wry smile at Subaru’s words, Reinhard looked around his surroundings a little, and then quickly left the place. Upon jumping out to the outside of the shelter, his figure was barely visible, leaping over buildings in one bound; he would soon meet back up with Felt, it seemed. The problem was,

Emilia: “Subaru, Ferris is here. You want to hear his story, right?”

Subaru: “Hmm, ah. Yeah, I also wanted to talk to Ferris.”

Called by Emilia, he looked in the direction she was pointing at. There, he was able to find the figure of Ferris, restlessly letting his gaze wander to-and-fro in a corner of the shelter.

The cat-eared Healing Arts User was staggering about, and his complexion looked awful. Most likely, it was the result of his healing voyage that he had been taken on by Reinhard. Because of the full use of his healing magic, it seemed like he had sustained a considerable burden. Even so, he was walking around looking for his next patient without rest—Or rather, it seemed like that was not the case.

Ferris: "—Ah!"

Ferris, who was looking around his surroundings, noticed Subaru and Emilia, and raised his voice. He hastily tottered over to them, and caught ahold of Subaru's scruff as if he were going to collapse.

Propping his light body up, Subaru called out to him with an "Hey?" and then,

Ferris: "Tell me…"

Subaru: "Huh?"

Ferris: "The Sin Archbishop! They were caught, right? I'm going to make them spit out everything they know, I'm going to ask them how to treat Crusch-sama! So, tell me where they are….!"

Subaru was paralyzed by Ferris' gaze, glaring with eyes wide open into Subaru's own at point-blank.

Ferris's fury was like that of a raging fire; he was merely concerned for the well-being of his beloved master. And when it came to saving her, he was prepared to show no mercy to those who know how to make that possible.

Subaru: "F-Ferris, calm down. I understand your feelings, but even if you hurry it up, you won't achieve any results. For now, let's talk…"

Ferris: "Don't say convenient things! Do you understand my feelings? There's no way you understand them, it seems?! Whilst you're speaking so calmly, Crusch-sama is suffering so much, you know that… If you truly understood, you wouldn't be able to remain calm! Stop being so irresponsible!"

Subaru: "…"

Having been jabbed in the chest, and a finger pointed at him, Subaru kept his mouth shut.

Having been assaulted by irrational comments, Subaru was unable to even reply back. Crusch's condition had not changed, she was still infested with Capella's—Lust's blood. But more than anything, Subaru felt relieved by Ferris's comments just now, realizing that Crusch had not been forgotten.

That black corrosion had also set itself into place in Subaru's right leg, and the palm that he had touched Crusch with.

However, there was no way that would bring relief to Ferris's heart.

Ferris: "I must save Crusch-sama. I can and will do everything that is necessary for that. If I have to torture the Sin Archbishop, I will do that too. I know how to cure people. That's why even if I break them, I can heal them. That's why, that's why…"

???: "Ferris—That is quite enough already."

Subaru's words did not come out towards a Ferris feverish in frustration. And then, the one who had called him from behind to stop, was the wisened swordsman, unable to bear witness to this situation.

Calling out to the Knight who served the same master as him, with a voice devoid of all emotions, Wilhelm spoke.

Wilhelm: "I fully understand how you feel. But this behavior is nothing more than an insult to Crusch-sama, more so than to anyone else. First calm yourself. Do what you must after you calm yourself."

Ferris: "You're saying you understand how I feel like as consolation…!"

Wilhelm: "—I understand."

As Ferris started to flare up at him, Wilhelm forcibly stopped him in his tracks with a low tone of voice. And then, Wilhelm looked at the jacket he was hugging against his chest, the ashes wrapped within it.

Ferris immediately bit his lips, his face immediately guessing who it was that slept there.

Ferris: “It’s… not fair. It’s not fair, it’snotfairit’snotfairit’snotfair. Wil-jii…!”

Wilhelm: “I know. It is poor of me to impose on your generosity and kindness. Forcing that on you, who opposes the pain of others more than anyone else. You should blame this old man.”

Ferris: “Uhhhh, uhhhh… Kh.”

Ferris held back his tears and hung his head down. Wilhelm embraced his head and nodded at Subaru. It looked like that meant that he would take over. Ferris too would have to take Crusch’s place in future discussions once again after calming down.

It would be necessary to discuss the handling of Sirius then. But for now, what they should do was to exchange words so that they got to know each other’s circumstances.

Wilhelm’s serene eyes communicated that to Subaru. Taking advantage of that pity, Subaru bowed his head and left the place.

Subaru: “Wilhelm-san, must want to cry too…”

Why did everything go wrong?

Was there no way to achieve joy for everyone, acquaintances and strangers alike? How much did Subaru have to fight, strive and struggle in some way to choose the best option, to arrive at that outcome—It was something that he did not know.

He had recently confirmed the safety of Reinhard and Felt, and also Ferris and Crusch. The ones that remained missing were Julius and Ricardo, who had gone to recover the Gluttony’s control tower. In addition to those, Priscilla’s servant, Schult, and although an unpleasant person, Heinkel, too.

Speaking of which, Julius's younger brother, Joshua, ever since the turmoil began, he had always been—

Subaru: "—Ah?"

Just as that thought flashed through his mind, Subaru saw the shadow of someone walking into the shelter from the outside.

He wore well-tailored white garb, and had a slender Knight's sword holstered at his waist. A handsome and tall profile, along with lustrous purple hair that was almost flashy—There was no way to mistake him.

It was Julius. Right now, the guy he wanted to check the safety of, was here.

Subaru: "Hey, Juli—"

Julius: "…"

He quickly lifted his hand and raised his voice to try and greet Julius, who had let half of his body peek through. But, when Julius noticed that Subaru's eyes were looking at him, he quickly turned around and left at hastened pace.

Subaru: "Huh?"

Faced with Julius's unexpected behavior, Subaru let out a stunned voice.

That reaction was completely unexpected. His opinions had been divided regarding whether Julius would have obediently replied to his voice, but even so, he would have never imagined this reaction.

Not an obedient answer nor sarcasm, he had simply ignored him.

Subaru: "Is that bastard kidding me?"

Having spouted out all the irritation boiling within so far, Subaru chased after him.

It was not that he was worried. It was not that he was worried, but he was looking for him to confirm his safety, so that attitude was out of order.

What was he up to? He had to catch him and find out. It was necessary to mention that this was not the time to joke around.

Emilia: “Hey, Subaru? What’s going on?”

Subaru: “That pretentious bastard Julius was there, and ignored me just now. I’m gonna go get him!”

Emilia: “Ehh?”

Leaving behind Emilia’s voice of surprise, Subaru ran and chased after Julius. After he flew out of the shelter’s entrance, he caught a glance of his back, about to disappear across the street. Those were clearly movements to avoid the gaze of the public. However, if he were not running, it would be easy to catch up with him.

Subaru: “If you’re okay, just hurry up and say you’re okay…”

Cursing, Subaru ran to the corner of the street. With one walking swiftly and the other running, the distance inevitably shortened. As soon as he turned around, now able to see his back, Subaru raised his voice.

Subaru: “Hey, you bastard! You, why the hell are you running around when everyone’s so busy? If you don’t show your face, I’ll be worried. No, people in general will.”

Julius: “…”

Upon hearing Subaru’s violent voice, Julius stopped. Julius turned his face only, and calmly gazed at Subaru with his yellow eyes.

Subaru frowned at the silent glance, but Julius did not change his posture,

Julius: “—My apologies. I was looking for someone, but it looks like that person was not inside. I would like to make my way to another shelter. Please excuse me.”

Subaru: “Wait wait wait wait, what are you saying? Who you’re looking for surely has to be Anastasia-san, right? If so, she was in that shelter. You just didn’t realize it because you were impatient. It’s not like you.”

Julius: “—Tch.”

Calling out to his back, he stopped the other from leaving, who had left behind merely words of courtesy. Then, Julius showed a dramatic reaction to Subaru’s words.

He made his shoulders spin and turned around with a surprised face.

Subaru: “Eh, ehh? What’s up?”

Subaru reflexively reacted with a shrill voice. The reason was obvious.

Julius’s expression, as he turned, was tinged by an astonishment he had never seen before. No, astonishment was not the sole thing in his expression. What was there, was a gleam, as if he had been clinging onto something.

Faced with an emotion that did not suit Julius at all, Subaru was at a loss for words. Gazing at Subaru in that manner, Julius gulped, and, with an expression of anguish,

Julius: “…Subaru. You, are referring to me?”

Subaru: “What kind of question is that? You don’t have a personality unassertive enough to be forgotten in just a few hours. Finest of Knights, Julius Juukulius-san, what nonsense are you…”

Shrugging his shoulders, Subaru responded as if making fun of Julius. And in the midst of that exchange, he stopped talking when he realized his own stupidity.

Julius’s question right now, meant that something had gone wrong. That wrongness should have been grasped by Subaru; if only his imagination had taken him one inch closer to the worst possible scenario.

Beatrice: “Subaru! Don’t run off on your own!”

Subaru, whose throat had frozen, and Julius, faced each other.

Both Emilia and Beatrice had come chasing after them, and joined the scene of the two in front of one another, in the street. Upon witnessing the two leering at each other in silence, their large eyes flickered,

Emilia: “Well… You’re in the middle of something, right?”

As she noticed the strange atmosphere and tension, Emilia anxiously tilted her head. Subaru had a bad presentiment at her reaction, especially from her gaze, directed at Julius.

Thus, Subaru pointed to Julius,

Subaru: “…Yes, that’s right, but it’s not that. Emilia-tan. Beako, you too, well…”

Emilia & Beatrice: “—?”

Emilia and Beatrice raised question marks at Subaru’s awkward words.

He had to do something, perhaps a definitive question. Subaru swallowed his saliva, and took a glance at Julius. Before Subaru’s gaze, Julius prepared himself and lifted his terribly hollow face,

Subaru: “I found Julius. So, I can take him to the conference, right?”

Beatrice: “—Julius.”

Upon asking, Beatrice gazed at Julius. Then, Emilia spoke doubtfully in a low voice,

Emilia: “Julius-san, is he an acquaintance of Subaru’s?”

And, as if to repeat the nightmare of before, she spoke.

Chapter 77:
A Nameless Knight

1

Receiving the jolting impact, his body got out of the dagger’s trajectory.

Not being in a position to sharpen his blade, and even if he did accept it with his broken knight sword, he would not be able to evade the severe wound. Was the conclusion that anyone would realize at a glance, henceforth, Julius was able to notice that he was being shielded.

However, it was, again, a different subject whether he should express relief or gratitude for it—.

Julius: “Ricardo—!”

Ricardo: “Shit, he got me… ~hk!”

With an anguishing voice, Ricardo, who had pushed Julius aside, narrowed his eyes. When he called out that name, at the same time, a spout of blood clouded Julius’ vision.

The blood had sprouted from, the rough, bulky right arm of Ricardo—having lost everything from his elbow, it was a gash exposing the soft cross section.

The arm covered in bestial hair gave rise to a sound and fell onto the cobblestone, and the big hatchet it was gripping, too, made a dull sound and rolled on the ground.

Julius: “How did such… ~hk.”

Ricardo: “Argh! This ain’t the time for sayin’ that, Julius! Raise your head and look towa~rds…”

At Julius, who was breathing heavily, Ricardo slammed a loud yell. However, that was abruptly obstructed by the attack of the dagger he suffered on the abdomen, and his nose was smashed and broken by the solid knee’s direct hit.

Throwing him aback, and as Ricardo flopped onto the floor, with his limbs stretched out, Gluttony sneered.

Roy: “Haha~! Aren’t you going to, completely say it ~tsu!”

Julius: “—~hk.”

The form of Alphard, who was shouting out his delight, and Ricardo, who had collapsed. Seeing the figures of the two, two choices came up in Julius’ mind.

Which one of the two should he give precedence to, a seemingly instantaneous gap had been produced there.

And, the appetite of Gluttony would never overlook that gap.

Roy: “To look away in the middle of the meal, you really don’t have manners, nii-sama—!”

Julius: “You bastard…!”

Like a springed doll, Alphard leapt trickily. At that phantasmagoric movement, Julius’ reaction got faintly delayed.

The outstretched palm and, the broken knight sword entangled, and the feeling of his chest being traced by the palm—with his slash being dodged, what followed immediately afterwards was an inexplicable sense of loss.

Roy: “A~h—thank you for the treat ~tsu.”

At the end of that voice, for some reason, his consciousness distanced further, and further, and—.

2

Julius: “Though it is pathetic, in the midst of the battle against Gluttony, my Name was stolen. Perhaps, that is what this current situation is.”

Based on what Emilia had said, that truth had been brought to light.

Expressing a cynical smile on his face due to the truth of being forgotten by his acquaintances, Julius shrugged his shoulders.

Subaru: “Name got eaten… is that what you mean? But.”

Eating the Memories and Names of people was the blasphemer, Sin Archbishop Gluttony.

The threat of getting the Name eaten, and having all connections cut off—Subaru was well aware of its fearsomeness. However, looking at Julius now, who seemed to be in a healthy shape, he could not help but feel his understanding was frivolous.

Subaru: “His victimization is, like Rem or Crusch-san…”

Having her Memories eaten, and completely forgetting her own former self, was Crusch.

Having her Name eaten, and vanishing from the memories of people with not a single exception, and continuing to be in a deep slumber in that state, was Rem.

Victims of Gluttony, the two young girls were sufferers Subaru was well acquainted with.

However, coming here, Julius had been trapped in a state different from those two. His own memories having not been lost, nor did he lose consciousness.

—However, from the memories of his surroundings, his existence had disappeared.

Subaru: “Really, does nobody remember? If you attempt from one side…”

Julius: “I have already met with Anastasia-sama and Ricardo. For some reason, they treated me like an unacquainted person, I have endured that experience. Being unable to thank the one who shielded you, is displeasing, isn’t it.”

"…"

Julius, reflexively, killed his sentiments and replied but, his smile which faintly had too much energy being put into it, or the tone of his words, naturally, were difficult for Subaru to behold. No matter how strong Julius' consciousness may be as a knight, there is no way he could bear such mental stress with ease.

With the ruin of the relationships he had compiled, the fear and despair of losing the days he had lived personally.

That was the sense of loss Subaru had tasted, to the point of it being painful, when he had arrived into the different world at first.

Subaru: "Beatrice…"

Beatrice: "What Subaru wants to say is understandable, in fact. But, unfortunately, even Betty does not remember that man, I suppose. Betty, is already outside of the Forbidden Library, in fact."

Sympathizing with his intentions at a single call, Beatrice, with a difficult face, horizontally rotated her neck.

At Beatrice's point, the confirmation Subaru had picked up—that was, whether she remembered Julius or not.

As Emilia did not remember, naturally, there is no way Beatrice would remember. That was how it was supposed to be, but there was a possibility that Beatrice was an exception.

For some reason, Beatrice was—.

Subaru: "Even though you remembered Rem."

Beatrice: "It can be said as many times as you'd like, but rather, that case itself should be thought of as the exception, I suppose. And now, it should be thought that it has been proven with the man in front, in fact."

Subaru: "In the end, that is the inference regarding your memories, huh."

It had been some time ago.

Some time ago, Beatrice, in the Forbidden Library, had once referred to Rem after her name had been eaten by Gluttony. Subaru had questioned that after she had formed her contract, after the Forbidden Library had been lost but, this was one conclusion they had reached after their exchange.

Subaru: “When isolated from the outside into the Forbidden Library, Beako does not get affected by what is outside of the room. That’s why the moment Rem’s name was eaten, no effect was taken… is what I had thought, isn’t it. That’s why, once exited from the room, special treatment would not be given… huh.”

Beatrice: “That tone, seems like there is a problem with Betty leaving the Forbidden Library, I suppose.”

Subaru: “N-Nothing like tha~t! I, am mammoth happy to be able to walk under the rays of the sun with you!”

Beatrice: “Eh, in fact.”

And, within that short back and forth, lay the truth.

And, in fact, Beatrice exhibited no peculiarity regarding Julius. Beatrice’s inference was surely, that the barriers to her memory served their purpose only in the Forbidden Library.

Rather, in this case, the problem here was not Beatrice’s distinctiveness—

Emilia: “But, why does Subaru remember Julius-san? Just like, the time with that Rem-san.”

Subaru: “That’s it.”

The question, that would dawn upon everyone, was finally spoken by Emilia.

The sole person in the entire world who remembered Rem, whose Name had been eaten, Subaru.

Forgotten even across the preservation of the memories of Ram, who was her twin elder sister, however, Emilia and the others did not make a reference.

That must also be because, looking at Subaru connect to Rem with such devotion, they could not randomly speak regarding the memories, or make any implicitly believing rash remarks.

But, not just that, the ability to refute Subaru's memories, could only be done by nothing else but having definite proof, which not a single one of them possessed.

However, it was different this time.

In this case, the concerned party who also remembered aside from Subaru—in brief, Julius, who had been forgotten since his very beginning by the world, retained consciousness.

Naturally, the reconciliation of that mutual recognition and, the reason for Subaru being treated as the exception of the Authority of Gluttony gave rise to doubts.

Emilia: "Does Subaru have any idea? No holding secrets, okay."

Subaru: "I don't intend to hide anything at all but… I think I sort of do, I won't say that."

Emilia: "That, isn't that a secret?"

Subaru: "If you can't confirm it don't declare it, I don't think that's secret keeping."

Conversing with Emilia, Subaru investigated the possibility of him being an exception.

The feeling that had uprisen in the very beginning, was the influence of the Witch Factor sleeping inside of Subaru. If the Authority of Gluttony of eating Memories or Names was the power of the Witch Factor then, it was conceivable, due to a certain cause, it may not apply upon Subaru, just like Unseen Hand.

Perhaps, Subaru could Return by Death through the power of the Witch of Envy. With the power of that Witch invoked, it may have had cancelled the effects of the Authority of Gluttony.

And there was the remaining feeling of the exceptionality like that of Beatrice's Forbidden Library.

That was, because Subaru belonged to a different world. Subaru was a human whose origin was from a different world, and not an existence who belonged to this world.

Not being an existence of this world, he doesn't fall under the effect of the Authority which interfered with the concepts of this world—how was this hypothesis.

Subaru: "However, if it's the latter, then the way to confirm it is easy. Julius just has to meet with Al."

The sole person in this world, who was under the same circumstances as Subaru, was Al.

Regarding the exception of the Authority, if the latter hypothesis happened to be correct, Al must also be remembering Rem and Julius. Above all, the Al of this world and Rem had no acquaintanceship with each other, henceforth, it could not be confirmed.

Subaru: "There's no way he can say that even this time, huh."

Emilia: "Subaru?"

Subaru: "It's regarding Emilia-tan's question but, there's something I want to confirm before answering that. Julius, you'll have to come with me."

At Subaru's voice, who cut short the chase, Emilia made a somewhat discontent expression.

He was keeping secrets, is what could perhaps be thought as well, but this was a measure necessary for attestation.

Above all, in the case if the hypothesis' correctness being proven, what both Subaru and Al held in common—the part of both of them being trippers from a different world would be obscure, the ones whose hometowns lay beyond the Great Waterfall do not fall under the effect of the Authority, that absurd explanation would be the only option left.

Subaru: "Don't tell me, you won't refuse, will you? It is regarding you, after all."

Julius: "—I must state that I have no choice. It seems, under the present circumstance, you are rather knowledgeable regarding the condition inflicted upon me. I shall follow you."

Subaru: "Why do you have such a delicately large attitude, you."

Whether the calmness had been restored through the conversation till now, the attitude of the elegant appearing Julius, with his jaw pulled in, returned. Regardless of appearances, the uprosen situation was too tough on his mind and heart. Not charming at all, was another way to put it.

Subaru: "Suddenly getting absorbed in appearing admirable and increasing problems for the party in contact, huh… Anyway, let's go back to the shelters. I think now it's the suitable time for all the people concerned to assemble too… that's it, what about Ricardo? He had taken part in the suppression together with you. He's fine, right?"

Julius: "…He did get injured whilst shielding me, but it should not have an effect on his life. He is currently being properly diagnosed by Ferris."

Subaru: "…Is that so. Then, that's okay, I guess."

At Julius' reply, Subaru innermost thoughts were half relief and half reflection.

To dissect, the relief of Ricardo's safety, and the reflection of Julius' insensitivity, who had directly inquired from the ones he had fought alongside with.

And at Subaru, whose voice diminished, Julius sighed,

Julius: "I do not expect you to show friendly concern. If you conduct yourself the way you always do, it would be more comfortable for myself, after being in such perplex because of the environment. Well then, let's return to the shelters."

Saying that, Julius, friendly, patted Subaru's shoulder.

Julius: "Though it's not something too pleasant, there is no choice but to leave my introduction to you. The fruitless effort of the display in the hall of the royal election, it would help if you would withdraw that at this occasion."

Subaru: "Don't go about digging up people's guiltful history! Shit, worrying for you was a mistake."

Pushing away the hand on his shoulder, Subaru turned towards Julius while stepping towards the shelter. Of course, he would not misunderstand by thinking that Julius' reply just now were his true feelings.

Moderating Subaru's feelings of guilt, he has simply given his reply in the need of a smart response.

He knew that. As he knew that,

Subaru: "Am I, an idiot. No, I am an idiot."

Why must he now, uphold an attitude, of giving salvation to Julius' heart.

He, who lost all others, above all, must be feeling the helpless anxiety of solitude, how could he mistake on his words and his judgements.

His own insensitivity was terribly irritating, and Julius was almost just as irritating as well.

In the situation where anxiety was natural, acting as normal was a strength of his as well.

That strength was surely, something which Subaru could never attain, despite his desire.

Until Julius were to be left as is, Subaru would certainly harbor his own sense of responsibility.

3

Looking at the back of Subaru, who was heading towards the shelter, after having angered him, Julius' lips' edges curved into a slight smile.

It was a powerless smile, one which he could never let Subaru see, who had his back turned towards him.

Emilia: "That face, do you intend to not show it to Subaru?"

In that dim gap in his heart, a silver bell's chime pounced in between. Turning back, there lay the line of sight of amethyst eyes towards Julius.

At that gaze, wearing gloom, Julius concealed his smile and shook his neck horizontally.

Julius: "Meagre disposition, futile resistance of the defeated, that is what it is. Please do not point it out."

Emilia: "Defeated you say…"

Julius: "Perhaps we, were the only ones who missed among those who headed to capture the control towers. Fully realizing our great insufficiency, I now live in disgrace, and have been left alone in a prohibited state. Completely defeated."

With a stubborn attitude, Julius strongly brought attention to their defeat.

At his attitude, Emilia's eyes wavered heartbreakingly. Emilia, at this moment, may have had been able to find the powerlessness of Julius' heart.

Emilia: "I'm sorry."

However, Emilia's utterance was different from what Julius had been intending for.

At Julius, who raised his face, Emilia embraced her slender shoulders,

Emilia: "The truth is, I don't know what should I say to you, right now. I'm sure I must have had known you but still I cannot remember, and I can't be reliable like Subaru."

Julius: "…In Subaru's case, he should not be referred to much. He is the one that is the exception, isn't it."

Emilia: "Even still, I know you are being hurt. That's why I cannot do anything but apologize and… in regards to Subaru, thank you."

"…"

The fact that she thanked for Subaru, was unsettling.

Emilia sighed, at Julius, who furrowed his eyebrows.

Emilia: "Julius-san's current face, if Subaru saw it he would certainly be pained more. That's why, thank you, for hiding it. I'm really sorry."

Julius: "Please stop, Emilia-sama. It is not something to be thanked for, and furthermore… furthermore you are making too much out of me. There is no need, for such consideration."

It was true. Julius, subjected to Emilia's gaze, filled with innate kindness, could feel the inappropriate comfort.

With such admirable consciousness, it was not as if he had confirmed Subaru's innermost thoughts. It was something much simpler, a much more uninteresting reason.

Julius: "I don't want him… Subaru, to pity me. That is all there is to it.”

“…”

Up front, drawing closer, gazing at Subaru’s stature, Julius declared. Pulling Beatrice’s sleeve, who was close to him, with a difficult expression, was Subaru.

At such a figure of Subaru, Julius was unable to discard his own powerlessness.

Why those thoughts, that reason was—.

Emilia: “Just now, I feel I heard Julius-san’s true thoughts for the first time.”

Emilia, continuing her steps, commented that about Julius’ words. Julius thoughtlessly rounded his eyes, and Emilia raised a single finger, Emilia: “It may not be of too much help but, I will also talk to everyone to try and convince them. That’s why, along with Subaru, trust us as well. Let’s go.

Julius: “…Yes. Also, Emilia-sama.”

Emilia: “What?”

Calling a halt to Emilia, as she turned back, Julius elegantly bowed.

Though it may not be in her memories, it remained inside of him as if carved deeply, that courteous etiquette as both a knight and a noble.

Julius: “Being called Julius-san by Emilia-sama, gives rise to a helpless sense of unpleasantness. Please refer to me as Julius, that way of reference.”

Emilia: “I, used to refer to you like that, isn’t it. …I understand, Julius.”

With a finger on her lips, Emilia consented. After that, Emilia drowned in thought, and shortly glanced at Julius, then proceeded to face towards the empty sky. And,

Emilia: “Can I, ask something too?”

Julius: “What might it be.”

Emilia: “Right next to you, Minor spirits… no, maybe Quasi Spirits. Those children, are flying about in seeming uneasiness… did you know that?”

Julius: “—Yes, I am aware. Because they are, buds that, being close to me, will eventually bloom.”

Julius closed his eyes, at what Emilia has pointed out.

Right beside him, when he closed his eyes, he knew there were the Quasi spirits, wielding the power of six colors, flying about. However, those buds had no knowledge of why they were there.

That is why, for them,

Julius: “My current self’s words will not reach them. Just like, the words for my master or my comrades.”

Chapter 78:
The Remaining Ripples in the Watergate City

1

Reinhard: “Ah, Subaru. Thank goodness we did not miss each other. I have returned.”

Subaru: “Reinhard? How quick, you only just left.”

When Subaru and the others returned to the shelter after picking up Julius, they came across Reinhard, who had just gone back to the same shelter.

Subaru gave a surprised response to his speedy work, and Reinhard, who had slightly raised his hand up as he walked towards them, suddenly broke into a frown. With a face that felt Subaru’s awful complexion and the unease in the somewhat anxious attitudes of the four of them, he said,

Reinhard: “What is the matter, Subaru… Is there something wrong?”

Subaru: “There’s definitely something wrong… But, it’s difficult to choose the words. There’s something I want you to confirm, too.”

Reinhard: “If I can be of any help, you may ask for whatever you want. What is it?”

Reinhard’s response to Subaru, who had dropped the tone of his voice, was as sincere as ever. That was why he wanted to trust in his extraordinariness, much like he had done so far, starting with the battle against the Bowel Hunter, all the way up to the battle against Greed.

However, that line of thinking, of attaining salvation by divine grace, was—

Subaru: “—Do you know anything about the person who’s standing next to me?"

Reinhard: "…You don't mean Beatrice-sama, right?"

Reinhard said this whilst looking down at the little girl in the dress that snuggled by Subaru's side. In silence, Subaru did not reply to Reinhard's words. He merely kept staring at the Sword Saint, praying that the answer he desired would be returned.

To the fervor of that gaze, Reinhard looked at the other person standing next to Subaru, and slightly narrowed his eyes as if he were thinking. However,

Reinhard: "—My apologies. He is someone I don't know. Judging from his aspect and appearance, I believe he is one of the valorous individuals of this battle, though."

Julius: "…"

Julius' cheeks stiffened at Reinhard's reply.

The two of them were supposed to be close friends, companions from the Order of Royal Guards—with his Name eaten, that connection of friendship also ended up being severed.

Julius cast his eyes down gloomily upon hearing that reality, and Subaru, looking at him from the side, was feeling dejected too.

The Sword Saint, as the strongest in the Kingdom, was the most skilled swordsman, one who cut apart even the Witch Cult. Even so, not even Reinhard van Astrea could escape the influence of the Authority of Gluttony.

Or perhaps, to have thought that it was possible if it were Reinhard was only a baseless wish. That wish was cruelly broken, and only confirmed his own shallowness.

Reinhard: "My apologies. I do not know the reason why, but it looks like I was unable to meet your expectations."

Julius: "…Huh, it should be us who say that. From your point of view, that question must have seemed like an accusation. It is us who should apologize for presuming upon that consideration."

It was Julius himself that took responsibility in replying to Reinhard's apology.

He masked the shock of being treated as a stranger by a friend. He looked around the shelter as he covered himself with words of calmness. And then,

Julius: "It seems like it is almost time for the important people to have gathered. It is high time to start the conference that shall include future actions."

Reinhard: "…I understand. You mean to say, that we shall talk about you there, as well?"

Guessing the intentions behind Julius's words, Reinhard lifted his chin. In fact, the valorous individuals of the defensive battle from earlier—those involved in the Royal Selection, along with the city officials, were beginning to gather inside the shelter.

And right then, a young woman dressed in a kimono came back from outside that very shelter.

Anastasia: "Hmm, it looks like they've gathered before we told 'em to. How convenient."

Anastasia, who had finished looking around the outside, said that with a smile as she tugged on her scarf, Echidna. From within the surrounding shelter—in her field of view, she obviously must have seen the figure of Julius standing next to Subaru, but it did not look like she was going to mention him.

Anastasia: "It seems like, with Emilia-san and y'all and Felt-san, we're nearly just about complete. If Priscilla-san comes after, then that'll be enough. Then, I reckon we can start the conference."

Anastasia made her suggestion as she clapped her hands together.

She said it with an air of composure, without even calling out to her one Knight, who should have been reflected in the corner of her eyes.

2

The place that had been designated as the conference room in place of the lost City Hall was a meeting place near the shelter.

This meeting place was also a shelter, but due to its poor provisioning against flooding—Out of fear of the very disaster that had kept the city of Pristella on high alert, it seemed that this particular shelter had not been used during the turmoil.

Anastasia: “To start things off with, it oughta be a good time for the people in the other shelters to start goin’ back to their homes, don’t’cha think? In truth, we also wanted to go back to the inn… But, it seems like the cleanin’ still hasn’t ended.”

When it came to tidying, was she referring to the inn itself or the people involved in the current turmoil?

Anastasia had probably made that comment so it could mean either one, so to take the initiative amongst those who had gathered at the meeting place.

Anastasia: “First of all, let me thank y’all for yer hard work. Luckily, the amount of damage caused by the Witch Cult’s grand offensive was extremely low… Includin’ both the people here and those who aren’t, I believe. It was a battle like no other.”

Others: “…”

Anastasia: “Even without those grim faces, I too, understand. The damage was low, but yer faces say that y’ain’t convinced by those words.”

The looks on those unsuspecting silent faces became harder at Anastasia’s words, who in some regards seemed unconcerned. At that, Anastasia shrugged her shoulders and looked around the room.

At the meeting place, not only were the original members who had undertook the battle to defend the city assembled, but also the other collaborators, those who had gotten involved, had joined.

From the Emilia Camp, there was Emilia, Subaru and Beatrice. Both Garfiel and Otto were absent due to the gravity of their injuries.

From the Felt Camp, there were Felt, Reinhard and Camberley, whose face was pale because of how out-of-place he felt. Gaston and Rachins were absent due to their wounds and exhaustion.

From the Crusch Camp, the most important member, Crusch, was still lying in bed. So, Ferris and Wilhelm were participating instead of their mistress.

From the Priscilla Camp, there was Al and Priscilla, the latter's face seeming bored. Next to them was their attendant, Schult, safe and sound. It seemed like Heinkel's safety had been confirmed, but he was an absentee.

And from the Anastasia Camp, there was Anastasia, who was standing in the center like she had taken the reins. Tivey and Ricardo were both participating as well, the latter of whom had white bandages wrapped all around his body. And Julius, who was seated away from them, was on the Emilia Camp side.

Finally, Kiritaka and Liliana were in attendance, as well as the Scales of the White Dragon, who had joined due to their involvement.

Nearly twenty people in total, who were involved one way or another, had gathered in the room to carry out the post-war conference on the defensive battle.

And the one who got the ball rolling and spoke out a rebuttal against Anastasia's initial speech was Ferris, his attitude unsettled. His yellow eyes shook with irritation as he raised his hand up,

Ferris: "The post-conference is important… I understand that. I understand that, but I wish to speak about how we're going to deal with the Sin Archbishop. In the end, one of the top brass of the Witch Cult was captured alive, right? There are many things that we need to ask. I want to hurry that up."

Anastasia: "…Well, I knew Ferris-san was goin' to say that. By the way, what's Crusch-san's current condition like? Has there been any change since?"

Ferris: "—I can just say she's stable. We couldn't get any information out of Lust, so right now she's recovering her strength with my healing magic, and relying on her willpower. For a moment, her symptoms were relieved a bit thanks to Subaru-kun's help, but…"

Being looked at out of the corner of the eye by the frustrated Ferris, Subaru fixated his gaze on his own palm. A part of his palm had turned black, and it was in a state where it exposed an unseemliness like that of a burn or birthmark.

A similar change had occurred in Subaru's right thigh, which was covered by his trousers. Subaru did not feel any pain or the feeling of anything foreign in it, but it was not like that for Crusch. The removal of that which was definitely eating up her strength was a matter of the highest priority to save her life.

That, and it was also rather tough for a woman to bear those black veins on her skin. That a beautiful woman like Crusch had been affected made it stand out all the more painfully.

Anastasia: "If I'm to speak honestly, I ain't in agreement with keepin' that Sin Archbishop alive. That thing's a being that brings only trouble. If it's possible, killin' 'em in a hurry would definitely be for the best."

Ferris: "—! But then our leads would disappear!"

Whilst Subaru worried about the black veins, the argument between Anastasia and Ferris was reaching a boiling point.

In regards to the captured Sin Archbishop's treatment—Sirius, Ferris stubbornly shook his head at Anastasia, who had suggested execution. It was natural from his point of view.

However, Anastasia merely shook her head at Ferris, who was getting fired up.

Anastasia: "I think what happened to Crusch-san is a pity. But, they're different matters. Besides, that Wrath even knows anythin' about Lust… No, I don't think they do in the long run. To me, it seems very unlikely that the Witch Cult was cooperatin' with each other."

Ferris: "If they're not connected, then why?! Why did something like today happen?! The Sin Archbishops all gathered and came to attack the city, and yet, they're not cooperating?!"

Anastasia: "Of course, even I ain't sayin' that their actions overlapped by happenstance. But, their aims, retreat times, 'n dispersion don't match. It'd be a little weird to call that cooperation… The Witch Cult doesn't have any awareness of stuff like cooperation."

Ferris: "That's just a deduction, right?!"

Raising his voice, Ferris completely denied Anastasia's words. It looked like Anastasia as well had realized that her suggestion was difficult to accept, and it did not seem like she was going to give a rebuttal to that, which had been denied by Ferris' sentimental arguments.

Thereupon, Subaru slowly raised his hand up.

Subaru: "May I say something? I also have an opinion, but if anything, an opinion that's close to Ferris's. I don't think it's pointless getting information out of Wrath."

Ferris: "…What do you mean?"

Subaru: "It isn't a story I'm proud of, but a little while ago, I was allowed to speak with Wrath for a short amount of time, and there I was able to hear a little bit about Gluttony. Even if it was only about the length, depth and closeness of their relationship, it's too hasty to say we can't get any information out of them."

In fact, Wrath had thrown some words similar to a warning at Subaru about Gluttony.

Thanks to that, there was a part in which Subaru had realized the possibility of Gluttony actually being several individuals, and had ended up not overlooking Julius when he had tried to distance himself from the shelter. He could not close his eyes to this. Nevertheless, within Subaru's true feelings, he also had a part which agreed with Anastasia.

Subaru: "But, leaving aside whether we can or can't use them as a source of information, I also have a bad feeling in regards to keeping them captured… Though all the Sin Archbishops are like that."

Right now, so that they could partake in the conference, Sirius's guard duty had been entrusted to the Scales of the White Dragon.

She was in a condition where she was bound in chains without quarter, and had even been gagged to stop her from talking. They had also been instructed to take turns keeping guard, as their hearts had the potential to be manipulated were they to stay near her for too long. Nothing should happen during this conference, but his anxiety was unending.

Subaru: "It's necessary to feel this anxiety whilst they are captured alive. I can't unconditionally make a decision about what to do about that."

Ferris: "Which side are you on…?!"

Ferris pointed his eyes, which were full of hatred, towards the fence-sitting Subaru. Subaru grimaced at the heat of his gaze, and said,

Subaru: "I'm not taking sides. Honestly, I think both of you are right… In the worst case, I will do something about the black veins in Crusch-san's body using the parts of my body which haven't turned black. If that solves the issue, then I think that'll be no issue."

Ferris: "—Ha."

Emilia: "Subaru."

Subaru's own judgement was a fairly extreme conclusion for the topic of Crusch's black veins. Upon hearing those words, Ferris's face became flabbergasted, and Emilia looked at him, her eyes rebuking him.

Everyone else also turned to look at him with shock, and complex emotions in their gazes.

Emilia: “I also heard about that, but that’s truly as a last resort, right? We don’t know what will happen in the future even if it’s nothing right now, but, acting like this is normal is…”

Subaru: “Well, it’s not like even I want to put that seemingly unhealthy ink in my body for fun. But, we have a precedent with Crusch-san that it relieved her symptoms a little.”

Emilia: “…”

Subaru: “What I mean to say is, don’t rush to draw conclusions. I understand the feelings of impatience, but even if my back or my butt turns black, given that they’re out of sight, I’m not reluctant to help out. That’s what I’m on about.”

Despite there being a way to be able to do something, letting it go by due to his own cuteness would leave him a bad taste in his mouth.

Crusch was a valued benefactor to him, and more importantly, there was a solution that did not involve his, nor any of the others’ lives. He would try and help as much as he could, if it was up to something like darkening his out-of-sight skin.

Wilhelm: “Ferris, seat yourself. For the time being, Subaru-dono is right.”

Ferris: “…I know. I really know.”

The one who pulled Ferris’s sleeve, who was lost for words, and made him calm down, was Wilhelm. Ferris looked down and attempted to say something to Subaru, but sat without saying anything in the end.

Subaru let out a sigh on seeing his state; the mood around the tense meeting area went back to normal. Even so, the situation from before still continued.

Anastasia: “In any case, I understand that everyone’s opinions regardin’ the treatment of the Sin archbishops are divided. It’s worryin’ to keep ‘em alive, and even the limits of mine ‘n Natsuki-kun’s instincts are comin’ out… In truth, if they’d killed ‘em instead of capturing ‘em, our talk would have gone all the more quicker.”

Priscilla: “—What, has this worthless spiel ended? No matter how much you gaze upon me, no rewards shalt be given to a show that lacks value. Cease that beggar’s look immediately.”

Priscilla replied with a yawn to the bantering Anastasia’s look.

That misplaced reply was proof that Priscilla had not been listening to the conversation properly up until now. Her participating in this conference must also have been some kind of whim of hers.

Anastasia: “Don’t speak so slyly. That attitude is unbecomin’ for one who captured someone from the Witch Cult alive, but out of all people, why did ya capture ‘em? What led to this bizarre turn of events?”

Priscilla: “As if I knew whether she would live or die. As the final blow was dealt, the Yang Sword clouded over and its sharpness disappeared. Thus, she survived. The one who dragged her out from the canal was one of the rabble, who had drained the water in search for the Songstress. It has nothing to do with me.”

Anastasia: “It doesn’t bother you that the one you’d tried to kill didn’t die?”

Priscilla: “On the contrary. I drove the sword solely to kill. If she did not perish by that, then I have no intention to kill her again. Though she did not expire by my hand, it seems to be all the more convenient as far as I am concerned.”

Anastasia: “Haaa, I don’t understand, but aight.”

Anastasia seemed to have given up trying to understand Priscilla, who as ever, had elaborated on her enigmatic theory. Subaru did not know her intentions either, but Priscilla’s thinking probably was not understood by anyone else.

It was dubious whether even Al and Schult, who stood by her side, were able to make heads or tails of it.

Reinhard: “At the least, I am against judging Wrath in this place. I do want to respect Ferris’s feelings of course, but it also poses a unique opportunity for the Kingdom. On top of strictly keeping guard of them, I think that we should make an effort to get what they know out of them.”

Felt: “…I think it’s better to kill them. Even just remembering those Sin Archbishops makes me sick to the stomach, I don’t think they’d say anything that half makes sense. It’s better to kill them before being dragged into something problematic, so that they won’t cause any problems in the future, probably.”

Reinhard: “Felt-sama…”

Felt: “For your information, I ain’t saying this to get on your nerves this time, at all.”

And, coming from a different place, the opinions were split between master and servant. Reinhard, who had advocated that they should keep Wrath alive, and Felt, who had denied that. Although, Felt’s opinion was not well-grounded.

Felt herself did not seem to think that her opinion would be accepted. In the end, it looked like Wrath would be given into custody to the Kingdom.

Reinhard: “I shall be the one responsible for escorting Wrath to the Royal Capital. In the case Wrath is scheming something, I would be the person most able to deal with it. And in the worst case, there is the eventuality that a conviction might need to be carried out too.”

Anastasia: “When it comes to bein’ suitable for that, you’re it, apparently. But in this case, will Felt-san follow ya to the Royal Capital too? Or shall master and servant go their separate ways…”

Felt: “If Reinhard’s going, I’m going too—This time, it can’t be helped.”

Reinhard’s face changed to one of astonishment, on hearing Felt’s words. Felt caught a fleeting glimpse of his face from the side, and plastered a deep scowl on her lovely face,

Felt: “Don’t get the wrong idea. The fact that I can’t stand you ain’t changed. It ain’t changed, but there’s times when I ain’t gonna do that.”

Reinhard: “There are times where you aren’t going to do that?”

Felt: “I don’t know. Try asking that to your own chest. My chest ain’t soft enough to reply back to you.”

Sticking out her underdeveloped chest, Felt stuck her tongue out at Reinhard. He cast his eyes down upon seeing his master’s attitude, and then quietly lifted his chin up.

Only they themselves knew what feelings there were between master and servant. At any rate, it looked like the Felt Camp, too, was not the same as it had been a year ago.

Camberley: “W-Well, in that case, I’ll…”

Reinhard: “Camberley, look after Rachins and Gaston. Once they can move about, they may first return back to the mansion. Bring them only in contact with Rom-jii.”

Camberley: “Y-Yessir, I understand.”

A look of relief came over the uncomfortable-looking Camberley on receiving his orders.

For now, thanks to Reinhard volunteering, they could feel at ease regarding Wrath’s escort. What came after, that which they could get out of Sirius, would be the duties of the Kingdom’s experts.

???: “Then, may we move to the next issue? Ladies and gentlemen.”

The one who had raised his hand up after seeing the matter of Wrath’s treatment decided upon had been Kiritaka. He gazed at everyone’s faces while he adjusted his slightly messy hair with his hand. And then, he spoke out, Kiritaka: “First of all, regarding the battle to protect this city… I would like to thank you all, on behalf of all citizens. If it were not for all of you, the city of Pristella would likely have fallen into the evil clutches of the Witch Cult. I offer my deepest gratitude for that.”

Kiritaka hung his head low, and bowed, having taken responsibility for speaking of the general consensus of the city. Liliana, who was by his side, with a look of panic on her face, also bowed her head like Kiritaka had.

Putting Kiritaka aside, Liliana’s earnest reaction was quite unlike her. Perhaps her fight against Wrath, or something after that, had caused a change in her attitude. In any case,

Subaru: “We were already in the city, and involved. We didn’t have the option to just watch on as a spectator, so you don’t have to thank us to this grandiose extent. Don’t you think?”

Emilia: “Yeah. Besides, maybe the Witch Cult taking over the city was just a bonus for them, judging by their aims. Whether we saved them, or they saved us, maybe we don’t know which one it is.”

Emilia and Subaru insisted that it was hard for them to accept the praises at face value for the Witch Cult’s attack. Certainly, the greatest part of repelling the Witch Cult had been down to the merit of the members gathered here. However, in the first place, the Sin Archbishops’ aims were Emilia, the Artificial Spirits, and the Book of Wisdom.

All those things had been brought in by those involved from the outside, and the Emilia Camp had been responsible for gathering them all. They could not accept their praises with full sincerity.

Felt: “Wait up. It bothers me that you’re saying that freely as if it were the consensus. Are you really saying that if we hadn’t been here, they would’ve slammed the door shut on those Witch Cult guys? I reckon we need to talk more clearly about that.”

Priscilla: “‘Tis vexing, but I am in agreement with that beggar girl. Do not drag us into all of your commoners’ self-convenient diffidence. Do not be so conceited, you half-devil and you philistine."

However, the harsh duo stated their rigid opinions on hearing the words of Subaru and Emilia.

Felt and Priscilla looked at each other after they finished speaking, and immediately looked away, their faces looking disgusted. From the start, those two had not gotten along with each other. Only those in her camp were close to Priscilla, so it was a pretty normal reaction.

Kiritaka: "Please settle down. I am gladdened by Emilia-sama's words, but as Felt-sama and Priscilla-sama said, the city's defense was all of your merit. This I vow as a representative of the city—In the meantime, I would like you to lend your strength just a little while longer."

Subaru: "By strength… You mean the next issue you mentioned earlier?"

Kiritaka: "Indeed. About the inhabitants who were transformed by that wicked power."

Everyone: "…"

Everyone there went silent at hearing Kiritaka's somber tone.

What he was about to point out—it was something which everyone here understood. The staff of the City Hall, who had fallen into the evil clutches of Lust, had been transformed into inhuman forms.

One had been transformed into a black dragon, and the other dozen or so had been transformed into huge flies.

They still were completely unable do anything about the effect of the Authority of Lust, Transmutation and Transfiguration For now, they ought to have gathered them in one place and concealed their existence, though.

Kiritaka: "The culprit, Lust, has fled… No, even if we could catch Lust in the first place, it is doubtful they would have any intention of restoring them to normal.”

Subaru: “That’s for sure… But we can’t just leave them, right? Is there anything at all which we could do? Isn’t it even impossible for Ferris?”

The changes to the people who could not turn back to their original form were fundamentally different from injuries or disease. Seeing Subaru’s gaze, Ferris shook his head, and then bit his lips,

Ferris: “Even I simply can’t cure that. No, it isn’t about whether I can cure them or not. It isn’t an injury or disease, they were just transformed into those kind of creatures. Healing magic can only help you get back to being right as rain if you’re injured or sick. That’s why healing magic is futile against those transformations.”

Kiritaka: “To be frank, I cannot tell whether the people that have been turned into flies possess any sense of awareness. I cannot distinguish them, and a fly the size of a person cannot even fly to begin with. They have not learnt how to move their wings properly, lying in an incomplete state. But, if they have awareness…”

Subaru: “If they clearly understand their circumstances, they’d end up going crazy I guess…”

They had lost their own figures.

It was a frightening change, even just thinking about that. However, considering that they had been changed into something inhuman—into something repulsive, it made it all the more worse. With one’s body not being freed, even losing the means to express one’s own will, it was pretty easy to imagine what they would be thinking in the end.

For sure they would…

Priscilla: “Those who were transformed into vile insects would want to die, I would imagine. If there is no chance to turn them back, then would it not be merciful to bestow that?”

Al: “Princess, that’s…”

Priscilla: “Be silent, Al. There is no meaning in mere wishful lip service. I hold no mercy to dish out to slothful pigs, but killing those who revile fate by being trifled with to absurdity is also a kindness. In short, that is all it means.”

With her harsh view, Priscilla dismissed Al, who had instinctively voiced his opinion. However, the reason why Al did not make any more objections, was because Priscilla’s opinion was also correct in some sense.

Of course, he did not believe they should die. But, they had been transformed into flies, and there was no known way to get them back to normal; it was perfectly natural that they would want to die.

Subaru: “It’s impossible to negotiate with the culprit, Lust. Healing magic doesn’t fix them. What do we do?”

Kiritaka: “I wished to ask everyone about that. It does not matter, even if it is a shot in the dark. Does no one have any idea on how to cure them?”

Still seemingly clinging on to hope, Kiritaka’s question was drenched in both expectation and resignation. No, the amount of resignation was stronger. And that was natural. If there had been any possibility to cling onto, someone would have been bound to have suggested it by now.

In other words, at this point in time, without any allusions to a solution having been made so far,

Kiritaka: “—I understand. I profusely apologize for the inconvenience. Dealing with them is an issue for the city, so we shall take the responsibility afterwards.”

Subaru: “Take the responsibility? What will you all do?”

Kiritaka: “We will consider the possibilities after this… We have to check the will of those involved, and see each of their conclusions. No matter what the final opinions are, we shall see it through until the very end.”

They sounded like strong words that implied an end in which their lives would be ended, instead of the one where they could return back to normal. Kiritaka's conclusion was inevitable in a sense.

It was inevitable, but it was too soon for that conclusion.

???: "Wait—Erm, wouldn't you be able to leave it to me?"

Kiritaka: "Emilia-sama?"

Having realized that their discussion on that matter had reached its end, Emilia quickly raised her hand. She looked straight at Kiritaka whilst feeling his anxious and expectant gaze converging on her, and said,

Emilia: "A way to return them all back to normal right now… Sorry, that I don't know. But, I want you to not make any hasty conclusions. We need more time."

Kiritaka: "I understand your feelings, Emilia-sama. But, the topic is about whether they have that time in them. The big issue is for how long their spirits can maintain their equilibrium in their transformed bodies…"

Emilia: "Yeah, I know. That's why I will make time to protect their minds—It may be a crude method, but it'll surely be able to do the job. A way of putting them to sleep."

Subaru: "I see… cold sleep."

Realizing Emilia's true intentions, Subaru snapped his fingers and then raised his voice. As he felt the people around him tilting their heads quizzically due to the unfamiliar words, Subaru nodded at Emilia, who was looking at him,

Subaru: "In other words, you mean the same way as with the brides in the church, right? With Emilia-tan's magic, we'll put the transformed people into a state of suspended animation. It may end up just postponing the inevitable, but it's sufficient to put off making a conclusion. In the meanwhile, we should find a solution."

Kiritaka: "Freezing them, and keeping them sleeping… Is that possible? But, will they not end up freezing to death in their sleep?"

Emilia: "They'll be fine. It was for a short while, but I used this on the brides, so I understand the effects on one's health, and besides, I also slept for around a hundred years by myself."

Kiritaka: "You yourself slept…?!"

Although an undesired commotion spread throughout the meeting place, Subaru clenched his fist at Emilia's words.

It was unusual that Emilia was being positive about her magic and that she had insisted on trying to use it this way as well. That, and it was a fine play that even Subaru had not thought about.

It certainly was no drastic solution to the problem, but they just needed time to find a solution from somewhere other than Lust. At least, their possibilities should be increased by removing the set time limit.

In the worst case—yes, it was the worst case, but there existed a possibility.

Subaru would defeat Lust with his own hands, and plunder the Witch Factor of Lust she possessed. Or perhaps, being that it was him, it might not be possible that he could return them back to normal using the power of that Witch Factor.

He had just taken in the Witch Factor of Greed, and it was possible that reproducing the Sin Archbishop's Authority was merely a pipe dream.

Kiritaka: "…If that is possible, by all means, I would like to ask that of you, but…"

Emilia: "Let me do it. You won't regret it for sure."

Emilia repeated her request to the hesitant Kiritaka, at a loss for what to think. Kiritaka agonized about it before her earnest attitude. However, Liliana, who was at his side, tugged at the cuff of his suit.

The brown girl looked up at Kiritaka and then flared up her nostrils,

Liliana: “What are you worried about, Kiritaka-san? Why not? Let her try! After all that Emilia-sama said. It’s natural that there’s a chance of success!”

Kiritaka: “Of course, I want to believe that too, very much so, Liliana. However, this is something that involves many lives. We cannot arrive at a conclusion so easily…”

Liliana: “There’s no need to worry! Emilia-sama will not fail. Because, be~cau~se~! The great heroes of the future can all surmount such tribulations without difficulty! Those heroic tales where they surmount any wall standing in their way, no matter how tall or thick it is! Blood boiling and flesh raising, a tale which fascinates everyone is created like so!”

The gentle strum of the Lyulyre, unsuitable for the meeting place, resounded throughout.

None of Liliana’s idealistic notions had any basis, but for some reason, they did have a strange persuasive power to them. Of course, it was not so simple to make their conclusion based just on that.

Subaru: “At the least, let’s ask their families. If the staff of the City Hall are the victims, then their family should be in the same city, right? We should try and hear from them whether they leave open that possibility.”

Kiritaka: “…In regards to that question, there was not anyone who seemed to have abandoned their family.”

Subaru: “Then we can talk later about whether we will leave this to Emilia or not. And, regarding whether they will believe Emilia or not… Well, I’d like to hear about that specifically from the consensus of the city.”

Kiritaka directed his gaze towards Emilia, showing signs of hesitation. If Emilia had cowered from that look, then perhaps the debate would drag on even further.

However, Emilia nodded without fear at his clinging gaze.

Emilia: “Leave it to me—I will do it without fail.”

Confidence and conviction—even though it was somewhat of a different feeling, Emilia had shown her willingness to face her own deeds with a strong sense of self-awareness and preparedness.

Kiritaka: “…”

Kiritaka was speechless in seeing the gaze in Emilia’s eyes, and in hearing her assertion.

And not only that, the gazes of the people around which were pointed at Emilia also showed an infinite variety of reactions as if they were swaying in a wave of emotions different to the ones so far.

Finally, Kiritaka let out a deep sigh.

Kiritaka: “I un… derstand. For sure, I reckon we should endeavor to make our wishes come true rather than jumping to hasty conclusions. After all, the battle to protect Pristella, too, had seemed reckless at first.”

Emilia: “Yeah. I’m reaaally thankful.”

Kiritaka: “It is me who should be thanking you…”

Kiritaka smiled wryly at having lost his position. After the conference, and after they got permission from the victims’ families, it seemed like the cold sleep from Emilia’s magic would be realized.

Subaru replied to Emilia’s nod by giving her a thumbs up.

Having cleared up the second point of dispute, what came next was their last topic on the agenda. And that was—

???: “So, the last issue… There have been many reports of unconscious people of unknown identity that were found one after the other in various parts of the city. I would like for us to discuss this matter.”

Most likely, for the Knight who had been forgotten and had remained silent until now, it was the most important issue.

3

???: “Right now, the number of Nameless people is reported to be thirty-six. Amongst them, there are six people who appear to have been part of the Scales of the White Dragon. Furthermore, it’s very likely that the number of Nameless people will increase in the future.”

The one who led the debate and gave the report was Dynas, the representative of the Scales of the White Dragon. With his fingers, he touched the dragon crest that was embroidered on his white garb, a strong expression of regret adorning his face.

Most likely, that was the crest that denoted that they were Scales of the White Dragon. The ambiguous testimony that he had given, “Who appear to have been part of”, must have been related to that crest as well.

Felt: “It’s okay to say that the guys who were attacked by that Sin Archbishop are Nameless, right? Like, the guys who popped up out of nowhere all of a sudden, defeated.”

Kiritaka: “Taking into account the situation, it’s reasonable to think that, I’d say. Their uniforms have matching embroidery sewn in… It’s really frustrating that their identities are completely unknown.”

Dynas: “What’s more is that there are thirty more people in a similar position… It’s a complete mess. It’s unclear whether they were there all along or not, it’s difficult to judge what the best thing to do is.”

The victims of Gluttony—The people who had had their Names eaten, in some sense, were harder to deal with than the victims of Lust. After all, the victims had completely disappeared from the memories of those who knew them. On top of that, if the people in question were not conscious, then there were no clues left to find their identity.

Even with the people from the Scales of the White Dragon, while it was great that their affiliation was known, no one knew more than that. They did not know who they were caring for, or such.

Felt: “All of the Nameless that you found were unconscious, right? What was the Healing Arts User’s chic… No, guy’s prognosis on that?”

Ferris: “…It’s the same as with Lust as well. I don’t know why they’re unconscious. The result of my prognosis is that I think they are just sleeping. But this too isn’t a certainty. Those who just sleep should keep getting weaker and weaker, but then there’s the case of Rem-chan.”

To the words of Felt, Ferris looked over at Subaru and then spoke.

A year ago, having suffered the same damage from Gluttony, Ferris had given Rem a diagnosis similar to the Nameless people. The result of the prognosis had been exactly the same. And still, up until now, Rem had not woken up, and yet her health had not deteriorated.

Even though she seemed asleep, it should be said that her body was not carrying out its functions for life support. Her hair was not growing, and there was not even any excretion. She was in an unfathomable state.

Subaru: “Putting aside knowing their identities or not, the care of those people is easy. It’s better to deal with bedridden people since they’re bedridden, we can just leave them sleeping in their beds… Even though in truth, I’d like for someone who knows them to be by their side.”

Ricardo: “Since that ain’t possible, that’s the issue, ain’t it? It’s somethin’ arduous.”

Even though he knew saying that had been half-meaningless, Subaru had done it for Rem. In the real meaning, he had no other choice but to defeat Gluttony for Rem.

Even if he knew that, having offered a little bit of opposition was Subaru's self-satisfaction.

Subaru's naivety was denied by Ricardo, who had raised his voice, his face showing no traces of ill will. Upon turning to take a glimpse at his profile, Ricardo was sitting on two chairs set side-by-side, having crammed his huge body in, and was taking part in the conference.

His spirited attitude still seemed unchanged, but there was something that was different in just one place. And that was the hefty mass of bandages wrapped around him, and his right arm missing from the elbow down.

Ricardo: "Don't make such a miserable face, bro. It's true that I screwed up, but I'm alive. When ya think about what happened now, it's by far the most preferable damage."

Noticing Subaru's gaze, Ricardo raised his severed right arm up and bared his fangs. It seemed like Ricardo had lost his right arm due to an attack from Gluttony during the fierce battle of the control tower.

He'd heard that from Julius, who had been fighting at his side. Julius had also told him that Ricardo had lost his arm protecting him, and that Ricardo himself did not remember it.

As if proving that, Ricardo shifted his gaze to Subaru's side, and said,

Ricardo: "By the way, I see that handsome guy next to ya's an acquaintance of yers, bro? Looks like ya met the guy ya were searchin' for, that's a relief ain't it? Truly, thank ya for helpin' me earlier."

Julius: "…"

Calling Julius a handsome guy, Ricardo acted as if he was talking to a stranger. From the flow of the conversation, it seemed that Julius had exchanged with Ricardo the same words as back when he had tried to smokescreen Subaru at first.

Julius should have carried the injured Ricardo to the shelter, so it could be presumed that Ricardo's thanks in the end were for that.

Nevertheless, leaving this misunderstanding as-is was far too agonizing.

Besides, they had arrived to the topic of Gluttony. It was time to cut to the chase it seemed.

Subaru: "I have something which I want to talk to everyone about. It's something important that's related to the Nameless."

Standing up, Subaru got the attention of everyone in the hall to himself.

Right now, the one who had the most information on how to deal with the Nameless was Subaru. He felt everyone's gazes naturally filled with anticipation of a solution for this state of affairs, however he shook his head.

Subaru: "I'm sorry for having caused anticipation, in all honesty, this isn't something which will yield hope immediately. But I have to talk about this."

Anastasia: "Ya know, if ya give it such an extravagant preface, yer bound to make us fret. What are ya plannin' to say?"

Anastasia threw in a few joking words to Subaru to try and relieve some of the tension in the place. However, it was her who should be the one most prepared for this. Otherwise, the fact had the potential to turn her current state of mind inside out from the roots.

Subaru took a quick breath, and then looked at everyone's faces. And finally, he looked at Julius, who nodded despite looking tense.

Seeing that, Subaru then pointed to the neighboring Julius with his hand, and asked his question.

Subaru: "Is there anyone here who knows the name of this man?"

Everyone: "…"

Silence prevailed in the meeting place to Subaru's question.

The time that was kept in silence was not borne out of a lack of understanding, though. It was because everyone sensed the intent of Subaru's question, and were contemplating about Julius's position.

And on that basis, if nobody said a word, it meant that there was no one with any idea about Julius's identity.

Subaru: "Al! What about you? Don't you remember his face?"

Al: "Ah? What's up, bro? Why are you nominating me all of a sudden?"

Having had his name abruptly called out, Al raised his voice in sheer surprise. That behavior was enough to prove that he had memories of Julius inside of him, but, even so, he had to make sure.

Subaru placed his hand on the roundtable and posed his question to Al, whilst leaning forward towards him.

Subaru: "Do you really not know why? It's what you and I have in common. So, do you not remember this guy? Well? Reply to me."

Al: "…Ah, so that's why. Sorry, bro. I know what you mean, but I don't think I can help you. That guy's nowhere to be found in my head."

Subaru: "Are you completely sure? If you think a little more seriously…"

Julius: "That's enough—That's plenty enough, Subaru."

As someone summoned from another world—Al presumed the intention behind those series of questions based off of that, but he had not nodded his head. Nonetheless, it was Julius himself who stopped the unrelenting Subaru.

Julius clapped Subaru's shoulder with a forlorn smile on his face, and bowed at Al.

Julius: "I over-expected, I apologize. We apologize for our impoliteness."

Al: “You have no reason to apologize. I don’t know… If there was such a reason to or not, but you don’t need to apologize to me.”

Waving his sole arm, Al turned his gaze away from Julius.

There were no signs of falsehood in his reaction. It was probably true that Al did not remember Julius. Then, that meant part of Subaru’s conjecture was incorrect.

The world one originated from had nothing to do with the effect of the Authority of Gluttony.

In that case, then, the most likely reason after all was the Witch Factor inside Subaru’s body. And it seemed to be limited to isolation with the outside world according to Beatrice’s Door Crossing.

Wilhelm: “Judging from the story, Subaru-dono. This young man was involved with us… And in addition to that, I also think he is someone who was in a fairly important position?”

Wilhelm spoke out towards Subaru, sharing his deduction after observing the trio’s exchange. Others would have most likely come to the same conclusion which the wisened swordsman did.

Subaru nodded at Wilhelm, and then he turned to look towards Julius,

Subaru: “This is Julius. Julius Juukulius. Like all of you guessed, his Name was eaten by Gluttony, and he ended up as one of the Nameless people. But the process is different than the others who were unconscious—His consciousness remains.”

Ferris: “We have such a case? He’s forgotten by those around him, but he himself remembers… So, is this person one of ours?”

With disbelief on his face, Ferris swept his gaze from Subaru to Julius and then back again many times over. To the shivering Ferris’s words, Reinhard tucked his chin in and said, “It seems so”. The Sword Saint gazed at Julius with his tranquil eyes, and said,

Reinhard: “Before the conference, Subaru asked me the same question as well. He… Julius was likely an acquaintance of mine or Ferris. Or maybe the word “acquaintance” is insufficient to describe our relationship. A friend, perhaps.”

Julius: “…At least, I thought of you both as friends. If you both considered me a friend in the same way, nothing would make me feel more honored.”

Ferris: “Friends… Then, Julius, you’re a Knight as well? One of the Royal Guard?”

Both Reinhard and Ferris were bewildered at having been called a friend by a stranger. Their reaction could not be avoided, thus Julius corrected them half in resignation.

Subaru’s insides were burning in anger as he watched the trio’s exchange.

What a warped, nauseating scene it was.

Subaru was not privy to the details on how the three of them had met, how they ended up becoming friends, and what their friendship was like. Even so, as colleagues, as friends, the three of them should have interacted with each other in a close, naturally familiar manner. Now there was nary a trace left of those certain bonds.

When Rem’s Name had been eaten, and everyone had forgotten her existence, Subaru had thought there was nothing that existed in this world that was more sorrowful than that.

But, what about Julius’s current condition? The sensation of complete loss that invaded him from being abandoned by everyone in the world; if that were not sad, then what was?

Sadness was not something you could compare. But, even if it was, this was far too cruel.

Anastasia: “…I guess it ain’t somethin’ like him bein’ a plain ol’ Royal Guard.”

Out of the blue, Anastasia’s words butted in between the painful first meeting of those friends.

She put a thoughtful expression across her gentle features, and licked her lips as she touched her jaw. Then, she pointed at Ricardo before then pointing at Julius,

Anastasia: “Julius-san was the one who brought back, on his shoulders, the grievously injured Ricardo. Straight after, we talked a bit about Ricardo’s treatment, then he immediately left sayin’ that he had to go and search for someone… I guess that’s why you reacted the way ya did, right?”

Julius: “Anastasia-sama…”

It was the second time master and servant met for the first time, a meeting that should not normally occur. Recalling the bitter memories of that time, Julius spoke out the name of his master with anguish on his face.

However, Anastasia did not even take notice of the presence of the quivering devotion that had been put into those words. She thought for a moment, and then raised one of her fingers.

Anastasia: “Julius-san’s Nameless case is a rather unusual one. We don’t know how many people in the city are in the same state, but mayhaps there’s a possibility that other people are like the unconscious Nameless, still yet to be identified. There’s no doubt that this, too, is a serious situation. Ain’t that right?”

Moving her gaze away from Julius, Anastasia directed the theme to the outline of the debate. It looked like the matter of Julius’s identity had been postponed as one of the problems that could not be resolved.

That was pretty unjust treatment for the current Julius, but Subaru was the only one in this place who could feel outraged by it.

Anastasia: “In light of these problems… I have a proposal, though, is that okay?”

Subaru: “A proposal?”

Subaru's innermost feelings were put aside, and the attention of the conference was once again directed at Anastasia. Being the center of attention, Anastasia looked around the surroundings, before finally settling her gaze on Subaru and Julius.

Anastasia: "The victims of the Witch Cult… The victims of Lust, and those Nameless from Gluttony. Askin' the Sin Archbishop in question for a solution for each of these is hopeless, are we in agreement with that?"

Kiritaka: "It would be difficult to force them to speak, in that sense, you are correct, I guess. But, an overly-pessimistic opinion could, on the contrary, result in clouding our view."

Anastasia: "That doesn't mean I'm thinkin' about the worst either. But, there ain't just one way to get an answer, I just wanted to say that."

Subaru: "There's a different way to get an answer?"

Subaru ended up parroting back Anastasia's words without comprehending their meaning.

A different solution to asking the corresponding Sin Archbishops, who were the culprits behind the damage—if such a way existed, it would probably be close to a Witch's deal.

For a split second, a choice which Subaru must not make crossed his mind, in that, if it truly were the Witch of Greed, she would perhaps know the answer.

Emilia: "So, what do you mean? Please tell us clearly."

However, Emilia asked Anastasia about the true meaning of her words in place of Subaru, who was busy shaking his head denying that idea. And then, whilst drumming her head with her fingers, Anastasia said,

Anastasia: "If we can't get the information out of those crooked Sin Archbishops, then we oughta ask it to another person who may know—such a person exists. Someone from this country, who may know a way."

???: “There’s no way…”

Having guessed the meaning of Anastasia’s words, someone spoke that out in a hoarse voice.

However, unlike everyone else around him, who had realized what she was on about, Subaru had no idea what her statement meant.

Felt: “I don’t understand. Don’t put on airs, and say it clearly.”

Felt sulkily demanded that from Anastasia, her understanding the same as Subaru’s. Anastasia gave a wry smile to Felt’s words, and apologized with an “I’m sorry, I’m sorry”,

Anastasia: “—The Sage Shaula.”

Felt: “Ah?”

Anastasia: “The Pleiades Watchtower, if it’s the Sage who should be there… If they’re the person of legend who sees everythin’ in the world, it wouldn’t be strange if they knew, right?”

So she spoke, revealing the true intentions behind her proposal.

Chapter 79:
The Sage's Watchtower

1

Anastasia: "The Sage Shaula…"

When Anastasia mentioned that name, a stir spread throughout the meeting place.

Whilst everyone exchanged glances with each other and put on expressions like they could not believe what they had heard, only Subaru was left behind from this situation.

Subaru patted Emilia's shoulder beside him whilst he put on a troubled expression and said,

Subaru: "Uh, is this Sage Shaula someone famous?"

Emilia: "…Subaru, didn't you read the story of the Witch when you studied the alphabet? I thought that nursery-tale was in the book that you were reading a lot."

Subaru: "The nursery-tale's Witch… Ah, that picture book. Now that you mention it, I'd thought that the Witch's story was listed as well for sure."

That which was pointed out by Emilia brought up old memories of a year ago in him.

Though he had been buried by the memories of those hectic days, a year ago, he had studied the alphabet in a picture book for children —At the time when he had just started to help out at the Roswaal mansion.

It was a collection of classics that compiled the popular nursery-tales in this world; amongst them, there had been an illustrated one about the Witch of Envy for sure. However, in that tale…

Subaru: "In all honesty, its contents weren't that detailed, so I didn't fully understand everything. The most I got out of it was that long ago, at a certain place, the Witch did something terrible.”

Emilia: “Was it really that vague… Hmmmmm, let me think.”

???: “—The symbol of terror that once brought chaos and ruin to this world, the Witch of Envy.”

When Emilia sank into thought, pondering how she would explain it to Subaru, who had displayed his ignorance, it was Julius, who was sitting opposite to her, who opened his mouth instead of her.

Julius: “All that was recorded was that she was a half-elf with an infinitely cruel and ruthless personality, and that she had tremendous magical power with which she controlled shadows. Other than that, her name… We only know that her name is Satella. Even now, the scars that being left behind on the world remain strong.”

Subaru: “…Ehhh.”

Subaru lifted his chin up at Julius’s explanation, who had kept his emotions in check as best as he could. He focused on giving a neutral explanation, but the change in his state of mind was painfully shown regardless, even though no one around them mentioned it. In the meantime, his explanation continued.

Julius: “At the Great Waterfall, at the far east of Lugunica, there lays a shrine made from Magical Sealing Stones. Even now, that Witch is sealed up in that shrine. All the while, she spews out a huge amount of Miasma.”

Subaru: “…I heard that she couldn’t be destroyed. But, how did they manage to seal such a powerful Witch?”

Julius: “That is where the name of the Sage from before comes into play.”

Julius nodded after hearing Subaru’s question. The Knight touched the sword at his waist, and looked towards the end of the roundtable—Right at the red-haired youth.

Julius: “Four-hundred years ago, three great heroes contributed to the sealing of the Witch of Envy. One of those was the Sword Saint, Reid Astrea—The sword’s heaven-sent child who was the first to acquire the Divine Protection of the Sword Saint, and the title which Reinhard inherited.”

Reinhard: “There are also records that show that Reid Astrea, the first Sword Saint, did not possess the Divine Protection. Not all known legends are unconditionally true. Of course, it is a fact that Reid-sama created the current Astrea family and the name of the Sword Saint, though.”

Reinhard, who was said person’s descendant, supplemented what Julius, who was looking at him, had said.

However, considering it regarded his ancestor, who had accomplished great deeds that had been left behind in history, Reinhard’s expression when talking about it was somewhat brooding. He also seemed to be worried about Julius when it came to that. It did not look like he was going to insist on the subject regarding the inherited Divine Protection.

In any case,

Subaru: “So, the Sage was a companion of that Sword Saint, that’s the gist I’m getting.”

Emilia: “More accurately, the Sage Shaula, and the Divine Dragon Volcanica… You know, the dragon that protects the Kingdom of Lugunica. It’s said that it started with a promise whereby Volcanica joined forces in battle to seal the Witch of Envy, and now, even to this day, still watches over the Kingdom.”

He had heard the name of the Divine Dragon Volcanica many times, back at the place where the Royal Selection candidates expressed their determination.

In his memories, the Dragon’s Blood had always been heralded as something able to bring fertility to ravaged earth, let one overcome any disease, and make one either immense or unrivaled.

Julius: “It is customary to refer to the Sword Saint, the Sage, and the Divine Dragon as the Three Great Heroes. You ought to remember that.”

Subaru: “Whoaaa, don’t get fired up… I get it, thank you for the explanation.”

Subaru raised his hand at Julius and Emilia, before then taking a glimpse at Beatrice. Upon noticing Subaru’s gaze, she slowly shook her head.

Unfortunately, Beatrice did not seem to be familiar with the legend from four-hundred years ago.

Beatrice was an Artificial Spirit created by Echidna, but other than the necessary information to maintain the Forbidden Library, she had been completely estranged from it. He got the impression that she was unaware of the circumstances behind-the-scenes around that matter, because she had been fairly impervious to the ways of the world, as she had shut herself in for such a long time.

Subaru: “I’m sorry for bringing the debate to a standstill. Let’s continue talking. But, this Sage Shaula…”

After he apologized for interrupting the discussion, Subaru took the initiative to try and bring the conversation back to its original course. But, he noticed something strange whilst he talked, and he could not help but tilt his head at it.

He understood the background of this Sage, Shaula, a hero from four-hundred years ago, but—

Subaru: “Ehh, what? They’re still alive? After four-hundred years?”

Emilia: “Is that so strange…? I’m around a hundred-years-old as well, in truth…”

Everyone Else: “—?!”

On hearing Subaru’s mutter, a mystified look appeared across Emilia’s face as she put one of her fingers to her lips. The meeting place stirred a little at that murmur, but Subaru on the contrary only replied with a “You’ve got a point”.

If he slowed down and thought about it, the half-elf Emilia’s real age was in excess of a hundred years, and Beatrice was a loli around four-hundred-years-old. It felt to him like Puck, too, had mentioned that he was four-hundred-years-old; in that case, did that not mean the average age of the Emilia Camp was about a hundred-years-old, perhaps?

Subaru: “Putting aside that pretty shocking fact… What about the Sage’s current state?”

Julius: “They are alive—On that, it seems that there is no doubt.”

Subaru: “Seems…?”

Subaru frowned at Julius’s unclear response.

But, Julius was not the only one unable to answer clearly, everyone around was the same. Especially those of the Royal Guards, Ferris and Reinhard, who looked troubled.

Subaru: “Well, what does that mean?”

Julius: “Their whereabouts are known, and I dare say that them being alive is confirmed too. However, no human being has managed to exchange words with the Sage… That is its meaning, I guess.”

Subaru: “Once again, what does that mean?”

They knew their whereabouts, and even though it was vague, they had been able to confirm the person as being alive. But, getting into contact with them was impossible. He thought he could put all of those impressions together, but…

Julius: “Currently, the Sage Shaula is in the tower near the Witch’s Shrine, and has always secluded themselves there so as to stop those who plan to revive the Witch of Envy. Always, since that time.”

Subaru: “…For all of four-hundred years?”

Julius: “For all of four-hundred years.”

It was an absurd story.

Beatrice, who had kept herself secluded in the Forbidden Library for four-hundred years, was already quite the case, but that Sage Shaula, or whoever, was also quite a stubborn individual.

Ferris: “The tower in which Sage Shaula lives—That’s the Pleiades Watchtower, right? There, the esteemed Sage continues to toil night and day to prevent the Witch’s revival.”

Subaru: “…Mhm, the tower’s name makes me think of something, but it’s of no importance, do continue.”

Ferris: “Even if you’re telling me to continue, that’s pretty much it, you know? The Sage Shaula gives it their all and continues to watch over the Shrine to ensure the peace of the world, that’s what is said.”

“And that is that”, Ferris said whilst clapping with a sullen look on his face.

Even if he said that that was the end, it was clear from his attitude that the story had not completely finished there, considering that what he had said could not explain the funeral-like mood around the meeting place.

Naturally, there must be some reason why they were like that—

Subaru: “Then, by any chance are they a troubling individual?”

Anastasia: “To ensure peace in the world, the Sage Shaula continues to watch over the Witch… Their name’s known far and wide throughout the world. I’ve known about ‘em too, since the time I was in Kararagi. But, at the same time, the Sage Shaula’s also known in this other way.”

Subaru: “—?”

Anastasia smiled gracefully, pausing between her words for a second.

And then, whilst looking at Subaru, who had a bad feeling about this, she spoke.

Anastasia: “The Sage Shaula’s someone with extreme trust issues who can’t trust a single soul—No matter what the purpose of those approachin’ the Watchtower and the Shrine may be, they massacre all of ‘em, or so I hear.”

2

—According to Anastasia’s explanation, they were like that.

Sage Shaula had built the Pleiades Watchtower and continued to watch over the Witch’s Shrine.

So far, there had been many people who had tried to get in contact with the Sage, but all their plans failed, causing them to give up.

That was because of the interference of none other than Sage Shaula themself.

Anastasia: “The Great Waterfall at the far east of Lugunica… It seems that the Witch’s Shrine and the Watchtower are ‘round there, but the Sage doesn’t know which of the two aims people approachin’ have, wouldn’t’cha think?”

Therefore, the Sage killed indiscriminately, regardless of whether it was a wretched Witch Cultist who was trying to find the Witch’s Shrine, or a person who was trying to get in friendly contact with the Sage of the Watchtower.

The subject’s good or evil, their likes and dislikes, their righteousness or malintent, none of that mattered, since that was the best way forward.

As a result, there were no reports or records left behind of anyone being able to get in contact with Sage Shaula, in all of these four-hundred years.

Ferris: “Buuuut, since the situation where they attack anyone approaching has been going on and on, we can at least be sure that Sage Shaula is still in the Watchtower even nyow.”

Subaru: “They sure are a damn annoying Sage…”

Ferris: “It’s nyot like that. In fact, there are many Witch Cultists who try to get near the Shrine, more than you can imagine, Subaru-kyun. The Sage-san deals with every single one of them, they’re just steadfastly keeping by their goal of preventing the revival of the Witch of Envy.”

Even though he had stated his positive opinion, Ferris’s expression did not clear up. All the members of the Royal Guard had the same unrestful look on their face; for that to be the case, there may have been an experience where the Sage had dished out a painful lesson to the Royal Guard.

On the other hand, Subaru nodded at Ferris’ sugarcoated opinion.

Certainly, if one were to look at it from the “do whatever it takes to achieve the goal” point of view, it would be incredibly annoying, but if taking into account the evil nature of a Witch Cultist, it was a natural precaution.

Rather, it was because there was someone who continued to keep guard over the Witch of Envy that it was conceivable to even think that this world had some sort of security system in effect against the Witch of Envy.

Priscilla: “Fleeting is the night, I care not about the true colors of the hermit who lives in trepidation insofar as time permits them to. What is important is the fact that they are borrowing my limited time. I shall return post-haste to the inn if you continue with this useless prattle. I must get Schult to massage my feet.”

Schult: “Y-Yes ma’am. Priscilla-sama has worked hard and is greatly fatigued! I appreciate that with all my heart.”

Having been embraced and buried in her huge breasts, Schult replied with a red face. Priscilla, who stroked the boy with the smile of a villainess on her face, had not found much worth in this conference in the first place.

It was something of a miracle that she had come all the way here without throwing a tantrum.

Felt: “Even though like I’m not on that Princess’s side, I also agree that we gotta get back on topic soon. Tell us about the Sage.”

Felt demanded that they cut back to the main topic, a look of impatience adorning her face. Agreeing with that state of affairs, Subaru turned to look back at Anastasia.

Subaru: “Though we’ve kept interrupting you over and over, what did you say is up with this reclusive Sage?”

Anastasia: “Sooo, the story finally goes back to the start.”

Anastasia clapped her hands. Then, she looked over at the faces of everyone who sat at the roundtable while still gently touching her fox scarf,

Anastasia: “—Like everyone knows, the Sage Shaula helped with the sealin’ of the Witch of Envy with their unparalleled wisdom and magical power. As well as a wide range of insight that’s said they see through the world with, and knowledge that’s said they know everythin’ about this world. If both of those are true without exaggeration… Then don’t’cha think they should know someway to do somethin’ about what the Witch Cult left behind as well?”

Subaru: “…But, isn’t what you’re saying just wishful thinking really?”

Anastasia: “Does that mean yer against it, Natsuki-kun?”

Even though it seemed like she had returned his question with another one, an answer for Anastasia’s was difficult.

Trying to rely on it by simply looking at their title of Sage was the honest recourse. In respect to that, Subaru did not think it was a bad idea, even. If they were someone who had accomplished achievements that went as far as remaining in legend, then maybe they really did know a way to counteract the Witch Factors of Sin.

But, a different anxiety had taken ahold of Subaru. The name of the Sage, Shaula, and the Pleiades Watchtower where they lived. Those two keywords refused to allow him to obediently accept her proposal.

Because “Shaula” and “Pleiades”, were both words which Subaru was familiar with.

Subaru: “…”

According to Subaru’s modern knowledge, “Shaula” was the name corresponding to the second brightest star of Scorpio.

The “Pleiades” from the Pleiades Watchtower was far more explicit, in that it was the name of the star cluster known as the Pleiades Cluster—Its name in Japanese, was “Subaru”.

Of course, he did not think it was anything that denoted “Natsuki Subaru”, but the name of the celestial bodies which he knew about cropping up in this world was enough for his alert levels to rise to the MAX.

The Witch Cult’s Sin Archbishops—Petelgeuse, Regulus, Sirius, Capella, Alphard, Batenkaitos.

Currently, all the Sin Archbishops whose names had come to light bore the names of stars from Subaru’s world in their own names; it was impossible to not hold preconceived notions towards Sage Shaula and the Pleiades Watchtower.

Ferris: “Putting aside Subaru-kyun’s dissenting opinion…”

Ferris cut into the conversation in place of Subaru, who remained taciturn without coming up with a successful objection. He placed his finger on his cheek, and whilst he assumed his normal attitude with the exception of a stern look in his eyes, he said,

Ferris: “The view itself of visiting the Sage Shaula may be good, but isn’t there an issue on how we’ll do it? Is there any way? Even when no one has managed to reach the Watchtower?”

Felt: “The reason no one has is ‘cause the Sage is too strong, that’s how it goes, yeah?”

Felt raised a question at Ferris's tantalizing words, whilst she crossed her legs on top of her chair. She gave a fleeting look in Reinhard's direction.

Well, if it was simply a matter of not being a match for the Sage's powers, then—

Felt: "We could manage it if it's Reinhard, right? He's got no other use except being strong, but when it comes to just that, he's insaaaane~."

Reinhard: "It's unusual that Felt-sama gives me praise, thank you very much."

Felt: "This is what I meant."

Felt sullenly tch'ed at Reinhard's response. However, immediately after that, Reinhard lowered his eyebrows as if he were troubled.

Like that, he spoke out with a "But," prefacing it apologetically,

Reinhard: "Unfortunately, I was unable to reach the Watchtower. I lacked the strength."

Felt: "…This guy lacking strength, isn't that a lil' alarming?"

Julius: "He does not mean a lack of combat power, Felt-sama. There is no area in this world where Reinhard's true strength would be incapable of reaching, I would say. But, the Pleiades Watchtower is a different problem to such impediments."

Ferris: "So you know the details… Though, if you were a Royal Guard, that's natural, I guess."

Ferris's face turned to one of discomfort on hearing Julius's follow-up to Reinhard's words. Looking at the strained relations between the three Royal Guards from the corner of his eye, Subaru spoke out to Reinhard, and said,

Subaru: "What was your purpose in trying to meet the Sage?"

Reinhard: "It was an order from the Kingdom. For a cure for the disease, that it was—It was about two years ago.”

Subaru: “Two years ago…”

The phrases “disease” and “two years ago” allowed Subaru to understand the circumstances.

Two years prior from today, the members of the Royal Family had fallen ill one after the other to an unknown disease, right at the Royal Castle. It was an epidemic for which no cure was known—Most likely, they had ordered Reinhard to get in contact with the Sage to learn a cure for that disease.

But he did not accomplish it, that explained the gloomy faces of the three Royal Guards.

Reinhard: “The Watchtower and the Shrine, they are located at the Great Waterfall, at the eastern edge of Lugunica—surrounded by the Augria Sand Dunes. The Watchtower can be seen in the distance from the entrance of the sand dunes. So you should not lose sight of that place, but…”

Subaru: “But?”

Julius: “There are many strange phenomena that occur frequently in the sand dunes, so that you cannot get closer to the Watchtower. One theory says it is because of the Miasma that is seeping out from the Shrine.”

Reinhard: “On top of that, the Augria Sand Dunes have turned into a haunt for Witchbeasts who are drawn in by the Miasma. In that land full of Miasma, the ferocity and strength of the Witchbeasts is off the charts. Even in that sense, going there in the first place is considered to be suicidal.”

Subaru: “So it’s a wayward desert, with a haunt for Witchbeasts. For sure it’s hell…”

In addition to the troublesomeness of the Sage themselves, there was a desert which not even Reinhard could cross, and a metric ton of Witchbeasts which roamed the desert—Regarding this, the factors for abandoning the ploy were too many.

It was understandable that getting in touch with the Sage had not been achieved even once over the period of four-hundred years.

Anastasia: "—Yes, but what if there was a way to cross that hell?"

Everyone: "…"

Everyone raised their faces up at her sudden words, just as a gloomy atmosphere had begun to enshroud them.

Anastasia smiled in satisfaction on account of having butted in at precisely the right moment. Then, she nodded so that everyone could see,

Anastasia: "There is, that's why I even bothered mentionin' the Sage's name."

Ferris: "Anastasia-sama from Kararagi, you know a means to reach the Sage who has been in seclusion for four-hundred years, at this time…? What sort of means is it?"

Anastasia: "You'll ruin yer pretty face. I'm goin' to explain it to ya even without that bristly face."

Carelessly turning aside Ferris, who had gotten himself worked up, Anastasia removed her scarf from her neck. And then, she unrolled her scarf on top of the roundtable and lifted the head part,

Anastasia: "I mentioned her before the defensive battle, my Artificial Spirit, Echidna. This little one knows a way to the Pleiades Watchtower—That's why we can go and meet the Sage of the Watchtower."

Subaru: "…"

Subaru's breath caught on hearing Anastasia's declaration.

The Artificial Spirit Echidna, that being which disguised itself as a fox scarf, was the key to reaching the Sage.

???: "—I am receiving so much attention, huh. You are making me blush!"

Saying that, the fox Spirit lifted her neck.

Subaru did not know how much he could trust her, much alike the Witch which she had borrowed her name from.

Chapter 80:
Leaving Behind Ripples on the Water's Surface

1

???: "—So, let's start, shall we."

Emilia let her beautiful, crystal-clear voice echo throughout the room as she tensed her face slightly.

She spoke to everyone in the room with her silver bell-like voice—Or perhaps she had said it to persuade herself; either way, she raised both of her slender arms.

Emilia: "…"

Closing her eyes, Emilia began to concentrate her Mana to both of her raised hands.

Great magical power swirled around, and she mustered the utmost concentration to handle it with precision. If she lacked either power or precision, she would be unable to achieve her goal; this was an endeavor which only she could pursue.

Emilia: "…"

Countless gazes poured down on Emilia who met her great sorcery head-on with a serious expression on her face. The women and children were huddled together, watching over her actions with bated breath.

Some were holding each other's hands, while others had closed their eyes as if in prayer or wishing; they shared only hope and anxiety as they trembled.

Subaru: "…It must be tough on them."

And, at the tail end of the same room, Subaru was silently observing Emilia, who was being showered in many complex emotions.

The area they were in was a part of the underground facilities of the city of Pristella.

Originally, it had been a cellar that had stored emergency provisions. Its current almost-empty state was ideal for their intended purpose. Nothing was placed in the stone cellar, and its spaciousness seemed to emphasize its bleakness and chilliness.

But, it ought to be suitable for their current purpose, precisely because it was that kind of place.

Subaru: “Though, I wouldn’t say that’s a good thing.”

Beatrice: “Quit muttering sentimentalities, I suppose. It wouldn’t be good if someone heard you, and you’ll also end up messing up Emilia’s concentration, in fact.”

Standing beside Subaru, who had let that mutter accidentally slip out, Beatrice gave him her advice.

The girl, who held Subaru’s left hand with one hand and played with her drill curls with her other, stared at the white ritual that was being held in front of her eyes. Her pale blue eyes seemed like they were holding back pain in some respect to Subaru.

Subaru: “Since it’s Emilia, it will be okay. Don’t worry about it so much.”

Beatrice: “…Don’t get the wrong idea, I suppose. Betty is not worried about Emilia, but about Subaru, in fact. Empathizing with the emotions of literally everybody is a bad habit, I suppose.”

Subaru: “I see.”

The strength of her hand holding his grew stronger, and Subaru bent his lips into the shape of an arc at the girl’s concern.

He knew what Beatrice wanted to say, as well as what she was worried about. However, his decision after he had understood that was based off of his current determination.

On that point, he could not yield. Even though he knew that it would just amount to trouble.

Emilia: “…”

Away from Subaru and Beatrice’s hushed exchange of words, Emilia’s ritual continued on.

Emilia, who was concentrating with all her might, had beads of sweat trickling down her forehead as she panted out misted breaths. She was giving it her everything in mind and body to control the enormous amounts of Mana.

A pale-blue light, originating from in between Emilia’s hands, began to faintly envelop the cellar. Although the cold air was cold enough to fog up his sight, the chill did not pierce into his skin, it was gentle as if it were embracing his exposed heart.

He had heard that people who fell into hypothermia and were on the verge of death forgot about the cold. Extreme cold took away from people the ability to tell the temperature correctly, and granted them warmth as a parting gift before snatching their lives away, this he had learned.

Subaru vaguely thought about whether something akin to that was happening in this white world, but he immediately shook his head, dismissing it as plain stupid.

Pale-blue light filled the room, and the cold air converged to its center. And, in the middle of the light, there was—

???: “…”

A huge black creature, curled up with its wings folded—A black dragon that was lying down.

The strange creatures did not stop there, there were also flies roughly the size of people gathered around the black dragon. In all, they would give the impression of a nightmarish scene.

However, Subaru did not feel any revulsion at this scene.

—No. To be precise, he was strongly aware that he should not feel revulsion towards the black dragon and the human flies.

They were victims, innocents without any fault. They were victims of the malice of the Sin Archbishop of Lust, victims who had been transformed into inhumanities.

Subaru, and everyone else, currently did not know a way to restore their mutated bodies back to normal. That was why they had chosen this measure.

Subaru: “It may be that we’re just postponing the inevitable, but…”

Beatrice: “It will get us time, and even just that can be a salvation, in fact. Since you’re trying to hurry things up, your outlook is getting narrower, so you can’t see the options that you’d normally be able to. Not being aware of that, or realizing it later… both of those are cruelties, I suppose.”

Beatrice replied with something of a monologue to Subaru’s mutters. Her small, feeble sigh contained an insightfulness and sentimentality which only those who had spent a long, long time thinking could have.

Feeling that at the end of her words, Subaru just silently stroked her head without saying a single word back.

Beatrice: “…What is it, in fact.”

Subaru: “It’s nothing.”

No matter how much time they took, they would not necessarily be able to make the right choice. Sometimes, even if time were to be given, there were cases where one would be unable to make the right choice.

Nevertheless, they could act so that the option chosen would be the best one.

The answer which Subaru had produced to Beatrice’s four-hundred years had been like so.

And so, he hoped that the time brought to the tragedy that struck the city, would also be like so.

Subaru: "…"

The climax of the cold air that filled the cellar overlapped with Subaru's strong emotions, and finally a sound like the air cracking, or so he thought, resounded throughout—

Emilia: "…It ended up going safely."

Emilia turned around whilst breathing out misted breaths.

She quickly bowed her head at that place, a little out of breath—behind her, with their whole bodies covered in white crystal, were the lives of all of the souls who had been encased inside of ice.

Subaru: "—Tch."

The members of their families were weeping, and their significant others were sobbing in tears.

Their sorrowful wails came out before any thanks, and they cruelly echoed throughout the cellar.

For a very, very long time, their wails continued to echo throughout, as if their sorrow had no end to it, being separated from their loved ones until goodness knows when.

2

???: "For now, it seems like Emilia-sama's proposal turned out well… Would I be okay to feel relieved by that?"

Having been informed about the conference at the meeting place, as well as Emilia's subsequent work to freeze the mutation victims—Otto nodded, looking relieved.

They were somewhere away from the shelters, in a private room at a hospital, where he had been carried to.

His condition on top of his bed still had not changed, with both of his legs painfully wrapped in bandages. Even so, at least he had managed to leave the field hospital's treatment, and it was possible to say that his cramping legs looked like they had improved quite a bit.

In fact, Otto's position was that of one of the valorous people who had contributed to the city's defense, so it would have been nice if he had gotten higher quality medical treatment. However, Otto had not told them that, so Subaru opted not to say anything, since Otto had probably been considering those around him.

Subaru: "Hospitality that is presumed without saying anything… That's the true meaning of wabi-sabi."

Otto: "Although you are here, Natsuki-san, your mind is elsewhere; that's the same as always, so it is fine, but anyways… Thank you for your hard work, Emilia-sama."

Disregarding the nodding Subaru, Otto thanked Emilia for her hard work, who had come to visit him. She drew her eyebrows down on hearing his thanks and said,

Emilia: "Nah, it's alright. More importantly, I'm sorry for going through with it on my own without consulting with Otto-kun. But, it was because I'd thought it was something only I could do."

Otto: "Ah, it's fine. I'm not angry since your actions were undoubtedly precious, good deeds. Besides, they were very valuable actions even in a calculating sense."

Emilia: "Calculating…?"

Otto: "It probably would have been better if you understood what I meant, but if you do not, even if you do not… No, how can I put it? Regarding that, honestly, it's really difficult for me to decide which would be better."

Subaru: "Don't think about it, feel it. That is EMT."

Emilia was not quite aware of the result of her own actions. With some magic words, Subaru serenely brushed Otto aside, who lay perplexed at Emilia's attitude. He then continued by saying "More importantly", Subaru: “Your legs, they seem like they won’t be usable for a while, right?”

Otto: “With Pristella’s current state, it will be difficult to treat them more than this, right? The number of Healing Arts Users in the city is not enough to take care of all the injured. I think it may be better to move to a hospital in another city, but it seems that Kiritaka-san sent out as many messengers as he could to the neighboring cities, and requested for Healing Arts Users. That is why quietly waiting here for healers from one of those places to come by, would perhaps be more prudent than going back to the mansion.”

Laughing weakly with a “Haha”, Otto would be forced to withdraw from the frontlines for a while.

Wounds as severe as Otto’s could not be so easily cured without a mage fairly proficient in the use of healing magic. They had to be at Ferris-level, or Beatrice’s when she was in the Forbidden Library.

Subaru: “Ferris is constantly tending to Crusch, and our Healing Special Attack Corps Leader is going around Pristella… The reason being is that family of course.”

Emilia: “Those three, the mother and two siblings, right? That person who had the form of a dragon is the father, so it was a family of four, I think.”

Their Special Attack Corps Leader was not present, right now—No, he should not refer to him like that, Garfiel is what he meant.

Currently, he was going around the city which was short of working hands, and working as hard as he could on the repair work. By nature, Garfiel was a kind, well-put-together young man. Even if he felt nothing for the city, if there were people in need, he would end up helping them without hesitation.

But, even so, his commitment to Pristella was second to none. And Subaru could more or less imagine the reason why.

Subaru: “That he didn’t tell us must mean that there are various complex circumstances, I guess.”

Emilia: “Yeah, that has to be it… Indeed, changing the subject, but don’t you think that Garfiel and that family resemble each other a bit? Their hair color and eye color are completely identical.”

Subaru: “Emilia-tan, you know that the subject hasn’t changed right?”

Emilia: “Eh?!”

Putting the surprised Emilia to one side, Garfiel was in such a condition.

Under normal circumstances, he himself should have sustained damage that would not be possible to call minor throughout his body, but due to his Divine Protection of Earth Spirits and his boundless physical strength, he had no intention of resting.

In addition, Mimi, who had been a pain to her little brothers with her wounds reopening and what-not, was also tagging along with him, so there had not been any ruckus around.

Otto: “Well, in regards to Garfiel’s true feelings, I would imagine one day he will reveal them on his own. We do not need to try and pry it out of him. More importantly…”

Emilia: “Hmm?”

Otto: “Ah, no, since both of you did not mention it at all, I did not say anything either, but why does Beatrice-san look so moody?”

Inclining the top half of his body, Otto turned the flow of conversation to a corner of the hospital room—Beatrice was there, puffing out her red cheeks, visibly shaking her head from left to right with a sullen look in her eyes.

Subaru nodded and responded with an “Ah” to that question.

Subaru: “It’s because of that, you know. She’s in a bad mood because we went to the Restoration Master on your errand and ended up being turned away… When you look at it from multiple perspectives, wouldn’t that be your fault?”

Otto: “No! You are going too far there… Right, Emilia-sama?”

Emilia: “Mhm, you’re right. It’s a Contractor’s natural obligation to take care of their Spirit. So, the one who needs to cheer Beatrice up has to be Subaru.”

Subaru: “You mentioned cheering up, but even when you say that, I don’t have many memories of Emilia-tan taking care of Puck.”

Emilia: “Don’t nitpick with that! Besides, I’ve done tons of stuff when Subaru wasn’t there to see. Like grooming his fur, cleaning his claws, cuddling him to sleep…”

It was doubtful whether that could be referenced as a format on the way of associating with Spirits, but Emilia’s expression when talking about Puck had turned cheerful.

Ever since his sudden parting back at the Sanctuary had stabbed her, she had had a strong expression of grief whenever she recalled Puck, but it seemed that stage had passed too.

—A crystal stone made of colorless, great magic ore adorned Emilia’s chest.

The same design that she always wore before she was separated from Puck, combined with the beauty of her expression; she had gone back to looking like the same old Emilia.

She traced the crystal stone with one of her slender fingers, and said,

Emilia: “I still don’t have enough power to bring Puck back right now, but… Mine and Puck’s Contract hasn’t been severed, so we can meet again when I accumulate enough Mana so that he can manifest. So, just a little bit more patience, eh.”

Subaru: “That, too, was thanks to one of Beako’s achievements, and… Well, thanks to Kiritaka’s kindness.”

The reason why Subaru and the others had come to the city of Pristella in the first place had been to obtain a great magic stone.

The reality should have been that he would turn it over or not after some negotiation, but the negotiations had ended up taking an inconceivable detour. In any case, they had received one at present, and were very satisfied.

Subaru: “So you cheer up too, Beako.”

Beatrice: “I’m not moody, I suppose. It’s your misunderstanding, in fact. Hmph.”

Emilia: “Oh, Beatrice, how adorable…”

Going all the way to letting out an easy-to-understand sound effect, Beatrice turned her face away from Subaru who was trying to get her to cheer up. Subaru was in agreement with Emilia, who was feeling the butterflies behind him; however, whether they could talk about her cuteness or not was yet another matter.

Otto: “It seems that Master Darts is a person with a craftsman’s temperament, doesn’t it? He cannot leave a job half-done once undertaken, I understand that sort of thing.”

Subaru: “But, still, let’s think about how his professionalism has been taken to too much of an extreme. It seems like this guy was working in his workshop all throughout the chaos, doesn’t it? He’s too much of a workaholic.”

Otto: “That is the craftsman in him, you see.”

Subaru: “The craftsman in him, huh?”

He really did not know why Otto seemed to be proud, but when he said that, it seemed to make him feel good; boys were such simple creatures. A craftsman’s temperament was cool.

However, Beatrice directed an angered look at the nodding Otto and Subaru, and said,

Beatrice: “Yes, but that doesn’t mean he should completely ignore his client’s words, I suppose. Even when I said I’d pay him double, he didn’t say a single word, in fact.”

Subaru: “Giving any indication of listening to what a little girl is saying as she slaps your cheeks with a roll of bills would only work as a reward for those who aren’t professionals well-versed in their trade. You tell her too, Emilia-tan.”

Emilia: “Yeah, you shouldn’t think like this, Beatrice. If you’re going to waste money, I’m going to have to end up confiscating your pocket money.”

Beatrice: “What rude treatment I’m getting from both of you, I suppose!”

The indignant Beatrice grabbed one of the curtains, wrapped herself in it and hid herself behind it.

Following that, Emilia could not resist anymore, and hugged Beako IN the curtain, making her yell out, “GNNNYYYA, IN FACT!”

Putting aside their cheerful intermezzo, it was not like he did not understand Beatrice’s feelings.

That which Otto had commissioned to the Restoration Master Darts, and Subaru and the others had tried to recover, was the damaged Book of Wisdom. It was the origin as to why its owner, Roswaal, had tried so hard to interfere with the future ahead of Subaru—It was natural to be interested in its contents.

Subaru: “Although his interference’s subtle, the slippery nature of that guy goes hand-in-hand.”

Even though his act of sabotage had been discovered, Roswaal’s attitude on the surface had not changed from before. Of course, since he had schemed behind that easygoing attitude, remaining alert was essential. However, it was also true that he had an air to him that seemed like the poisonousness had slipped out.

Nonetheless, it was not the same, he would not go as far as being able to call him a collaborative ally who would take the role of a bystander.

Subaru: “If we can at least see what’s lying ahead with the Book of Wisdom…”

If they were able to hold belief that Roswaal was not planning anything, regardless of the past, it would be safe to walk the road ahead together. It would probably also have a bit more of a positive effect for the future of the Camp.

Subaru: "That's why I want to insist on it."

Otto: "Even when I don't endeavor to make such excuses, I and Emilia-sama have more or less the same opinions as Natsuki-kun, so on that point we're fine. Just Garfiel, well… He has his personal enmities, so even if he knows the facts, his attitude may not change."

By personal enmities, was he really referring to the Sanctuary, or Ram?

Without touching that subject, Subaru gazed over at Emilia and Beatrice, messing about…

Subaru: "That book is no stranger to Beatrice either. So, I think I would like to confirm it if it's even possible. Taking her out from the Forbidden Library and leaving the past behind are different problems."

Otto: "Did you know that on many occasions, I thought about trying to consult with you?"

Subaru: "I'm not blaming you for that, y'know."

He thought that recovering the Book of Wisdom, and attempting to restore it back to normal, while doing all this on his own, was a good judgment on Otto's part.

And fundamentally, it was hardly ever that Otto's considerations failed. He was fully aware that he was not a person who acted in self-interest.

Subaru: "You really aren't suited to be a merchant…"

Otto: "Could you leave me alone?! More importantly, what about Master Darts?"

Subaru: ""It may be my greatest job yet", he said. "You can defer the fee, so I would like you to let me work on this properly until the end", he said."

It was worrying that the deadline had not expired, but that guy was a craftsman, so he could not possibly say it was impossible.

He wanted to believe that he was not the type of craftsman who would grumble even after the deadline passed.

Otto: "So in the end, I will also have to collect the Book of Wisdom, I feel like me staying behind in Pristella has already been decided, right?"

Subaru: "Garfiel also plans to stay for a while for the reconstruction work and the city defense. Them having been driven away is settled, but what if that's a feint for them attacking again! Since they never quit, those shits."

They looked like the sort of guys that would make the same mischief over and over.

It seemed like Subaru was not the only one who had recognized that, everyone who was involved had not let their guard down either. It was also possible that their aims were to force unnecessary feelings of tension to torment them.

Subaru: "Even if I bring that up, nothing more can be done about it."

Otto: "In any case, I think we need to wait and see how things go. As soon as my legs are in a better state, I will go around to check up on various things. However…"

Otto broke his words off there, as he discussed his future plans.

He strenuously lifted the upper part of his body up from the bed, and looked up at Subaru, who had closed one of his eyes. And, as he struck his temple with one of his fingers, he said,

Otto: "I shall say this clearly, I am against this."

Subaru: "…Well, I thought you'd say that."

Subaru gave a wry smile at Otto's declaration. That he would say that and be against it, was an attitude which Subaru had predicted.

After all, Otto Suwen had evaluated Natsuki Subaru correctly.

Subaru himself was more aware than anyone of his own helplessness, but there were not many who clearly understood his shortcomings.

At best, those were Beatrice and Otto. Perhaps Patrasche a bit. And although now was not the time for him, Ferris mayhaps too.

Therefore, he had anticipated that Beatrice and Otto, from their Camp, would be against it. He believed if Patrasche could speak, then she would have probably been similarly against it. However,

Subaru: "If you know me that much, then you should know my answer."

Otto: "…In truth, Beatrice-san's moodiness isn't only because of Master Darts, right?"

Subaru: "Weeeell~, I'm not so sure. As you might expect, even I don't understand what's in the depths of Beako's heart."

When Subaru feigned his innocence with a shrug of his shoulders, Otto's face turned into one of exasperation.

Of course, when it came to him and his sharp hearing, he should not be lacking in knowledge of legends nor rumors. He must know all too well the riskiness of Subaru's choice.

Adding onto what he had said, Subaru prefaced what he was going to say to Otto with an "I'm sorry",

Subaru: "I will go to see that Sage or whatever they are, with that white fox guide for a little while."

He smiled as he said that.

3

???: “—Come in.”

When he knocked on the door as a courtesy, just in case, a calm voice replied to him from the inside.

It was a familiar voice, but one that lacked in spirit. Subaru felt excessively annoyed at it.

???: “Is that you, Subaru?”

Subaru: “Is it bad that it’s me?”

???: “It is strange, now when I see your face, I feel terribly relieved.”

Subaru: “Blaaargh.”

He walked into the room, wrapping up the reproachful words that he had exchanged at the start with that action.

Even while he showed that attitude, there was consideration in the way Subaru closed the door behind him. Closing the door without making a sound was the minimum amount of courtesy for those who slept inside.

???: “If they would wake up because of the noise, that would be so much better.”

Subaru: “If that happened, would you give me a round of applause or something? That’d be a priceless scene. Gluttony, who was let to be at large, would get more and more pissed off.”

???: “Hmph.”

Giving a relaxed smile, Subaru inclined his head without meeting his eyes. Then he looked around the room and narrowed his eyes at the row of beds.

A simple bed and a thin blanket; that was all the charity given to the people who slept there. And Subaru knew that more than that was not even necessary.

The people who slept here were forgotten from memory, cut loose from daily life, and only remained left behind as imperfect beings that just were not dead.

Subaru: “Julius. I’m not one to talk, but you shouldn’t spend so much time here.”

Julius: “…”

Subaru: “Even if you keep looking at them, you can’t remember that which you can’t remember. That applies to both a beloved little sister, as well as someone who is truly like your other half.”

Subaru called out to the young man—Julius, without using any words of comfort.

He was sitting at a corner of the bed rows, at one of the bedsides located the furthest away. He lifted his face up, still full of sorrow which he was unable to conceal from his handsome features,

Julius: “Knowing that in my head and knowing that with my heart are completely different things. I do not mean to be conceited, but so far, I had never thought of myself as an emotionally-driven, big-headed person. Me not realizing that until this happened is a lack in my self-awareness.”

Subaru: “…”

Whilst he spoke, Julius looked down at the bed right next to him.

Naturally, one of the victims of appetite who had lost their Name was sleeping there as well, and their consciousness and memories had been completely cut away from the world.

That was why Julius Juukulius did not remember this person—The slender-faced young man with long purple hair, who was his own little brother, Joshua Juukulius.

Julius: “Joshua, eh?”

He could call his little brother's name because Subaru had told him his name, and the relation he had to him.

The victims of the Authority of Gluttony—When it had been reported that many unidentifiable, comatose people had been found, Subaru had been convinced that they had suffered the same damage as Rem.

And he himself may have not forgotten those forgotten. Relying only on that slim hope, he had gone to the hospital room and discovered the sleeping Joshua.

Julius: "It is strange. Although there is enough in common to be able to conclude he is definitely a blood relative after listening to your story, within me there lies not a single memory of my little brother."

Julius closed his eyes without showing any emotion on his face.

Joshua was the only one he knew amongst the victims of Gluttony. He could not find the other thirty-plus victims even in his memory, and thus they continued to sleep without anyone even mourning for them, or worrying about their well-being.

If one gave it some thought, it was possible to say that Joshua, who had his big brother worrying about him, was one of the lucky ones.

Even in these circumstances, where he was forgotten by the big brother he loved so dearly, said big brother had gone to the hospital room to cling onto his brotherly love in name only, and called out to his little brother without true emotion.

Even if he were forgotten, even if he had forgotten him, even if he was not there in his memories, even if there were just facts, it was just heart-wrenching.

Subaru: "…Fucking hell."

He should have known. He really should have.

That the Authority of the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony was the most despicable evil in this world.

Along with Wrath, who twisted people's emotions at will. Along with Lust, who broke people's dignity as well as their form, before then trampling over them. Along with Greed, who denied everything besides himself, imposing his egocentric sense of omnipotence. Along with Sloth, who indulged himself in using the word "diligence" to paint over the lives of others with his selfish love.

They were the worst evil without doubt, not a single one of them deserved to live. How could he stand those beings that profaned the lives of absolutely everyone like Gluttony did?

Subaru: "—Staying here will only make you feel depressed. Don't make me keep saying it."

Only unpleasant things passed through his mind.

He had put that irritation into words, and called out to Julius. When he heard those words, Julius stood up, and touched his forgotten little brother's slender chest, and said,

Julius: "He is… breathing. He is alive. It is strange."

Subaru: "Yeah, that's right. But he doesn't eat, nor does he need to go to the bathroom. He also doesn't need to take a bath… He doesn't laugh either."

Julius: "He does not feel the sorrow of being forgotten, either—That may be a blessing."

Subaru: "A blessing…?"

Subaru raised his eyebrows in response to the word that spilled out from Julius.

Looking back at him, Julius slightly curved the crooks of his lips up, and whilst giving a weak smile, he said,

Julius: "If you do not realize you have been forgotten, you need not fear the anxiety of being left behind. It is really hard to bear having what should have been close relationships with people… being cut off one-sidedly."

Subaru: "…"

Julius: "Subaru. Being forgotten, and forgetting… I wonder, which of those is the most painful?"

Subaru: "How…"

Subaru's throat clogged up at that question.

It did not clog up due to the answer. The answer had been readied in an instant. So what had obstructed Subaru's words had not been bewilderment. It had been fury.

Subaru glared at Julius, who had a cynical smile on his face.

Subaru: "How would I know? Don't mess about, stop absorbing yourself in these things."

Julius: "…Subaru?"

Subaru: "Forgetting, being forgotten, TO HELL WITH BOTH! Don't try and order such painful things, are you that negative?! Making that damn face, like you're the most unfortunate person in the whole world. Want to try and compare your misfortunes with mine so far? Whatever the case, I would win?!"

Julius: "…"

Julius became speechless at the sudden change that took over Subaru, who had raised his voice, jabbing his finger at him.

Opening his eyes wide in surprise, he could not say anything to this Subaru, who had suddenly become enraged. And as he looked Julius keeping his silence, Subaru lowered his finger and shrugged his shoulders,

Subaru: "Don't make such a despairing face. I know you're suffering, and I know that you were forgotten and you have nowhere left to go… But, I'm sorry, but I won't let you show your weak side."

Julius: "…"

Subaru: “Have you forgotten, Julius? —No, do not forget, Julius.”

Subaru glared at Julius whilst he bit his lips in frustration. He placed his hand on his chest, and once again made a declaration like the ones he had done.

Subaru: “My eyes know your strength. My shame knows it. Even if everyone has forgotten.”

Julius: “…”

He could not breathe, the feeling of his blood going up to his head had yet to vanish.

Really, how long had it been since he had gotten this pissed off? Since Regulus. He was astonished that not even half a day had passed since then.

How much had this turmoil in Pristella burdened his heart and lungs? And then,

Julius: “Ha, haha…”

Subaru: “Huh?”

Julius: “Haha… No, you truly are a one-of-a-kind man. I have realized that once more…”

Getting rid of the startled face he had had up until now, Julius suddenly bent over in laughter. Giving in to the urge to laugh, Julius continued to laugh before the disgruntled Subaru. And when the urge gradually settled, Julius let out a long sigh.

Julius: “I see, you are right. It does not mean that absolutely everything was left behind, right?”

Subaru: “Rather than saying “left behind”, I’d say you’re in front by around three horse lengths.”

Julius: “Is three horse lengths enough?”

Subaru: “I’m gonna fucking beat your ass! With me and Beako as a team, it’ll be completely different from before!”

He flipped him his middle finger, and spat at Julius who was starting to get back to his usual manner. Julius gracefully dodged his spit, and gave him a bow, whilst saying “I see”,

Julius: “Then, I will try to have faith in those big words.”

Subaru: “…Mhm, do so. As much as you can, too, do great deeds, so that you surprise everyone when their memories come back.”

This time, at that haughty attitude, Subaru raised his thumb up and then turned it down in provocation. Faced with that coarse gesture, the Finest of Knights that only Subaru knew smiled gracefully,

Julius: “—So, first of all, more so than anyone else, I will try to strive to surprise you. You, who remembers me.”

Saying that, he fortified his intent of accompanying him to the Pleiades Watchtower that awaited them.

Chapter 81:
One Who Fills the Vessel of Greed

1

—A series of Witch Cult Turmoils had transpired in Pristella, the Watergate City.

The scars of the battle remained throughout the city, along with the tragedy that struck its inhabitants. There were numerous functions of the city that had yet to be fully restored, to compensate for the loss of personnel.

Those problems still remained, yet the situation was settling down and beginning to move towards the next story.

For Natsuki Subaru, too, the many problems of the city ached his heart.

Nevertheless, as he observed the city after the withdrawal of the Witch Cult, he felt that he could presume that perhaps he had been able to contribute a little to that conclusion.

Subaru: “Although there are still many unresolved problems…”

The scars that were left by the Sin Archbishops, especially those left by Lust and Gluttony, were enormous.

The inhabitants who’d had their bodies mutated by the Authority of Lust—their bodies had been placed in a “Temporary State of Death” by Emilia, and were now awaiting the moment to awaken in a shelter deep within the city.

And most of the people who had been attacked by the appetite of Gluttony, even now, found themselves in an endless sleep, and even their bonds with those who would expect their awakening from the bottom of their hearts had been snatched away.

Emilia’s expression, who had proposed a way of postponing the solution to the problem of the transformed citizens, was painful.

Julius's anguish, who had lost his place and was troubled because of the way things ought to be, was beyond imaginable.

And there was no need to mention the wounds in the hearts of the city's people, who were the ones most affected.

Everybody had been hurt.

It was Subaru's duty to do everything he could to heal those wounds. And so,

Subaru: "There are still problems I have to take care of."

To solve the final unsolved problem, Subaru nodded.

Only this, was what Subaru had to do.

2

Subaru: "Julius will go with us."

???: "I see, then I can feel more relieved as well."

After he'd finished with his various discussions, Subaru returned to the conference room and was welcomed by Anastasia.

Anastasia was the only one left at the roundtable in the conference room. The discussion on the main topics had been held there several hours ago.

Some of them had already returned to the inn, and others were preparing to leave Pristella. Even without that, it had been a tiring day. There was no need to rest on the hard roundtable and spend your time in the darkness of the empty shelter.

Subaru: "—What?"

And yet, she had stayed here, waiting for someone to arrive.

It was not that he had been sure of it. But, Subaru too had vaguely thought that she would have been here. After all, right now she should not have felt comfortable anywhere.

Subaru: “With this, those who are aiming for the Pleiades Watchtower are Emilia, me and Beako. In addition to that, if we add Julius and you, there are five of us in total.”

Anastasia: “Aren’t’cha makin’ a mistake in the number of participants? After all, there aren’t five of us, there are six of us. It’d be a problem if you forgot my adorable Echidna.”

She unrolled the scarf from around her neck and spread it over the roundtable whilst making her dance. The white fox scarf was obedient towards her master’s harmless game, just like a doll.

She did not just look like it, though.

Subaru: “I didn’t forget—That is why… we’re five.”

Anastasia: “…”

As he leaned his back against the door of the conference room, Subaru spoke thus to Anastasia, who was hoisting out her scarf.

Hearing those words, Anastasia’s smile froze. Her elegant smile vanished as if it had melted, and then she tilted her head slowly.

Pulling the scarf to her lips, accompanied by a mystified look on her face,

“Anastasia”: “Oh, that is weird. How did you know my identity is not that of Ana?”

Anastasia’s tone changed completely, so much that it was clearly noticeable.

Subaru: “If you want to hide it, you should do a better act of doing so. Surely, as far as I know, Anastasia is the most rational and realistic of the candidates, but… she doesn’t have an attitude as lacking in humanity as you do, nor is her way of speaking like that.”

“Anastasia”: “I have been observing Ana for some time, so I should have been able to imitate her, but it did not work as well as I had thought. You are the second one to notice.”

Subaru: “The second?”

“Anastasia”: “Al-kun also noticed. He called me a Witch, how could he do such a cruel thing?”

Subaru: “That’s…”

That was quite the fitting term; Subaru felt admiration for Al.

Anastasia’s Echidna, and the “Witch” Echidna, were essentially different, but it was impossible that they were not related, there was no doubt in that.

Perhaps it had been Al’s insight, something only he could have noticed.

He was someone summoned to this other world, just like Subaru. If the power of the Witch of Envy was connected to the other world summons, Al could also be related to the Witch. Usually, he would have talked to him more about it, but—

Subaru: “Anyway, that doesn’t matter now. The most important problem is you, who hijacked Anastasia’s body and tried to make it yours.”

“Anastasia”: “Saying hijacked sounds pretty drastic. At a glimpse, the current situation is bad, that appears to be a fact, but I must say that it is unfortunate that you misinterpret it that way. Seriously, it is painful.”

Subaru: “That way, you make it sound like it’s not the case.”

“Anastasia”: “In actuality, it is not true, even if you cannot see it. I only borrowed Ana’s body, it was inevitable. Had I not done that, it would have been the end for the both of us. After that, I continued to use Ana as a vessel, not out of my free will.”

It was terribly amicable and familiar, but the essential part was completely vacant. Although her voice was the same, it was clearly different.

Subaru: “Too long. In summary?”

“Anastasia”: “It was fine to borrow her body, but I cannot get out…”

I see, this is Scarfdona—On this occasion, he would put it as Eridna, but he had never thought that Eridna was unrelated to Echidna, yet in their interaction just now, he had sensed no clear traces of Echidna.

Even though the way she approached things in a roundabout manner was the same as the original.

Subaru: “For now, I’ll try to listen to your story.”

Moving his back away from the door, Subaru positioned himself to talk with Eridna. Now that he had uncovered her identity, she could not leave him alive; it seemed safe to assume that the danger of her setting that sort of trap had passed.

Subaru sat on the other side of the roundtable, facing Eridna.

Subaru: “To begin with, borrowing her body? What kind of situation is that?”

“Anastasia”: “To put it simply, I overwrite my existence in Ana’s Od, and I borrow her freely, that is the situation. In this state, I am able to control Ana’s body at will, and I can also manipulate Ana’s Gate, which is defective from the start, and use magic that way.”

Subaru: “What do you mean it is defective from the start?”

“Anastasia”: “You are quite curious, aren’t you? I understand the greed of wanting to know something, so I won’t blame you, but wanting to know so much about another girl and another Spirit, won’t it make your Emilia-sama and your Beatrice jealous?”

Subaru: “I don’t need your concern, even if they get jealous, they’d be cute anyways, so that’s fine. Stop stretching things out and tell me.”

When Subaru tried to slam the roundtable with his fingers in displeasure, Eridna shrugged. Then, she folded the removed scarf carefully and said "Ana is…"

"Anastasia": "A girl who was born with a defective Gate. I believe you already know that the Gate is an organ that absorbs Mana from the atmosphere and expels the Mana from the body, but the ability to absorb Mana is functioning in a deficient manner in Anastasia. She is someone who suffers from chronic Mana deficiency. There is a person who has this defect of not being able to release Mana, although you should already have an idea of who I am talking about."

Subaru: "I don't know if that's bad or not, and I don't know who you're referring to either."

"Anastasia": "Oh, really? That is unexpected. By the way, the one with the deficiency of not being able to release Mana is the descendant of the Sword Saint. Although in his case, the amount he absorbs is unusual, and it adds to his physical ability apparently, so there is no real harm."

Subaru: "Reinhard?"

Subaru raised his eyebrows in surprise at the words of Eridna. But, on second thought, he also felt that Reinhard had said something like that somewhere before.

Reinhard could not use magic, only in that aspect was he inferior. But instead, the power of his Gate to absorb was strong—I see, so that was the reason why it was bad for him to approach Spirits, including Beatrice.

Subaru: "Well, even without magic, it's not that he doesn't have ways of attacking from a long distance to begin with, in his case it wouldn't be surprising if he defeated his opponents with the pressure of his sword, so it doesn't seem like a disadvantage at all. But, let's talk about Anastasia…"

"Anastasia": "I am not attempting to pull the wool over your eyes, but it is my habit to want to talk about what I know. So, the conversation… Right, it was about Ana's constitution. When it comes to Ana's Gate, its function to draw in is underdeveloped and does not function properly… Therefore, she can only use magic by absorbing the Mana that was initially in her body. In a situation in which she is exhausted, she would have to use her Od, which is the source of life. I cannot allow her to commit such madness, can I? That's why Ana cannot use magic."

Subaru: "But, that you can use magic after borrowing her body makes no sense. The fact that the Mana that originally was in her body was scarce doesn't change. Or is it that you can use minute amounts of Mana?"

"Anastasia": "…"

Subaru: "Don't be quiet, answer."

"Anastasia": "I could not save her life in the first place without cutting down her life, I had no choice. However, the discussion between Ana and me on this matter is over. Someone like you, who has nothing to do with it, has no right to say anything about it. You would not wish me to say anything about your Contract with Beatrice either, would you?"

She had hit the mark.

Subaru and Beatrice's relationship, along with their Contract, belonged only to them. He did not want others to intervene in that, and even if they did, he would reject them.

If Anastasia and Eridna claimed the same condition, Subaru could not say anything.

That was an absolute connection between the Contractor and the Spirit, one that must not be disturbed by others.

"Anastasia": "On this occasion, I borrowed her body based on Ana's own will, it was an emergency after all. You know that a Sin Archbishop came to the City Hall, right? To drive her away, it was necessary for Al-kun and me to use all our strength. It was necessary to make a decision under pressure."

Subaru: “And what’s that about you not being able to get out?”

“Anastasia”: “Yes, that is the current problem…”

At Subaru’s words of concern, Eridna clapped her hands and smiled. Although her appearance was that of Anastasia, her smile clearly showed that her contents were different.

What a strange thing, Subaru thought, but he immediately put that sentiment behind. At last, their talk was about to cover the main question.

In front of Subaru, Eridna touched Anastasia’s thin chest.

“Anastasia”: “This is not the first time I have borrowed Ana’s body this way. It has not occurred many times, though. Ana and I do not have a formal Contract. That is also because of the problem with her Gate, I did not wish to put a constant burden on Ana. Although even among Spirits, I pride myself for being someone who consumes little energy. When it comes to just being there, I do not require Mana from a Contractor.”

Subaru: “I see. My Beako wants to hold my hand three times a day.”

“Anastasia”: “Two of the times is just because she wants to take your hand, probably. It is all about intimacy—So, about our talk, the occasions in which I borrowed Ana’s body in such circumstances. At most, this must be the fourth or fifth time. My relationship with her has lasted for almost eleven years now, so it is rather unsurprising, is it not?”

Subaru: “Well, who knows? Considering that you say it’s at a pace of once every two years, isn’t that as low as the rate you catch flu at?”

“Anastasia”: “So harsh.”

Eridna let out some stifled laughter; her laughter was the same as that of the Witch Subaru knew. In that moment, he became scared that Anastasia’s figure seemed like a double of Echidna’s.

Echidna’s existence had left a weight inside Subaru that would not disappear. If possible, he never wanted to see her again because of Beatrice. In addition to that, to learn that the real Anastasia had disappeared would hurt Julius quite a lot. He also wanted to avoid that.

Subaru: “Then, what happened, Echidna-san, who’s as annoying as a flu?”

“Anastasia”: “I do not know what that flu you are referring to is, but in any case, I do not have much experience. So, without any precedent, I do not know why this happened either… I cannot separate my consciousness from Ana’s body. As a result, Ana is sleeping deep within her Od.”

Eridna spoke as she touched her chest, as if the Od were inside her, and then she looked at the scarf lying limp on the roundtable.

As long as Eridna’s consciousness was inside of Anastasia, her scarf should truly just be a fox pelt, but…

“Anastasia”: “I was able to do pretty well as a puppeteer in the conference room, wasn’t I?”

Subaru: “There were many people who were deceived by the impact of your appearance. Though, there were also several people besides me who thought it was strange…”

Or so he thought. Perhaps only Subaru, who was familiar with Artificial Spirits, had felt that strange sensation.

Subaru: “Even if they didn’t notice it in that place, people deeply related to her will immediately realize that you’re not Anastasia.”

“Anastasia”: “And yet, only people with a superficial relationship like you and Al-kun could tell. Does that not mean that my imitation of Ana went well?”

Subaru: “Right now, Ricardo and the kittens are busy with their own problems. Julius too.”

“Anastasia”: “…”

At those words, Eridna narrowed her eyes. In response to her reaction, Subaru made a suspicious face, but Eridna sighed immediately,

“Anastasia”: “After all, Julius is Ana’s Knight? From the flow of the conversation in the conference room, I thought it was most likely, but… the Authority of Gluttony is terrifying. It could even steal my memories, and I am supposed to be an existence that’s outside the norm.”

Subaru: “You… What do you want to do with Anastasia?”

“Anastasia”: “—?”

Subaru: “On the question of whether or not you intended to hijack Anastasia’s body, honestly, even if we talk about it, nothing can be done, so I won’t hound you about it. I will say it clearly, even if you say it’s not like that, I have no basis to believe you, but…”

That she could not return Anastasia’s body… was unacceptable.

For the finest of Knights, it meant losing one of his hopes.

The spiritual death of a candidate—He did not want to use that in the battle for the Royal Selection.

Subaru: “I won’t give up on bringing that person back to normal, Echidna.”

“Anastasia”: “You can rest assured. I am not so arrogant as to think that I can take over Ana’s body and live in her place.”

Faced with an enraged Subaru who moved forward with determination, Eridna said that with pessimism. With a sad expression, she embraced Anastasia's small, thin body.

"Anastasia": "You know, I like Ana. The more-than-ten-years I spent by her side without a Contract were not mere observational cravings. I do not know if these are the right feelings, but I have feelings similar to that of a guardian or family, I am aware of that. If possible, I wish for her to be well, and more than anything, to be happy."

Subaru: "…"

Eridna spoke fluently and indifferently as always, but, as she spoke and touched Anastasia's delicate body in which she now found herself, in her appearance, there seemed to be affection.

Just as Puck felt love and affection for Emilia, and Beatrice for Subaru, Eridna might feel the same for Anastasia. If so,

Subaru: "So, that's your real reason for wanting to meet the Sage."

"Anastasia": "That is very perceptive of you—I do not care about the people that had their Names eaten by Gluttony. I only wish to learn a way to return this body back to Ana. That is why, for that, I will make use of you all as well."

Subaru: "Is there even a guarantee that the Sage knows a way for that?"

"Anastasia": "There is no guarantee. But, when it comes to the Sage which is said to see everything, and to know everything, there is a chance. I will wager that the chance that they can is the most likely, that is all."

No words of immediate rebuttal came out from Subaru to Eridna's words, full of iron-clad determination.

Without a doubt, it was a terribly egocentric, selfish conclusion she had come to. However, Eridna was acting to attain her goal in her own Eridna-like way. Thus, what Subaru needed to confirm was—

Subaru: “Do you really know a way of reaching the Sage in the Pleiades Watchtower?”

“Anastasia”: “Of course.”

Subaru: “You ought to have a character description saying you have no memories of the past. Why does someone like you know a way to get to the Watchtower that no one else knows? It makes no sense.”

“Anastasia”: “I know only what I know. It is bothersome that you ask me for a basis for that, but this is how it is. If you want to adorn those words, then it is because getting there is fate, I guess.”

Subaru: “Fate? Fate decided by whom?”

“Anastasia”: “My creator, perhaps.”

Eridna’s reply was lofty, but as far as Subaru was concerned, it was the worst kind of reply.

If the creator she spoke of was Echidna, then the one who had scorched the way to the Watchtower into the Spirit’s memories could only have been Echidna. That meant that there was something related to Echidna in the Pleiades Watchtower.

For sure, that gave him a bad presentiment and a certain expectation towards the Sage’s knowledge.

“Anastasia”: “I wonder, did that convince you?”

Eridna inquired this of Subaru, who had remained silent, having come to that one conclusion.

Whilst hesitating on whether to agree immediately, Subaru let out a long, deep sigh.

Subaru: “Not that I’m extremely convinced, but at least I do understand. You have your own goals and things you need to do, and it doesn’t interfere with our own goals.”

"Anastasia": "Indeed. We both have things we want to ask to the Sage. That is why we will cooperate in getting to them. There is nothing strange about that."

Subaru: "Stop it. You became sketchy as soon as you said that."

"Anastasia": "That is rather harsh."

It seemed like he would go crazy if he kept talking with Eridna in Anastasia's form for any longer.

In any case, they would end up having plenty of time to keep each other company whilst they headed off to the Pleiades Watchtower. The Augria Sand Dunes, where the Watchtower was located, were at the eastern end of the world map—it was a long journey.

Subaru: "I'm slowly getting used to you, so give me a bit more time."

"Anastasia": "It's aight, even if ya don't like this. Really though, Natsuki-kun is too cold around such cute girls. You've hurt my feelings. Jeeeez."

Wrapping the scarf around her neck, Eridna mimicked Anastasia's behavior. Indeed, it was a performance well done, but,

Subaru: "Your intonation of "I" is wrong. Also, your Kansai dialect is too smooth. Compared with the people that I know from Kararagi, it lacks authenticity."

"Anastasia": "Authenticity?"

It was an extremely small difference. Eridna rightfully croaked out those words to confirm what Subaru had told her, and eventually let out a sigh as if she had given up.

From Subaru's side, there was nothing he needed to confirm to Eridna. And, concerning the return of Anastasia's body back to the owner, that would depend on the Sage of the Pleiades Watchtower's attitude. However,

Subaru: "Don't tell Julius… or any of the others about the fact that you’re borrowing Anastasia’s body.”

“Anastasia”: “…I don’t mind, but Natsuki-kun’s request’s unexpected.”

Subaru: “I don’t want to cause an unnecessary uproar in this situation that is already enough of a mess. Also, if they find out it was really you, and not Anastasia, who proposed this idea, Ricardo and some of the others may oppose it immediately. It’ll be a bother for me, too, if we can’t go to the Watchtower. Albeit the selfishness of it.”

There was a chance that Ricardo, Mimi, and the others would be anxious about Anastasia’s body and stop her.

In that case, they would be forced to give up their journey to the Watchtower, even if it was an excellent solution to their problems. That would be a problem for Subaru and his group as well, as they wanted to save the victims of the Authorities.

Subaru: “It would be great if the victims of Gluttony, Lust, and, of course, the issue with you and Anastasia, could all be solved by the Sage. If all goes well, then Ricardo and the others won’t be able to complain afterwards. No, even if they do complain, I won’t listen to them.”

“Anastasia”: “Like Hoshin’s sayin’, “The account books are balanced in the end”.”

Subaru: “I agree with Hoshin-san on that.”

As expected of Hoshin, who may have originated from the same place as he did, he spoke finely.

Subaru: “Well then.”

On that note, their discussion was over for now.

In the worst case, if Eridna had intended to exploit Anastasia’s body, there would have been the chance that a last battle in Pristella would have unfolded here; that such a thing did not happen made him relieved.

It was for that reason alone that that question came at the time which Subaru had let his guard down.

“Anastasia”: “By the way, Natsuki-kun.”

Subaru: “Hmm?”

Subaru turned around just as he had put his hand on the door to try and leave the conference room.

Still leaning on the roundtable chair, Eridna cutely tilted her head like Anastasia would towards Subaru.

“Anastasia”: “—There’s someone else, isn’t there? Someone else, who ya wanna ask the Sage regardin’ a way of getting’ them back.”

Subaru: “…”

“Anastasia”: “One way or another, in Pristella there are people with similar symptoms, right? It’d be best to take about one person along who exhibits those symptoms, so we can inquire on how to get them back to normal.”

With his hand still on the doorknob, Subaru’s throat, Subaru’s breathing, froze.

Eridna, in the end, continued to look on indifferently at Subaru, whose expression had stiffened, his eyes wide open.

“Anastasia”: “What wouldja like to do? This depends entirely on ya, Natsuki-kun.”

Subaru: “I…”

“Anastasia”: “In any case, we’re stoppin’ by Margrave Mathers’s mansion, right? If we don’t prepare for the trek across the Augria Sand Dunes, we won’t get the approval to be able to go to the Watchtower. When we do that, your sleepin’ princess oughta be there.”

Subaru: “…”

"Anastasia": "I don't think it's a bad thing. We'll save everyone, it's just about who'll be the first amongst 'em… It'll be okay if Natsuki-kun allows this sorta luxury."

Eridna's indifferent voice, for some reason, seemed like a terribly demonic temptation for Subaru.

He understood what she was trying to say. And though, without a doubt, he wanted to follow up on what she had said, he was not able to reply back to her immediately.

Surely that was because—

???: "Subaru!"

Subaru: "—Hk!"

On hearing his name being called out, Subaru looked up in surprise.

Emilia and Beatrice stood in front of Subaru, whose breath had caught inside his throat. The two of them widened their eyes at Subaru's reaction, and Emilia tilted her head and asked him, "What's the matter?"

Emilia: "You said you would go and see Julius-san… You said that, but since you weren't at the hospital ward, I ended up getting worried. What have you been doing?"

Subaru: "No, nothing really… You know, with that guy, he was pulling such a long face that I couldn't bear to see him for long. So, it wasn't a change of atmosphere, but a change of view."

Emilia: "Really? I think Julius has a handsome face though…"

Subaru: "Emilia-tan thinks that too?"

Emilia: "Ah, but, Subaru's face is great too, I think it's a fine face. You know, the kind where the more you look at it, the more you like it, or, yeah, I think that sort of thing."

Subaru: "That follow-up is so painful!"

Emilia fretfully corrected herself, but the way she had worded it was an issue too. With a bitter smile, Subaru dropped his shoulders. This time, Beatrice, who stood silently by Emilia's side, had something on her mind.

Beatrice kept looking behind Subaru, towards the shelter behind him. Just as if she had an inkling about the conversation that had happened there.

Beatrice: "Subaru, if you're going to do something dangerous, you should call Betty, I suppose. If I were to leave you alone and it got dangerous, Betty would be beside herself, in fact."

Subaru: "That's the same affection I always feel for you. Since you're so cute, I get uneasy thinking about how long it'll be before you are carried off by a kidnapper offering you some candy."

Beatrice: "Betty is not such a cheap-looking Spirit, I suppose! Don't make fun of me, in fact!"

Getting rather angry, Beatrice approached him to slap him over and over again. As she did, Subaru hoisted Beatrice up into his arms, who let out a surprised "Fwaaaah!", and then walked towards Emilia.

Beatrice: "R-Release me, put me down, I suppose! Ah, but, put me down without scooting off, in fact."

Subaru: "That's pretty difficult, so you'll have to stay like this for now."

Beatrice's body was light, but strangely warm. It was the prevailing view that children had higher body temperatures, but with Beatrice being a little girl, was she also like that? Even though she was a Spirit.

Emilia, who was by his side, stared at Subaru's face from the side, who was smiling wryly in that manner. As she watched him with upturned eyes, Subaru asked her, "What's up?"

Subaru: "Is it so unusual that me and Beako are playing?"

Emilia: “No. In this last year, it’s no longer unusual at all, but… I think the current you is making a disconcerted face, one that was pretty unusual for this last year.”

Subaru: “—Is that so? Although I can’t say that everything is OK, most of the problems have been resolved, and for me now, my facial muscles have relaxed well enough, or so I think.”

Emilia: “If you say so, I’ll believe you, but…”

Emilia cast her long-eyelashed eyes down at Subaru, who was molding his cheeks into shape as if they were like rubber. Then, she slowly continued her words that she had cut off.

Emilia: “When you decide what to do, absolutely let me know. And, if you don’t find the answer, make sure to consult with me no matter what, okay? It would be nice if you promised me just that.”

Subaru: “A promise, huh?”

Emilia: “Yes, a promise. Subaru’s not good at keeping those. You’re good at making them, no?”

Subaru: “Woah, that’s unusually venomous for Emilia-tan.”

He received a scathing evaluation from Emilia due to the results of his past promises up until now.

Then, Emilia, with a faint grin on her face, held out her pinky finger. Seeing that, Subaru instantly slung Beatrice across his shoulder, and joined his own pinky finger with hers as Beatrice screamed out, “What are you doing, I suppose!”

Subaru: “Pinky promise, cross my heart and hope to die. Stick a thousand needles in my eye.”

Emilia: “Cross my heart and hope to die.”

Their fingers separated from each other’s. Whilst sticking out her finger, Emilia grinned at Subaru,

Emilia: “Subaru, how many needles will it be in total with this?”

Subaru: “Well, I don’t think it reaches up to ten-thousand.”

Emilia: “In which case, make sure you really don’t get up to ten-thousand of them, okay?”

Subaru replied with a curt “Yeah” to Emilia’s prayer-like words.

With that answer, she would feel an absolute sense of security—Such a thing for Emilia would probably be impossible. She had not even planned to make the promise in the first place.

That was why her promise now was a warning to Subaru.

“Anastasia”: “—It’ll be okay if Natsuki-kun allows this sorta luxury.”

Eridna’s final temptation floated back into his mind. Could Subaru allow this sort of luxury, could he really allow it?

Who would allow that to him? To him, who depended on such things.

Subaru: “I will have an answer—By the time I return to the mansion, I definitely will.”

Even so, that was what one would expect from someone who shared its name with that Witch.

In truth, taking advantage of the weakest parts in people was her forte.

Subaru: “Truly, how odious…”

Beatrice: “You said something right now, I suppose?”

Subaru: “No, with the way I am carrying you, I can touch or slap Beako’s bum as much as I want.”

Beatrice: “KYAAA, IN FACT! L-Let go of me, I suppose! Put me down, in fact! Slowly and gently, like you were admiring a flower, I suppose!”

Subaru: “Hahahaha!”

Beatrice: “Stop slapping my buttocks whilst laughing, in fact—!!”

With Beatrice kicking up a fuss over his shoulder, Subaru set out after the slender back who had gone up ahead of him. Turning her face back every so often, Emilia seemed like she wished for them to join her.

Although he had been blessed, although he had been saved.

If only she were here, he thought, marveling at his own Greed.

The curtain fell on Natsuki Subaru’s battle in the Watergate City.

—And now, it silently turned to the next story that led to the Tower of Sand.

Interlude I:
The Couple’s Requirements

1

Garfiel felt as though there were far too many unanswered questions. In his chest, laid simultaneous feelings of satisfaction and unfulfillment.

It was not in his nature to think. It would be far better if he could move simply through instinct, without a single, solidified thought in his mind. Perhaps this was Garfiel’s punishment for thinking too much.

Kurgan: “Magnificent.”

Garfiel did not know how to respond to the legendary hero’s final words.

In the end, Garfiel felt incomplete, as that moment had a sentimentality to it that made him want to cry.

2

Garfiel lightly kicked the ground, sending him sliding into a nearby collapsed building.

Forcing his body to twist and turn, Garfiel noticed that the building had already been thoroughly looted and ransacked. He could not recall this building being involved in the Battle of Pristella, which meant that this scene was, most likely, the result of pragmatic thieves taking advantage of the citizens’ distress and confusion.

Garfiel: “As expected, there’s not much left of their smell left.”

Sniffling, Garfiel looked around the room. Here and there were revolting traces, marks of blood and some damage to the walls, but strangely, neither vestiges of visceral scenes nor the pungent odor of blood remained.

Garfiel: “—Eh?”

Unable to find anything of significance, Garfiel began to get up to leave, then stopping in his tracks. Off in a corner of the room, a small object had caught his eye.

As he walked towards the object, he realized it was simply a small doll. It easily fit into the palm of his hand, yet miraculously considering the place, the doll was neither dirty nor broken.

Garfiel: “…”

Garfiel picked up the doll, and while he was lightly dusting it off, he looked around for its owner. Despite knowing full well that the owner should not be present. It was merely a doll, so even if it were missing, it would not make a difference—

Garfiel: “Tch.”

Letting out a sound with his tongue, Garfiel shoved the doll inside his pocket and left the building. He leapt out of a shattered window and nimbly descended to the ground, holding his fingers and feet against the wall of the building.

Garfiel: “Hey! I’m back!”

???: “Really, bro, that’s amazing.”

Noticing Garfiel’s descent via the side, several people gathered around him. They all had expressions of anxiety and anticipation on their faces, and he found it excruciating to not be able to answer any of their questions.

Rescuer: “Bro, how was it inside?”

Garfiel: “Sorry, but nothin’ to be found. There’s no one left in there, and I couldn’t find anythin’ we were lookin’ for.”

Rescuer: “Really…”

As he landed with knees bending, he replied to a person who had rushed to him. For a moment, the man frowned at Garfiel’s answer, but he quickly nodded with a reassured face.

Rescuer: “Well, the fact there was no one inside means that we can put this building aside and focus on other areas. Thanks for all your help, bro. The staircase collapsed, so we couldn’t even check inside.”

Garfiel: “Standin’ by and watchin’ ya guys do all that dangerous work’s a no-go. Your guts to climb a wall with a rope are pretty admirable ‘n all, but it’s all for naught if ya fall and go splat!”

Rescuer: “That’s what I’m talking about! You’re a lifesaver!”

The man happily patted Garfiel on the shoulder, and raised his hand to say a final “Thank you”, before heading to the next building. Garfiel watched as the man and a few collaborators headed off, and pondered on what he should do next. When,

Garfiel: “—Hmm.”

???: “…”

What had caught Garfiel’s eye was a small figure, looking up at the building he had just emerged from.

A teary-eyed girl quietly held her mother’s plump hand. When the mother told her daughter what was going on, she looked down towards the ground and shook her head over and over again.

He did not know what they were talking about, but he knew that this environment was not safe for families. Garfiel moved to try to convince them to leave the area, and then, he suddenly realized something.

Garfiel “…”

Sniffing the air, he noticed something familiar.

Garfiel reached into his pocket for the doll he had just picked up from the building. He lifted it up and sniffed it, and sure enough, it held a faint resemblance to the scent in the air.

Garfiel: “Is this thing what you’re lookin’ for, perhaps?”

Little Girl: “—!”

Garfiel walked up to the two, and gently held out the doll.

The girl, who was initially surprised to be approached, opened her eyes wide upon noticing the doll. The girl’s hands slowly reached out to grab the doll, and her crying intensified.

Little Girl’s Mother: “Thank you. My daughter had been looking for that doll…”

Garfiel: “Ya don’t need to worry ‘bout it. My amazin’ self’s just happened to find it.”

The mother thanked him and he shook his head, denying her praise.

In fact, Garfiel did not believe that he had done much at all. What was a happy event for the girl who was in search for her doll, was a minor trifle when compared to the scale of human lives, and human hearts.

What was required of Garfiel now was a larger role, and—

Garfiel: “I dunno what it is.”

Muttering, he absent-mindedly stroked the head of the girl holding the doll. He then lifted his palm from the little girl’s head, who stared at him.

Little Girl: “—?”

Garfiel: “It’s nothin’. Don’t lose it again.”

Her luck was not going to last long enough for her to find it again.

Thinking this, Garfiel Tinzel gently smiled at the girl, as if to show off his fangs.

3

Three days had already passed since the turmoil had ended in the Watergate City of Pristella.

As a result of the Witch Cult’s attack, the city had been left with many scars, both large and deep.

These scars were caused by the Authorities of the Sin Archbishops of Lust and Gluttony. The problem of the mutated residents and of the Nameless people, was a particularly large issue. The solution to this matter was expected to be found from the Sage Shaula.

Garfiel, who did not attend the meeting, was not certain about the details. He was sure that they would be able to find a way to make it work. However, he was moved by the mention of the Sage, one of the Three Great Heroes inscribed upon the history of the Kingdom of Lugunica.

It was Garfiel’s nature to want to know the stories of amazing people, be they legends, folklore, or heroes who had left their mark on history.

Naturally, his knowledge included the Three Great Heroes. He strongly admired the Divine Dragon, the Sword Saint, and the Sage, but he was particularly conscious of his interest in the Sage.

This was because, of the Three Heroes, there was hardly any information available on Sage Shaula.

In the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica, the existence of the Divine Dragon was revered and told as a popular fairy tale. The title of Sword Saint had been passed down for generations and remained a legend even in present times. Compared to those two, the stories surrounding the Sage were lacking.

What kind of appearance, what kind of origins, what kind of claims did they have to their name?

Everything from their personality to their history was vague. It was public knowledge that they stayed in the Pleiades Watchtower, wishing for world peace while watching over the Witch’s Shrine, but Garfiel was not sure of the truthfulness of those claims.

So, of course, he would have offered to accompany them on the journey to visit the Sage. There was no way Garfiel would want to miss that kind of opportunity.

However, considering the purpose of that journey, it was probably best for him not to express his interest in going. He would have asked Garfiel to accompany him if necessary, that much was certain.

This time however, Garfiel could not think of partaking on that journey in the first place. Perhaps, because Garfiel had too many regrets about this city.

Garfiel: “The Captain’s must’ve been aware of my worries.”

His current task was to protect Otto while they both recovered from the injuries they suffered during the battles.

Subaru: “There’s no guarantee that the Sin Archbishops won’t come back to attack this city. If that happens, you’ll be the only one strong enough to defend it.”

Subaru: “Don’t force anything onto Otto. And don’t do anything crazy with him, either. It might be useless to say this, but…”

Subaru: “Don’t look so worried. Just wait for the good news—Well, I’ll be off.”

Before leaving on his next journey, he had left those words behind for Garfiel.

As Garfiel saw off Subaru and Emilia leaving the city, he pretended to be okay on the surface, but on the inside, his confidence had taken a great hit.

In the end, for various reasons, it was decided that Garfiel needed time to recover, and so, he was left behind.

If Subaru deemed it necessary, he would have brought Garfiel, even if he were badly injured. Garfiel held enough trust in Subaru to help him, even if he was in tatters and dying. It was a good thing that was not the case, because that would mean…

Garfiel: “My amazin’ self’s not gonna be of any use to ya—Captain, it’s gonna be rough.”

Natsuki Subaru, a master of psychological warfare in his own right, had seen through Garfiel’s guise. He belated realized that his innermost thoughts had been noticed; no wonder he had been left behind.

Garfiel: “Well, what should I do… I just can’t seem to find the answer.”

Garfiel was aware that he was stamping his feet in frustration. He had a rough idea as to why he was doing it.

However, Garfiel was not aware of what the right thing to do was. That was why Garfiel’s legs remained immobile.

Garfiel: “…”

So, with that in mind, Garfiel decided that the least he could do was help in the city’s recovery.

Both of Garfiel’s arms had been severely injured during his battle with Kurgan. Luckily, they were showing signs of recovery, perhaps to near-perfect state, thanks to his Divine Protection of Earth Spirits, and the application of his own healing magic.

In his current condition, it was not possible for him to fight in an all-out battle, but it was possible for him to help clear debris and use his nimbleness to get to places others were not capable of reaching.

However, Garfiel knew that this was merely an act of escapism.

As long as he moved his body, working for someone else, he would not have to realize that his feet were not moving. People would not think that he was standing in place.

Garfiel was doing this because he had noticed his weak self.

—What Garfiel Tinzel did not know, in fact, was that Natsuki Subaru had realized some time ago that such acts were all in the name of covering up one’s own weakness.

Drawing a comparison to Natsuki Subaru, who had been aware of it and nevertheless turned away, Garfiel was very much attempting to confront himself, all by his lonesome.

He did not know that, without even a single word being spoken, Subaru had figured out that Garfiel would overcome it.

Garfiel did not know, but—

???: “Oh! Garf! Awesome energy! Mimi loves high places, Garf!”

Subaru knew that there were many people who could make Garfiel realize that, too.

That was why, Garfiel was not the stupid bastard he thought he was.

4

Mimi: “Fufufufufufuun, fufufufufufuun…”

Garfiel: “You’re in good spirits, aren’t’cha?”

As Mimi walked next to him, Garfiel let out a sigh.

Mimi had come to invite Garfiel to lunch during the city’s reconstruction efforts. Initially, what Garfiel really wanted to do was to move his body to shake off his worries. But in the end, Garfiel was forced to go along, as he was unable to think of an excuse to refuse the girl’s pushy invitation.

Mimi: “Hmm, you feel the same way, Garf? Mimi thought so too! But you know, both Hetaro and Tivey can be so annoying when they’re quiet. The Captain’s also missing a hand, so he’s more of a Vice-Captain now?”

Hearing Garfiel’s sigh, Mimi swooped in with a bright face. With her cat ears twitching, she stretched out her chest, and thrusted out her fist with a “shush”.

Garfiel: “Don’t get carried away so quickly!”

Mimi: “Pheeew!”

With agile movement of her fists and waist, her nimbleness caused Garfiel some apprehension.

Mimi was lifted off the ground, and started meowing like a cat. As soon as she made eye contact with Garfiel, she began laughing with a joyful look on her face. Seeing the carefree look on Mimi’s face, Garfiel felt somewhat asinine for worrying about her.

Garfiel: “I’m sure you’re goin’ through a lot of trouble, but ya don’t seem worn down at all.”

Mimi: “Fufufu~, Mimi can’t show you any weakness! Mimi guesses that’s what Mimi’s selling point is, she’s a tough giiirl~! Did you fall in love? Did you fall in love?”

Garfiel: “Ain’t fallen in love.”

Mimi: “Is that sooo~.”

Mimi swayed back and forth without showing any disappointment. She was not very heavy, but it would not be a good idea to keep swinging her around in case it became too violent in addition.

With Mimi’s hand in his own, Garfiel walked towards the eatery he had been assigned to. Incidentally, Kiritaka had guaranteed food and shelter to those who had helped protect the city.

However, since there was a shortage of manpower and goods in many parts of the city, Garfiel did not intend to take advantage of his graciousness. It was what Subaru would often dub as a “win-win situation”.

Garfiel: “Hey midget, how’s yer stomach?”

Mimi: “Hmm~, Mimi’s hungry! Comecomecomeon, let’s eat!”

Garfiel: “Not yer appetite, yer wounds.”

Mimi: “Ohhh~, that’s it! Yeah, maybe they’re feeling good? Mimi’s wounds are nothing to worry about. But Hetaro and Tivey don’t feel alriiight~? Mimi’s wounds were quite tiring, so the two of them can’t be helpeeed~.”

Crossing her short arms, Mimi nodded with a huff and a snort.

During battle, Mimi had shielded Garfiel and as a consequence suffered a deep and incredibly dangerous injury. A serious, life-threatening wound had been carved on her body, one that even healing magic could never seal.

That which had kept Mimi barely alive had been her two younger brothers, who, together with Mimi, were triplets. Due to the effect of the Divine Protection of Trisection, in which the siblings would share their wounds and fatigue, the two brothers took on the burden of the older sister, and the three of them survived, despite the extreme exhaustion.

After that, it was just a matter of resting and waiting for healing magic to take its course. It was ironic, however, that the sister of the three siblings recovered much faster than her two younger brothers.

It was terrible of their sister to appraise them like that, after all they had done.

Garfiel: “Yer brothers don’t deserve that either. Ya should be more grateful, don’t’cha think?”

Mimi: “I understand that too~. I know what Garf wants to say, but Mimi’s still the older sister. Hetaro and Tivey need to be angry at heeer~.”

Garfiel: “Ah?”

Mimi: “Mimi’s so happy, but Mimi doesn’t want both of them to die because of her. Life’s important! Very important! Those two lives are special! So, don’t waste your money on Mimi! The lady said she couldn’t waste her moneeey~!”

Garfiel: “…”

While in Garfiel’s grasp, Mimi wagged her tail in order to balance. The girl crossed her arms and made an unusually difficult face. Garfiel, in turn, rolled his eyes at the girl’s words.

He was expecting another incomprehensible theory to pop up.

Garfiel: “Surprisingly, you’re thinkin’ straight.”

Mimi: “Naturally! Gorgeous Mimi’s smart! Brave! The superior article! Did you fall in love? Did you fall in love?”

Garfiel: “Ain’t fallen in love.”

Mimi: “Aww, disappointing.”

While being shaken, Mimi giggled at Garfiel’s answer. Faced with such an open-minded smile, Garfiel scratched his cheek and sighed.

Garfiel: “But then ya couldn’t say the same thing to yer younger brothers!”

Mimi: “Hmm?”

Garfiel: “If my sister was dyin’ ‘n the means to save her were there, I’d try. So that she could get angry later.”

Mimi: “Hmmm.”

Of course, Garfiel understood Mimi’s reasoning.

If someone you loved risked their life to save you, it would be a joyful thing, yet terrible at the same time. Garfiel could not say that he wanted his loved ones to die for him. Garfiel had a feeling he would never be able to say that, even if it took him the rest of his life.

He suddenly wondered what Ram would do. Garfiel believed Ram would accept the idea of dying with or for the person she loves. The person she was looking towards was that bastard, though. Which inevitably meant that the other party in the arrangement would be that bastard.

Mimi: “Hmmm! But they’re still dummiiies~! After all, Mimi’s very angry. It’s decided!

Garfiel: “Really?”

Mimi: “Don’t say «Thank you» and be peshy about it. Mimi’s sure Hetaro and Tivey know that Mimi would say that, so if they know that and still did it, then Mimi’s sorry. Mimi can’t help it that they love her so much!”

Garfiel: “…”

Mimi: “Maybe dying together means you want to live together, right? So, if that’s the case, your sister will just be your sister, and Hetaro and Tivey are just going to be Hetaro and Tivey.”

Clearly, Mimi had found her answer to the devotion of her two younger brothers. It was an answer that seemed rather simple, so much that it might seem unaffectionate, but it still resonated within Garfiel.

As if a finger had been mindlessly thrust into the labyrinth of heart and prodded around, he felt a disgusting feeling forming in his chest. It was very much like that which had settled deep inside him, was once again spreading throughout his body.

Garfiel: “Then…”

Garfiel tried to use words to best address this feeling that was building up inside him. Glaring at the dangling Mimi, Garfiel bit down on his regenerated sharp teeth.

Garfiel: “Then why did’cha protect me back then? Ya got injured, ya could’ve died…”

To be struck like that, to be hurt in such a way, so much that she might have died; how could she have done that when his own mind was scrambled by the powerful events that had taken place?

Why would she do that for Garfiel, a stranger whom she had met only a few days previously, if she was angry that her two brothers would do the same thing for her?

Garfiel did not possess the words to express his thanks to Mimi for saving his life.

Mimi: “Well, that’s because Mimi’s in love with Garf. Mimi’s so embaaarrassed~.”

Garfiel: “—! It’s only been a few days, right!”

At Mimi’s words, Garfiel bit his lower lip, as Mimi stroked her head in embarrassment.

Yes, only a few days had passed. There was no need for Garfiel to take Mimi’s love declaration seriously. How Garfiel would respond to this confession was not important. What was important, was the strength and depth of those feelings. Only a few days had passed, so what?

He had been thinking about Ram for seven years—about half his life. That was how long he had been in love with that girl. For all those years that he had been in love with her, he had been rebuked by her, but he had never given up on her. He wanted her, he pined for her, he expressed his love for her in word and deed both.

That was why—

Garfiel: “You’ve only known me fer a short while, so why did…”

—You risk your life for me?

Even though Mimi’s two younger brothers loved her so much that they risked their lives for her own, how could Mimi direct such love towards Garfiel?

Mimi: “It’s like Roshi used to say!”

Garfiel: “…Huh?”

Mimi: “Pair of Jokers!”

Garfiel raised an eyebrow in suspicion at the unfamiliar words. Mimi suddenly turned around and let go of Garfiel’s hand, then landing on the ground. Rolling forwards and leaping in front of Garfiel, she then pointed at him with both of her hands.

And then,

Mimi: “The pair will be together for years, decades, even centuries, right?”

Garfiel: “Hundreds of years is too special of an example…”

Mimi: “If the thought is eternity, hundreds of years will be nothing! Although they’ll be together for a long time, they’ll probably have lots of fights over food, right?”

Garfiel: “…”

The scale of their disagreement felt small, but Garfiel listened quietly. He did not want her to get too excited and open her wounds. He would let Mimi do what she wanted to do, and then Garfiel could try to calm her down—

Mimi: “Wouldn’t it be nice to have a partner who would enjoy fighting? It’s also said that you can usually tell who you should be with at first sight!”

Garfiel: “Ya can tell at a glance…”

Mimi: “Mimi, when she took a glance at Garf, she got thinking! The fact we just got together is like a margin of error for if we’ve been together for hundreds of years, right? It’s forward advance! Yeah, just like the lady told me about! Advance! And then, collecting interest!”

Garfiel: “Ah…”

Garfiel was taken aback by Mimi’s heart-pounding words.

He did not know what she meant by “advance” or “collecting with interest”. What did it mean? Like borrowing on a bond with a partner, that would last hundreds of years?

Was that the reason why she had done what she had? Was that her argument?

Garfiel: “…But ya could’ve died.”

Mimi: “Hmm~?”

Garfiel: “If you’re dead, I don’t owe ya anythin’. And yet…”

Mimi: “Aaaand~? Garf, is your head okaaay~?”

As Garfiel painfully stuttered, Mimi tapped his head with her finger. Garfiel was astonished to be told this by someone he would prefer not to tell him this, if possible. Mimi then crossed her arms, and,

Mimi: “If we could’ve died together, doesn’t that mean we could live togetheeer~? Mimi and Garf are both alive, so why are you complaining about iiit~? Going baaald~?”

Garfiel: “…”

Mimi: “Oh? Garf, did you just laugh? Heyyy~, did you laaaugh~?”

In Mimi’s round eyes, she could see Garfiel’s fangs click. The interval between the clicking of Garfiel’s fangs gradually narrowed, and the clicking soon turned into laughter.

Mimi: “Oh! Garf has a big smile! What’s funny?”

Garfiel: “Oy, you’re funny. Ah, shit, damn it!”

Mimi: “Mimi is! Well, Mimi doesn’t blame you. The lady usually says that when Mimi’s around, there’s no choice but to laaaugh~.”

Mimi’s attitude of not understanding caused Garfiel to laugh more and more. No, it was not Mimi who didn’t understand. It was Garfiel himself who didn’t understand.

It was probably the most important thing to Mimi, but she just was unable to put it into words. What was clear to Mimi, was not so clear to Garfiel. Maybe that was why, right now, Garfiel was so frustrated.

Garfiel: “…But ya know what? The reason yer two brothers risked their lives for ya is because they want to live together with’cha, yeah?”

Mimi: “Mimi’s fine! Hetaro and Tivey aren’t fine! That’s what I’m sayiiing~!”

Garfiel: “What do ya mean?”

Mimi, who wielded the jurisdiction that came with being a sister, never stopped smiling until the bitter end.

Looking back on it, Garfiel felt that Fredrica, on occasion, had also been reckless with her position as his sister. Well, that was only natural. A sister was forced to love her brother.

Mimi: “Hmmm~, Garf, you’re looking good now, Mimi will compliment you!”

Garfiel: “Yeah, yeah.”

Mimi: “Did you fall in love with Mimi after she complimented you? Did you fall in love?”

Garfiel: “Ain’t fallen in love.”

Mimi: “Is that soo~. But Mimi’s in love. Rest assured!”

Garfiel: “…Oh. Thank ya.”

Mimi lined up next to Garfiel as they walked, smiling as if she were about to pounce on him. When Garfiel stroked her head, Mimi’s tail twitched and began to sway happily from side-to-side.

So far, Garfiel was not convinced by Mimi’s attitude about the consequences of her self-sacrifice. Garfiel’s convictions and Mimi’s convictions were far too different to have a consensus. However, Mimi was already convinced, at least judging from her words.

Garfiel’s answer had yet to resolve any of the lingering questions that appeared as ripples in the Watergate City.

However, Garfiel now felt as if a ray of light now existed.

The light that illuminated the path to the answer that Garfiel sought.

Mimi: “We’ve arrived at the diner! Garf! Mimi, comecomecomeooon~!”

Garfiel: “Hey, don’t open yer wounds back up!”

Mimi quickly rushed into the building, and Garfiel followed her in dismay.

The dining space was not very large, but at the moment, it was packed with people involved in the reconstruction process. Since it was lunchtime, it was hard to find a vacant seat.

Mimi: “Garf! Over here! This spot’s empty! Can we sare this tabble, pleeease~!”

???: “«Sare this tabble», ah, you’re sharing the table. I understand.”

Mimi, who ran around the store energetically, had quickly secured a seat for two people.

As Garfiel headed to the back of the store, he saw that two of the four seats at a table were empty. Seeing Mimi sitting down with her tail wagging, Garfiel also arrived at the seat. He then attempted to warn the people sitting in front of him, as a noisy Mimi would probably annoy them.

Garfiel: “Oh.”

???: “This is an odd coincidence, Garfiel-dono.”

Garfiel came face-to-face with a grey-haired old man—Wilhelm, seated opposite of him. Facing the quiet eyes of the old swordsman, Garfiel gasped faintly.

Many of Garfiel Tinzel’s regrets remained in the Watergate City.

The second of the solutions, and an encounter that was not unrelated, occurred here.

Interlude II:
Unfulfilled Talent

The menu being served in the diner was so big, that it was hard to imagine that the entire city was currently rebuilding from an attack by several Sin Archbishops.

Incidentally, the same went for the food at the healing facilities; the wide variety of food listed made Garfiel's stomach grumble with anticipation. That was great for the still-growing Garfiel's sizeable appetite, but it also made him question: in their situation, was such a luxury allowed?

Wilhelm: "Even though most of the city's faculties have been halted in some way, aside from some human casualties and the collapse of a few buildings, the scope of the damage is limited. The inhabitants' hearts would succumb before full reconstruction, if a quality-of-life decrease were to happen because of this terrible situation… This is what seems to have been Mister Kiritaka's thoughts."

So Wilhelm spoke to Garfiel, who had raised his eyebrows in response to the food that had been brought to them.

They happened to be sharing a table at the diner, eating quietly, face-to-face. The old swordsman's words made Garfiel's eyes widen, as the latter pictured the thin man in his head.

If Garfiel was to be honest, he didn't think much of Kiritaka. However, he had heard of all the hard work that he had put in protecting the city during the Witch Cult's their attack.

It had not been seen, but he was a person who probably had worked hard. That was why Kiritaka seemed to have something in common with Subaru, in that their normal behavior and their attitude in times of emergency had stark contrasts—Ergo, he felt a lump.

Mimi: "Mmmm~! Yummy yummy! Mimi thinks that it's great that the food tastes sooo~ good, because that means you'll feel happy!

Free food is the best food, that's what the lady saaaid~."

Garfiel: "Ha! Good thing you're energetic. Yer manners… So respectful 'n proper! I should get'cha to help me with 'em later."

Next to Garfiel, Mimi was smiling and spoke just before she began eating. Surprisingly, Mimi seemed to be well-versed in eating etiquette, knowing how to properly handle eating utensils.

Wilhelm: "Garfiel-dono, you…"

Garfiel: "Don't expect too much from me. Been tryin' to fix a few things my sister told me to, in the last year."

Wilhelm: "To strive for it is the correct choice. As long as you continue attempting, until it bears fruit."

He nodded, and, witnessing the fruits of Garfiel's labor, he also appended the second half of his words.

In his hands, the knife and fork were being held in an incredibly shoddy manner. That had not bothered him back when he was living at the Sanctuary, but in the past year of living in the Roswaal mansion, Garfiel had grown ashamed of his whole life.

Table manners were not the only thing he was working to correct, there were several other aspects as well. However, it was difficult for him to say that he had succeeded in correcting many of them.

Garfiel: "It's true that it's lackin' in comparison to the midget here."

Mimi: "Mimi's been doing this since she was a little girl. Both the lady and the captain really love eating! Thanks to that I became berry gud!"

Garfiel: "All the others in our lot are real proper, ain't they? Not only those who had to study proper etiquette, but the Captain and Ottobro're great at it too."

Because of their position, it made perfect sense that everyone from the Roswaal mansion, including Roswaal himself, had mastered their formality and neatness. Despite their origins, Emilia and Beatrice were adept at it as well. It seemed like it was easy to learn with proper practice.

But in that case, how did Subaru and Otto get so good at it? You could say that Otto would have learned it, being from a respected family of merchants, but Subaru was a complete mystery. Then again, Subaru was known to have learned many random skills, so that made a modicum of sense.

Garfiel: "I think the Captain bastard'd be able to eat the rice with these two sticks, tho'. What do ya call 'em… clorsticks, was it?"

Mimi: "Clopstiiicks~, and they're really difficult! Everyone in Kararagi uses them, but Mimi can't handle them properly since Mimi's hands are too small!"

Wilhelm: "Chopsticks, huh? How nostalgic. It is true that they are tricky to handle."

Even Wilhelm acknowledged the high level of difficulty of using this mysterious tool, the chopsticks.

In Garfiel's point of view, it was amazing that Subaru was able to use these to bring food towards his mouth. Ram, too.

Albeit in her case, it was probably because she had always been unusually perceptive at these things.

Garfiel: "Wilhelm-jiisan ain't very good with chopsticks either."

Wilhelm: "I have been to Kararagi a few times, so I have attempted to use them at those opportunities. However, I believe it is a rather difficult tool for everyday use."

Garfiel: "To Kararagi…"

Wilhelm: "Yes, a few times—Such as when I was chasing down the White Whale."

Garfiel: "…"

Wilhelm narrowed his eyes in nostalgia, and Garfiel was at a loss for words.

Albeit he grasped only the broad strokes of the story, and was not sure about the details, Garfiel did indeed know about the connection between Wilhelm and the White Whale, one of the Three Great Witchbeasts. On the surface, the elder had traveled to several countries, in pursuit of clues to avenge the death of the Sword Saint of the previous generation.

After having overcome years of hardship, Wilhelm had finally been able to defeat the White Whale. However, the old swordsman, who had supposedly accomplished his revenge, encountered his wife whose soul had seemingly been brought back, and crossed swords with her—

Wilhelm: “Was the use of chopsticks the only thing you wanted to ask me about, Garfiel-dono?”

Garfiel: “Oh, uhh…”

Wilhelm: “Of course there are some things I cannot tell you, but I owe you a great debt for yielding me the chance to face my wife. If there is anything this old man is able to answer, I will do so.”

Garfiel: “…”

Regarding his wife, Wilhelm stated assertively.

By now, it was well-known that the two dead people who had joined the Witch Cult, were the previous Sword Saint, and Kurgan the Eight-Arms. Unquenchable rage flared at the thought of those deeds of mistreating the dead, but that feeling would be put aside for the moment being.

If there was one thing he had to ask, that would be—

Garfiel: “Are ya sure that what my amazin’ self fought was really Kurgan, the Eight-Arms…?”

Wilhelm: “Hmm… What do you mean?”

Garfiel: “Well, couldn’t it be some other guy who looked like him?

If not, then what?”

Wilhelm: “You are saying something does not seem right, hm—I see, I understand.”

Wilhelm nodded at Garfiel’s mumbled, clumsy words. Halting his meal, his piercing blue eyes looked directly at the young boy in front of him.

Wilhelm: “Does the fact that you managed to win make you doubt yourself?”

Garfiel: “…My amazin’ self’s the strongest, I’ve trained to be the strongest, ain’t gonna stop now. That’s what needs to be done, that’s what my amazin’ self’s gotta do for the Captain. But it’s not like this. The peak my amazin’ self’s lookin’ at ain’t this.”

The hero. The God of War. Kurgan, the Eight-Arms. A legendary being, the strongest and most powerful of the Multi-Arm Tribe, he was a legend in the Sacred Vollachian Empire.

During the battle, there had been many times where Garfiel had thought he was sure to lose, where he had thought he was about to die, only to survive by the skin of his teeth. He had challenged Kurgan to a one-on-one battle, and had throttled his neck.

Garfiel agreed that coming out of the fight alive was a great achievement. Because of this, the people surrounding him had a favorable opinion. Even by a Sin Archbishop, his oppressive strength could not be ignored. Defeating him single-handedly, had undoubtedly been his contribution to the defense of the city.

But Garfiel’s conviction, and what had actually happened, did not match together, in his mind.

Garfiel: “Wilhelm-jiisan, the Sword Demon Wilhelm knows first-hand how it’s like to fight Kurgan the Eight-Arms. What did’cha think of it, old man? Was that the real deal?”

Wilhelm: “…”

With a look as if he were clinging onto something, Garfiel chose to rely on Wilhelm's memories.

Garfiel was not sure of what answer he wished to hear. Would he be satisfied if Wilhelm denied that he was wrong?

But even if Wilhelm denied the fact that Garfiel was wrong, would he still be able to believe that denial?

Wilhelm: "Indeed, it is true that nearly thirty years ago, I became acquainted with Kurgan. We fought each other a total of four times. I chopped off his arms and he slashed my guts… You could say it was a relationship based on piling up life-or-death battles."

Not long ago, the relationship between the Kingdom of Lugunica and the Sacred Vollachia Empire had been at its worst in hundreds of years, and a fierce clash took place in a city near the border.

To avoid the intervention of the Divine Dragon, Vollachia had invaded a city only using a small number of troops. Wilhelm, the Commander of the Royal Guards at the time, had been the one to fight them at the time.

The fight that followed had been a fair one, with both sides fighting each other to a standstill. It was said that after four battles between the two forces, the dispute was settled with the retreat of the Vollachian party.

Wilhelm: "It was a good fight. With eight arms and four Demon Cleavers, attacking and defending against all eight attacks in one blow was a matter of life-and-death…"

Garfiel: "Aye, that's how it went. In fact, almost died to it."

Wilhelm: "It was one move against eight of them. So I had to choose whether to reduce the number of moves available to him first, or to deal a fatal blow with my one move, all while evading all eight of his attacks."

Garfiel: "…Oy, not askin' for a lecture on how to beat him…"

Garfiel would have been interested in a discussion about tactics, but now was not the time. Right now, he was more interested about the answer to his question.

At Garfiel's words, Wilhelm shook his head horizontally, prefacing with "I apologize",

Wilhelm: "As you get older, one cannot help but reminisce over past memories. Especially in the past few days, I have found myself doing so very often."

Garfiel: "Don't like lookin' at the past myself. Can't speak for others, tho'."

Wilhelm: "Rather than gazing at your back, it is more like looking back at your footprints to see how you have ended up in your current position. However, I do agree it makes me seem emotional —But more importantly, you were talking about Kurgan."

Wilhelm's face turned serious when the turn came to answer Garfiel's question. From the look in the young warrior's eyes, the old swordsman could see the worries that troubled him.

It was completely natural, as hesitation and worry were walls that all combatants would encounter at least once.

And the answer to that problem was—

Garfiel: "…"

Wilhelm: "My apologies, but I did not exchange words with Kurgan during our battle the other day. It was probably him, but I could not afford to let my attention waver during my own fight. Therefore, I do not possess enough evidence to say with full confidently that the one Garfiel-dono fought was really Kurgan the Eight-Arms."

Garfiel: "No evidence…"

Wilhelm: "The answer should be exactly as you feel, Garfiel-dono. But I do understand why you might be dissatisfied with it. Because of this, I shall tell you my personal opinion… The two we faced, both my wife and Kurgan, were not really those two people."

As Garfiel raised an eyebrow, Wilhelm let out a long sigh. The subject at hand was too heavy to end without a clear explanation.

Noticing the confused look on Garfiel's faced, Wilhelm prefaced with "May I?", before continuing his statement,

Wilhelm: "There is no doubt in my mind that what we fought were corpses that the Witch Cult shamelessly defiled, having been made into their puppets. However, I believe that in their last moments, they were able to regain control of themselves, and truthfully speak their minds."

Garfiel: "…"

In his final moments, or rather, when the battle had been settled.

After all his eight moves had been evaded, Kurgan had been dealt a fatal wound from Garfiel's fangs, and so arrived his end. The words that Kurgan had uttered right before disappearing still lingered in his ears.

Kurgan: "—Magnificent."

Leaving merely a single word, the God of War then turned to ash and was scattered by the wind. At that time, in the moment of victory, in his mind there had only been the joy of being recognized by a legend.

However, as time passed, negative thoughts had begun bubbling up. How had he been able to defeat the God of War of legends so easily, when he himself had yet to reach his full potential, had yet to face the tiger that laid inside of him?

Sure, it had been an extreme situation, he had staked his life, behind his back there had been his younger siblings, with whom he had not exchanged nearly enough words—Was that the only reason why he had been the victor?

Wilhelm: "Kurgan was a very quiet man. It would not surprise me if, even in his last moments, he had not been willing to leave more than a few words."

Garfiel: “Ohh, there was one word. He told my amazin’ self one word…”

Wilhelm: “Then do not tell us that one word—It was the commend of Kurgan, the Eight-Arms, to the warriors who bested him in battle. It is something not to be shared with those uninvolved in the battle.”

Garfiel: “…”

When Wilhelm cut him off, Garfiel held his tongue.

Praise, coming from a god, to a warrior. Was he worthy of it?

Garfiel: “Don’t get it.”

Wilhelm: “Hmm.”

Garfiel: “Those two, weren’t really those two. Ain’t in the mood for riddles. Tell me. I dunno what you’re thinkin’.”

Wilhelm: “…”

Garfiel voiced his displeasure, his tone becoming raspy. He was fully aware that he was being rude.

Behind Wilhelm’s eyes, there was the slightest change of emotions. Garfiel leaned forward, as a means to get the other to reveal the answer to his own troubles. But,

Mimi: “Garf, you’re being a bad boy!”

Garfiel: “…Ahh?”

Mimi: “Ojii-san, did that make you feel loneli? So Mimi thinks it’s a bad, bad idea to be so pushy? Also, the look in Garf’s eyes look suuuper~ bad too! That’s not good!”

Mimi, who was sitting next to Garfiel, jabbed her finger into his side. Being poked by the touch of her finger, Garfiel raised an eyebrow wondering what it was all about, then quickly came to his senses.

Garfiel: "…"

Wilhelm's eyes were full of kindness as he watched Mimi's antics, the same expression that he had shared with Garfiel just a few moments ago. And there was something more to it.

Only then did Garfiel realize how he had unknowingly and unreservedly gouged Wilhelm's wounds.

Garfiel: "…Sorry. Was only thinkin' 'bout myself."

Apologizing, he bowed his head.

Wilhelm had had an unexpected reunion with his supposedly-deceased wife, which had ended with swords. The Sword Demon then exchanged his last farewells—and devoid of consideration for his spirit, violent, selfish words were piled upon this.

To the boy bowing in front of him in shame, Wilhelm shook his head.

Wilhelm: "No, I am very much in the wrong for being pretentious. At your age, it is only natural to display such rashness for an answer. I would have done the same. But as we get older, we tend to forget that."

Garfiel: "…Can't even imagine Wilhelm-jiisan actin' like that."

Wilhelm: "It is not so strange. It pains me to say this, but I was more impatient and foolish than most young men of the time…"

After the old man's calm demeanor and consolation was presented to him, Garfiel still felt bad.

The Sword Demon was famous for his deadly skill with the sword, yet there had never been any talk of him having a vicious personality. The reason Garfiel had started his self-reflection was because of the elder's kindness. Anyhow,

Wilhelm: "They were both themselves, and yet, they were not. I am not trying to make this a riddle nor being evasive. It is exactly as stated."

Garfiel: “Exactly as stated… Not sure if I’m getting’ it.”

Wilhelm: “In his last moments, while on the verge of death, it is certain that his own will returned. But before that, those wicked scoundrels were using him as a puppet, and so he was not able to exercise the full extent of his swordsmanship.”

Garfiel: “…”

Wilhelm: “In other words, neither the Sword Saint of the previous generations, nor the Kurgan the Eight-Arms, possessed the level of ability they originally did.”

Wilhelm told the speechless Garfiel his observations. That his opponent had not shown his full strength, albeit he himself had battled with such brutality, was not an assertion that he could just accept.

With his life on the line, he had won in a fight of life-or-death. However, it was the answer he was looking for, because the question on his mind, was whether he had been an opponent that required him to put his life at stake to defeat.

There was that, but…

Wilhelm: “If I had faced my wife in her prime as I am now, I would have been defeated within the first few strikes of her blade. I was only able to finally best her by throwing away everything else except the blade, while in my prime—It is impossible that was its level.”

Garfiel: “If the same applied to both, then…”

Wilhelm: “Kurgan’s skills were degraded compared to their previous state, merely a shadow of his former self. I apologize for saying this, but… I believe that, had your opponent been the real Eight-Arms, it would be unthinkable that you would not have been reduced to a corpse on the ground. He was quite the fighter.”

Garfiel: “Oh, so my amazin’ self’s…”

Wilhelm: “—Do not be so prideful, young man.”

Immediately after, Garfiel's hair stood on end with the realization of a stinging battle aura, and he instinctively kicked his chair away and jumped back to the entrance of the diner.

With the other people in the dining hall startled because of the sudden situation, only the figure of Garfiel was different, as he stood on all fours and breathed heavily. Meanwhile, Wilhelm and Mimi were still seated as if everything were normal.

Garfiel: "Ha, haaa…?"

Wilhelm: "I have the impression that Garfiel-dono has a large vessel, but it has yet to be filled. Although I am already in the realm of antiques… I can still recognize a real deal when I come across one. If a part of it can be felt now, then it means it shall be worth the effort."

Having said that, Wilhelm stood up and wiped his mouth. His plate had been emptied. And his demeanor showed that he had said what needed to be said.

If there was still something missing, it was not on Wilhelm's part.

The missing part was in Garfiel's heart. And because part of the vessel donned a hole, the conviction it possessed was now spilling out.

Wilhelm: "That conviction is what you require to become even stronger. Do not lose sight of it."

Garfiel: "Gonna keep that mind… Quite the bad person, aren't'cha."

Wilhelm: "We are not exactly on the same faction, you know. There should be some level of caution. But—"

Wilhelm, who had finished his meal and was getting ready to leave, looked at Mimi and stopped mid-sentence. Mimi was humming happily while stealing her favorite pieces of food from Garfiel's plate and continuing to eat.

That Mimi, then noticed Wilhelm's gaze,

Mimi: “Hmmmm~? What is it, ojii-san?”

Wilhelm: “It is amazing that you were capable of seeing through the hostility of a battle aura in a split second’s time.”

Mimi: “Ojii-san doesn’t have any reason to be bad to Mimi or her friends, though?”

Wilhelm: “You have a good eye—With you by my side, straying from the beaten path would not be a worry.”

Nodding to Mimi, who answered as though it was obvious, Wilhelm then turned his focus to Garfiel. While heading to the eatery’s exit, the elder swordsman indicated Mimi with his hand.

Wilhelm: “You would be wise to care for her, as the opposite gender will become a treasure later on in life.”

Garfiel: “—Hk! What’s wit’cha! My amazin’ self’s already in love with someone else!”

Wilhelm: “Whatever you choose to do, do your best to not get lost along the way—Lest you end up much like this rotting demon.”

Having said his final words, Wilhelm walked out of the dining room.

Watching while unable to say anything back, Garfiel clacked his fangs in annoyance. He walked back to his seat, and gobbled up the remaining food in one go.

Mimi: “Oh, Garf, that’s bad maneers!”

Garfiel: “Don’t wanna hear that from someone who was stealin’ food from others’ plates a second ago. Ah, shit! Even more pissed now than I was before, like this.”

Rather than feeling the release of his doubts, he only felt more and more troubled.

The path ahead had been illuminated, but the guidance had been so difficult to understand that Garfiel was still unable to piece together the clues.

It was a frustrating feeling, to be just one step short of being convinced of his own strength, despite having all that was necessary.

Garfiel: “Damnit, what should be done now?”

Mimi: “Garf, are you bothered? What’s bothering you?”

Touching the white scar on his forehead, Garfiel blurted out his thoughts, putting a concerned expression on Mimi’s food-stained face. The girl delicately wiped her stained mouth with her sleeve,

Mimi: “If something bothers you, talk. Mimi will give you the answer!”

Garfiel: “…My amazin’ self’s not sure on what the hell he’s supposed to do now.”

Mimi: “When you’re done eating, you should take the plates off the table! Here!”

Garfiel: “That’s not really what I was talkin’ ‘bout.”

Having said that, they both took their empty dishes to the kitchen, and left the diner.

Their stomachs had been filled. So should they continue working on the city’s reconstruction during the afternoon? If working meant he would be able to avoid thinking about it, he would do it.

Garfiel: “Ahhhh, my belly’s all full. Should we continue the reconstruction in th’ afternoon? My amazin’ self can’t imagine workin’ feelin’ like this.”

Mimi: “Aaalright~, let’s gooo~, Garf!”

Garfiel: “You’re quite the energetic gal, aren’t’cha. So where are we goin’?”

Mimi: “It’s obviooous~, to Garf’s brother, siblings and mother’s house!”

Garfiel: “…”

Garfiel had been walking behind Mimi’s leisurely gait, but when his brain processed what the small girl had said, he stopped dead in his tracks.

His fangs gnashed together, and Garfiel’s eyes widened, as he turned his head away. He struggled to keep his inner thoughts from being laid bare on his face as much as possible.

Garfiel: “What’cha say?”

Mimi: “Right now, Mimi’s going to Garf’s family! That’s what Garf needs right now!”

Suddenly, Mimi puffed out her small chest and raised her tail. Then, she pointed to the surprised Garfiel and exclaimed.

Mimi: “Talking with your family is beeest∼! That was Roshi’s lesson!”

Interlude III: Name of Warmth

1

No matter what, in the end, his nature had not been corrected.

Even if he knew a problem stood in front of him, he would shy away from it. Even if he knew a solution existed, because he was aware it would be accompanied by pain, he would shy away from it.

Garfiel wondered if he was facing the same problem he had encountered in Sanctuary, if he was still the same person as back then.

Had he really changed at all, compared to those times he spent confidently boasting inside the confinements of his old home?

???: “Ah! Gorgeous Tiger!”

Garfiel: “Oi… that’s dangerous!”

The boy’s expression lit up upon laying his gaze on Garfiel visiting his home. As the boy ran up to him with all his might, Garfiel simultaneously felt a sense of danger and relief at his sudden appearance.

Garfiel: “Don’t want’cha fallin’ ‘n hurtin’ yerself. If ya fall down ‘n get hurt, ya’ll look like an idiot.”

Mimi: “Ohhh~, it hurts when you fall, doesn’t it? Mimi used to fall down when she was a little girl too! And as soon as Mimi did, Hetaro looked like he was in paaain~. But Mimi was fine. Strange!”

Mimi laughed innocently, but that her younger brother had taken on her pain and wounds was a no-brainer. As a result of being overly pampered, someone clumsy even after growing up, or that is, a careless sister, was created.

Regardless—

Garfiel: “Things settled down at home since then?”

???: “Yes, it’s okay. Mom and nee-chan have calmed down too, haven’t they?”

Garfiel: “…That’s right.”

Patting the boy’s head—the one who was presumably his brother, Garfiel looked up at the large mansion.

For Garfiel, it was a place that brought mixed emotions alongside.

In the Thompson mansion, the family’s mainstay, Garek Thompson, was long absent.

It would have been a relief, were he merely working at the City Hall, too busy with the reconstruction efforts to go home, but unfortunately, that was not the case.

Garek Thompson had lost his human body, his appearance now mutated into that of a black dragon. That fact had already been confirmed by Garfiel himself.

Although Garek was now a dragon, he was still capable of speech, as his vocal organs were still intact. In this respect alone, he was much more fortunate than the other victims in the Town Hall. As for those, the people who had been turned into flies, they had been rendered unable to communicate, let alone speak. However, many people felt as if that was a blessing.

It was easy to imagine what thoughts the people who were turned into flies would utter while despairing about their transformation, if one could communicate with them.

Fred: “Hey, Gorgeous Tiger. I wonder when Dad will be back…”

Garfiel: “…”

Fred: “He’ll be back, won’t he?”

Again, Garfiel stroked his brother’s anxious head with his rough palm.

It would be easy to utter words of encouragement devoid of any basis, but even if he did, they would lack any warmth. Upon considering what kind of scars those unhopeful words would leave on the boy, Garfiel adjudged it to be something that he could not do lightly.

If the boy were a person with whom he had little to no connection, would Garfiel have encouraged him irresponsibly? Was their connection the reason as to why Garfiel did not do that? He himself, did not know.

???: “Fred? How long will you stay outside…?”

Garfiel: “…Yo.”

While he was talking to the boy, a blonde girl showed her face from inside the house.

She was the boy’s sister, and presumably Garfiel’s sister too.

When the girl noticed Garfiel, her expression brightened, and then immediately reverted to her previous awkward face. The change in expression would normally be described as cute, but now, catching a glimpse of her complicated emotions was just painful.

Sister: “Well, you came all the way to our house again? Gorgeous Tiger sure has a lot of free time on his hands, doesn’t he?”

Garfiel: “Ah, just restin’ now, ya know. Been wantin’ to see yer faces. But if I ain’t welcomed, I’ll just leave immediately… Oi!”

Mimi: “Garf, look at people in the face when you’re talking to them!”

Garfiel was reluctant to talk to his sister too, as he noticed her turning away weakly. As he announced his intention to not force it, he was pinched on the waist by Mimi, who was standing behind him.

He reluctantly turned to the girl, and sure enough, his sister looked somewhat tearful.

At least, he now felt that he had not been rejected by his family.

Garfiel: “Supportin’ Mom and takin’ care of yer little brother… Pretty hard-workin’ sister.”

Sister: “—! Yes, yes. So, hm, I don’t mind having a little chat with you. One more person to talk to won’t change anything.”

Mimi: “There are two people, not one!”

Sister: “Two more people won’t change that!”

As the young girl turned red and shouted at them, Mimi and Fred looked at Garfiel with an expectant look on their faces. Garfiel was not a bad enough person to be able to disregard their request.

Rather, Garfiel loved to respond to such looks in the first place, despite his current state of mind being one of being unwilling to talk. Especially if it were about his younger siblings.

Garfiel: “Well, lemme in for a moment. If I’m botherin’ your Mom, I’ll just go away.”

Fred: “That sort of thing…”

Sister: “Mom wouldn’t do that.”

The two siblings looked at each other and smiled confidently.

And yet, in fact, they were right.

2

???: “I’m sorry. You came a long way, but I wasn’t properly prepared for your visit… I just wish I had done a little better.”

Garfiel: “No problem. We’re the ones who popped up all of a sudden in the first place.”

???: “You don’t have to look so anxious, you’re not being a bother.

It's very encouraging that you found the time to visit us."

Garfiel: "—Hk."

Garfiel's throat froze as his secretive inner thoughts were unintentionally revealed.

However, the one who had done it, Reala, possessed no ill intent. Of course. Reala—she was a person who was truly free from malice.

The more Garfiel interacted with her, the more he felt that even though she had lost her memory, that part of her was still the exact same.

Garfiel: "…But even so, the house's strangely deserted."

Mimi: "Hmmm, that's how it feels? When we came here earlier, it was kind of messy, but now it feels like it's clean and tidy."

Mimi, who was bouncing on the sofa, looked around the house unhappily while agreeing with Garfiel.

Once again, Garfiel and Mimi had been invited into the family's living room, and on Reala, serving tea at the table, giggled at their impressions of her home.

Reala: "Fufu, I'm surprised that you noticed. Maybe it's because it's the house I spend every day in, but it doesn't feel too different…"

Sister: "No way. I have a very strange feeling about it too. Mom just doesn't care about it."

Fred: "Onee-chan, you're so annoying."

Sister: "What was that?!"

The sister angrily chased after her younger brother, after the piercing stab that escaped his lips.

Out of the corner of his eye, he saw them noisily running around the house, then turning his gaze to Reala, silently asking her about the meaning of their last exchange.

Reala: “—?”

Garfiel: “Ah, no, what do ya mean by that? What’s goin’ on?”

It was useless to ask his question with merely a gaze, so Garfiel queried again, this time properly, with words. In response, Reala clapped her hands, prefacing with an “Oh”,

Reala: “Oh, it’s nothing so big. Now is the time when everyone in the city needs to work together to support each other… We can give away some of our household goods to those in need, or donate some of our savings, and so on. That’s all there is.”

Garfiel: “…So, you’re missin’ a lotta stuff.”

Reala: “There was a lot of stuff in this house to begin with. It’s not so much that we had tons of stuff, it’s just that I’m not one to throw things away.”

Reala playfully stuck her tongue out at him, but it was not all that simple.

Of course, there was the principle that people should help each other. The Thompson family, however, was a little different. After all, the family now went without one of its main pillars—the father.

So rather, in this environment, if they decided to help others, they would soon become the ones in need.

Reala: “My husband… Garek will be back soon. I believe in that, so you don’t have to worry about me like that.”

Garfiel: “—Tch! But…”

Reala: “I’ve… been thinking about this for a long time. The more anxious you are, the more happiness will slip away. This is something from a long time ago, just over a decade. I don’t remember anything from those days… Oh, did I scare you?”

Garfiel: “…Might be a joke that always gets people, but this villain here’s already heard it from yer husband.”

Reala: “Oh, I see… Hmph, that guy.”

It seemed that amnesia was an easy way to surprise others, so Reala looked a little disappointed with the fact that it had not worked this time around. He believed it to be a very optimistic use of amnesia, but had it been said back when he was unaware of her condition, it would have devastated Garfiel.

It felt like he was taking it a little bit better now, but it was because he had taken time to process his thoughts, and had received a lot of help from many people.

And most surprisingly, what struck him more than the subject of amnesia was the fact that his mother’s thoughts, the very foundation of her being, had not changed despite having lost her memories.

—Because that was the origin of his mother’s actions, that tomorrow may be better.

Reala: “It was Garek who gave me these ten or so wonderful years, at a time when I had nothing. He made me, an empty person, what I am today and gave me the opportunity to have a lovely daughter and a lovely son… So what would I do if I didn’t believe in Garek?”

Garfiel: “…”

Reala: “So you don’t have to be more concerned about it than you should be. I’m not trying to be tough or anything, but I believe in Garek… If Garek didn’t mind, I would’ve been happy with him coming back in that form.”

Garfiel: “No, that guy, it’s just that even if yer husband said it’s aight, the others’d stop him.”

Reala: “Really? I thought it was cool…”

Reala put faith in her husband, whose form had been morphed into that of a black dragon, while gazing towards tomorrow.

However, as it was only a change in appearance, Garek still had the faculties to exchange words. Nevertheless, the couple had debated it, and their joint decision was for him to sleep in ice.

Garfiel was not as tactless as to try and listen in on that, nor had he witnessed the actual freezing.

It was due to none other than Reala, that Reala's heart had steeled itself.

Garfiel: "…You're strong, ain't'cha?"

Reala: "Yes, of course. Because I'm a mother of two children".

Reala smiled as she said it, throwing out her chest.

The fact that she was not the mother of two, but the mother of four, only lent proof to the statement of her strength.

It was a different kind of strength, from the fighting strength that Garfiel was knowledgeable about. That which was present in Subaru and Otto, was the same that was present in his amnestic mother.

Surely, that part of Garfiel, that untrained strength of his, laid right in front of him.

Reala: "Oh, yes, I actually have a question for you too, Gorgeous Tiger-san."

When Garfiel gave her a distant look, Reala suddenly clapped her hands. Listening to her unchanging tone and manner of speech, Garfiel nodded casually, letting an "Ah" escape through his lips.

Garfiel: "Ah, say whatever ya want. To be honest tho', the important part of the discussion doesn't really concern my amazin' self. Don't think I'd have much to say too."

Reala: "Nono, I'm not talking about that. I'm talking about you, Gorgeous Tiger-san."

Garfiel: "'Bout my amazin' self?"

Reala: "Yes—Gorgeous Tiger-san, why do you care so much about us? That’s what I’m curious about.”

The sudden and unexpected blow hit him at a moment he had put his guard down.

His fangs literally trembled, and the resolve that he was supposed to possess, cracked.

Garfiel: “…”

Reala, in front of him, and Mimi, beside him, were silently waiting for Garfiel’s response. As he watched them, Garfiel’s thoughts spun.

When Mimi brought him here, he should have been prepared to a certain extent. However, now he was now being reminded that, in the end, his resolve was vague.

Did he wish to tell Reala about her lost memories? Did he wish to come forward and tell his two younger siblings that he was their brother, at least? Or did he intend to leave quickly, only relaying them his concern for Garek?

Now, even remembering was something he was incapable of doing.

Garfiel: “The reason that my amazin’ self’s comin’ to yer home’s that my amazin’ self’s got a bit of a relationship with ya guys, ‘n I’m anxious, so I wanna keep an eye on ya. Y’all’re missin’ somethin’, yeah?”

Reala: “Well, it’s pretty hard indeed. You’re right, so I can’t say anything about that.”

Mimi: “Oh, you’re out of it? What’s missing? Ah, hair? You know, when it’s Fire Season, Mimi also loses a lot of hair and stuff! But in the Ice Season, she gets a little fluffy! Mamechishiki!”

To the unclear wording, Reala and Mimi reacted in a typical way.

Seeing this, a blatant sense of relief swept over Garfiel’s chest. Given the personalities of the two, they should not press him for any clarification. Garfiel could now leave this place, without expressing the indescribable emotion in his chest. He thought it was a subject a matter that required time. Yes, time.

This was the kind of thing that should be done calmly, and with time, to seek the right answer. That was exactly what he was going to do, he was going to ask Frederica, he was going to check with his sister, and then—

Garfiel: "—Uh."

Reala: "Is everything alright? Gorgeous Tiger-san?"

Garfiel: "Why…?"

Reala: "I don't know why, but you look like such a fragile, little child."

Garfiel was shocked, thin white fingers in contact with his head.

Reala had leaned over, stroking his head. The softness of her touch was terribly gentle, full of compassion, as if he were her own beloved child.

Reala's memories, which were supposed to be lost, and Garfiel's memories, which he had started to forget, overlapped.

It must have been like this someday, being held and having his head patted, in the arms of Reala—Reshia Tinzel.

At this moment, the physical memory of that time had been revived, coming back to haunt Garfiel's heart. And without having been given a moment to think about it, to endure it, his feelings broke down.

Garfiel: "…Mom."

Reala: "…"

Garfiel: "Mom… Mom, Mom… Hk!"

With her caressing fingertips still touching his hair, Garfiel called out to Reala in front of him. His eyes were teary, his voice trembled, and Garfiel looked so thin and frail that his petite body seemed to get smaller and smaller.

No wonder. No matter how strong he is, no matter how hard he tries, everyone is a child in front of their mother. No matter how brash he can be, he is just a stubborn child.

Garfiel: “My amazin’ self’s… My amazin’ self’s, Mom… Hk!”

He had so many things to say. He had as many things to say as there were stars.

The many thoughts that he had given up on thinking, the ones that he had not been able to communicate, shone brilliantly in Garfiel’s mind, and he rejoiced at the opportunity that had presented itself to him.

He wished to be held in his mother’s arms, to be forgiven, and to cry out in peace.

???: “…Garfiel, right?”

Garfiel: “…”

Teary-eyed and downcast, Garfiel’s voice was strangled.

Next to him, Mimi suddenly spoke Garfiel’s name. Garfiel did not know to whom it was addressed. But then he heard the sound of a gasp in front of him, and the sensation of fingertips leaving his head.

Garfiel: “—Ah.”

Her fingers moved away, his mother’s precious warmth was lost, and Garfiel’s throat rumbled weakly.

But that sentiment was soon replaced by another one.

Reala: “Garfiel, come here.”

In front of Garfiel’s raised face, Reala spread her arms and smiled. The gesture and the words froze over Garfiel’s thoughts.

But even though his brain had stopped, his body, his soul, knew what to do.

Garfiel: “I’m sorry, Mom… I’m sorry…!”

Sobbing like a kid, just like a child, Garfiel jumped towards Reala—towards Reshia, burying his head in her chest, and shouted.

A gentle, soft palm stroked the weeping Garfiel’s head.

Reala: “Okay, okay… Garf, good boy, good boy. You’ve been working so hard all this time.”

Garfiel: “—Kh! That’s right! My amazin self’s been trying so hard! But I made so many mistakes, and still… everyone is… Hk!”

Unable to speak properly, Garfiel continued his incoherent speech in Reshia’s arms.

What overflowed now, were all fifteen years that encompassed Garfiel’s life.

He had lost his mother, been separated from his sister, resolved himself to not lose any more family members, and then had the next decade of his life shattered by Subaru and the others.

In that period of time, how many times had he almost been crushed by the very things he was holding on to? How many times had he grieved?

How many times had he trampled upon feelings, in his desperation to regain the love he had lost, to not let it go?

Back when he was much younger, he had taken advantage of his father and mother, clinging onto them while leaving the walls confining his heart intact, something which he should have overcome.

Knowing that the walls were there, he got used to slipping through the side streets to avoid them, while taking notice of that high wall looming behind him.

Garfiel: “…Mom, hk!”

Reala: “It’s okay, Garf. Mom’s here for you.”

Being comforted by her kind words and compassion, entrusting his heart to his mother’s love, which he had asked for, but had not been given.

He remembered being loved by his family. Garfiel knew that he was loved by his sister and his grandmother both. He also was aware that his mother loved him.

However, Garfiel, who had felt the love of his sister and his grandmother, for the first time in his life, at this juncture, now felt his mother’s love. Now that he was getting what he had sought, Garfiel sobbed.

He had not learned the answer to the feelings that welled up in his chest.

Their name had yet to be made known to Garfiel.

But the very thing he felt right now, that which made his heart tremble, his fangs snap, and his soul quake, was the answer.

He was sure everyone already knew the answer, but only now, Garfiel finally had it at his fingertips.

—This passionate feeling as it was, was the answer.

3

Mimi: “Ohhh~, Garf, did you stop crying? Did you cry a lot? Garf’s such a crybabyyy~!”

As Garfiel’s fretful, sobbing rage settled down and Garfiel frowned in embarrassment, Mimi opened the door, returning with his younger siblings.

It seemed that she had left the sobbing Garfiel alone with Reala while he was in his mother’s arms, which made Garfiel feel even more uncomfortable. How much time had passed since he had left his seat?

Fred: “Gorgeous Tiger, are you alright?”

Sister: “I can’t believe that you’d cry out in public even though you’re a man. You’re just like Fred.”

Even though he had not been directly in sight, he had been crying out, loud enough to be heard throughout the house. Mimi had taken his younger siblings outside, but the effort would be in vain.

Garfiel: “Sorry ‘bout…”

Mimi: “Hmm, what? No matter what, Mimi is wondering if Garf’s happy. Also, she’s wondering if there will be anything sweet for snacks!”

Garfiel: “Oh, yeah. Damnit.”

As Mimi laughed with a gleeful, natural look on her face, he wondered just how much thought she had put into that action.

Garfiel pondered if it had been an instinctive actions from her after laying her eyes on him. If so, her instinct was not something to be scoffed at.

Mimi: “Hmmm~? What’s up? Have you fallen in love? Did you fall in love?”

Garfiel: “Ain’t fallen in love.”

Mimi: “Is that sooo~.”

It was hard to believe that he was actually thinking about it, but the fact was that Mimi had saved his life many times.

Not only his heart, of course, had been saved, but his very life had too been saved by Mimi. And as a result, by complete chance, Mimi ended up not expiring. Garfiel should have been the one to come out victorious from that battle, but the credit for that achievement went to Wilhelm. And so, he had nothing to do with Mimi’s salvation.

He was borrowing and borrowing, but he had yet to be able to do anything to pay his debt back.

Mimi: “So, how was Garf?”

Reala: “Well, you’ll have to check with him. I’m sure he’s okay now… I think you’re Gorgeous Mimi-san’s favorite, Gorgeous Tiger-san.”

Mimi: “Weeell~, maybe. Garf, Mimi’ll do it if Mimi has to.”

Garfiel could not help being struck by that embarrassing conversation. To take his mind off things, he just stroked the heads of his younger brother, who was giving him a worried look, and his younger sister, who was glancing at him.

Upon touching his brother and sister, he felt even more love for them than before. Perhaps it was because of the fact that they are siblings. He had not really felt or understood love as an emotion before, but now it had become a reality.

Garfiel: “…”

As soon as he realized that, another wave of anxiety arose.

This time it was a straightforward concern, a very straightforward concern. It was whether he possessed the qualifications to be recognized as an elder brother by these two, his younger siblings, or not.

Fred: “Gorgeous Tiger?”

Sister: “Hey, why are you frozen? Ehh, it’s not like you have some weird disease or something, is it?”

Comparing the gaze of his siblings, Garfiel’s thought whirled.

They probably didn’t hate him. It was easy to understand the favoritism of the younger brother, and the younger sister was hard to understand, but despite that, she likely wasn’t malicious.

And besides, he had used his strength in battle in front of them as

Gorgeous Tiger—To be honest, his display had been less-than-impressive at times, and he could not renege the feeling that he would have lost if not for the supporters, but he would put that aside for the moment.

Mimi: “Garf?”

Garfiel: “Shut up. Come on, do somethin’.”

Feeling like Mimi could be of assistance to him, Garfiel bit his fangs and took the lead in restraining her. When Mimi pulled away from him, a grin plastered on her face due to his words, Garfiel’s brain began turning at high speed and blowing heat.

Coming forward, that in itself was possible at this very juncture. Of course, “possible” here meant that it was “an action that was feasibly achievable”, and with emotional conditions involved, it would be a little different.

He was not scared, not by any means, but everything required preparation. When tackling a strong opponent head-on, he would not be victorious if the enemy were challenged, and he lacked the preparations to win. No matter what the situation, no matter how difficult the enemy, he needed to practice and train his body every day. And that was exactly what was required for him to win here.

In other words, being prepared was still required of him for this challenge. And if he were to be sincere, he could not say with certainty that he was ready for that right now. If that were the case, he should just back off for now—

Sister: “Wait wait, are you sure you’re okay…? Your eyes are flitting here and there, and your face is turning red…?”

Fred: “Gorgeous Tiger?”

Garfiel: “I’m fine, of course. Gao.”

Mimi: “Mimi’s never heard Garf make a «gao» sound or anything like that before!!”

Mimi teased him, but Garfiel did not boast the energy to riposte verbally.

And so, with his younger siblings worrying about him, Garfiel's brain churned in circles with his confused thoughts—

Reala: "You can't do that, Garfiel. You've been holding everything in, and that's what you're doing right now."

Garfiel: "Oh, Mom…"

Reala reminded him of this, as she saw Garfiel averting his eyes. With those words spilling out of his mouth, his younger siblings looked at him with a shocked expression.

Fred: "What? Why is Mom Gorgeous Tiger's?"

Sister: "No, no, no! This is mine and Fred's Mom, not yours…"

Reala: "—It's okay. Both of you, it's okay?"

Reala spoke softly to his surprised brother and snappy sister. Perhaps vulnerable to their mother's words, the younger siblings reluctantly fell silent. Then, looking at Garfiel, whose mind was not yet prepared, let alone his heart, Reala spoke.

Yes, she spoke.

Reala: "I'm sure Garfiel's been separated from his mother. And maybe I'm like his mother. I guess that's why he got lonely like that."

Garfiel: "—Ah?"

Sister: "Huh, your Mom and our Mom look alike?"

Garfiel: "Uh, what's that… Shit, that's embarrassin'."

When Reala gave her explanation, each of her three children reacted differently. Garfiel was taken aback, but Reala's confident demeanor did not show any signs of lying or deception.

In other words—

Mimi: “Garf, haven’t you said enough?”

Garfiel: “…”

Figures that Mimi had summed it up pretty nicely.

In spite of all his shameful, pathetic, and emotional crying and screaming, ultimately, Reala was not aware of any part of the truth.

Such a brave thing to do, wasn’t it?

Garfiel: “It’s natural, it’s natural.”

If she had no memory, that means she had no idea. In such a state, there was no way she could realize the truth by simply listening to Garfiel’s incomprehensible string of words.

Immediately after that, he lost his strength. From his fangs, from his body.

Garfiel: “What the hell… Haa, what the hell.”

He wondered if the words that spilled out were words of relief or disappointment.

Probably a bit of both, only Garfiel realized.

4

He was disappointed in many ways, whether it had resulted in anything was dubious, but he figured it was time to move on.

With that decision made, Garfiel and Mimi left the Thompson residence.

Reala: “Sorry I couldn’t do anything for you yet again.”

Mimi: “It’s okaaay~! Mimi’s sorry, like, Mimi’s sorry Garf cried a lot? Something like that!”

Garfiel: “Shut up, don’t bring it up again!”

As Mimi replied to Reala seeing them off, Garfiel grabbed Mimi by the scruff of her neck. He lifted Mimi's light body with a "Nyah" and looking at Reala and the siblings, who clung to their mother with a sigh.

Garfiel: "Ya don't hafta worry 'bout me takin' yer Mom."

Fred: "I think so too, but…"

Sister: "Don't let your guard down, Fred. After all, you've got Mom to look out for. Just because Dad's gone for a while, doesn't mean you can have Mom being full of openings!"

Garfiel: "Can't'cha see there's a lot of openings?"

On the contrary, Garfiel titled his head toward his younger siblings, who were now on MAX alert. As a result of Reala's strange explanation, his younger siblings seemed to have mistakenly thought that Garfiel had come to steal their mother.

He did not mean to do that—but even if he did, if his mother actually remembered him, he would like her to give him a little retrospect. Upon pondering about it, he did not feel it was something he could reject outright.

Sister: "Hey, hey, let's get the bad guys out of here."

Reala: "Please come back anytime. Whenever you want to cry, I will lend you my chest."

Garfiel: "Don't want'cha to see me in such a pathetic way."

Reala: "Only for me then… just like your mother?"

Garfiel: "Hm, tsk… Tch."

At a loss for words, Garfiel decided to walk away.

With Mimi hanging, Garfiel turned his back to the three of them, to the family that he had not been able to call a family so far.

Seeing Garfiel turn to walk away, Reala clapped her hands. Then, with the children clinging to herself, she pushes the children's backs moving them forward.

Reala: “Come on you two, say a proper goodbye.”

Fred: “Gorgeous Tiger, see you later.”

Sister: “…”

His younger brother obeyed his mother’s words, but his younger sister remained silent.

Can’t be helped, Garfiel thinks. However, Reala’s thoughts were not the same.

Reala: “We have to see our guests off, right?”

Sister: “Hmph.”

When Reala, who was surprisingly stubborn, spoke, his sister still did not nod. Reala looked a little troubled by her daughter’s obstinate attitude.

Sister: “No, you don’t have to worry about that.”

Reala: “That’s not going to happen. Come on, sister. Already, Rafi! Rafiel!”

Rafiel: “…”

With a frustrated look on her face, Reala finally called out her daughter’s name. The moment he heard the name, the sound of that name, Garfiel twitched as if struck by a bolt of lightning, and was rendered unable to move.

Garfiel: “Ra… fiel?”

Reala: “Yes, Rafiel. Come to think of it, have I never introduced you? This is the name of this child. My two children are Rafiel Thompson and Fred Thompson.”

Rafiel and Fred.

He had heard his brother’s name a few times before in the past. He had not paid much attention to it, probably because Garfiel did not care much. Or rather, was it because he was afraid of noticing it?

Rafiel and Garfiel. Fred and Frederica.

Reala's two children, and Reshia's two children. They sounded somewhat similar, for whatever reason.

Rafiel: "You think it's a strange name because it doesn't sound like a girl's. I'm aware of that, too!"

Misunderstanding the reason for his silence, his sister—Rafiel, spoke with a pouting face.

In response, Garfiel, who had been overwhelmed for a while, shook his head and prefaced his answer with a "No".

Garfiel: "My amazin' self thinks it's a good name."

Rafiel: "Even if you're flattering me like that…"

Garfiel: "—Serious. Totally serious, yeah. Think it's a good name."

Rafiel: "That's right!"

When Garfiel spoke from his heart, Rafiel felt a little overwhelmed. And then Reala interrupted, beaming, Reala: "I named them both. For some reason, I wanted to use this name… So yeah."

Garfiel: "Both of them? You?"

Reala: "Yes. They're nice names, aren't they? — —I've always wanted to give my beloved children these names."

Garfiel: "…"

It was the best proof of love that he could ever have.

A mother who had lost her memory, who remembered nothing of her past, but who had never lost her kindness and generosity, who had bestowed her love for her child that should have been there, on her newborn children.

Garfiel: "…"

Garfiel could have been angry about this. He could have hated it, he could have yelled at it with all his heart, he could have sunk his fangs into it unreasonably.

But such a thought never crossed his mind. With this, Garfiel was thoroughly overwhelmed.

By the love of his own mother, Reshia Tinzel. By the love of Reala Thompson, the mother of his brother and sister.

—So that was enough.

Garfiel: "Ha, haha! Hahahaha!!"

He laughed.

The sense of weakness that had lingered in his heart until just a moment ago disappeared.

The shame he felt for not being able to say what he needed to say, for not being able to convey what he needed to convey, for not being able to say it fully, for ending it halfway, disappeared.

That was all he needed for now. Because he could feel that they were all connected.

Garfiel: "So long, Rafiel, Fred. See ya again."

Fred: "—! Yeah, Gorgeous Tiger!"

Rafiel: "Try not to cry this time."

Garfiel patted roughly his younger siblings' heads. This time, his palm was filled with a different kind of love. He did not think it was half-hearted.

Then finally, Garfiel raised his hand to Reala. To his mother.

Garfiel: "Thanks, Mom. Gonna come to bother ya again."

—He'd be there a few times while he remained in the city.

—And once that was done and dusted, he'd come back after returning to the Roswaal residence.

Once that was done, he was sure he would bring my sister and grandmother along. Once that was done, they could talk about the past decade.

Unlike before, he remained quiet about it, because this time he felt positive. Family talk was for family members, that was what he believed in.

Garfiel: "Until then, take care!"

Garfiel shouted emphatically and raised his hand.

5

Fred: "Mom, I'm glad Gorgeous Tiger's feeling better."

Reala: "Yeah, you're right. I'm… really glad."

Rafiel: "… Mom, don't you look kind of lonely? Do you really not want him to leave that badly?"

Reala: "I'm not sure. It's not that I don't want him to leave. It's not that I don't want to leave him, it's just that I'm sad to see him go."

Fred: "When do you think Dad'll be back home?"

Reala: "I don't know. But, I know he'll be back."

Rafiel: "…Mom, why are you crying?"

Reala: "—Maybe it's because I found something I forgot."

Reala: "I'm sorry, but thank you—I love you, Garf."

6

Grabbing Mimi by one hand, they entered a small rest room in the treatment center.

Amidst the numerous beds, Otto's bunk was placed at the far end of the room, near the window. While walking towards that place,

???: "Oops!"

???: "Ah! I'm sorry, bro! Hey, Tina, wait for me!"

Tina: "I'm not going to let you catch me just because you said that. Come on, Lusbel!"

Two noisy children, a boy and a girl, ran through the hospital room. The girl was dressed in hospital clothes, and the boy was apparently visiting her. The girl looked full of energy, and given her condition, she soon would be able to leave the hospital. Normally, Garfiel would have warned them not to make noise in the hospital room, but,

???: "Sometimes a child's frolicking voice can be a lifesaver. That is why no one pays attention to those two when they are like that."

Garfiel: "Well, ain't'cha sayin' somethin' carefree, Ottobro."

Garfiel saw the children off and headed to the back, where he was greeted by Otto. Upon seeing Garfiel with Mimi, Otto, who still had the same painfully bandaged leg, raised an eyebrow, synchronized with an "Oh".

Otto: "You look a little sunny, somehow. Did something good happen to you?"

Garfiel: "Ah… it's difficult to know if it's a good thing or not."

He could not shake his head in agreement to Otto's question with honesty.

It had been a series of complex, complicated, and convoluted attacks on his values. However, he was sure that every word and every encounter had turned out to be positive in the end.

Otto: "But you must have been happy about it?"

Garfiel: "Hmmm…"

Mimi: “Garf, you’re looking better! Something happy and something like that happened, happi! That’s all right, Mimi thought to herself! She did!”

Mimi laughed childishly, her face brimming as she dangled. The volume of her voice drew the attention of the entire hospital room, but they soon dismissed their gaze.

The reason was the same as the one for the commotion of the boy and girl from earlier. There was no way they could interrupt the emotions of someone who was smiling happily and sincerely, from the bottom of their heart.

Garfiel: “I dunno, man.”

Mimi: “Ohhh~, Garf smiled too! Have you fallen in love? Did you fall in love?”

Garfiel: “Ain’t fallen in love.”

Mimi: “Is that sooo~.”

Garfiel: “Ain’t fallen in love… But.”

The exchange had repeated several times. But finally, Garfiel appended a few words to his statement.

Mimi rounded her eyes, and Otto witnessed the conversation.

To his mother, his sister, his brother, and to Subaru, who was not here.

Garfiel: “—Thanks!”

He felt like he had moved on, just a little bit.

Garfiel displayed his fangs and smiled at that.

Bonus Short Stories

Otto Suwen’s Internal Affairs Struggle:
Line 4

1

The moment he lost his sense of balance and realized what a pinch he was in, it was too late.

He experienced a weighty feeling, as if the land below his feet and everything at his hands’ reach overturned at the same time, and then heaven and earth switched places.

“Adaaagh…?!”

An inane cry rang out, overlapping with the sound of a collapse, and a cane went rolling over with a hard sound too. In the end, the bedsheets he grasped on the spur of the moment fell off, dumping the books, materials, et cetera that were on it.

“…”

He lay spread-eagled on the floor, completely stupefied as he looked up to the ceiling.

Making things this worse through chain reaction was not really something he had a knack of. —No, it actually was not anything rare or unexpected for him, specifically, to have done this, but he wished that such malicious accidents would take the fact that he was currently recovering from his injuries into consideration.

“Well, now that I am at this point, I guess I can laugh. Hahaha… ouch.”

When he tried to, at least, laugh off the situation, he was hampered by the delayed pain on his legs.

While being robbed even of the choice to just laugh, he massaged his legs, which were wrapped in bandages, and breathed out a long sigh.

"—Woah there, be careful, 'ey. Otto-nii, ya' fine?"

Having heard the commotion, somebody opened the room's door from the outside. The one who calmly showed his presence was a golden-haired youngster, who lowered his eyes, saw him lying on the floor, and tilted his head.

"I came 'ere thinkin' ya might be gettin' bored all by ya'self, and ya turn out ta be playin' some weird game."

"…I am not playing at all. Anyway, it is a good thing that you did, Garfiel."

He smiled spiritlessly at the boy who came into his inverted field of vision, Garfiel. Then, the fallen man—Otto extended his hand towards Garfiel,

"Could you lend me your hand for a little? Since it does not look like I will be able to stand up on my own."

And so, massaging his battered legs, he begged for rescue.

2

"So ya' telling me ya thought ya'd do fine with just a cane? …Otto-nii, within all those thoughts ya have, there's the occasional dumbassery too, huh."

"What I find frustrating is that, since it is exactly as you say, I have no words to reply with."

Replying that, Otto, now back on the bed, averted his displeased face from Garfiel. Seeing the man he saw as a brother act like this caused Garfiel to make a sound with his fangs, a hint of a smile.

On top of the bed was Otto, both of his legs stretched out and completely wrapped in bandages. The damage on his legs came from honorable injuries which he had sustained during the fight that had occurred in the Watergate City. In his current position, Otto was receiving special attention, completely catered to him, in his hospital room, in order to recover from these injuries.

“It is true that I am being given everything here, but I feel like I might die from boredom in exchange…”

“Whatcha mean, boredom? Didn’t ya say y’were gonna take this opportunity ta read some book ya wanted ta read before, or somethin’? And even I’ve been comin’ to kill some time with ya, Otto-nii.”

“Regarding that time killing, it has been a great help, indeed, but…”

He directed a glance at a corner of the room, and there was the Shatranj board with which, under the pretext of time killing, Otto and Garfiel competed incessantly.

Being unable to move because of his leg injuries made Otto an easy prey for Garfiel.

There were a lot of times when he had been busy with work and said he had no time, and therefore could not accept the other’s challenges. Since, in his current situation, he had no reason to refuse a challenge, maybe things were not going so badly for Garfiel in that respect.

“Come to think of it, there was a time when Regin went through a phase like this too, wasn’t there?”

He remembered those days when he lived in his old home, and the time spent with the little brother that demanded his attention was recalled.

Even his brother, who was now a splendidly astounding man, had been a huge spoiled kid once. When Garfiel looked up to Subaru or Otto, he could see things in common with his brother during that time.

Although this was why Otto himself ended up spoiling Garfiel without realizing it.

“—. Garfiel, you know it, right?”

“Huuuh? It’s time ta clean this messy room, ain’t it? I kno’ it’d be unreasonable ta make ya do it with how ya're now, Otto-nii. So I'll be tha one…"

"I am talking about Mr. Natsuki, Lady Emilia, and the rest."

"…"

Otto suddenly lowered his voice, making Garfiel's lax expression become tense. "Oooh," he sharpened his gaze and answered shortly,

"That thing 'bout that 'Sage' at tha Sand Tower? Man, I wanted ta go with them if it was true…"

"I am wounded, and you are not in your normal condition… Our only merit is to be a burden. To be frank, this incident has left us with no merits. You are aware of that, right?"

"Aaah."

Listening to Otto's words, Garfiel lowered his chin and breathed out a sigh of self-admonition.

Hypothetically speaking, had Subaru been listening to their exchange, perhaps he would have interrupted them with something along the lines of "Huh? What're you two talking about?"

However, Otto and Garfiel's self-assessment was absolute.

Certainly, there were a lot of aspects that had improved thanks to the actions of the two. They had nothing to be embarrassed about when it came to their accomplishments. They also knew that they were aspects that it would be pointless to avert their eyes from.

But Otto was the camp's Internal Affairs Minister, and Garfiel was its Military Officer.

In the end, they had been able to fulfill their main objective for coming to Priestella—to acquire an achromatic magic crystal. However, this had not been the result of his negotiations, but a product of Kiritaka's kindness.

Just something Kiritaka had gifted to the Emilia camp, as a token of gratitude for their contributions when repelling the Sin Archbishops that had attacked the city. —Where could Otto's contribution be seen there?

And Garfiel's power insufficiency, him being the Military Officer, was an even graver case.

"Mr. Natsuki and Lady Emilia have gone to the Auguria dunes in search of a way to save the citizens. And Garfiel, the one who should display his power the most, you are unable to accompany them."

"…"

"We are both fully aware of what we are lacking. And it feels terrible."

What the silent Garfiel felt on his chest, Otto understood to a painful extent, for he harbored the same emotion.

To summarize, both Otto and Garfiel had gotten carried away back there.

During this year, they had been acting as members of the Emilia camp, and being blessed with good results to a certain extent. As a consequence, they had developed the conceit that they were doing everything fine, and that had become their mistake.

Those who overestimated their own strength were destined to commit mistakes from which they would not easily recover. And even though Otto probably knew that better than anybody else, he had messed up.

Therefore—

"—I'll never be strong then."

"Garfiel…"

It was a phrase with no concreteness. However, since its principle was correct, Otto stared at Garfiel.

The boy who acted like his brother clenched his fist and his trembling fangs as he stared back at Otto.

“It’s as ya say, Otto-nii, we couldn’t do anythin’ this time. And we couldn’t even go with tha Captain either. So…”

“…”

“So we gotta become stronger fo’ the day tha Captain and tha rest come back. I, tha camp’s stronger shield, gotta be tha spear too. I won’t be losing ta anyone ever again. —Not even ta tha ‘Sword Saint.’”

“…That escalated quickly.”

Listening to the manifestation of Garfiel’s resolution, Otto let out a whisper.

Such a frank and unclouded manifestation of a decision. Listening to it made him feel uneasy, yet at the same time refreshed. —This trait was one Otto did not have at hand.

In Garfiel’s case, he did not declare that just because he wanted to spout out some cool words. There he was, completely serious, prepared to arrive at his goal.

“I see. …Then do that, please. Meanwhile, I will…”

“C’mon, Otto-nii, let’s turn ya too into a militant Internal Affairs Minister who won’t lose even ta tha ‘Sword Saint.’”

“Now, I do not think that is something I can just nod to, you know?!”

Whether he was serious or joking, a comment so difficult to interpret was not something Otto would nod to. Though, when the other smiled with his fangs sounding, it seemed to imply it was some kind of joke.

In any case, Garfiel’s resolution itself was genuine. Therefore, giving an answer was Otto’s duty.

Because that was what Otto, who had, although unexpectedly, assumed the position of an older brother, needed to be prepared for.

3

“You heard that? Strong enough to not lose against our Reinhard, really?”

“…Please stop, my life span is being shortened.”

“Haan! So the guy who’s volunteering to be that mad bastard’s restraint suddenly cares about his life span? Don’t make me laugh, Internal Affairs Minister.”

Said the guest as she heartily gnawed the appa in her hand with a huge smile.

Originally, that appa was in a fruit basked that had been brought as a present for Otto, but he would not be able to digest all of them, so he was actually thankful that she ate it.

“Still, Garfiel does the same, but don’t you think it would be more logical to, at least, ask for permission first…?”

“Huh? Who gives a damn about logic and such trifles? I mean, we’ve been on the verge of death together. You too, feel free to eat as many appas as you like if you ever come to visit me.”

“Will such limited chances ever come, though?”

Tilting his head, Otto bitterly smiled at what the guest—Felt said. Seeing Otto like that, Felt proceeded to give the appa one more bite, no shame whatsoever.

“Lady Felt, I kindly ask you to stop crossing your legs when sitting on a chair. Also, as Otto said, you might be a little light-fingered.”

“Shut up.”

Beside Felt, a red-haired youth criticized her manners; he was Felt’s knight, Reinhard van Astrea.

Observing the master-servant duo that had come here, Otto scratched his cheek with his finger.

By having both a Royal Election candidate and the ‘Sword Saint’ come to him, he was left in a quite odd position. He himself was out of place.

“Oh? What’s that smirk for?”

“No, I was just thinking this is a little odd. Supposedly, I was just a humble merchant before… And it is not like I have forgotten that ambition at all, but it feels like I have gotten awfully far from it.”

“Heeeh, that feeling, I know it too. If I had the choice, maybe I wouldn’t be standing in a place like this. But duty has called.”

“…”

“So, for the sake of that duty, I gotta fight. I’m sure you can relate, Internal Affairs Minister.”

As if rebelling against Reinhard’s instruction, Felt swayed her body back and forth, still with her legs crossed.

When he saw her smile, in which a sharp fang stood out, Otto smiled back even more bitterly.

Just like when they had fought together against ‘Gluttony,’ her insight was pleasant to hear. Apart from Otto, there were probably a lot of people who felt the same.

“On a separate note, what have you two come to my place for? You have not actually come just to assist me by reducing the number of appas, have you?”

“Why else then? And while we’re at it, I’mma be reducing the number of orengs and stiroberries too, ‘kay?”

“I am actually thankful for that.”

Otto did not have a strong preference for sweet food, so it was more helpful for her to reduce them than for him to keep the excess.

However, while they were having such trivial exchange, Reinhard directed his sight towards Felt. Being stared at by his blue eyes, “Yeah, I get it,” Felt nodded,

“All jokes aside, I came here to say thanks. Internal Affairs Minister, I think you’ve saved us this time.”

“If by that you refer to what happened with ‘Gluttony,’ the feeling is mutual. Had you not brought that ‘Meteor’ with you, Lady Felt, we would have been annihilated.”

“You’re right there. Also, it was thanks to this Reinhard guy that you could get your kidnapped lady back, so it’s a tie. But.”

Ending her sentence there, Felt scratched her head violently,

“I still owe you one for that time before, when Reinhard’s father had me captured, right?”

“—. Ah, I do not remember that very well.”

“Miss me with the unnecessary drama. We’re here thanking you in all honesty.”

Otto’s unnatural reply caused Felt’s crimson eyes to sharpen. That strained the atmosphere to the point it no longer resembled a scene of simple gratitude.

“Lady Felt, please calm down. Otto, I don’t want you to feel uneasy.”

Reinhard intervened once more, in an attempt to soften the stiffened atmosphere. He touched Felt’s shoulders, her being with her arms crossed, and gently calmed his master down,

“Otto, I don’t want to alarm you too much. Like Lady Felt said, we are here to thank you. Who knows what’d have happened to the city if you hadn’t entered that place.”

“We share an opinion on that subject. Actually, the truth is that a great part of the problems in the city were solved thanks to you, Mr. Reinhard. Including the sweeping of those pitiful demibeasts.”

"…"

"And that is why I think that I got paid too much just for simple achievements, but…"

"So you too know what it's like to have bugs raising a ruckus on your stomach?"

Despite her crude figure of speech, Felt's direct negotiation technique made Otto lower his chin.

Unfortunately, Otto and Felt both had their own positions, and their paths were split by them belonging to different camps. The world was complicated place where nothing was simple.

They were different from Emilia, who thought that, when it came to helping people, compensation was not necessary.

"Back then we were all tangled up in our own problems. And it's a fact that it was an outsider from another camp who helped us. So this is a debt."

"I do not dislike, at all, people who are faithful."

"If we put that Internal Affairs Minister thing aside, you're essentially a merchant, right? You can't just let a merchant manage your loans, it's too scary."

Felt's ideas were quite visionary for someone her age. And the strong caution she bore against merchants was also correct.

"Of course, even if that weren't the case, we still don't want to get hostile with you guys. It's just that I think it's obvious this is a debt. You better remember that clearly."

"Well, certainly…"

"—And it's not with that lady or that lad. It's with you, as an individual."

"Hm…"

That phrase made Otto experience a feeling of being cornered, shutting his mouth. Instantly, “Hah,” Felt laughed as if sighing when she saw his reaction,

“There you go, this is my revenge. You looked like you were taking everything however you wanted. And that made me feel like hitting you all over the face.”

“Was my face that terrible? Uh, don’t tell me the margrave’s habits are contagious…”

That was a thought Otto really did not want to have, but Felt showed indifference to his fears. She quickly got off the chair, stretched her body, and turned her back to Otto.

“So, now that we’ve said everything that had to be said, should we head back? You gotta rest all you can.”

“Otto, what you’ve done was truly a great help. May you get better soon. And let’s fulfill the roles we’ve been assigned, both you and I.”

“I think the weight of our duties is too different to wish each other good luck equally, though…”

Despite this, Otto waved his hand and watched as the two took their leave.

He knew that Felt and Reinhard, just like Subaru and Emilia, had things to do. Those duties were pretty heavy by themselves. And he wanted them to accomplish everything without any trouble.

“I am still irritated, though. As expected.”

Spending his time here as a wounded man, fighting against boredom and unable to do anything, made him feel restless.

He did not remember being this much of a workaholic before, but, for some reason, he had ended up becoming one.

—However, while Otto thought he would have to continue fighting against boredom, visitors came to him, incessantly, one after another.

Sometimes it was somebody related to a Royal Election candidate; sometimes it was Kiritaka, an executive of Priestella; sometimes it was the Master Restorer to whom he had entrusted an important task; and sometimes it was the laudable boy he saw as a younger brother.

During the time he spent with them, he ended up talking about work and only work on his bed.

“Aaah, I better get to work, or else I will only cause everyone trouble, won’t I?”

With a mutter, as if poisoned by the lack of self-awareness about his working habits, Otto’s recovery life went by.

Petra’s Emilia Camp Struggle:
Page 5
(Edited Machine Translation)

1

Roswaal: “Theeen, an agreement has been reached. Nooo objectiooons, right?”

As he spoke, Roswaal clapped his hands and was taken in by the eyes of the audience.

Although the people in this meeting were all powerful and high-ranking dignitaries, it was Roswaal who led the meeting from beginning to end. The title of being the head of the Western Borders is not just for show. Even at the Western Border Leaders meeting where many big names were gathered, he still had been in the leading position.

No one dared to raise any objection to any of his remarks. After scanning the room with satisfaction, Roswaal nodded deeply.

Roswaal: “Wooonderful, thank you all for coming to this meeeeting. I’ll be sure to prepare an opportunity for everyone to meet Emilia-sama in persoooon, next time…”

Dignitaries: “…”

In contrast to Roswaal’s smirk, there was a profound silence from the audience. Although their thoughts seem to be complicated, the topic itself has been discussed properly.

Patting her flat chest, Petra accepted that fact with peace of mind.

Petra: “It’s finally over……”

Realizing that she had inadvertently expressed her inner thoughts out loud Petra hastily covered her mouth.

Although it was just a whisper, it was still a disrespectful way of speaking. If people heard this, even if the Emilia camp was not damaged, it would become a source of ridicule.

And on this point, Petra had intended to spend time getting to know the character of these attendees better.

But after traveling for two and a half days, the opportunity for Petra, the maid-in-training to debut, was lost once the meeting began. And accordingly, the waiting time for her debut became even longer, and for Petra's physical sense, it felt as if it's been many more days.

The meeting between the leaders of the Western Border, which had felt exceptionally long and stressful, had finally come to an end.

Although the most memorable thing from the beginning was Roswaal's troublesome and problematic behavior, however…

Annerose: "You had a hard time, Petra. That was quite the performance."

The only person in the room, the only one that Petra can consider to be her friend, is the one who said that, as that person walks towards the relieved Petra, who is at the corner of the meeting room to give her condolences.

A young but elegant noble girl with a delicate blue bun, Annerose.

Petra: "Annerose-sama……"

Turning around towards Annerose who had come over to speak with her, Petra was immediately captivated by her standing. She then realized the fact that she was being questioned, and Petra straightened up in a hurry.

Petra: "Ah, Annerose-sama, you had a hard time too. I'm very sorry for the trouble that Master caused you."

Annerose: "Eiya, speaking ill of your master, what a bad child you are. …Although I understand why you want to say that, you shouldn't say that to anyone else other than me, of course."

Petra: “Sor.. I’m sorry. Okay, I understand.”

The Annerose’s words brought Petra back to her senses as it eased her.

Hearing Petra’s words of reflection, Annerose relaxed her face and said to Clind, the attendant standing beside her,

Annerose: “Oi, Clind. With this being her debut, her performance should be considered effective, right? As a steward, why don’t you give Petra some tips on how to serve?”

Clind: “Me…? Understood.”

With a slight nod, the dark blue-haired young attendant gazed at Petra.

He is flawless, it can be said that he is the ideal model for servants, and at the same time, a man whom Petra respected.

However, Frederica, who is more respected, has always resisted contact between Clind and Petra for a long time, the two have never had the opportunity to communicate in-depth.

Petra: “What do you think, Clind-niisama? Have I completed my work well?”

Clind: “As Annerose-sama said, it is passable. Praise. However, there are still many shortcomings that need to be diligently remedied. Diligence.”

Petra: “Yes, I understand.”

Clind: “Frankness is the source of growth. Virtue. Although in the past, Frederica was as likeable as Petra… Pity.”

Lifting his monocle, Clind sighed while looking up towards the sky.

Frederica and Clind’s evaluation of each other is tit-for-tat. Although in Petra’s view, both of them are excellent and respectable seniors.

Annerose: “Really, you didn’t say anything useful… Petra, even that useless attendant of mine has given you a good evaluation.”

Petra: “Thank you, Annerose-sama. And, Clind-niisama.”

Annerose smiled when she heard those words, and then Petra raised her head to look at Clind’s face.

Petra: “However, please allow for me to express my opinion. Frederica-neesama is still very cute, even now.”

Clind’s eyes widened slightly when he heard Petra’s remark. Then, he relaxed the corners of his eyes again and showed a rare soft expression on his always firm face.

Annerose: “Petra, about what happened at the banquet.”

Petra: “Eh, woo… yeah, that thing, I did something disrespectful, I’m very sorry…”

Before the meeting started, at the banquet where the world-renowned chef Dias Lepunzo Elemanso Oplane Fatsbalm VI displayed her talents, Petra did something immature.

Although she was upset and angry at Roswaal, it is understandable why she was scolded for it.

However, in Petra’s eyes, as she was ready to accept admonition, Clind’s eyes were soft.

Clind: “I believe that your master should be very happy. What a role model maid you are. Praise.”

With a touch as gentle as the wind, Clind rubbed Petra’s little head.

2

Dias: “Hoho, found you, little girl. It’s great to be able to find you before Moi leaves.”

Petra: “…? Dias-san?”

After preparing to return to the mansion, and after waiting for Roswaal to say goodbye to everyone, Petra met Dias, who appeared at the entrance of the hall.

It sounded like she had been looking for Petra, and she let out a "humhum" as she puffed out her flat chest.

Dias: “Moi is glad to be able to see you again, little girl. The blunt remarks that you made at the banquet made Moi feel fired up. Sure enough, using Moi talent on such pretentious fools made it easy for Moi to forget Moi’s role as a chef. It’s you who reminded Moi of this.”

Petra: “That, did I really do anything so exaggerated? I just said that Dias-san’s cooking was extremely delicious…”

Dias: “That is very important for cooking!”

Petra: “Yiia!”

Her thunderous shout made Petra’s shoulders jump. However, Dias squeezed Petra’s tensed shoulders slightly, her eyes gleaming.

Dias: “No matter what, there is no hope of progress as long as Moi is inert. Moi has travelled a long way to the apex of this road. Therefore, sometimes Moi feels very empty.”

Petra: “Emp, empty…”

Rodriguez: “A single person, walking alone in a wilderness where no other has ever set foot before, it’s kind of sad.”

Behind Dias, who was confiding in a low voice, was her assistant, a male cook. Listening to his master’s painful confession, he looked as if he didn’t know what expression to make. So pitiful.

Then, pretending not to notice the fact that the disciple behind her was depressed, Dias raised her head in a slightly imposing manner.

Dias: “It’s because of you, little girl! Your tongue is blunt, and the most important thing about it is that it’s cute. How about it, why don’t you come with us?”

Petra: “Huh, eh?! Me?!”

The unexpected request made Petra’s eyes widen. Dias’ disciple received the same shock and was also dumbfounded and let out a small, "Huh?!"

Facing the reaction of these two people, Dias nodded vigorously.

Dias: “Hmhm, that’s it! If you go with us, even the dream of endlessly eating will become a reality. The satisfaction of taste is closely linked to happiness. Little girl, don’t you want to understand the taste of happiness? “

Petra: “That is…… “

Dias’ flowing words touched Petra’s heart.

That’s because Petra also understands the meaning of her words. …Speaking of taste, satisfying the tongue is indeed a kind of happiness.

Therefore, the path that Dias planned to pursue must also be a very remarkable path.

Petra: “But, I’m sorry. I have already decided what I want to do.”

Being invited by a master in a field or something, such glorious opportunities should be rare. However, Petra shook her head at Dias’s invitation.

This was not for the disciple behind her who was in tears. Although there is indeed sympathy for his current state, it is very rude not to respond with your own words.

Petra: “I am very happy to be invited by you. The dishes you make are really delicious!”

Dias: “…Really”

For an instant, Dias looked farther down. However, that was really only a momentary matter.

In the next second, she immediately embraced her short arms and laughed.

Dias: “Ha! Moi doesn’t mind! What Moi is doing is just a pipe dream after all! Moreover, the bliss of showing people the joy a dish could provide is Moi way, and Moi is already used to walking alone.”

Petra: “Then, the Disciple-san behind you…”

Dias: “Although I missed the opportunity to accept a disciple, listen little girl. Accept this.”

What was readily ignored was Petra’s words and the disciple’s tears.

Regardless, Dias slipped out a small box from her pocket to give to Petra, while wearing a cheerful expression. Since this slightly warm thing was delivered by the chef that can make the “Divine Dragon” forgetful, there is no doubt that this is food.

Petra: “What’s this?”

Dias: “Little girl, at the banquet, your frank and honest thoughts moved Moi so very much… But, was it really just to make Moi happy?”

She hit the nail on the head. Petra’s excessive thoughts at the banquet did contain compliments to Dias, but it had another purpose.

But this chef saw through it clearly, and above that,

Dias: “Moi shall do you a favor. And this is Moi’s gratitude.”

As she said this, she smiled brightly.

3

Roswaal: “That was a gloriooous invitatiooon. Won’t you regret refuuusing it?”

On the return journey, Petra frowned when she looked at Roswaal’s mischievous smile sitting opposite of her.

How could he know that Petra and Dias had a conversation when he was obviously not present at that time? Regarding this person, you really can't be careless around him.

While raising her vigilance meaninglessly, Petra responded.

Petra: "That's fine! I have decided to help Emilia-neesama and Subaru. Therefore, I will give up on the dream of becoming the cutest chef in the kingdom."

Roswaal: "Eiyaya, you gaaave up on a higher level of opportunity than I thooought. Subaru-kun truly is siiinful."

As he said this, the corners of Roswaal's lips curled up while holding his chin. Petra sighed briefly when she saw the expression that seems to be neither calculated nor intended.

Originally, Petra didn't want to react like this to Roswaal's every move and act fearfully.

Petra: "However, the Master really doesn't let me feel reassured…"

Of course, even if Roswaal has reformed, it is another matter of whether he actually did. Even if he really did reform, Petra could not forgive him for the crimes he committed before reforming.

No matter what, this kind of relationship will always exist. but…

Petra: "Master, I am so grateful that you brought me here on this occasion."

Roswaal: "…Fufu, interesting. Including this time, I have forced all kinds of unreasonable problems on yooou. I didn't think that you wouldn't complain, but instead be grateful for it."

Petra: "To say whether there is resentment or not, I really hate the Master enough to wish that you would receive routine misfortune, but it is the truth that I am very happy, both physically and mentally."

Roswaal: "…"

He closed one of his eyes, and Roswaal looked at Petra with his blue eye. In the gaze of his blue eye, Petra quietly turned her face and looked out the window of the dragon carriage.

During the meeting, Roswaal did impose several unreasonable and difficult problems onto Petra.

The biggest of these was to pass on the matter regarding Emilia to the dignitaries through Petra's lips. Although that incident itself made Petra physically and mentally exhausted, the purpose behind it is not difficult to understand.

Roswaal entrusted Petra with a mission in an unreasonable way.

It gave Petra the feeling that she was deeply involved in the Western Border Leaders meeting.

It was really, really infuriating.

Petra: "Master is truly a despicable person"

Roswaal: "Is it okaaay for you to tell me, your employer, that directly?"

Petra: "It is, because Emilia-sama and Frederica nee-sama would never tell you."

Therefore, Petra will take this task upon herself. This was Petra's stance all along.

However, because she went with him to this meeting, although she did not want to admit it, it was thanks to Roswaal entrusting the task to Petra, she had felt something real.

By now, Petra finally felt that she had officially become a member of the Emilia camp.

Petra: "So, just this time, I will say thank you to the Master. There won't be a next time."

Roswaal: "Oiyaoiiiya, that's a precious oppooortunity that I've just been given blaaandly. Perhaps I should have savored this viiictory in an emotional way?”

Facing Petra, who turned her face away, Roswaal’s throat trembled as he cackled. Petra, who heard Roswaal’s words, suddenly screamed "Ah!" as if remembering something.

Petra: “Speaking of which, Dias-san gave me a souvenir.”

Roswaal: “Heeee, she quite likes yooou.”

In front of the wide-eyed Roswaal, Petra opened the parcel given by Dias. Immediately, the fragrance overflowed. Petra was silent.

What was sitting in the middle was a round baked bun that seems as if it would shatter as soon as it is touched

Petra: “Master, you eat too.”

Roswaal: “Petra, didn’t I say before…”

Petra: “Even so, please taste it”

Petra wouldn’t let Dias’ feelings to be ignored. Overwhelmed by Petra’s persistence, Roswaal reached out and took the baked bun.

Then, Petra and Roswaal put the baked bun in their mouths at the same time. In an instant, the fragrance broke through her small nasal cavity and Petra almost burst into tears from the joy of its deliciousness.

How many chances does one have in their life to taste this kind of delicacy? Thinking of it this way, it was indeed a great loss to reject Dias’s invitation.

Petra: “…Eh?”

What Petra felt was annihilated into nothing in the next moment.

Roswaal: “…”

Right across from Petra, Roswaal’s expression, who also ate the baked bun, changed suddenly. Roswaal’s mask that had always shown himself to be calm, was taken off, and he was speechless with his hands covering his lips.

Because he does not have a sense of taste, he can’t perceive the taste of Dias’s cooking. Roswaal, who had revealed such a secret to Petra, was clearly shocked by the "deliciousness" at this moment.

Roswaal: “…Food not only satisfiiies the tongue, the smell and taste are also one of the satisfaction poiiints.”

Slowly, Roswaal analyzed what had happened to him, and then let out a long sigh of relief.

After carefully figuring out the meaning of this sentence, Petra quickly understood it. …Sure enough, Dias noticed the fact that Roswaal had no sense of taste.

Moreover, she couldn’t bear this fact.

Petra: “Ah!”

Petra couldn’t help laughing. Smiling like this, she handed Roswaal the remaining baked bun in the parcel. Seeing this scene, Roswaal’s eyes widened in surprise.

How long has he not tasted delicacies?

Watching Roswaal slowly take the baked bun, Petra thought.

…Sure enough, it was great that she participated in this meeting.

END

Joshua Juukulius's Fourth Careful Encyclopedia

1

Joshua's eyes were burning in the blinding sunlight as he stood by the window looking outside. He took a short breath, feeling the slight pain that was sinking in.

"I guess…I'm feeling good today?" he whispered to himself, touching his chest to check his heartbeat.

It's important to check to what extent I can move every morning. People often make mistakes if they do not check this. In my case, any mistake can be a risk to my life. I cannot make irresponsible judgments.

His health had gotten a lot better recently. There was a period of time when he could feel Death's cold touch just by breathing, but his condition was no longer that serious.

There are people who laugh when they hear that one's mental state influences one's physical body, but at least I know it to be true.

Thanks to that, he could continue living healthily for a while.

"…"

He opened his eyes after taking his time to carefully check his physical condition. His eyes were again met with dazzling sunlight and he heard a pleasant sound from outside. It was the sound of two hard objects striking against each other. It would probably sound ugly to an outsider, but not to him.

It sounds as beautiful as heavenly music to me… A view of the garden unfurled from the open window.

In that carefully organized verdant garden full of colorful flowers shimmering under the morning sun, a certain sight caught his eye. But it was not the plants, trees, or flowers that drew his attention. It was the juvenile that was struggling in the midst of all that beauty.

That juvenile was a young boy.

The boy had violet-colored hair and yellow eyes that burned with determination. His serious profile could even be described as still young, yet one could see glimpses of innocent beauty.

He had the type of face that could attract many members of the opposite sex, but it was now glowing with an unbridled sense of adventure.

The boy had his sleeves of well-tailored clothes roughly rolled up as he was holding a short wooden sword. He wiped the sweat from his chin with his other hand and stepped forward with a swing of his sword. He then boldly continued his challenge.

"…Gh." With a short breath, the sword was knocked out from the boy's hand.

Julius's eyes instantly followed it. The next second, the tip of the opponent's wooden sword was at the defenseless boy's throat.

"You got distracted. You've still got a long way to go, Julius."

"I…wa…de…defeated." Realizing his defeat in the duel, the boy's voice trembled in frustration.

The boy's father—his opponent—relaxed his lips, noticing the deep sense of disappointment in the boy's words of surrender. "You truly are a great person if being defeated by me saddens you so. I am a Kingdom Knight, after all. I have polished my swordsmanship to protect this country, so don't think you can outdo me that easily."

"I…I know that! But it's still infuriating. If I lose this sense of frustration, I will not be myself anymore."

"…I see. Well, perhaps you are right. In that case, you should treasure that feeling," the father replied, squinting his eyes at the boy's words for a second.

The boy raised his eyebrows at what his father said next.

"There may be times when you lose the meaning of holding a sword after admitting defeat to a rival…” The father nodded deeply at the look in his son’s eyes. “I too was once like that. I wonder when those feelings of frustration began to fade away.”

“Father…”

“Ah, it doesn’t matter. Pick up your sword now. Change your clothes, and let’s have breakfast,” his father said with a shake of his head, ending the morning practice.

“…Understood!” The boy nodded at those words and ran to pick up his wooden sword, which had bounced away to the corner of the garden.

As he picked up his sword, he noticed someone watching him from a window above him.

His eyes widened in surprise as he shortly exhaled. “Ah.”

He had felt a small tingle in his chest at his reaction. But before he could respond, the boy’s expression softened and he said:

“Hi, Joshua. Did you sleep well this morning?”

The boy, Julius, smiled and waved to his younger brother.

2

Joshua Juukulius and Julius Juukulius were not real brothers.

Joshua was originally the eldest son of the main branch of House Juukulius. His father was the head of the house, and when his younger brother—Julius’s biological father—passed away, Julius was taken into House Juukulius since he had nowhere else to go. That was the beginning of their relationship as brothers.

Julius was older, so Joshua took the position of his younger brother. Since then, Julius began receiving different forms of education as the next successor of the House.

It was the education that Joshua was originally meant to receive as the eldest child of the family.

However, his body was weak from birth. Joshua was worried about inheriting the house of knights and could not demonstrate results worthy of the title. Thus, that role naturally was relinquished over to Julius.

It was exactly that, handed over. Never stolen.

Experiencing such treatment, one wouldn't have blamed Joshua for forming a sense of resentment towards Julius. But Joshua welcomed his newfound situation. All his life, he felt that he had been a burden and nuisance to his family.

In the end, the house that had existed for generations might even have lost its status in the kingdom due to Joshua's failures. But it was saved from such a fate thanks to the existence of Julius, its savior.

"Brother, what I'm saying is that I want you to become a fitting person for House Juukulius."

"Hmmm, what do you mean exactly?" Julius wondered.

"I have told you this multiple times—a hero," said Joshua as he pushed a thick book into Julius's chest.

The two were sitting together in Joshua's room on top of his bed.

Julius had a lecture waiting for him after lunch so he gave the book a sour look at first, but his eyes started glowing as soon as he read the title.

"Joshua, isn't this…?"

"Yes, I finally got hold of the sequel. This is the follow up to the great epic about the life of the first Sword Saint, Reid Astrea," Joshua explained.

"Yay! I was wondering what happened after he beheaded the evil dragon!" Julius exclaimed as he hugged the book.

Joshua smiled at the sight of Julius trembling with excitement.

Julius had steadily been taking in the excellent education that had been planned by Joshua. Even though he was unfamiliar with what a “hero” was, he had learned a great deal in a short period of time.

Needless to say, Julius was a man of high aspirations. He just hadn’t had the opportunity to exercise such qualities. However, as soon as his brother had turned his fate towards the path of a hero, Joshua also felt overwhelmed by his newfound situation.

He was now able to write his own destiny on the white parchment that was his life.

Julius was getting closer day by day to becoming the ideal heir that Joshua had imagined. He was Joshua’s hope. Their story truly was straight from a tale of adventures.

Joshua felt like Julius’s growth was his own.

“…Hm? What’s wrong, Joshua? You have a weird expression on your face,” Julius raised his head from the book he was so passionately reading.

It seemed as though he had noticed that Joshua was looking not at the letters but at him.

“It’s nothing,” Joshua replied. “I’m just happy you’re so interested in this book.”

“That’s because the people in it have achieved great things,” Julius said, looking away while rubbing the tip of his nose, as if embarrassed.

Joshua gave a bitter smile as he watched his brother’s reaction and squinted his eyes. “Is it tough for you?” he asked.

“Tough? I mean, it is hard, but not tough. Yeah, it’s not tough. And also, not to brag, but I think I’m good at remembering things,” Julius continued proudly. “Father also praises me for that.”

“I see,” said Joshua, nodding slowly.

Julius had just learned a lot of new things, so he was absorbing knowledge and experience like dry sand did water. Nevertheless, he still had a long way to go and the road was steep.

But Joshua wasn't one to bring down his brother with the realities of such a difficult journey.

Even though Julius was older, it was Joshua who had spent more time longing to be a knight. He wanted to help his elder brother walk that path slowly and carefully.

Heading down that long and treacherous path was something that knights of House Juukulius had to do. As brothers, it was something that Joshua and Julius had to do…

I realized that I had been taking things too lightly the moment I saw that red-haired boy.

"…"

He was walking majestically, stepping on the red carpet floor. He was a young boy less than ten years old, walking with what could only be described as grandeur.

His hair was as red as flames, his eyes were clear blue. Everyone was completely fascinated by him, and his sense of presence was so strong that no one could underestimate him, even as a child.

It happened when we went up to the royal palace and had an audience with the king.

For houses of knights and nobles that served the kingdom, there was a ceremony held for their children who had reached a certain age. There they would meet the king and swear their future loyalty to him.

Joshua and Julius went up to the palace together with their father on that day.

The opportunity to debut was meant only for Julius, but Joshua wanted to witness his brother on his big day, so he came along.

A lot of people gathered around, all paying attention to the kingdom’s future loyal subjects. Joshua was proudly waiting to see what the country’s leading figures and the king himself would think of Julius.

The boy shattered that young and sweet idea with his presence alone. Gallantly walking, he was the embodiment of perfection.

He was younger than Julius, around the same age as Joshua. However, the unimaginable strength he was hiding within completely crushed Joshua’s heart to pieces.

While Julius admired heroes as he continued his growth, Joshua always thought he had been a step ahead when it came to his feelings towards “heroes.”

But what about this? What can you say about this fierce boy?

“…Ah.” The red-haired boy’s eyes looked in Joshua’s direction for a moment.

That look was directed towards Julius, who was waiting for his turn to introduce himself to the public, and Joshua, who squeezed himself in nearby, as well.

Joshua forgot to breathe as he looked into the boy’s big blue eyes, which seemed to reflect the entire sky. He hurriedly looked at his elder brother. He was afraid that Julius would be as shocked as he was. He feared that the will that he had been polishing in Julius so hard would be overshadowed. However…

“…He…is a real one.”

Joshua could not sense any humiliation in his elder brother’s face as he mumbled those words. Humiliation. Joshua was astonished at his own thoughts.

Exactly, humiliation. What Joshua felt looking at that boy was unmistakably humiliation. Everything he had studied up till this moment was completely denied by that boy. While Julius, who should have been in the same kind of shock, had sparkles in his eyes—as if he had found a dream different from his own.

"Gh…"

"…Ah, Joshua!"

By the time he realized, it was too late.

Joshua choked and could not breathe anymore. He collapsed, clutching his chest. Julius instantly caught him, but Joshua's consciousness started fading away while his vision darkened. One's mental state had an influence on one's physical body. He strongly felt that again now.

With that feeling, the day was engraved into Joshua's mind as his worst memory.

3

Joshua's physical condition got worse, although it had never been that bad after he and Julius became brothers. He could no longer get up from his bed and spent his days dealing with a high fever and the feeling of being suffocated.

He was told to rest well by his family and doctors, but he could not. As soon as he closed his eyes, images from that unfortunate event that had occurred before the court rushed to Joshua's mind and pierced through his soul again and again.

The sound of his rough and hot breathing filled the room.

Joshua was ruminating on that nightmarish scene.

The more he recollected it, the more pain he felt around his chest. It was not because of that red-haired boy. What had torn Joshua's heart apart in its fullest sense was not that red-haired boy…

"…Joshua, how are you feeling?"

"…Brother."

Julius opened the door and looked over at Joshua with concern. Julius lowered his eyebrows as his worried eyes reflected Joshua as he scratched his frail arms. He did not want his brother to look like that. He wanted Julius to look more gallant, powerful, and fierce.

“Today is not that bad…How are you, my brother?”

“I…I’m fine. Father is also shocked, since he doesn’t understand what happened.” Maybe it was to calm Joshua down, or maybe it was the truth, but Julius looked at him fearlessly.

That kind of confident attitude was completely different from that vague stance towards his goals from earlier. The way Julius looked at him was a sight one had when they saw a clear road ahead of them.

Joshua saw the moment when that change happened. Joshua and Julius were supposed to walk the same path and aim for the same peak. But what about right now? he thought. Julius’s eyes were looking at a peak that Joshua could not see.

“Joshua, do you have anything you want me to do for you?”

“…to do…for me?” Joshua pondered.

He looked quickly out the window, still thinking.

There was a garden outside that window where Julius trained in swordsmanship every morning. There was an abble tree in the corner of that garden that looked out of place but stayed in Joshua’s mind because of the bright red fruit on it.

“…Abbles…”

“Hm? Abbles?”

“Yes. I saw there are abbles on that tree,” Joshua said.

Julius looked outside the window. He saw the tree Joshua was talking about and gave him a quick “Got it,” before continuing. “Leave it to me. Your big brother will make you happy!” Julius dashed out of the room as soon as he said those words.

“Ah.” Joshua reached out with his hand but it was too late.

Julius did not even notice his hand.

Joshua clenched it into a fist. “I’m such a fool.”

I was mistaken to believe that we shared the same qualities. How ridiculous of me to think that I could ever be like him. What was I thinking?

Julius skillfully climbed up the tree in the garden and easily plucked an abble. Joshua struggled to look at his brother; he hid his face with his hands.

It was a harsh reminder that the figure as thin as a dead branch was none other than himself. He realized that he and his brother were aiming at different targets.

In that case, then my brother is the one who is set on the right path.

Because Joshua Juukulius was a sinner from birth.

“…Ah, why am I even alive…”

As soon as he admitted to himself that he was foolish, his chest area suddenly became calm. Joshua laughed. He laughed as the tears rolled down his cheeks.

Laughing was the only thing he could do.

END

Comic Alive Collection 5: Translation Pending

Short Story Collection 5

Royal Selection Prequel: The Successor of Blue (Edited Machine Translation)

1

—In the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica, there are titles bestowed only upon special magic users.

They are titles of six ‘colors’ that correspond to the six attributes of the magic system.

‘Red’ for Fire, ‘Blue’ for Water. ‘Green’ for Wind, ‘Yellow’ for Earth. Finally, with ‘Black’ for Shadow and ‘White’ for Light, the titles of six colors were bestowed upon those who have reached the pinnacle of their attributes.

However, the history of these titles of ‘color’ is still relatively new, as the system has only existed for only about thirty years.

About thirty-five years ago, a civil war known as the ‘Demi-Human War’ occurred in the kingdom, during which the efficacy of magic had been underestimated by people. The perception and treatment of magic changed significantly due to this war.

Since then, the kingdom has reviewed its records and research related to magic technology and changed its approach.

The six titles of color are part of this initiative, and despite their short history, they hold significant authority.

However, they are currently only spoken of by experts, and it will take much more time for the value of these titles of ‘color’ to be widely known.

Therefore—

"—Professor Garitch, why do they sometimes call you 'Blue'?"

The one tilting his head in curiosity was a disciple of the person currently holding the title of 'Blue'.

In other words, even his student didn't understand the value of the title. It was quite amusing.

"Hehehe! That's hilarious! Why, it's hilarious, Ferris!"

"Hmm, hilarious… I don't really understand, but that's good to hear."

Praised with a distinctive laugh, a complex expression formed on the face of a girl— or rather, a boy with the charming face of a girl. With his light brown hair and matching set of cat ears, he was an impressive beauty.

Felix Argyle— that was the boy's official name.

Those close to him called him Ferris. The elderly man was among those who used this name.

However, it wasn't just because of their closeness—

"Also, the way you call me 'Ferris', it sends shivers down my spine, so I'd like you to stop."

"Seeing your displeased face is this old man's pleasure. Hehehe, don't take it personally."

"That's distasteful! I wish people like you retired soon. The kingdom must be seriously short-handed."

Ferris sighed as he organized the cupboard, while the face of the man behind him twisted into a smile.

He was a thin, white-haired old man. His pale complexion and sunken cheeks led people to sometimes call him a Skeleton Healer based on his appearance. In fact, he had a reputation for being more like a sick man than an actual sick person, even though he was actually Garitch Fabless, the kingdom's top healer. He was the person holding the title of ‘Blue’, approaching the age of seventy.

Not knowing the position of his mentor, Ferris frowned at the amused Garitch.

“……Professor? Why are you making such a creepy face?”

“Well, you’ve become much more assertive, and that makes me happy. Initially, you behaved like a stray cat, but now you’re like my own little house cat.”

“Calling me a house cat is a bit much. I wasn’t exactly praised upon our first meeting.”

Pouting, Ferris sat on a nearby chair, resting his cheek on a wand.

“But, but, we’ve been together for much longer than expected, right? My purr-fect charm is starting to show its claws. Please send me back to Lady Crusch already.”

“Oh, don’t say such sad things. Between me and your master, who do you think is more important?”

“There’s no need to hesitate, it’s Lady Crusch.”

“Hehehe! Good to know! It would be strange to choose me! Please, no.”

Clapping his knees, Garitch burst into laughter, leaving Ferris taken aback.

—The two were conversing in a room of the Royal Treatment Center in the noble district of the royal capital Lugunica.

The Royal Treatment Center was a large facility where excellent healers from all over the country were gathered, and most of the kingdom’s healers belonged to it, dispatched to various cities and regions.

Additionally, the Royal Treatment Center also focused on discovering and nurturing talent, providing educational opportunities to those with healing magic abilities.

Ferris was one of those invited to the treatment center for this reason.

However, because Ferris was recommended by one of the royal family members, and originally served as the attendant to a duke's daughter, he was given careful consideration at the treatment center.

They didn't want to incur the displeasure of the royal family or duke. In the midst of this, Garitch took him in.

"If Professor Fabless is in charge, there should be no complaints. In fact, the child should be grateful."

This was the final remark of a participant at the meeting. The others all nodded in agreement, but if they saw the current relationship between Garitch and Ferris, what would they think?

After all, Ferris was unaware of Garitch's position. He suspected that his mentor, who was celebrated as a national treasure, was just an ordinary old man.

"Well, it is fun to see their astonished faces."

"Huh? Did you say something weird, professor?"

"No, not at all."

"Huh…"

Sighing, Ferris cast a somewhat disrespectful gaze at his merry mentor.

Garitch didn't comment on his disciple's attitude. Not because he was laissez-faire, but because he considered Ferris's circumstances.

—Ferris possessed an exceptional and unparalleled talent as a healer.

His latent talent far surpassed that of Garitch, acclaimed as the kingdom's best.

In a few years, Ferris's healing abilities would reach their pinnacle, surpassing even the kingdom's best, and possibly becoming the best in the world. Without this awareness, Ferris had no choice but to undervalue his own abilities, as well as those of Garitch.

Ferris's naive and shallow insights made Garitch find him irresistibly endearing.

"So, that's why I play pranks and tease you."

"Why are you saying scary things? Oh, come on! You never teach me seriously, so it's hard to stay on topic! This lecture will never end!"

"Hey now, don't blame the teacher. You're a troublesome student, you know!"

"Okay, okay, sorry, sorry. So, why exactly are you called 'Blue'?"

"Is it because my face is pale and blue? How about that?"

"Got it. I won't ask the teacher again."

Dismissed by his disciple, Garitch chuckled in a hoarse voice and resumed the lecture.

He taught the boy not only the applications of healing magic, but also how to treat wounds and illnesses, along with various prescriptions. Regardless of talent, there was much Garitch could teach Ferris with all his accumulated knowledge.

"Even without going through all this effort, can't you heal everyone through the use of healing magic?"

"Maybe you can. But if you casually abuse it and run out of mana when it matters most, what will you do then? At that moment, your knowledge might save someone's life. We healers should have as many skills as possible to save lives."

“Hmm, you’re right… You make a valid point sometimes, Professor Garitch…”

“Heh heh! Well, I’m an old man! It’s my last chance to do some good deeds.”

Despite his discontent, Ferris was still focused on the lecture and was learning quickly. Garitch smiled sincerely, feeling fulfilled by both teaching and nurturing the young Ferris.

“If Professor Fabless is in charge, there should be no complaints. In fact, the child should be grateful.”

Those words came to mind, but the old man shook his head.

At his age, he had found hope. It is not the boy who should be grateful, but himself.

“…”

Amidst these reflections, Garitch continued the lecture, all the while playfully teasing his beloved disciple.

2

“Now, it is the disciple that remains unaware of the mentor’s parental love.”

“Ah, come on! When will I be able to go home already!”

His flaxen cat ears trembling, Ferris erupted in his room with uncontainable anger.

It was already nighttime when he returned to his room after completing his classroom lectures and practical training in treating the wounded. After finishing his bland meal, Ferris collapsed into bed without changing his clothes.

“Oh, Lady Crusch, Lady Crusch, Lady Crusch… I just can’t get enough of you, Lady Crusch…”

Pressing his face into the pillow, he called out his beloved master’s name multiple times. His vision was filled with an image of a gallant figure that never fades, an honorable person he wanted to be with every day and every hour, having been separated for ages—

In the first place, training at the Royal Treatment Center was not something Ferris wanted.

However, he couldn’t betray the hopes of his master, who had sent him with high expectations.

Every harsh treatment and every frustration was proof that his dear Crusch believed in him.

Despite these encouraging thoughts, the training had far exceeded his expectations, and Garitch was not letting him go easily. It was enough to break his spirit.

Sighing with weariness, Ferris turned his cloudy face towards the bedside, muttering.

“—Your Highness, Ferri-chan is about to die from a Crusch-deficiency.”

“Just when I thought you got distressed, what is that disease containing such heart-throbbing words!”

“It’s a disease where the longing to see Lady Crusch builds up until you explode and die.”

“That’s not a heart-throbbing disease! Ferris, are you okay?! Don’t die, okay?!”

Taking Ferris’s joke seriously, the boy who visited the room turned pale.

The boy with a refined face was the same age as Ferris. He had shoulder-length golden hair that shone brightly, curious, gem-like red eyes, and a protruding tooth that peeked playfully from his mouth.

His name was Fourier Lugunica, the fourth prince of the Lugunica Kingdom and, to Ferris, his dearest friend after Crusch, despite the difference in their status.

“However, His Highness is the cause of the current division between Ferris and Lady Crusch…”

“Hey, stop talking like that! I understand how you feel, but I didn’t expect it to go on this long! It’s for the best! I thought…”

“Ferris has already spent eighty-six days and seven hours without seeing Lady Crusch.”

“Sorry! I’m really sorry! So stop looking at me like that! It’s scary!”

Ferris’s resentful tone had Fourier scrambling to explain himself.

The fourth prince, Fourier, was head over heels for Ferris’s master, Crusch. This affection was apparent to everyone except Crusch herself, but due to Fourier’s amiable personality, Ferris also came to recognize him as a suitable match for his beloved Crusch.

In essence, they both adored the same person. Their friendship was natural and expected.

“With that being said, Your Highness is being unfair—”

“I’m still not forgiven?! What more should I do?!”

“If you spin around and bark like a dog…”

“Is that what you want? I’ll do it then? Even though I’m royalty?”

“O-kaaaay! You really are unfair.”

Ferris couldn’t help but laugh at Fourier’s feeble threat.

Then, Ferris turned on the bed, folded his slender legs, and embraced his knees. Fourier, noticing Ferris’s actions, started coughing.

“Oh, Ferris. While you and I are indeed friends, you must exercise decorum and discretion.”

“…Did I do something to upset Your Highness?”

“Don’t make such a face! I’m not saying that. It’s just. You’re a young lady, so you shouldn’t relax so freely in public. Even if it’s with me.”

For a moment, Ferris became nervous, but Fourier’s words quickly dispelled the misunderstanding. However, another misunderstanding lingered between them.

“You’re a delicate maiden. You were entrusted to me by Crusch. It would be a shame if I didn’t return you safely… no, even more radiant than you were when I took you in.”

As Fourier rushed to explain himself, Ferris smiled, feeling relieved.

Fourier’s earlier words caused Ferris to freeze because of his true feelings.

Ferris didn’t care about others’ opinions. With that mindset, he didn’t have to continue cross-dressing as a male servant to Crusch. He didn’t have to keep himself strong as Crusch’s follower.

But Fourier was different.

He didn’t want to be disliked by Crusch, Fourier, Crusch’s father Meckart, or the servants of the Karsten ducal family, who had all taken care of him.

That is why, after several years, Ferris is still keeping his gender hidden from Fourier. He wasn’t afraid of opening up. He was afraid of the potential change in their relationship.

Crusch and Fourier were like the sun to Ferris.

Imagining a change in their relationship was as terrifying as a cataclysm.

“Ferris, are you listening? This is a very important topic to me.”

"Huh? Oh, I'm sorry. If it's about something important, I wasn't listening."

"What! Oh well, I'll explain it again. As a delicate and beautiful maiden, it's not good for you to be too defenseless…"

"Oh, that conversation? I heard that already…"

"Isn't this an important topic?! It's supposed to be helpful… right?!"

"Pfft!"

Ferris couldn't help but burst into laughter in response to Fourier's earnest efforts.

"Hmm… I don't know why, but I'm fine with it if you're laughing."

Although bewildered at first, Fourier quickly accepted the situation.

Ferris wiped away the tears that had welled up from laughing so hard at Fourier's attitude.

"Hah, that was funny. Since it was so funny, I'll forgive Your Highness. Can't help it."

"Oh, good. I'm forgiven… Although something feels off, but oh well!"

Fourier's ability to not dwell on minor details was one of his strengths.

He cast off his doubts with a clear mind and turned directly to Ferris.

"I understand your complaint. Indeed, I too am troubled by the prolonged training."

"…Though, I'm not saying that I hate studying, you know?"

"I don't doubt that. You're as serious as Crusch. Perhaps Garitch has something in mind. The title of 'Blue' is more than just a decoration."

"Oh, that 'Blue' again…"

Now, the word 'Blue' came from Fourier's mouth. Garitch hadn't given a serious answer, but perhaps Fourier would.

"Hmm? You don't know about the titles of color?"

"I'm just asking if it's something impressive. Even when I ask the teacher directly, I just get brushed off."

Also, at the treatment center, Ferris didn't have to option to ask anyone but Garitch.

Ferris hardly had any contact with other mages apart from Garitch. It seemed that Ferris was seen as trouble by those around them and was kept at a distance.

The reason was Ferris's cat ears—prejudice against demi-humans was still strong, and people weren't receptive to Ferris's ancestral lineage. On top of that, Ferris was close to Fourier, a member of the royal family. Many people didn't find this amusing.

Of course, Ferris had no intention of sharing such stories with Fourier.

"You're surprisingly shy. Alright then, let me explain."

Unaware of the circumstances, Fourier calmly accepted it and began his explanation as if nothing happened, raising his finger.

"Garitch's title of 'Blue' is an honor bestowed only upon exceptional magic users. It's recognition of mastery over the pinnacles of each of the six magical attributes."

"…Then, is Garitch at the pinnacle of Water magic?"

"Yes, exactly! So, you've received instruction from the most capable instructor in the kingdom…"

"Nyaa, come on. The title of 'Blue' isn't all that impressive. Disappointing…"

“You sure are saying something, aren’t you?”

When Ferris revealed his true feelings, Fourier widened his eyes in surprise.

“Oh, that’s not it. Um, I think the teacher’s healing magic is amazing. I really respect it. But, when you say it’s the pinnacle, that has me shaking my head…”

Ferris carefully chose his words, reflecting his true feelings.

Garitch’s healing magic and knowledge were astounding, and there was much he could learn. However, when it came to healing magic alone, Ferris didn’t think there was a big difference between them.

“To be honest, if I had healing magic as good as the teacher’s, I don’t think it would be that impressive.”

“Well, that’s quite a bold opinion. But, Garitch’s power is recognized by everyone… If you can match that, I’ll be proud to call you my friend!”

“It’s a relief to hear you say that, Your Highness.”

“Haha, right?”

With arms crossed and chest puffed out, Fourier received modest applause from Ferris. Then, Ferris suddenly became curious about the titles of other ‘colors’ aside from his teacher.

“By the way, what kind of people hold the titles of other colors?”

“Oh, the others? Um, let’s see. Garitch is the ‘Blue,’ and as for the other titles… Ah yes, ‘Red’, ‘Yellow’, and ‘Green’ are all held by a single magic user.”

“Really, all by one person…? In that case, what about Shadow and Light?”

“The remaining titles of ‘White’ and ‘Black’ are vacant… I think?”

“…”

Upon Fourier's somewhat uncertain response, Ferris felt disheartened.

It seemed like the titles were assigned quite arbitrarily. Thanks to this, Ferris started to feel like they had misjudged Garitch a bit.

"Ah! Ferris, are you doubting me with those eyes?"

"Oh no, not at all! Oh, Your Highness, would you like some tea? We've been talking for so long, you must be thirsty. I also have some snacks."

"I'm not going to be distracted so easily! But yes, I would like some tea!"

Ferris diverted Fourier's attention to tea, giving up on serious topics.

The conversation between the cat-eared youth and the prince continued late into the night.

For Ferris, it was the only solace during the days when he couldn't see his master.

3

"—?"

Witnessing a strange scene, Ferris suddenly stopped in the hallway.

At the end of the hallway, an elderly man in a white coat was exchanging words with a tall young man. One was the familiar skeleton healer Garitch, but the other was an unfamiliar figure, whose appearance was out of place in the clinic.

Clad in purple garments with a mottled cape, and with long indigo hair, the figure's back was oddly conspicuous.

This was the Royal Treatment Center's research building, and outsiders were strictly forbidden.

The treatment center was divided into the research and treatment buildings, and encounters with outsiders mostly took place in the treatment building. The figure's strange appearance did not seem to fit the research building—

"—Ah, Ferris. Perfect timing. Come over here. Let me introduce you."

Just as he was starting to ponder, Ferris got called over by Garitch. For a moment, Ferris considered feigning ignorance, but then made his way to the instructor.

And immediately regretted it.

"Oh-hoo~. Is this the special student Garitch was taa~alking about?"

Saying this, the figure turned around, and Ferris froze upon seeing his face.

This was because the person's face was painted white, and adorned with inexplicable makeup that resembled a monster. Their almond-shaped eyes were mismatched in color, and the blue and yellow irises seemed disturbing.

Overwhelmed by the young man's eyes, Ferris found himself unable to speak.

"Mmm, that is a nii~ice reaction. I doo~ love seeing this from someone I've just met."

"That's quite tasteless. But…"

"Not baa~ad, right?"

"Heh-Heh-heh! Exactly!"

Responding to the young man's provocative words, Garitch slapped his knee in agreement. In front of the two laughing men, Ferris felt utterly humiliated.

"Um, can I go now that you've had your fun?"

"Oh, not yet, not yet. I haven't introduced you yet. Ferris, this is Roswaal L. Mathers… quite an exceptional magic user."

"Oh, come on. Just the best in the kingdom, that's aa~all."

"Ha-Haa, the best in the kingdom…"

Introduced as Roswaal, the young man placed his hand on his chest and spoke solemnly, yet confidently. Honestly, it was hard to tell if he was serious or joking.

However, the title of the kingdom's best magician did ring a bell.

"Could it be that you hold the titles of 'Red', 'Green', and 'Yellow' all at once?"

"Oo~oh, as expected of the beloved student of Mr. Garitch the 'Blue'. You are studying well, aa~aren't you?"

Impressed by Ferris' question, Roswaal closed one eye and curled his lips into a smile.

"That's correct. I am the magician who holds three titles of color in this kingdom. You wii~ill give me the utmost respect and loyalty."

"—Unfortunately, my respect and loyalty are already dedicated to someone else."

"Oh, no hesitation in your response. I see, I see… That's actually the kind of answer I like."

Though it was a reflexive retort, Roswaal seemed pleased rather than offended.

Sensing something inexplicable in Roswaal's attitude, Ferris glanced at Garitch. Honestly, he didn't want to linger. What was Roswaal's intention?

"In short, I'm here to borrow something. I came here to ask for a textbook on healing magic."

"A healing magic textbook…? For the best magician in the kingdom?”

“That is a sore spot. Unfortunately, I have absolutely noo~ aptitude for healing magic. As a result, I’m quite unfamiliar with those kinds of techniques. Soo~, I’ve come to borrow a textbook.”

“Ah, I understand. I, too, have no aptitude outside of healing magic…”

While Ferris possessed an aptitude for water-based healing magic, he lacked proficiency in any other form. He could heal wounds for Crusch, but couldn’t fight for her. That was Ferris’s nature.

It was hard to say which was more suitable for Roswaal.

“But really, to revisit the basics of healing magic now… Does this mean you’re trying to steal the title of ‘Blue’ from me? Heh-Heh-heh.”

“Oh no, not at aa~all! It’s actually because I have a student with an aptitude for water magic, and I want to teach them proo~operly. So, I thought I’d secretly brush up.”

“If they have an aptitude for healing magic, why not send them to the clinic?”

Actually, Ferris was admitted to the treatment facility for this exact reason. If the person had a genuine desire to learn, it would be a much better solution.

However, Roswaal slowly shook his head at the suggestion.

“It’s some children who absolutely haa~ate being separated from each other. I can’t bear to split them up. Wee~all, I just want to indulge their cuu~ute little whims.”

“I get it! I totally get it!”

“I understand your situation, Ferris, but your resolute nodding makes me feel conflicted!”

“If you don’t like it, then please finish my training quickly.

Seriously.”

Understanding the difficulties of separation anxiety, Ferris expressed his feelings rather forcefully. Then he turned to Garitch with a sharp glance, voicing his discontent.

Garitch had the authority to end Ferris’s training. The extension of nearly two months was due to the professor’s decision. Ferris was starting to seriously regret his choice of mentor.

“You seem to get along wee~ell.”

“That’s right.”

“No, we do not!”

After giving a reply, Ferris turned his head away. Because of this, he didn’t notice. —Roswaal was looking at their interaction with a hint of admiration.

And in that fleeting moment of sentimentality, unnoticed by anyone…

“—Master, I’m finished. All done.”

“Meow?!”

Startled by the sudden voice and presence behind him, Ferris jumped. He quickly darted behind Garitch, and noticed an unfamiliar figure in the hallway.

A handsome young man with deep blue hair and a resolute expression was standing there. He sported a monocle over one eye and was dressed in a sleek black butler’s outfit. He appeared to be around twenty years old.

“I apologize for startling you. It was just a bit of mischief, a childish prank.”

“Just a bit?!”

With a serious face and a perfect bow, the young man gave an honest confession.

Sensing a foreboding in his demeanor and posture, Ferris glanced at Roswaal, who nodded.

“As you imagined, he’s my stee~eward. —Clind, it must’ve been a loo~ot of work for you.”

“No, the archive was well-organized, so there was no problem. I believe I have found the book you requested, but please inspect it. Visually.”

Addressing Roswaal respectfully, Clind handed over a book he held. Roswaal checked the spine and nodded. Ferris glanced over and confirmed that everything seemed to be in order.

However, if there was a question left…

“I was in charge of organizing the archive until just now…”

After he finished sorting through the archive, Ferris joined Garitch and Roswaal in the hallway. If that’s the case, then Clind shouldn’t have had time to look for books in the archive.

“Yes. So, to avoid inconveniencing you, I retrieved the book quietly. Thoughtfulness.”

“You were right behind me the whole time?!”

Ferris was taken aback by the outrageous statement, and for some reason, Clind appeared satisfied, raising his jaw. Without commenting on his servant’s demeanor, Roswaal turned to Garitch.

“Wee~ell then, I would appreciate it if I could boo~orrow it. After I finish reading it… I’ll come back next in a month or so.”

“There’s no need to rush with a copy of the textbook. Instead, make sure to properly mentor that pupil of yours. That way, they won’t have any regrets.”

“—I would never slack off when it comes to magic.”

Roswaal bowed respectfully as Garitch patted his waist. He then turned to Ferris with a changed expression, a smile showing on his face.

“It’s been nice to meet you. With a child like you around, I’m sure Garitch will feel relii~ieved.”

“…That seems like a bit of an exaggeration.”

“Not at all. Learn carefully. —Don’t have any regrets.”

“Huh?”

Ferris felt a sense of discomfort from Roswaal’s heartfelt words. However, Roswaal then turned away from Ferris, not allowing the conversation to continue.

“See you. Lee~et’s go, Clind.”

After waving lightly and saying his farewells, Roswaal started walking. Following suit, Clind solemnly trailed behind the tall figure. However, as the steward passed by Ferris—

“There is no distinction between sexes in the heart of innocence. Please, be as you are. Craving.”

“…”

At the same time as the whisper, something was inserted into Ferris’s hair. Instinctively reaching for it, Ferris felt the sensation of petals on his fingers.

He was given a flower. By the time Ferris realized this, the clown and steward had disappeared down the corridor.

Watching them leave, Ferris let out a tired sigh.

“How should I phrase it… They had very strong personalities.”

“What, there’s no harm in meeting new people. Roswaal is one of the most respectable nobles in the kingdom.”

"Respectable, meow?"

"That's right. He judges people by their character. Blood and appearance don't matter to him. Respectable, right?"

Ferris bit his tongue at Garitch's toothless grin. Indeed, Roswaal's attitude seemed genuine. Ferris even forgot to keep up appearances.

"This training in the capital is valuable. It's better to have something to show for it besides healing magic."

"…You always have such a strange way of looking at things."

Ferris looked awkward because of Garitch's rare consideration.

His mentor had a point. While it was inevitable that Ferris had a small circle of friends, it was essential for both Crusch and himself to expand on their allies.

Knowing Garitch, it was likely half consideration and half teasing.

"But it feels like you're offering a memento, or settling affairs."

"What a loud, unappealing disciple. Despite having flowers on your head."

"The man from earlier did this on his own—"

Puffing out his cheeks, Ferris removed the flower still in his hair. It was a small yellow flower. No matter where it was picked, the stem and petals were still lush and vibrant.

"They mistook you for a girl. Not unreasonable."

"Hmm— I wonder."

Ferris felt like Clind had seen through his gender in the end. While he wasn't bothered by being found out, he wasn't sure of the true intention behind the flower. Either way—

"I don't want to receive flowers, so I'll give it to my teacher."

"Ho-Ho, flowers definitely suit me more than you… Actually, do they?”

“Please don’t question yourself, it’s tiring.”

Laughing profusely, Garitch inserted the flower forced upon him by Ferris into the pocket of his white coat. Then the old man patted his exhausted student on the back.

“Well, I’ll accept it. I’ll consider it your gift to me.”

“But that’s not the case at all, neither in source nor sentiment. Like I said earlier, doesn’t it literally feel like we’re settling affairs?”

“Well, that’s right. It’s about time to put your training to a proper end.”

Walking alongside Garitch, Ferris widened his eyes at those words. As Garitch continued, he touched his cheekbones.

And then—

“The handling and application of healing magic, knowledge of injuries and diseases. I’ve instilled in you the basics that I can teach you. The rest will grow within you. Discovering better ways to save people will be the work of young people, not old men like me.”

“That might be true. So, what’s next then? What should I do?”

Completing his training was necessary for Ferris to return to Crusch’s side. Ferris felt anxious in the face of this. Garitch narrowed his eyes at his student.

“Teacher?”

Suddenly, his mentor stopped, and Ferris took two more steps before turning around.

In the corridor, empty except for the two of them, the professor and apprentice quietly faced each other. Garitch’s expression was unusually serious as he looked at Ferris.

“Um, Teacher, what…”

"I've taught you the wonders of healing magic, the means to heal and save people. So, to conclude."

"To conclude?"

After a brief pause, Garitch continued.

"—I must also teach you the limitations of healing magic."

4

Early the next morning, Ferris accompanied Garitch to visit a mansion in the noble district.

"…"

Garitch rang the bell on the gate with a solemn expression. Standing beside him, Ferris silently fulfilled the role of an attendant. He hadn't heard anything about the situation.

It wasn't unusual for a practitioner to make house calls outside of their clinic. Some individuals couldn't visit due to severe illness, or simply preferred to keep their ailments hidden. This was especially true for nobles.

However, despite these considerations, Ferris couldn't shake off his mentor's words.

"…the limitations of healing magic."

Learning not only the potential of healing magic, but also its limitations.

Ferris had been pondering the meaning behind the words of Garitch Fabless the 'Blue'.

"—Thank you for waiting, Mr. Fabless."

Before Ferris, who was lost in thought, the iron gate swung open with the call.

Standing beyond the gate was an elderly woman who appeared to be a servant of the mansion. She bent at the waist and raised her head. However, Ferris was surprised by the sophisticated gesture.

With an inscrutable air surrounding her, the woman straightened her posture and narrowed her blue eyes.

“The mistress is waiting for you. Please, come inside.”

With a voice that displayed no emotion, the woman invited them into the mansion.

The mansion’s scale was moderate, neither particularly outstanding nor conspicuous in the noble district. However, the garden trees and flower beds were well-maintained. They likely had a skilled gardener.

Passing through the serene front yard, Ferris followed the woman leading them into the mansion. Like its exterior, the interior was immaculate, devoid of extravagance yet adorned with tasteful furnishings.

Without a word, the woman guided Ferris and Garitch to a room at the end of the corridor.

“—Please go ahead, Mr. Fabless.”

Stepping aside, the woman bowed deeply to them. Observing her gesture, Garitch raised his hand towards the door. Slowly, he opened the designated room.

“—?”

The first thing they perceived was a strong scent of alcohol.

They often encountered such odors due to their involvement with the treatment center. Alcohol was famous for its healing properties, preventing wounds and abscesses from worsening without the use of magic.

However, the smell of alcohol in this context was a foul stench unrelated to healing purposes.

"…Yo, welcome. I've been waiting for you. Mr. Fabless the 'Blue'."

"…"

As Ferris traced the scent of alcohol, a rather sarcastic welcome was given simultaneously.

Turning towards the low, hoarse voice, Ferris spotted a middle-aged man seated in the corner of the room.

He had fiery red hair, blue eyes, and a flushed face adorned with unkempt facial hair. Empty bottles of alcohol were littered around him, and he cradled another half-filled bottle in his arms.

Uncomfortable with the sight of a typical drunkard, Ferris furrowed his brows.

"Huh? I'm not used to this unfamiliar brat tagging. What's the deal?"

"…He's my apprentice. He's been assisting me for the past three months. Today is no different."

"Assisting? Hey, have my ears or brain gone rotten from all this booze? Or has the reputation of 'Blue' lost its color, Mr. Fabless? What nonsense am I hearing?"

While exhaling boozy breath, the swaying man stood up and glared at Ferris and Garitch. Ferris felt a sense of dread from the intense malevolence in the man's eyes.

It was almost like a physical disgust.

"You can't do anything useful, yet you've got an assistant? This isn't a sideshow or a playground for kids. Don't mess around."

"—Teacher, I agree. I don't think this man needs a healer."

Taking advantage of the man's scolding remarks, Ferris tugged at Garitch's sleeve.

Although it was just Ferris's opinion, he couldn't see any need for treatment in front of him. There was no sign of illness or injury. A twisted personality couldn't be fixed with healing magic.

However, Garitch shook his head at Ferris's opinion.

"You're wrong, Ferris. Our patient isn't that man. She's lying on the bed."

"Huh?"

Surprised by Garitch's words, Ferris looked towards the back of the room. Ferris was aware of the bed's presence. However, there was a man with a bottle of liquor right next to it, and most importantly, there was no sign of life on the bed. That's why he hadn't noticed.

A blonde woman was lying on the bed so quietly that he couldn't even hear her breathing.

"That's absurd, teacher. You're letting your assistant help without even informing him about the patient."

With a flushed face, the man clicked his tongue and kicked an empty bottle away with his foot. Then, he leaned against the wall and started gulping down more alcohol.

"…"

Ferris couldn't really argue against his blunder. Garitch gently patted his shoulder and approached the woman lying on the bed. Ferris took a deep breath and followed behind.

Then, he looked down at the woman lying next to him on the bed—

"…What, this is, what?"

He was confused by the lack of presence of the woman.

She was definitely right in front of him. However, her presence was weak. She was visible, yet it felt like she wasn't there.

"Her breathing, heartbeat, body temperature, they're all weak but without abnormality. At least, that's my assessment."

“Me too… I feel the same way. There’s nothing wrong with her gate either…”

Following Garitch’s quick palpation, Ferris fulfilled his duties as an assistant. He repeated the same actions as Garitch to ensure that nothing was overlooked.

“Truly, she has a healthy body with no problems… However.”

The diagnosis was made. Still, Ferris couldn’t accept the results of his own diagnosis.

Her health was unquestionable. However, there was no response typical of a living person. Neither during the palpation, nor at that moment. —She was present, yet she was ‘absent’.

“‘Sleeping Beauty.’”

“Huh?”

“This woman’s condition… You can’t really call it a disease. She’s perfectly healthy. Yet, she just keeps sleeping, unchanging. She has had no need for food or movement, for many years.”

“For many years… Can such a disease even exist?”

“Indeed, her appearance hasn’t changed. She continues to sleep at a different pace of time than her husband.”

With a lowered gaze, Garitch’s words helped Ferris understand the relationship between this woman and the middle-aged man. At the same time, Ferris became aware of how cruel it was to see a woman who appeared to be around twenty years old.

If this explanation was true, the woman and middle-aged man had been separated for a long time—

“—Stop it. Sympathy makes me nauseous.”

The budding sympathy in Ferris’s heart was roughly rejected by the man.

Though the conversation between teacher and student was hushed, the man seemed to grasp the gist of their discussion from their demeanor. The man glared at Ferris with a fierce glare in his blue eyes.

"Sympathy like…"

"Shut it. I don't want your usual cheap consolations. I only expect one thing from you guys. Anything else just gets in the way!"

Slamming his elbow against the wall, the man blocked Ferris's words, opinions, and compassion. As Ferris fell silent in response to the angry outburst, a malicious grin twisted the man's cheeks.

"And? I guess this time, you won't be able to deliver that one thing either? Even though I've been graced by the esteemed Fabless the 'Blue' countless times, I apologize for having such an inadequate wife. Ah, I'm truly sorry."

Speaking insincerely, the man staggered towards Ferris and Garitch. He stood in front of the silent Garitch with a bottle of alcohol in hand, tilting it over the teacher's head.

"…"

"Your way out is the same as always. The quack healer and his beastly assistant."

The mixture of alcohol and profanity had Ferris boiling with anger.

However—

"I apologize for being inadequate."

"I didn't expect anything from you."

Grumbling at Garitch's apology, the man sat down on the floor next to the bed. Flicking his hand carelessly, the man's demeanor left Ferris and Garitch with no choice but to leave the room.

"T-Teacher, how can I wipe you down…"

“I’m not that wet. He must’ve been stingy with the alcohol… He’s a hard man to deal with.”

“Have you known him for a long time?”

“Do you think I had a choice? …It’s been over ten years since I started making house calls like this.”

Garitch wiped his face with the cloth handed to him, and Ferris was left breathless by his answer.

Over ten years of house calls. This meant that the onset of ‘Sleeping Beauty’ must have occurred before that. The woman had been asleep for over ten years.

It was indeed a terrible situation worthy of sympathy, but—

“Even so, I can’t forgive that attitude. He was speaking such vulgarities to a practitioner trying to heal his wife…!”

“I’m sorry for making you feel uncomfortable. I didn’t think it would escalate to that point, but I underestimated his immaturity. I apologize.”

“I’m not angry about that! Please take this more seriously!”

Feeling like the conversation was being derailed, Ferris raised his voice to the insincere teacher. Smiling bitterly at Ferris’s childish demeanor, Garitch let out a deep sigh, his expression gone.

“I told you, Ferris. Today, I wanted to teach you about the limitations of healing magic.”

“…Are you talking about the ‘Sleeping Beauty’? Certainly, such a disease—”

“No, it’s different. It’s true that I’m powerless against ‘Sleeping Beauty’. But the true powerlessness I wanted to teach you about is reflected in that man’s attitude.”

Garitch shook his head, and Ferris was left stunned and speechless.

"Healing magic is not omnipotent. But even though it's far from omnipotence… It remains a source of hope for many. I myself take pride in having saved many lives. Whether I possess skill befitting the title of 'Blue' is something I'm still unsure of in my old age."

"…"

"However, hope can sometimes become a double-edged sword. The power that should bring salvation can instead become a poison, causing wounds and spreading toxicity to those it failed to save. There are limits even to healing magic. But I suspect your limits are higher and more distant than mine, or anyone else's. I know that."

As if trying to persuade the silent Ferris, Garitch earnestly repeated his words.

It was the kind of statement that Ferris would usually laugh off as excessive praise. But now, he couldn't do that. —It carried an undeniable weight, an echo that could not be ignored.

"You are destined to become worthy of the title 'Blue' someday. The weight of expectations and hopes upon your young shoulders exceeds anything I've known. That's why I wanted you to know this beforehand."

"The powerlessness of healing magic?"

"Knowledge is a form of preparation. Just as knowledge of healing techniques saves lives, the memory of this day might save your heart. Always be prepared for anything. That's what I wanted to teach you."

Ending the serious talk with a playful wink, Garitch returned to his usual demeanor. Ferris finally relaxed in response to his aloof behavior.

"It's true that I've learned a lot… However, deciding who becomes the 'Blue' is up to the kingdom, isn't it? I don't think it's something you can just casually declare—"

"What, it's the recommendation of the current 'Blue', you know? It's pretty much a done deal."

"I already hear a lot of gossip about me being Fourier's pet, will that include you as well now, professor Garitch?"

Living in the atmosphere of the capital was already suffocating, adding Garitch's jokes to the mix was just too much to handle.

However, Ferris tried to accept the teacher's concern and consideration in his own way.

"I never thought that healing magic was omnipotent."

It was important not to misjudge the scope of one's abilities. And diligence should never be neglected.

In the end, it might sound like a generalization, but that was the essence of it.

"Oh my, the elderly can be quite long-winded, meow—"

"Hehehe! That's what they say!"

To match Ferris's light-hearted tone, Garitch flashed a smile, revealing his missing teeth.

Half of Ferris's response was sincere, while the other half was consideration for Garitch after facing the 'Sleeping Beauty' condition. The teacher and student respected each other's thoughts, trying to return to normal.

"But, feeling discouraged. I can understand feeling that way after ten years of trying…"

"You said something heavy in such a casual tone."

"No matter how many times you lose, never give up on winning in the end. I know someone close to me who has been losing in sword fights to the person they love for years, and Ferri-chan thinks that's precious."

With a slight but proud smile, Ferris envisioned the candid grin of a blonde boy behind closed eyelids. Alongside him, the image of a kind-hearted master with long green hair emerged, and a genuine smile bloomed deep within Ferris's heart.

Yes, that's right. The two people most precious to Ferris were individuals of high caliber. That's why Ferris wanted to keep up with them and not fall behind.

"Teacher emphasized the powerlessness of healing magic, but Ferri-chan felt differently. In fact, I thought it had large potential."

"—. Potential, huh."

"Even the 'Sleeping Beauty' that can't be cured right now, it might be curable someday… right?"

Even if the disease is currently incurable, it will be fine if research advances, if a talented healer worthy of the title 'Blue' emerges, or if healing institutions undergo tremendous growth.

Roads that seem to be blocked now will surely open someday.

"I'm sure that Ferri-chan's loved ones would say the same."

"…"

Garitch silently watched Ferris, who spoke with confidence. The unexpected comment left the teacher momentarily speechless, blinking in surprise.

But soon enough, Garitch's face wrinkled with amusement, and he laughed heartily.

"Are you referring to yourself as Ferri-chan?"

"Eek! Y-You're bringing that up now?!"

Ferris inadvertently spoke like he did in the Crusch mansion or in front of Fourier. Embarrassed by being called out, he touched his blushing cheeks.

As he traced his hardened cheekbones with his finger, the old man narrowed his eyes.

“Potential, potential… I was going to teach you about that, but I learned it instead. Embarrassing, isn’t it?”

“You might be getting senile. You’ll have to be careful not to make any mistakes at the next house call.”

“Remember what I told you…”

As the two continued their conversation in the hallway, a guide approached them. She seemed to have come to escort the two after the house call. Garitch went to inform her of the diagnosis.

His posture was apologetic, expressing his regret for not being able to help.

However, Ferris felt like Garitch’s back had straightened slightly. He hoped that his words might have had some impact, however small.

“I wonder if I managed to imitate Lady Crusch and Lord Fourier a little.”

Saying it out loud made Ferris cringe at his conceited self-assessment.

It felt presumptuous to think that he could even come close to the two people he admired. Ferris needed to focus on doing his best at what he could do as Ferris.

Therefore, for now—

“—I need to finish my training properly and get praised by Lady Crusch.”

With his initial determination returning, Ferris followed the professor ahead of him with light steps.

In his stride, there was no trace of their recent conversation— the fact that he was named the next ‘Blue’ by Garitch Fabless, the current ‘Blue’.

Speaking so casually about such a heavy responsibility led to his carefree attitude, as if taking it for granted.

—Because of this, in later years, Ferris would find himself reflecting on these days over and over again.

It all began just ten days after these events, when Ferris, having completed his training at the clinic, and about to return to his beloved master, received the news of death—

—The death of Garitch Fabless, the ‘Blue’, from which the story of the Successor of Blue would continue.

5

—The emaciated old man lying on the bed seemed as if he were just sleeping.

Because he was, wasn’t he?

His usual pale, anemic face. A lifeless appearance, like that of a skeleton, clad in the familiar white coat that he always wore.

Because he was like a withered old tree, it was difficult to quickly distinguish between his face while sleeping and his face in death.

“That’s why, if you were just sleeping now… I wish that were the case, professor.”

Gazing down at the lifeless body of an old man lying there, Ferris muttered in a voice devoid of emotion.

This was the treatment building’s mortuary, a room within the Royal Treatment Center. Here were placed the bodies of patients who had passed away despite their treatments, and arrangements were made for their families to pay their respects.

Therefore, family had the right to be the first to face the deceased in this room, but—

“Lord Fabless had no family. His wife passed away several years ago, and they had no children.”

“…He had a wife. That’s a bit surprising.”

Beside Ferris, who was staring at the deceased body, a person with a determined posture lowered their gaze.

Crusch had almond-colored eyes and long, beautiful green hair. Despite being the same age as Ferris, her eyes harbored a strong and sharp conviction. It was a presence reminiscent of a sword—but her expression became slightly clouded as she gazed at Ferris’s profile.

“—It’s alright, Lady Crusch.”

Seeing the girl’s gaze, Ferris spoke in a particularly cheerful voice.

“I’m sorry for causing you worry. To be honest, it was surprising… but after spending three months at the treatment center, I’ve experienced many times where I couldn’t save or help people.”

“Ferris.”

“And besides, Lady Crusch, you probably don’t know this, but Doctor Garitch was really eccentric! Even in this situation, he might say, ‘Consider this your graduation exam!’ while laughing loudly…”

“…”

“…Lady Crusch?”

Crusch suddenly embraced Ferris, who had been speaking rapidly.

Startled by the action, Ferris stiffened. He didn’t dislike it. He was just surprised.

Being embraced by Crusch meant a lot to Ferris. —It was like he was being rescued from darkness, like the day he decided to dedicate his life to her.

“Don’t pretend to be strong in front of me. You are gentle, devoted, and sometimes even try to hide your true feelings from me. That’s why you try to disregard even the most important moments, like this one.”

“…”

“I’m glad you want to be my attendant. Thanks to that, I will always remember my shortcomings. Your existence is the most precious treasure in my life. —That is why I want to repay you with even more than what you think of me.”

While held in her supple arms, Ferris was enveloped in the warmth of the words pouring into his ears. Crusch’s calm yet passionate voice always sparkled in the deepest part of Ferris’s heart.

Even now, while wearing a mask of bravado, Ferris felt it in his heart as he tried not to worry his master.

“…I’m sorry for being a weak, pathetic, and shameful attendant.”

“Mourning and grieving the death of a respected mentor. If that is considered weak and shameful, then I am happy to have such a weak and shameful person by my side. I, too, want to be pitiful.”

“I-I understand. Please don’t tease me anymore…”

Crusch’s integrity did not allow her to let Ferris off the hook. As a prisoner of her unwavering beliefs, Ferris could only tremble.

Gently holding back his reluctance, Ferris moved away from Crusch’s chest.

“Yes, I admit it. I’m sad that Doctor Garitch has passed away. It hurts.”

“That’s okay. As a person, that’s the right reaction. It’s natural to be hurt when you lose a mentor. —Especially when it’s caused by someone else.”

Crusch spoke in a low voice to Ferris, who nodded slowly with teary eyes.

Garitch had taken his eternal rest. —But he did not die from illness or an accident, much less natural causes. The old man had been stabbed in the back with a blade, his life forcibly taken away.

Garitch Fabless, the renowned healer known as the ‘Blue’, had left his mark in the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica.

His death came too suddenly, both for him, and for the people of the kingdom.

“For the healer who had saved many lives in the past, it’s hard to accept such a sudden end.”

“He was the one who kept saying, ‘When will I die, when will I die’…”

Despite being hailed as the kingdom’s greatest healer, he had a habit of playing with the ideas of life and death.

While he was diligent in wanting to save others, he was indifferent to his own well-being. So even facing his lifeless body now, it was hard to say whether Garitch felt regretful or not.

“But at least, he didn’t suffer in the end… That’s a relief.”

The cruel blade didn’t torment Garitch before taking his life. He must have lost consciousness and his life in an instant, without realizing anything.

That thought was a comfort to those left behind.

But instead, they wondered.

“Who, and for what reason—”

—Who killed Garitch Fabless, the healer who had been saving people his whole life?

6

The news of Garitch’s death reached Ferris two days before he was set to leave the capital, having completed his training.

After three months of training, he could finally return to his master, Crusch. Ferris's plans were disrupted by the sudden death of his mentor.

When Crusch came to pick up Ferris in the capital, there was no emotional reunion.

Their reunion was instead marked by the confirmation of a painful truth. This was the exchange that took place in the mortuary earlier.

"—It's clear from the fact that nothing was stolen that theft wasn't the motive."

Crusch speculated so, holding a bag of coins as she inspected his personal belongings in the mortuary.

The belongings had been discovered alongside Galic, who had collapsed on the street. He wasn't the type to carry around a lot of belongings. To Ferris, who had served as his attendant for three months, it seemed unlikely that anything had been stolen.

"I'm glad he was found in the commoner's district… and not in a dangerous area. I'm glad his belongings weren't vandalized… But if it wasn't a theft."

"There are many reasons why people harm others. If money or goods are not the reason, then matters of honor or resentment are possible… I'd rather not dwell on it, there might not even be a reason.

"So killing was the sole purpose?"

"That is difficult to say… However, would such a disorganized killer happen upon Lord Fabless by chance? I believe there must be a reason behind these events."

Crusch focused on practical aspects, ruling out the possibility of an accidental tragedy. Ferris agreed with that. —He wanted the culprit to have a reason.

Though he knew that there could be inexplicable malice in this world—

“If the goal was to disrupt the capital, could it be the work of the Witch Cult?”

“I understand what you’re suggesting, but that’s a leap in logic. Certainly, if it’s those ruffians you mentioned, they might target Lord Fabless the ‘Blue’ to stir up chaos in the city. However…”

At that, Crusch paused and glanced at Ferris, hesitating for a moment.

“Rather than malevolent scheming, it would be more realistic to suspect personal resentment against Lord Fabless.”

Crusch did not mince her words despite the painful subject.

Though it was brief, they had a mentor-student relationship. Ferris wanted to believe that Garitch wasn’t the type to be disliked by others. He wanted to believe, but…

“Resentment…”

Uttering that one word, Ferris placed his hand on his thin chest.

Garitch had saved countless lives as a user of healing magic. His achievements were well-known, and he was recognized as worthy of the title ‘Blue’. But at the same time, Ferris knew. —He knew about Garitch’s regrets and the limitations of healing magic.

In the face of an incurable disease, healers without a cure could even be despised.

If that were the case, could the culprit be—

“—A patient that Garitch couldn’t cure?”

Or perhaps the relative of a patient who died despite Garitch’s efforts.

If resentment was indeed the motive, that was the only possibility that came to mind. And as far as Ferris knew, there had been countless such cases in the past three months.

Ferris pondered, hoping to find an answer among them.

"—It's about time we prepared the late Fabless's remains."

The mortician called out to Ferris as he entered the morgue.

The mortician was responsible for preparing the appearance of the deceased and ensuring that they were in a suitable state for burial. It seemed that the mortician was being considerate of Ferris, Garitch's personal student, and had waited outside for him.

"Did you exchange your farewells?"

"Farewells for the deceased? I don't have any of those."

Ferris reflexively retorted, and immediately regretted venting his feelings. However, the mortician seemed accustomed to such responses, and proceeded towards the deceased without showing any concern.

Leaving it to the dark-skinned mortician, Ferris moved to exit the mortuary with Crusch.

Then, before leaving…

"—Please take care of the professor."

With a bow, Ferris bid farewell to Garitch's remains.

7

"I think the suspicious one is that drunken redhead!"

Exiting the clinic, Ferris energetically shared his thoughts with Crusch.

Then, as Crusch tilted her head inquisitively, Ferris explained the events that led him to this conclusion. After hearing the explanation —

“I see, a family member of a seriously ill patient… that makes sense.”

“Yes! And that man… he really seemed like he was holding a grudge!”

Hearing Crusch’s agreement, Ferris clenched his fist even more tightly.

In his mind was the image of the red-haired drunkard who had been hurling insults at Ferris and Garitch during their recent house call. While he sympathized with his plight, waiting for his unresponsive wife, it was still too much.

“So, who is this man?”

“Well, you see… actually, my teacher kept his name a secret. But! I know the location of the mansion we visited for the house call! If we hurry there with the guards…”

“That might be a bit premature. We should investigate a bit more thoroughly before jumping to conclusions. Besides, we’re not the only ones trying to track down whoever harmed Lord Fabless, right?”

Hearing this, Ferris realized that he was rushing things.

As Crusch had said, all the guards in the capital had been mobilized to track down Garitch’s killer.

Furious guards patrolled the streets, and the clinic was busy with people besides the usual patients. Ferris himself had already been questioned so many times that he was sick of it.

Garitch’s death was a significant event for the kingdom. If they didn’t identify the perpetrator, the kingdom’s authority would be compromised. Everyone was taking this seriously.

“Even so, no one is as desperate as I am…!”

"Ferris."

"Please, Lady Crusch. I know I'm being selfish. But I owe a lot to Lord Garitch. Please let me at least follow up on this lead."

Bowing his head, Ferris earnestly pleaded with Crusch. It was the first time he had gone against his master's wishes and insisted on his own opinion.

"…"

Ferris didn't understand why his heart was in such turmoil.

He couldn't say that he particularly liked Garitch as a person.

Garitch was always joking around, never took things seriously, and because of the extension to his training schedule, Ferris had days when he couldn't see Crusch. Their time together had been quite trying.

But still, he had improved a lot as a healer, and had actually learned quite a lot from him. It was thanks to Garitch that he could meet Crusch with pride, knowing that he had grown under his tutelage.

—For that reason, he wanted to repay Garitch's kindness.

"Goodness, you're stubborn. Has some of His Highness's attitude rubbed off on you during these three months in the capital?"

Suddenly, the sound of laughter reached Ferris as he raised her head in surprise. In front of him, Crusch stood with a hand on her hip, shaking her head with an exasperated look.

"I have a soft spot for clear, determined eyes. Especially when it comes to you and His Highness."

"Did His Highness ask about anything?"

"It happened often during the three months that you stayed in the capital. It seems he had frequent business to attend to near our house at this time. I was grateful for it."

Smiling wryly, Crusch seemed oblivious to Fourier's muddled feelings of affection. Though Fourier was diligent and earnest, it seemed his efforts had yet to bear fruit.

In any case, Crusch's smile disappeared as she gave a firm nod.

"It's your earnest wish. I couldn't bear to refuse and still call myself your master."

"I love you, Lady Crusch."

"And I, you."

Having been deeply moved by unexpected words, Crusch nodded confidently, unfazed.

Receiving reassuring words from his master, Ferris wiped away the tears welling up in his eyes. Then he and Crusch set off towards the mansion that they suspected.

Soon, without any problems, they arrived at a nobleman's mansion on the edge of the aristocratic district— "—This place."

Despite it being past early morning, they arrived at a mansion on a deserted street, and Crusch furrowed her shapely eyebrows. Seeing his master's reaction, Ferris tilted his head in confusion.

"Lady Crusch? Is something wrong?"

"Are you certain the person you suspect is from this mansion?"

"Yes. Most likely, he is the master of this mansion… I think."

During their house call, the 'Sleeping Beauty' in a coma had been referred to as 'Mistress' by the mansion's staff. Therefore, her husband was undoubtedly the master of this mansion.

In response to Ferris's answer, Crusch crossed her arms, her expression troubled.

Then, in front of the suspicious Ferris, she began to speak. It was—

"—The Astrea family."

"Astrea…could it be?"

"Unless there is another Astrea family, you and I have the same idea."

At Crusch's stern nod, Ferris felt a great disturbance.

The Astrea family—the lineage of the 'Sword Saint', who had repelled a great calamity that befell the kingdom in the past, and was one of the Three Heroes.

A family that produced generations of the kingdom's strongest swordsmen, linked to the 'Sword Saint'.

Naturally, their prestige surpassed even Garitch's title of 'Blue'—

"Why is the mansion of the 'Sword Saint' located in such a desolate place?"

"Well, hmm. I suppose it is well-known that the current head of the Astrea family is a problematic person. Still, I hesitate to think he's become so deranged as to rebel against the kingdom."

After exchanging their doubts at the gate, Crusch proceeded toward the mansion on behalf of the flinching Ferris. Eventually, she reached out to the bell mounted on the gate and paused.

"…"

The cause was the elderly gardener who had appeared near the gate.

Dressed plainly, he seemed to be tending to the garden. Ferris, who had not noticed his presence, was startled and astonished. He was sure that nobody had been there just now.

"Sir, are you the gardener of the Astrea family?"

"…"

Crusch, who must have shared the same moment of surprise, posed the question without fear.

The elderly gardener, appearing to be in his sixties, remained silent in response. However, the reason became clear soon enough. Gently, the gardener pointed to his own throat, revealing an old white scar.

“Lady Crusch, this man’s throat…”

“I understand. —Sir, I am Crusch Karsten, daughter of Duke Meckart Karsten, head of the Karsten family. I apologize for the unexpected visit.”

Bowing to the silent elderly man, Ferris followed his master in a polite greeting. The elderly man watched the two with a calm gaze.

“Today, I came to see the master of the mansion, Lord Heinkel. Is he available?”

“…”

In response to Crusch’s question, the elderly man placed his hand over his chest and bowed his head. Then, he retrieved a piece of paper from his pocket and began to write. —This written communication was a substitute for not being able to speak.

After he finished writing, the elderly man handed over the piece of paper. On it was…

“…The name of a tavern. If we go there, will we be able to meet him?”

“…”

“Thank you. Let’s go, Ferris.”

“Huh? Ah, yes!”

Tucking the folded paper into her jacket, Crusch briskly walked away. Ferris hurriedly followed behind, stealing a glance at the elderly man silently bowing as they left.

“Although he didn’t confirm the purpose of our visit, he didn’t seem like the type to sell out his master without a second thought.”

Stopping a short distance away from the mansion, Crusch turned back towards Ferris. Ferris widened his eyes at those words, and she handed him the note she received from the elderly man.

On it, written in neat handwriting, was the name of a tavern, ‘Casks’—

“Let’s go meet this drunkard you spoke of.”

8

They quickly found their target at the ‘Casks’ tavern.

“Uh… ugh.”

“This is the person we’re looking for, Ferris.”

Fanning away the lingering fumes of alcohol, Crusch asked Ferris for confirmation. Ferris, who inherited an excellent sense of smell from his ancestors, nodded in disgust.

“Yes, he is definitely the right person. But… ugh, the smell of alcohol.”

They were not inside the tavern, but in an alley behind it. Apparently, he had been thrown out by the staff due to his drunken behavior. Nevertheless, he continued drinking from the bottle in his arms.

This man is Heinkel Astrea— the head of the Astrea family and the drunkard Ferris remembered most vividly. Crusch’s opinion was undoubtedly correct.

“He is in no condition to talk right now.”

“If I manipulate mana, I might be able to break down the alcohol and sober him up…”

“It might antagonize him. Besides, I don’t want you to get too close to this man.”

His suggestion gently dismissed, Ferris blushed at the implication that he was highly valued. Ignoring the embarrassed Ferris, Crusch crouched down next to the man.

“Sir Heinkel. Heinkel von Astrea—”

“—I ain’t got no ‘von’. I’ll kill you, idiot.”

“I know. You don’t like being called that, I understand.”

In response to Crusch’s call, the man who had been groaning with a flushed face suddenly emitted a menacing aura. Despite the man’s aggressive tone and scent of alcohol, Crusch remained unfazed.

Scratching his head in response, the man finally noticed Ferris holding his breath.

“You, you’re that brat from the other day… The useless brat with that useless old man.”

“I apologize for my terrible first impression. But, considering I also remember you as a drunkard, it’s best to skip the insults. Sorry.”

“Heh, you’ve got a lot of hostility. I heard. That old man, he kicked the bucket, didn’t he?”

“…”

Hearing the words the man spat out, Ferris narrowed his eyes. The man let out a satisfied sigh at the pointed reaction.

“The greatest healer in the kingdom, unable to cure a single disease in over ten years. When I heard he couldn’t even heal his own wounds, I was convinced. It was all a waste of time.”

“What do you know about Professor Garitch…?”

“He was just a swindler trying to get people’s hopes up. At least, that’s how he seemed to me.”

The man's sneer made Ferris's vision turn red. Regardless of his involvement in Garitch's murder, he wanted nothing more than to choke the man right then and there.

Even though it was against the principles of a healer— a philosophy he was taught by Garitch.

"—That's enough, Ferris. There's no need to talk to him anymore."

But his anger was quelled by Crusch's intervention.

Crusch nodded reassuringly at the red-faced Ferris, and fixed a sharp glare at the man.

"I sympathize with your situation and emotions, but I won't allow you to hurt my attendant out of spite."

"Out of spite? What are you…"

"With Lord Fabless's passing, you lost the healer who tended to your wife. Therefore, you drown yourself in alcohol to forget your grief. Am I wrong?"

"Damn it! Don't act like you understand!"

In response to Crusch's decisive words, the infuriated man tried to stand up. However, his intoxicated body staggered, causing him to hit the wall and collapse back onto the ground. He couldn't get back up no matter how hard he tried.

"Ferris, let's go. This man posed no threat to Lord Fabless. He had no reason to."

"Wait… Dammit…"

As they left the man groaning on the ground, Crusch didn't spare him a glance. After his master's brisk departure, Ferris hurriedly followed.

"—I'm sorry. I lost my composure for a moment."

Crusch apologized to Ferris as they emerged from the alleyway onto the street. Seeing his master's face grow stiff, Ferris hurriedly waved his hands in denial.

"I'm the one who should apologize for causing you distress, Lady Crusch…"

"I thought I was prepared, yet here I am. I'm appalled by my own pettiness… But your suspicions have been answered. That man is not the culprit."

"Did you find that out through your divine protection?"

"Yes. Regardless of the reason, that man is mourning the death of Lord Fabless."

With amber eyes showing conviction, Crusch asserted herself with confidence.

Crusch's conviction was based on her 'Divine Protection of Wind Reading'. This divine protection allowed her to literally see the wind, and she even perceived the emotions of people she met as wind.

For this reason, it was very difficult to lie to Crusch.

Of course, Crusch was not constantly using her divine blessing, and those close to her could sometimes bypass her blessing's insights, but— "That person wasn't doing either."

Disappointed by the result, Ferris let his shoulders slump. He had no reason to doubt Crusch's eyes or exalt the man's acting skills. There was no causal relationship between the man and Garitch's death.

"There are other relatives of the professor's patients, though…"

"We should inform the guards and have them investigate. We seem to be lacking in expertise."

Although the idea of revenge had not disappeared, it felt less believable after this misstep. After all, the motive of the culprit behind Galitch's death remained unclear— "—Don't look so down.

Evil deeds will be punished. The killer of Lord Fabless will be as well.”

Crusch comforted Ferris by embracing his shoulders. Resting his head on his master’s shoulder, Ferris nodded quietly in response.

However, despite Crusch’s words, the culprit behind Garitch’s death was never found.

—And as the case remained unsolved, the day of Garitch’s state funeral arrived.

9

“Garitch’s passing is unfortunate. I am heartbroken as well.”

Fourier, whom Ferris had not seen in a few days, spoke these words in a somber tone.

Even the ever-positive and persevering Fourier could not help but be saddened by the death of an acquaintance. The grief shown by the emotional Fourier was a powerful reminder that Garitch had truly passed away.

—Garitch Fabless’s state funeral was carried out on a grand scale, contrary to the modest nature of the deceased.

It was a gesture of the kingdom’s goodwill towards Garrich, who had no family to see him off. From a cynical perspective, perhaps it was the desire to finally give a minimal amount of status to the man who had been awarded the title of ‘Blue’.

“If he saw this, he’d probably be uncomfortable and tell us not to make such a fuss.

“Hmm, definitely. As one would expect from his apprentice, you’re very observant, Ferris.”

Not wanting to dwell on dark thoughts, Ferris tried to make light of the situation, and Fourier joined in. Crusch, who was also present, smiled faintly at them.

The three attending the funeral were dressed in black formal attire. Fourier, usually dressed in flamboyant clothes, was transformed into a handsome young man with a charming face.

“It’s nice to see Your Highness dressed up now and then.”

“Is that so? I don’t feel very comfortable, though… What do you think, Crusch?”

“I understand what you mean. Your Highness always looks splendid, but I also feel more at ease with your usual attire.”

“I see! So you prefer my usual self! Well, I’m relieved!”

In front of the satisfied Fourier, Crusch and Ferris were also smiling at one another in formal clothes— however, their outfits were reversed considering their gender, with Crusch wearing men’s clothes, and Ferris in women’s clothing.

“…Shouldn’t Crusch have worn formal women’s attire on an occasion like this?”

“I don’t want to deceive myself, especially at a time like this. Besides, I want to approach the funeral with a clear heart and mind.”

“…The one who hurt Garitch hasn’t been found yet.”

Fourier’s troubled expression and the furrows between his brows indicated that the culprit was still unknown.

According to Ferris’s deductions, interviews were conducted with Garitch’s patients and those involved with them, but no significant progress had been made.

Ultimately, if even the motive was unclear, the likelihood that it was a random act of violence increased.

“In that case, we might just have to admit defeat…”

“Don’t get so overwhelmed, Ferris. Garitch wouldn’t want to see you so downtrodden.”

"Your Highness…"

"I won't ask you to smile right away. But if you keep your head lowered, Garitch will feel hurt… No, it's cowardly to use the dead as an excuse. I'm the one feeling hurt. So, lift your head."

Truly, this Fourier guy had a strange charm about him.

If he always acted like this, there would be no need to worry about his romance with Crusch. What an idiot.

"…Your Highness, you really are a wasted talent."

"What's gotten into you all of a sudden?! A wasted talent?! What kind of riddle is this?!"

Because of Ferris's casual remark, the wide-eyed Fourier started to panic. Seeing Fourier return to his usual self, Ferris felt even more grateful to him.

"—Your Highness, Fourier. It's time you returned to the waiting room."

Just as the exchange came to an end, a stern male voice came from outside the room. At Fourier's command to enter, a tall man appeared in front of them.

Giving the impression of a rock, the man was wearing a rugged set of full-body armor and a helmet. Ferris had been introduced by Fourier once before. In truth, he was a member of the knights—

"—Marcos. Is it time already?"

"Yes. Everyone, including His Highness Zabinel, is already here. I'm afraid I must ask Your Highness Fourier to return as well."

"I know, I know. I wouldn't want to anger my brothers. I shall return as well."

In response to Fourier's answer, the knight Marcos Gildark bowed his head. Since the incident with Garitch, all important people were assigned bodyguards, and it was Marcos who stood by Fourier's side.

He was patient with Fourier, who was free-spirited, to say the least.

“I’m surprised your brothers could make it, given the short notice.”

“That is because of the great accomplishments of Lord Garitch. His Highness Zabinel had also urged the dragon carriage to arrive quickly. Otherwise, it would take a rare opportunity for everyone from the royal family to gather.”

“Yes, that’s correct. —Right. Crusch, would you like to come greet my brothers?”

“No, I think I would only bother them before the funeral service. If possible, after the funeral.”

“Yes, you’re right. That was foolish of me. Well then, I will let them know.”

With those words, Fourier left the room with Marcos. As he was leaving, Marcos took a bow and closed the door, leaving Ferris and Crusch alone in the room.

“Wouldn’t passing along your regards be the same as going to greet them purr-sonally?”

“It’s been a long time since I’ve met His Highness’s brothers. I’m sure His Highness was just being considerate.”

“I think you might be overestimating His Highness…”

While Fourier certainly had great potential, whether that potential could be realized was another matter. Rather, his personality was why they eagerly anticipated the realization of his great potential.

Chuckling at Crusch’s assessment of Fourier, Ferris waited for the funeral to begin.

It was an hour before it began, a grand funeral attended by all members of the royal family, including Fourier. Garitch himself would probably hate it. But there was no stopping it now.

The death of Garitch Fabless the ‘Blue’ had a special significance—

“…”

Suddenly, Ferris frowned.

For a moment, a sense of unease passed through his mind. Holding onto the vague feeling, Ferris gathered the scattered pieces of information in his head and pieced them together.

The death of Garitch. Not a robbery, it was an unreasonable conclusion to the life of the ‘Blue’. A random murder was inconsistent, and there was no pain that would suggest a grudge. Then, its aim was—

“—Not the professor’s life, but something created by his death?”

Garitch Fabless the ‘Blue’ had no close relatives. His death became a national funeral, attended by royalty and dignitaries across the kingdom to mourn him.

If that situation itself was the culprit’s aim—

“—Ferris?”

Seeing Ferris’s ears perked up, Crusch lowered her voice. Ferris looked up at Crusch and wet his pink lips with his tongue.

“Lady Crusch, will you believe what I’m about to say?”

“Of course.”

Having his question answered without hesitation, Ferris widened his eyes.

Then, with a slight smile, he continued.

“Lady Crusch, I love you.”

“As I love you.”

The two reaffirmed their bond as master and servant, rising from their chairs with determination.

The venue of the funeral had a unique atmosphere.

With the coffin on the platform at the center, the hall was filled with a peculiar blend of sanctity and grandeur. It caused people to naturally straighten their spines and clear their minds.

“This is a funeral. What is going on?”

“It is a mandatory check before the state funeral. We will return immediately upon completion.”

The staff that had been preparing the funeral protested against the sudden appearance of the group. However, they were easily repelled by the imposing figure of Marcos at the front.

After silencing the people in the hall, Marcos turned to Ferris behind him.

“Despite Lord Fourier’s words, if nothing comes of this, it will become a problem.”

“If nothing comes of it, shouldn’t we be happy? His Highness would certainly say so.”

Ferris pursed his lips in response to the warning, and Marcos made a sour face.

Indeed, he might have pictured Fourier making such a statement. If so, he was one of the many who had been poisoned by Fourier.

“But if there really is nothing, then I apologize, Lady Crusch.”

“There’s no need to apologize. I responded to your request. At that moment, all decisions fell under my responsibility. Don’t try to take my responsibility onto yourself.”

Encouraged by the steadfast Crusch, Ferris flipped up the hem of his skirt and ascended the platform.

The casket containing Garitch’s lifeless body was placed at an angle on the altar adorned with serene stone statues and flowers. Opening the closed lid would allow for a face-to-face encounter with his mentor's death.

"…"

After a moment of hesitation, Ferris opened the casket with slender fingers. Inside was Garitch's corpse, exhibiting a slightly healthier complexion thanks to post-mortem makeup.

"Teacher, you look better than when you were alive."

Perhaps it was thanks to the skill of the embalmer that Garitch's expression appeared peaceful in death.

His back wounds were sutured, and his organs, prone to decay, had been removed before the funeral. Touching the corpse, which seemed more vital in death than in life, Ferris breathed a sigh.

Then, he began infusing his water mana into Garitch's remains.

"What are you doing to the deceased…"

"Quiet. Let's leave this to Ferris."

The dark-skinned embalmer widened his eyes at Ferris's actions. Crusch had stopped him, and Ferris tried to live up to her trust.

—If Garitch's death was orchestrated in anticipation of the state funeral that followed, then the motive behind his murder lies not with him, but in creating the circumstances of this state funeral.

This situation, with royalty and dignitaries from across the kingdom in attendance, was the killer's goal.

In that case, there must be a trap inside the venue. It must be in a place that the perpetrator approached at least once—

"—Attendees will all leave flowers on the professor's casket."

Therefore, Ferris reasoned that if there was a trick, it had to be either inside Garitch himself or his coffin.

Ferris extended his consciousness to every corner of Garitch's corpse, where the circulation of mana had already stopped. Tracing the dried-up veins of life, Ferris examined the deceased thoroughly.

As a result—

"—It's over. There's nothing abnormal with the professor's body."

As Ferris spoke with sweat covering his forehead, he sensed a commotion behind him.

It could be resentment from causing a commotion and yielding no results. Or it could be anger from disturbing the casket of the deceased, desecrating their dignity as a result.

However, among all of that—

"—Why is it that you exude a wind of relief, unlike the others?"

"…"

Pierced by an amber gaze, the dark-skinned mortician's expression grew stiff.

Neither this reaction nor the release of tension just before escaped the gaze of Ferris's amazing master.

"A wind of relief? What exactly are you saying…"

"There's no need for petty lies. I can see your true intentions."

As the embalmer recoiled, Crusch approached. At her side, Marcos slowly drew his longsword, instructing other people in the venue to step back.

"Si— Sir Gildark! Such baseless accusations will not be tolerated!"

"If you are truly innocent, then surrender yourself gracefully. Despite Lady Karsten's kindness, I will show no mercy towards enemies of the kingdom."

"Fear not, Lord Marcus. My sword is just as merciless to the kingdom's enemies."

Crusch, who arrived without a sword, grabbed hold of the wind and relaxed her expression.

With steel swords and invisible blades of wind pointed at him, the mortician froze in place, and then— "—That earlier statement was a lie. You embedded something strange inside the professor's body, didn't you?"

"Wha—"

"You seem to have done quite thorough research on the professor's body and gate. Anyone other than Ferri-chan might have missed it… How horrible."

Sticking her tongue out at the mortician, a surge of mana flowed from Ferris's palm into the old man's corpse. Deeper and deeper into his teacher's remains it flowed— where he grasped something dark and foreign.

"Teacher, if it hurts, you can cry, okay?"

Half-joking and half-serious, Ferris said this as he forcefully pulled the dark foreign object from Garitch.

A gruesome sound, akin to peeling skin, reverberated, and everyone around grimaced. Only Crusch and Marcos maintained their composure. —Then the foreign object was torn off.

"This mana is woven in such a disgusting way… Are you a user of curse arts, rather than a healer?"

"Wh-What, saying I use curse arts?! I am a healing practitioner! A first-rate one at that!"

Ferris disintegrated the curse he had removed, dispersing it into harmless mana. The mortician became enraged, and howled with bloodshot eyes.

"You're a demon, a child of a demi-human! Your impure blood had driven Lord Fabless crazy! The true successor of 'Blue'… It should have been me!”

“…”

“Yet the kingdom, and even Master Fabres, misjudged my talents. A practitioner who deals not with the living, but the dead? And that the peace of the dead is also a healer’s duty? What stupid, what stupidity!”

Stomping his feet, the mortician— a man— spewed forth a string of childish arguments, pleading with a serious face and voice. He lamented his misfortune and the mistakes of the kingdom and Garitch.

“There is no value in a man who overlooked the ‘Blue’ of the next generation and had no future. That is why I asked Master Fabless to serve as a stepping stone for the rightful succession!”

“The rightful succession?”

“During the state funeral, a poisonous wind would suddenly spread through the venue crowded with numerous dignitaries! The poison gradually invades the throat, robbing the lungs of air. When breath grows thin, on the brink of death… if someone were to appear to save them, would anyone doubt the skills of that practitioner?”

With grandiosity, the man laid bare his magnificent and proud plan. Even Crusch was left speechless as he puffed his chest out, and Marcos shook his head.

In essence, the man was dissatisfied with his circumstances, blaming Garitch and the country. To prove his own competence, he had infused poison into Garitch’s remains, intending to purify the poison himself and bask in the limelight— “—All for such a stupid idea.”

“Fear not. Master Fabres was foolish, but I am forgiving. I did not inflict suffering upon him. Of course, I have no intention of letting anyone die at the venue either.”

With a faint smile, the man heartily nodded at Ferris’s trembling voice. His demeanor was not mocking, and he appeared to be genuine.

The man’s mentality had already transcended that of ordinary people.

“—Surprisingly, there’s no sign of a lie.”

Crusch, who had been silently listening to the man, blurted this out. With a hint of surprise in her otherwise dignified and sharp gaze, Crusch narrowed her amber eyes.

“These eyes read the emotions of people I face like the wind. Therefore, I am sensitive to lies. Yet, there is not the slightest hint of falsehood in your words.”

“Of course not. —What reason would there be for deception at this point?”

The man’s anger toward his misfortune, and the actions he took to relieve it, were all justified in his eyes.

Therefore, even in Crusch’s eyes, the aura surrounding the man was that of a saint—

“—You stubbornly believe your delusions to be the truth. I have no more room to listen to you.”

There is no room for leniency. For the sake of Garitch and the kingdom, this man should die here.

“…”

With that assertion, Crusch and Marcos moved simultaneously to cut down the man. However, the man was prepared for this. He placed his hands on his white coat and opened the front— “A true medical practitioner never neglects preparations. This is also from the book of Master Fabless.”

Taking advantage of the situation, the man quoted these teachings as three black spheres rolled out from his white coat. Three fist-sized sphered bounced with a thud— “Now, taste the essence of poison that eats at the body from the very core!”

The poison spheres burst open, releasing an evil mana that was toxic to human bodies. It was a poison just as potent as the one implanted in Garitch, and it was capable of knocking out everyone at the venue.

If exposed to it, even Crusch and Marcos would—

“—Unfortunately, I am immune to poison.”

However, the man’s trump card could not penetrate a knight of the Royal Guard, whose conviction was as strong as a rock.

Immediately after his solemn declaration, he emerged from the poisonous smoke in the venue. —To Ferris, he looked like a lump of rock. In fact, his entire body was clad in gray rock, resembling a suit of armor.

As a giant of stone in thick armor, he looked ridiculous holding a knight’s longsword.

—This was Marcos Gildark, ‘The Rock’, showing his true colors.

He was clad in armor composed of stone, so no amount of raw poison would work on him. Of course, even if he himself was safe, it didn’t mean that the people in the venue were immune to the effects of the poison.

“Poisonous smoke, huh. —You have misread the wind.”

Using her ‘Divine Protection of Wind Reading’ to grab hold of the wind, Crusch unleashed invisible wind blades with her technique—facing this, the poisonous smoke was meaningless. The wind wound the poison around itself, and instead of covering the venue, it gathered all in one place. Ferris then approached the poison.

“Honestly, this isn’t a deadly poison. How could claim to save everyone.”

“—Well, even if you can’t do it, I can with enough time.”

“I see. —I’m already finished, though.”

Raising his hand and sticking out his tongue, Ferris neutralized the poisonous mana, breaking it down and rendering it harmless.

It was likely faster, easier, and more straightforward than what the man had planned.

"—Ah."

"I don't care who the next 'Blue' is, but there was nothing wrong about Professor Garitch's judgment, teachings, or methods."

His beliefs shattered, and the man looked aghast. Ferris glanced at him from the side as he took hold of Crusch's arm.

"Lady Crusch, please allow me a bit of rudeness from now on."

"—Permission granted."

When Ferris asked for permission, Crusch granted it without hesitation. Smiling at his master's kindness, Ferris turned towards the man with a cruel gaze.

"—Die, you delusional bastard."

"…"

The man tried to utter words of anger at Ferris's proclamation.

However, his attempt was intercepted by a massive boulder that charged forward, shaking the venue. The rock did not slow down as it collided with the man's body— "—A traitor who draws his bow against the kingdom. Get crushed along with all your shallow ambitions."

Marcos's exclamation was not wrong, as the man's final words of resentment were swallowed in the impact without even so much as a scream, and he burst into a bloody mist, disappearing.

—This was the end of the pitiful man who killed Garitch Fabless, the 'Blue'.

"Oh, come on! You're so bad at organizing! I can't believe this!"

The voice echoed from Garitch's private room in the research building of the treatment center, in the late afternoon.

The laboratory was deserted after the loss of its master, and the tools used by the deceased had already been taken over as shared equipment at the treatment center. What remained in the room were the personal belongings of the deceased—though there weren't many, as he was not the kind to leave behind lots of things.

"The books on the shelf aren't even in order! Ferri-chan hates this sort of thing! I hate it! He's harassing me even after death!"

"I highly doubt Lord Fabless would have such intentions. You're jumping to conclusions."

"No. Even with all due respect to you, Lady Crusch, Ferri-chan is right about this. That man would definitely do it. That's the kind of annoying person he was."

Crusch was taken aback by Ferris's confident assertion and chuckled.

The funeral had concluded smoothly, and Garitch's coffin had been laid to rest in the kingdom's cemetery. The murderer had already been executed, and now they were here to tidy up the private room of the deceased healer, which was no longer full of guards.

As mentioned earlier, the tools used by Garitch during his life as a healer had been taken over by the treatment facility following his wishes. —This was likely a better outcome for Garitch than to be buried with them. Instead, what was left for his disciple, Ferris, was — "This disorganized bookshelf and all these strange documents…"

With pursed lips, Ferris kept alternating his gaze between the stack of papers on his desk and the haphazardly packed bookshelf. Both were in such a messy state that he hesitated to touch them.

"But staring at them won't make it go away. It's time to make up your mind."

“…Fine. Ugh, being a disciple doesn’t mean I’m a purr-sonal maid.”

Grumbling to himself, Ferris began tidying up the desk. Seeing this, Crusch took off her jacket and helped with organizing the bookshelf.

“During the state funeral, was it really okay that your name wasn’t mentioned?”

As they tidied up, Crusch asked Ferris a casual question.

“You prevented an incident before it happened and identified the culprit. Both I and His Highness Fourier think you should be properly recognized for that.”

“It’s fine. Ferri-chan… I’m not particularly interested in honor, and just avenging my teacher was enough for me. After all, it was that huge guy that did it.”

He remembered the image of Marcos, clad in stone armor, slaughtering the evil man in a single blow.

That was not a man who would end up just as an ordinary knight. In fact, they heard that he’s being promoted for his achievement, which is an appropriate evaluation.

“Ah, but if Lady Crusch insists, I’ll definitely go and receive a medal or something, okay? Well, at least if I don’t end up being detained in the capital again.”

“I can’t say that it won’t happen…”

Crusch’s voice became slightly clouded, as if something had just occurred to her. Then, unusually, Crusch chose her words for Ferris with extra caution.

“In truth, the practitioners who saw your work at the venue said that your abilities are far above average… In other words, there seems to be a clear push for you to become the next ‘Blue’.”

“Does that mean… that if things go wrong, I might end up stuck in the capital forever?!”

At that hopeless possibility, Ferris let out a shriek.

Putting aside the prestige of the title of ‘Blue’, he knew the trouble that came with it from his time helping Garitch. If he were to receive that title, he wouldn’t be able to continue being Crusch’s attendant as he was before.

—For Ferris, it would be the end of the world.

“Hey, is there anything you can do about it…?”

“—Ferris, I really am sorry. But, His Highness Fourier is in the capital. I’m sure you won’t be lonely.”

“—Agh, High Highness alone won’t do! I can’t live without Lady Crusch! Please, take me and His Highness and escape with us!”

Clutching Crusch’s arm, Ferris pleaded with a tearful face.

If the kingdom wouldn’t allow the two of them to be together, he was willing to abandon everything and run away. If they could take Fourier with them, it would be a dream come true for Ferris.

“Ferris…”

Hearing Ferris’s plea, Crusch’s eyes grew slightly larger. Then she let out a small sigh, and a guilty look appeared on her resolute face.

“…Forgive me. I got a little carried away with teasing you.”

“…Lady Crusch?”

“The reports from the practitioners, we suppressed them with His Highness. For now, you are still my attendant. Hopefully, it will stay that way forever.”

“L-Lady Crusch… When did you become such a mean person…”

“It’s been three months since we spent time like this. During that time, as you’ve improved yourself, I also thought of making some changes…”

"I'm happy to see the different sides of Lady Crusch, but that one was bad for my heart."

"I see, I'm sorry. I'll try to do better next time."

Crusch was ambitious, but Fourier was negatively influencing her direction. Ferris sighed in relief, deciding to complain directly to Fourier later.

He respected Garitch and was eternally grateful for his teachings over the past three months.

However, the most important person to him was Crusch, followed by Fourier. That was something he wouldn't compromise on. No compromises. —No matter the reason.

"So, I'm sorry, but I can't be the successor of teacher's 'Blue'."

Apologizing to the absent professor, Ferris returned to tidying the desk once again.

After compiling the medical records into one pile, Ferris finally noticed an envelope. The envelope, mixed in with the stack of papers, was bulging and full of letters.

"…These are letters from patients."

Inside the envelope were letters Garitch exchanged with his patients. The messages varied wildly, from good news about recovery, to thanks from families of deceased patients for his efforts, to bitter strings of complaints that went on for years.

All of them testified to the life of Garitch Fabless, the 'Blue'.

"—. Lady Crusch, will the professor's patients be taken over by other healing practitioners?"

"Ordinarily, yes. However, even at the Royal Treatment Center, one cannot expect practitioners of the same caliber as Lord Fabless."

"The same caliber as teacher…"

As he listened to Crusch's response, Ferris opened the files of patients he had just organized. It was a kind of hand-me-down, with no particular purpose. Then he found the deciding factor.

"—Ah."

Something fell onto the desk from the stack of papers. Following it with his eyes, Ferris let out an involuntary cry. —It was a yellow flower.

The pressed flower, sandwiched between the documents, was familiar to him.

It was the flower Ferris had received from a suspicious man, which he then forced onto Garitch.

"He really did keep it. That skeleton healer…"

Picking up the pressed flower, Ferris muttered with regret.

Then, he refocused on the patients— the work that Garitch had left behind.

"Lady Crusch, Lady Crusch. Ferri-chan is wondering, perhaps, if Ferri-chan works hard as a healing practitioner, could it also be considered the achievement of his master, Lady Crusch?"

"—? I suppose some would see it that way."

Crusch frowned at Ferris's statement and replied with a questioning look on her face. Ferris nodded in agreement and traced the names of the patients with his finger.

Many of his patients were important figures from the kingdom. Some have regular check-ups or have received treatment from Garitch for many years.

"Isn't Lord Bordeaux Zellgef a prominent member of the Council of Wise Men? It might not hurt to do him a favor!"

"Ferris, what in the world are you thinking?"

“Well, Ferri-chan always puts Lady Crusch first!”

Above all, it would benefit Crusch. At the same time, it would help continue Garitch’s legacy.

Although he didn’t want to get stuck in the royal capital, he would be happy to go there regularly and visit the patients left behind by Garitch. It would be the best way for Ferris to honor his kindness and goodwill.

“But I absolutely refuse to become the successor of ‘Blue’.”

Sticking out his tongue, Ferris rejected the ill-fitting title of Garitch.

Unfortunately, several years later, Ferris was recognized for his sense of duty in taking over Galich’s patients, and ultimately inherited the title of ‘Blue’.

—His only condition for accepting the title was that he would never be separated from his master, Crusch.

That was the sole wish of Ferris Argyle, the ‘Blue’, who became the kingdom’s best healer.

12

And this is a marginal note in the story of the successor of ‘Blue’.

It’s a scene from a conversation between minor characters in a certain tavern.

“—Congratulations. I heard your latest achievement has promoted you to the position of captain, right?”

“…Do you think I’m happy about that? I didn’t come here to hear your sarcasm.”

“Oh, so scary. You’ve still got that mad dog vibe from before. Did you become more round… no, more square? No, no, you’ve always been like that…”

“I’m heading out.”

“Wait, wait, you don’t get jokes, huh? We’ve been friends for ages. Russell never shows up when I call him. Let’s catch up a bit.”

“—. You’re the one who hasn’t changed his stubborn attitude. Why can’t you be honest about your grief?”

“Grief? Me? It’s funny to suggest that I’m grieving. This is a toast, you know?”

“A toast?”

“For your promotion and the defeat of an enemy of Lord Garitch.”

“…”

“Marcos?”

“Are you happy about that? About Lord Garitch?”

“—. Well, some things are better left unsaid.”

"…"

"Besides, you know. It was you, his friend, that avenged Garitch by killing his enemy. And that child was there too… Garitch's beloved disciple, wasn't she?"

"Yeah. If she hadn't been there, the damage could have been unprecedented…"

"I could have done something about that myself. I just didn't want to get in the way."

"You really are something else… And what do you mean by getting in the way?"

"It's obvious. The desire for revenge."

"—The student had to avenge his teacher. That's why this is a toast."

"…"

"To the future 'Blue'."

—The gentle sound of glasses clinking echoed briefly through the tavern.

END

Kararagi Girl & Cat's Eye
(LQ AI Translation)

1

Girl: “Enough already! What's yer deal, so mean! I'm beggin' ya this hard, ain't I!”

Under a sky so blue it seemed to go on forever, the high voice of a girl lodging her complaint rang out.

Her voice was earnest, her anger was real, and with a strong will in her light blue-green eyes, the girl stared straight ahead in all seriousness.

However, for all her seriousness, one had to admit her protest lacked a bit of bite. After all, she was only eleven or twelve. Her features were so adorably well-formed that even her anger came off as more endearing than intimidating.

Old Man: “—Oy-yo, don't make me say it over and over, abacus girl.”

Facing that adorable girl, the reply came in a rasp from an old man like a withered tree.

His limbs were thin and his stature short. His hair—full, not thinning—was white as snow, and several teeth were missing inside his open mouth. The clothes he wore were shabby rags, far too fitting for both the man himself and this place.

That was only natural, for this was the so-called “Slums” on the outskirts of the city—no homes, no jobs, no future. It was where the homeless huddled together and lived out their days in resigned gloom.

In a place like this, the old man's appearance was what looked natural. Rather, the girl—properly dressed in a kimono, already showing the first hints that she would grow into a breathtaking beauty—was the odd one out.

Glaring peevishly at that oddball girl, the old man scratched at his chest, ribs showing beneath the skin, and then,

Old Man: “No matter how many times ya come, my answer ain’t changin’. This ain’t a place for girls in pretty dresses like you to be comin’ and goin’. Off with ya, off with ya.”

Girl: “Oh, c’mon! Why’re ya so impossible to talk to?! For starters, I’m from the slums to begin with, so yer worry’s way off the mark! Yer ten years late, too!”

Old Man: “Kakakaka! Mouthy little miss, ain’t ya. How ‘bout I just eat ya up myself!”

Girl: “Do it if ya can! Lemme tell ya, if ya try anything to me, my scary, scary guard dog’ll take a great big chomp outta yer head from the top down!”

At first glance, it looked like a childish spat between an overgrown brat of an old man and a cheeky girl—and that was, more or less, exactly what it was.

A quarrel between two people with more than fifty years between them—

Beastman: “—Cut it out already, Ana-bo.”

Girl: “Eek!”

With a booming voice, someone seized the girl by the scruff, drawing a yelp from her. Dangling with her feet off the ground, she looked back at the one who had grabbed her and pouted.

Girl: “Uncle, what d’you think you’re doin’!”

Beastman: “Don’t go “what’re ya doin’” on me. Who said I’m yer guard dog? I ain’t gone and decided I belong to ya yet, Ana-bo.”

Girl: “Oh, sayin’ that now! If ya go ‘n become mine, I ain’t gonna take off yer collar for ya, y’know.”

Beastman: “I put this collar on myself, y’hear. Whether I take it off or not ain’t for you ta say.”

Girl: “Mmmmmm… Hk!”

Before her eyes, the dog-faced beastman opened a mouth lined with sharp fangs and narrowed his eyes in exasperation.

His nearly two-meter frame was covered in dark-brown fur, and a rugged collar was fastened around his thick neck. The difference in size was such that he could have swallowed the girl whole, but there was not the slightest fear in her eyes as she regarded those fangs. On the contrary, her sulking gaze, expression, and tone overflowed with affection, and it was the dog-faced one, bathed in it at close range, who scratched his head in embarrassment.

Sympathizing with the dog-face, the old man called out, “Oy-yo,” and,

Old Man: “Sir Dog, from the looks of it ya got yer hands full, don’tcha. With that big mouth o’ yours, ain’t a girl like that just one bite? I’ll shut my eyes for ya, so hurry up ‘n put an end to it.”

Beastman: “Quit yer jokin’, old man. Do I look that hard up for a meal to ya?”

Girl: “Yeah, yeah! Don’t talk nonsense! Like Uncle would ever eat me…”

Beastman: “Besides, what’s there on Ana-bo to eat? Skin ‘n bones, flimsy as—ow ow ow! What the hell! Who just up ‘n yanks a man’s whiskers like that!”

Girl: “Dummy Uncle!”

As he started to heckle the old man back, the dog-face protested when she plucked out one of his whiskers. But the girl hopped lightly down, then spun toward the old man with a brisk, “Anyway!”

Girl: “Anyway!”

Amid the little commotion, she stood at its center, tossed the fistful of fur to the wind, and instead stabbed a finger straight at the old man.

And—

Girl: “I’ll say it as many times as it takes! Those cat siblings at yer place, gramps—I’m gonna make ‘em mine, absolutely, absolutely, so ya better be ready!”

Old Man: “…”

It was a threat so brazen it was almost refreshing, and the old man’s eyes widened a fraction as he took it. The girl, satisfied after getting it out, looked pleased with herself, while behind her the dog-face had a palm pressed to his own face.

Looking back and forth between the two, the old man gave a deep nod and then,

Old Man: “—Scram already, cat thief!”

2

Anastasia: “Seriously, what was that attitude! Even Hoshin only had to pay three visits to woo allies, but how many times have I gone to woo ‘em and…”

Ricardo: “Aaah, I got it, I got it. Ana-bo sure is a patient kid, huh.”

Anastasia: “That ain’t the kinda comfort I want! Proprietress, another milk!”

As she said it, the kimono-clad girl slammed her glass hard onto the tavern counter. With the girl’s mouth ringed in white, the proprietress cautioned her with, “You’re drinking too much.”

Anastasia: “Hmph, what’re ya sayin’. We only just started. Even you oughta be happier when customers drink a lot, Proprietress…”

Ricardo: “Don’t be sayin’ such pigheaded things, Ana-bo. The proprietress is worryin’ about ya.”

Anastasia: “Then you shoulda helped me more, Uncle!”

Ricardo: “Now how’s the blame jumpin’ to me!”

Wearing a sour look, the dog-faced beastman lamented how opening his mouth had only backfired. Beside him, the girl put her lips to the fresh milk that had just been brought, and kept on grumbling under her breath.

Proprietress: “Ana-chan, you’re awfully riled up, aren’t you. I can tell it went south again, but Ricardo, ain’t you gonna help her out?”

Ricardo: “If I butt in, she’ll absolutely get mad, Ana-bo. So for now, I’m just taggin’ along on her ins and outs of the slums so nobody interferes.”

In answer to the proprietress’s question, the dog-faced—Ricardo—shrugged with a weary “good grief” and gave a low rumble in his throat.

Proprietress: “Hmm. …Well, no doubt you dote on Ana-chan.”

Saying that, the proprietress narrowed her eyes and murmured about Ricardo and the girl—Anastasia.

The proprietress of this tavern and Ricardo had known each other for a fair while. To Anastasia as well, the proprietress was the manager of the first place she had ever worked, and someone she could rely on.

In other words, from the proprietress’s point of view, this dog-man and girl were tied by an old, inescapable bond.

Proprietress: “But don’t go overboard, okay? Ana-chan’s so cute it’s almost scary.”

Ricardo: “Even Ana-bo was just about sold off not long ago, so she’s reflectin’, I reckon. I’m keepin’ my eyes peeled, too. Don’t you worry.”

Proprietress: “And you let her keep goin’ to the slums? I don’t quite get your fatherly heart, Ricardo.”

With equal parts exasperation and trust, the proprietress said, “Take your time,” and returned to tending customers other than Ricardo and his companion.

Left at the counter were just the two of them—Ricardo and Anastasia.

Anastasia: “Uncle…”

Ricardo: “Yeah, Ana-bo. Why’re your eyes goin’ all dead-stare on just milk—scary lass…”

Anastasia: “I’m tryin’ this hard, so why ain’t it workin’?”

Ricardo: “Why, you ask? You make it sound all noble, but if that old man gets told, “I’m definitely takin’ your family,” he’ll get mad, won’t he. Think how you phrase it.”

Anastasia: “But it worked on you, didn’t it, Uncle?”

Ricardo: “No it didn’t. Don’t go sayin’ like I got sweet-talked by ya.”

Poking Anastasia’s forehead with a finger as he said it, Ricardo earned a sulky glare and a drawn-out, “Eeeh~.”

Anastasia: “You’re real mean, Uncle… I’d make Mimi and the others happy, too.”

Ricardo let one corner of his mouth soften at Anastasia’s grand ambition as she pouted and muttered.

This girl truly believed she could make other people happy. And she spared no effort to make that happen. —What a hopelessly greedy one she was.

The reason she kept grumbling traced back to an incident that had involved Ricardo and Anastasia not long before.

In short, Anastasia had been caught by a slaver and nearly sold. The slaver’s crimes were exposed, and the ringleaders were crushed by Ricardo and the others, but during that affair there had been a pair of kittenfolk siblings who worked together with the captive

Anastasia.

There were three siblings in all—an older sister and two little brothers—and after the incident, Anastasia took quite a liking to them. Greedy as she was, she wanted to bring the trio under her wing. And so she had paid repeated visits to the trio's guardian—an elderly gentleman of the slums—to try to persuade him.

For the record, she'd already gone more than ten times, but the truth was, there had been no results.

Ricardo: "I ain't stoppin' ya—your grit's a good thing—but why so desperate? Ain't no need to make it a "right now" deal, is there?"

Anastasia: "Sigh, you really take things too easy, Uncle. Listen? I ain't sayin' everything's first come, first served, but earlier is better. If you hadn't found me in that alley back then, I wouldn't be sittin' here drinkin' milk like this now, would I?"

Ricardo: "…"

Anastasia: "If some other kid had been attacked in that alley before me, you'd have saved her and you and me never woulda met. Then by now I'd…"

Ricardo: "Now that's a fool worry if I ever heard one."

Anastasia, who had been holding a finger up and waxing heatedly, went "Eh?" and widened her eyes. Ricardo clamped one big palm over her head and—

Ricardo: "I don't go helpin' just any ol' body willy-nilly. Sure, slavers piss me off, so maybe I'd have socked 'em, but I don't reckon I'd stick around to handle the aftermath."

Anastasia: "…So that means I'm special?"

Ricardo: "Yeah. Specially grubby—ow ow ow!"

Anastasia: "You idiot, Uncle—!"

Ripping out a tuft of Ricardo's chest fur, Anastasia screeched and bolted out of the tavern. Seeing her off with a pained expression, Ricardo grumbled, “What the hell was that…”

Proprietress: “Aaa—my my, you really did it, Ricardo.”

Ricardo: “Proprietress, I’ll pay for Ana-bo’s share. Don’t fret.”

Proprietress: “That ain’t what I’m worried about, honestly. I sympathize with Ana-chan.”

Leaving only that behind, the proprietress cleared away the glass Anastasia had left. Ricardo tilted his head at her words, his expression growing even more troubled, but—

Reisel: “—Tch tch tch. Havin’ yourself a good time there, ain’t ya, brother.”

Ricardo: “Huh?”

Suddenly, a man slid into the seat where Anastasia had been. Suspicious of the overly familiar tone, Ricardo turned, was briefly perplexed, then his eyes flew wide.

He was a tanuki beastman with long brown fur, notable for black only around his eyes and ears. His build was small even for his race, but that did not equate to frailty. Rather, a cunning gleam born of overcoming that flickered in his eyes—an opponent one could not afford to underestimate.

But Ricardo’s surprise was not at the man’s appearance. It was because this was someone tied to a memory Ricardo would not soon forget.

Ricardo: “…Reisel.”

Reisel: “Tch tch tch, honored ya remembered. —Still got that collar on, do ya?”

Called by name, the tanuki—Reisel—clicked his tongue in a laugh and said that while looking at Ricardo’s thick neck. Around that neck, the heavy, cold collar was still fastened.

3

Banan, a city of the Kararagi City-States, holds the position of the Second City among its ten great cities.

Situated roughly at the center of Kararagi's territory, Banan is the hub of a city-state rich in every kind of distinction—in good ways and bad, a place where many cultures flow in.

Among those are the house-building style found in no other land, known as Wafuu architecture, and the Wasou culture typified by the kimono.

Through that streetscape—a hotchpotch of cultures unseen in other countries—the girl who had stormed out of the tavern, Anastasia, walked along with her cheeks puffed out in a pout.

Anastasia: "Honestly, Uncle just doesn't understand a maiden's heart at all…!"

Seething, Anastasia's heart was roiling with grievances against Ricardo.

All their talk in the tavern had done was pour more fuel onto the fire of her dissatisfaction. She wanted him to think a little more before he spoke. The trust she offered and the credit he extended weren't balancing out.

Given her present abilities, perhaps that couldn't be helped—but—

Anastasia: "That's why, unless I keep up a quick pace, I'll never catch up. …Uncle and the others have already started walking on ahead."

She wouldn't say life was first come, first served, but it was a fact that, in many things, being early gave you an edge. Just as she'd told Ricardo at the tavern—that was Anastasia's philosophy of life.

And she knew she herself had started walking late. Even when she tried to move her feet faster on purpose, the gap refused to close. Still, she didn't want to think the ones who had started earlier were being unfair. That would be to demean herself.

Anastasia: “I’m my very first piece of capital, so if I fumble that, there’s no going forward…”

Staring at her own palms, Anastasia bit her lip. They were small. She had tried it before, but her little hands couldn’t hold even ten coins clenched tight.

For Anastasia—who had many things she wanted to grasp and nothing she wanted to let go—the outlook was worrisome.

Anastasia: “That’s why I want Uncle and Mimi and the others to be mine…”

Mimi: “Ooh? Were ya talkin’ about Mimi? What’s up? Somethin’ happen?”

Anastasia: “Ah.”

The instant she pulled her gaze from her palms, a cute kittenfolk girl with orange fur—Mimi—popped into her field of view with a smile.

At her sudden appearance, Anastasia went wide-eyed, and Mimi wagged her tail with a “Oh yeah—,”

Mimi: “Like, you went to Roshi’s place again? I smelled it, so I was like, maybe so?”

Anastasia: “Ah—yeah, that’s right. I’ve been goin’ to ask him, “Please give me Mimi and the others, ‘cause I want ‘em,” but he just won’t nod along…”

Mimi: “Dehya-hya-hya-hya! Wantin’ Mimi ‘n the others is amazin’! Young lady, you sure got a good eye! But Mimi and the others ain’t cheap! Ten bowls o’ food!”

Anastasia: “Cheap! I’ll buy!”

Mimi: “Sold!”

Mimi threw both hands up, and Anastasia hugged her head-on. Mimi hugged her back, and if they could have, they would have called the deal sealed then and there, but—

Hetaro: “N-No, you can’t, Sis. If you go doin’ that on your own, Roshi’ll get mad at us…”

Tivey: “Yes, yes. Big Brother’s right.”

—came the voices of two kittenfolk with faces very like Mimi’s—Hetaro and Tivey, Mimi’s younger brothers.

These three—Mimi and her brothers—were the kittenfolk trio Anastasia desired. The three of them, scampering adorably about the city, would sometimes run into her like this on the street. Each time, she would keep at her wooing without learning her lesson, but without their guardian’s permission, the negotiations kept running aground.

With the three siblings gathered like this, Anastasia tightened her hugging arms in defiance of the two brothers’ objections.

Anastasia: “Mmm… So you two are on Gramps’s side, huh. The only one on my side is Mimi~”

Mimi: “That! Mimi, weak-weak one’s ally! Also Hetaro and Tivey’s ally! Roshi super strong so dunno! Toasty!”

Anastasia: “It’s Roshi who’s the real tough customer. Say, do you three know any weakness Roshi’s got?”

Hetaro: “Wouldn’t it be kinda wrong if we told you that…?”

Anastasia asked with a face innocent of ill intent, and Hetaro gave a wry smile. A bit of the fierceness faded from Mimi’s face, and a touch of softness slipped in. Cute.

Beside them, sharp-eyed Tivey crossed his short arms with a, “That’s right.” Cute.

Tivey: “There’s a lot about Roshi we don’t understand either. Seems like there are stories he doesn’t want us hearin’ too…”

Mimi: “Yeah—that! Like, kinda feels like that today, too? So, since someone's comin', he's like "go somewhere," and kicked us out! Makes no sense!"

Hetaro: "Ah, Sis, that's—"

Mimi picked up Tivey's words and curled her lips while still in Anastasia's arms. Hetaro tried to stop her, but he was a step too late.

Anastasia: "—Hmmm. So Roshi's meetin' someone he keeps secret even from you three."

Mimi: "…"

Anastasia: "And that's why he tried so rough to shoo me off today. I see, I see—makes sense. But if that's how it is…"

Mimi: "Ooh? Kinda feels like you're thinkin' lotsa things?"

Twisting around within Anastasia's hug, Mimi ended up being embraced from behind. Unaware of the change in posture, Anastasia was wrapped up in some sort of contemplation.

At the way her light blue-green eyes flashed brilliantly, Hetaro and Tivey involuntarily caught their breath. It felt as if they had carelessly opened a door that should have stayed shut.

Tivey: "Um, truth is, we've got someplace to be. Right, Big Brother?"

Hetaro: "Y-Yep! So, uh, we'll be takin' our leave now. Come on, Sis."

Mimi: "Huh? Did we have somethin'? We can go after talkin' with the young lady, right?"

Hetaro & Tivey: "S-Sis!"

Hetaro and Tivey flustered in turns, but Mimi only tilted her head at their suggestion. And so their little scheme failed, and—

Anastasia: "Could I borrow you a moment? —I've got a favor to ask of you three.”

—smiling sweetly, Anastasia spoke, and Hetaro and Tivey’s shoulders slumped.

For they knew all too well—

Mimi: “O-kay, got it—! Mimi’s the weak-weak one’s ally, so it can’t be helped—yes indeedy!”

—that Mimi would never refuse a request.

4

The high, clinking ring of colliding glasses sounded lightly from a secluded table at the back of the tavern.

Facing each other were a dog-man and a tanuki-man. Thanks to having asked the proprietress to clear the area, their talk wouldn’t reach other ears. In that setting, the tanuki-man put his lips to his glass, and his mouth softened at the taste of liquor and reunion.

Reisel: “Been what, five years since we split up? We both did real good stayin’ alive, didn’t we?”

Ricardo: “Reckon so. You were always the type to do reckless, troublesome stuff. I figured once you got out, you’d drop dead in a month, tops.”

Reisel: “Tch tch tch, listen to you! Says the guy who was gettin’ on the guards’ bad side and beaten half to death.”

As he spoke, the tanuki-man, Reisel, smacked Ricardo's shoulder roughly. There was nearly a twofold difference in their builds, but Ricardo didn't rebuke the unrestrained rudeness. Only, at the uncharacteristically quiet way he lifted his drink, Reisel's black eyes narrowed.

Reisel: "You're awful quiet. The name "Hound" is gonna cry for shame, Ricardo."

Ricardo: "When the mood's sunk, a drinkin' table gets quiet, too. There ain't no way this is some chance meetin' here. What d'ya want from me."

Reisel: "Helps that you're quick on the uptake, but you sure turned into a dull bastard, brother."

Draining his drink in one pull and setting the glass on the table, Reisel breathed out liquor-scented air. At the displeased attitude of an old acquaintance, Ricardo followed with, "Naturally."

Ricardo: "If it was just old pals shootin' the breeze, the drinks'd go down easy."

Reisel: "Heh, who's got time for games like that. You got it right, though. The way you even had the place cleared out—guess it's still ingrained in ya."

Ricardo: "…"

Reisel: "Tch tch tch. Slave mindset. Well, anyone could tell just lookin' at that neck."

Grinning vapidly, Reisel pointed at Ricardo's collar and spat the words out. But there was an irksome cast in his eyes, making it obvious the grin wasn't his true feelings.

No wonder. This collar was the mark of a slave—a "Meteor." Reisel, too, had once worn one.

A slave's collar was a Meteor that forbade disobedience to the owner. The one on Ricardo’s neck had already lost its binding force, but Ricardo himself kept it as a reminder.

Naturally, to a freed slave whose purpose had been to get rid of collars, it wasn’t a pleasant sight.

Reisel: “Secrets to whisper, tools to loan ‘n borrow—you gotta do it so the watcher don’t catch you. That’s why a lone wolf can’t live in the doghouse. You remember that, don’t ya?”

Ricardo: “If lookin’ at this collar makes it seem like I forgot, you’d best swap your eyes out.”

Reisel: “—You remember, don’t ya? Huh?”

Ricardo: “…”

Pressed to repeat himself, Ricardo let out a breath. Then he turned his whole body toward Reisel.

Ricardo: “I remember. You’re talkin’ ‘bout how I owe you.”

Reisel: “Ahh, good. That’s a relief. Otherwise comin’ all this way’d be for nothin’.”

Ricardo: “…What d’ya want me to do?”

Reisel: “Nothin’ complicated. In a few days, a certain piece o’ cargo’s gettin’ hauled outta this city. We hit the wagon carryin’ it and take the load. I want your help with that.”

At Reisel’s crooked-lipped request, Ricardo squinted one eye and snorted through his nose.

It was more or less what Ricardo had expected. If he’d been wrong, that would’ve been happier for him, but—

Ricardo: “You’re still doin’ that kinda thing, huh. If they catch you this time, it ain’t gonna end with just a collar.”

Reisel: “Didn’t ask ya for extra worryin’. So? You in?”

Ricardo: "…Why use me? I dunno the details, but even if it ain't me, you'll find folks who'll help. Goin' outta your way to ask an old pal don't sit right."

Reisel: "Tch tch tch. Don't go wearin' out a brain you don't need. What I'm expectin' from you is muscle. Truth is, I've teamed up with all kinds, but there ain't anyone on your level."

It wasn't a compliment Ricardo welcomed, and he fell silent for a beat to think.

Boiled down, Reisel's invitation was a joke of a proposition to join a robbery for old times' sake.

Naturally, a normal man would refuse. Freed from slavery, Ricardo worked an honest job; right now he even served as a guard for the Chuden Trading Company in this city.

There was no reason to throw that away and become a rootless bandit.

Thinking normally—

Ricardo: "—All right."

Yet Ricardo drew back his chin and accepted that ridiculous invitation.

Reisel: "Ohh, that's my brother! I figured you'd say that!"

Ricardo: "Ain't you a smooth one. You knew I couldn't turn you down, that's why you brought it up."

Reisel: "'Course I did. Who volunteers to fight a losing battle. But I'm relieved—real relieved."

Clicking his tongue in a laugh, Reisel waved a hand to call the proprietress. He ordered two fresh drinks, all set to toast.

Ricardo: "So, "cargo" could be a lotta things. What's the target?"

Before the proprietress came over, Ricardo put the question to Reisel's side profile, bright with good cheer. Narrowing his eyes, Reisel answered, "Yeah."

Reisel: "—We're after "Meteors" a rich man's been hoardin' for a hobby."

The seat across from him now empty, Ricardo knocked back what might've been his umpteenth drink. It was tasteless liquor—or rather, the liquor wasn't at fault. With the drinker like this, the drink itself could only suffer.

Even after Reisel left, Ricardo remained in the tavern, licking at his dull drink.

Proprietress: "Didn't get a very nice feel off that friend o' yours."

Taking his empty glass, the proprietress murmured in a voice only Ricardo could hear. The place wasn't exactly packed, but if you strained your ears, conversations drifted in from all around.

He appreciated the thoughtfulness. For that very reason, he couldn't burden the others or the proprietress.

Proprietress: "Where'd you get acquainted?"

Ricardo: "Where they hand out matching collars. Unlike me, it didn't suit him none."

Proprietress: "…I see."

She didn't press the joking Ricardo, who had flicked his collar with a finger. Leaning on that consideration, Ricardo wiped his mouth with the back of his hand and rose.

Proprietress: "Your companion paid your tab."

Ricardo: "Figures. Well, he'd at least do that much."

Proprietress: "But Ana-chan's milk still ain't paid."

Ricardo: "He didn't cover that…?"

A bit wrong-footed, Ricardo paid the bill with coppers from his pocket. Then, lifting a hand to the proprietress, he made to head out just like that, when—

Proprietress: “I ain’t gonna stop you from pullin’ somethin’ dangerous now, but think about Ana-chan.”

Ricardo: “What’s this all of a sudden. Strange proprietress, you are. …Ah, but.”

Smiling bitterly at her words, Ricardo stopped and turned back at the door. Narrowing his eyes at the proprietress inside, he added,

Ricardo: “Keep this from Ana-bo, would ya. —Couldn’t handle it if she took a bite outta me.”

5

Mimi: “Roshi’s like, super—I dunno—some kinda geezer I totally don’t get! But he’s reaaally strong!”

As they walked, Anastasia asked about Roshi, and Mimi answered by flailing her hands and feet with an explanation that wasn’t helpful at all. Hearing it, Anastasia smiled with a, “That so.”

Anastasia: “And in practice, how is he? Hetaro, Tivey.”

Hetaro: “Y-You know, Sis didn’t get it wrong? Roshi really is a mysterious person, and…”

Tivey: “He’s the benefactor who took us in, yes yes. But he hasn’t told us details either. It’s been three years now. Since we’re five years old…”

Anastasia: “So you’ve been in Roshi’s care for more than half your lives.”

At Anastasia’s confirmation, the three of them nodded together.

Kittenfolk like Mimi and her brothers grow fast. From what she’d heard, in just one year after birth they were almost the same as adults and stayed that way thereafter.

They said Mimi and the others met Roshi when they were two, but even then the three of them were already the same three they were now.

In other words, it wasn't like it was a memory from before they were aware of things.

Tivey: "Roshi taught us how to live. We were abandoned by our parents, and not getting caught by slavers in the slums was thanks to you, Miss, and to Roshi."

Mimi: "Weeell, Mimi worked hard! But she got stabbed in the tummy and maybe died! So danger!"

Anastasia: "Doesn't sound like a tale we can celebrate without reservations, huh…"

Mimi rubbed her soft belly and said it like it was nothing, and Anastasia smiled wryly. But the two little brothers walking to either side of their sister looked at her gently.

It must really have been a serious situation, but the three of them had gotten through it in their own way.

Anastasia: "So the one who saved Mimi when she was in danger was Roshi?"

Tivey: "Yes yes. After that, Roshi took us to his house and taught us lots of things."

Mimi: "Mimi's power! Tivey's study! Hetaro's chicken!"

Hetaro: "C-Cautious, Sis!"

Hearing Hetaro hastily correct it, Anastasia nodded in understanding.

Apparently Roshi had looked at the three siblings and raised them to cultivate each of their strengths. In that sense, the upbringing was a success. Mimi had grown sturdy, Tivey clever, and—

Anastasia: "And Hetaro, cautious to the point of being a scaredy."

Mimi: “That! Scaredy-cat!”

Hetaro: “Sis…”

Called a coward again and again, Hetaro drooped his shoulders. As Mimi poked him with innocent “what’s wrong?” taps, the sharp-looking Tivey folded his upright ears and said,

Tivey: “I think you’ve noticed too, Miss Anastasia, but Roshi isn’t just anybody. I didn’t understand before, but now I realize he’s strange. Because…”

Anastasia: “If you’re gonna teach this and that, you gotta know this and that in the first place, right?”

Tivey: “…Yes.”

Anastasia got ahead of him, and Tivey made a troubled face at those words.

An old man who picked up the three kittenfolk siblings, educated each of them in a way that fit, yet continued living in the slums—Kararagi City-States’ underbelly—just who was he behind the scenes?

Anastasia: “Well, I don’t really care who he is. What I need is a way to put the squeeze on him.”

Tivey: “Eeeeh?! Blackmail?!”

Anastasia: “Ah, “blackmail” sounds a mite harsh! I mean stocking up on cards for a peaceful talk.”

Hetaro: “Uh, “peaceful talk,” you say…”

Knowing Anastasia’s policy, Tivey and Hetaro grasped the situation precisely. However, it was already too late; they were nearly at Roshi’s home where Mimi and the others lived.

And just like that, the four of them headed for Roshi—

Anastasia: “—Pardon the intrusion!”

Roshi: “Wha—whoa whoa whoa! What the hell’s goin’ on?!”

Sliding open the plank-like entrance, Anastasia marched into the house with Mimi and the others in tow. Roshi, who’d been sitting cross-legged on the earthen floor, bulged his eyes at the force of her entry.

But the moment he realized his visitors were Anastasia and the kittenfolk, he went,

Roshi: “Hey now, partin’ ways and then another suicide charge right after? There’s a limit to how damn persistent you can be.”

Anastasia: “…Hmm. Looks like your guest is already gone.”

Roshi: “A “guest,” huh? Where’d you hear—hey, you brats! You go ‘n blabbed, did ya!”

He barked at Mimi and her brothers when Anastasia glanced around the cramped house and muttered so. The little brothers stiffened, but Mimi stuck out her lips in a peeved pout.

Mimi: “Eeh, it’s fine-fine! And what’s that—hush-hush? A seecwet? Nobody told me that!”

Roshi: “Ahh, damn! I didn’t say it, huh! But do I gotta say it every time? That’s a pain in the ass. And it’s “secret,” not “seecwet,” you blockhead girl.”

Mimi: “Whoever says “blockhead” is the blockhead! Roshi’s a blockhead! Ah—now Mimi’s a blockhead too! Ahahaha!”

Before the head-clutching Roshi, Mimi kicked her feet and rolled around. Leaving the noisy girl be for the moment, Roshi turned his gaze to Anastasia.

Roshi: “You got some nerve stickin’ your nose in another man’s household, little rascal.”

Anastasia: “I was gonna say it’s ‘cause my parents raised me wrong, but I’m a foundling, and I didn’t get no raising from my folks. So this is just my nature.”

Roshi: "…"

Anastasia: "Truth is, I would've loved to hear from the person you were meetin', but seems I was late to the party. Still, looks like it wasn't a wasted trip."

Saying that, Anastasia narrowed her eyes and pointed at Roshi's hands. Spread out in the old man's hands where he sat cross-legged was something like a written order. He'd been focusing on it—that was why he'd been slow to react to Anastasia and the others coming in.

Anastasia: "What's written on that?"

Roshi: "—My job."

Roshi answered Anastasia's question shortly.

He could have dodged, but it seemed he chose not to lie on purpose. So Anastasia, too, asked bluntly:

Anastasia: "I dunno what kind of work it is, but can you do it? With your body the way it is."

Roshi: "…"

Hetaro: "B-Body…? What do you mean by that?"

Until now, Hetaro had been silent, but at Roshi falling quiet he blinked. Tivey wore the same uneasy face as his brother, and only Mimi tilted her head.

Receiving their gazes, Roshi let out a short breath and—

Roshi: "You're a nasty brat. Where'd you twig to it?"

Anastasia: "It's a common tale in the slums, and you're old, and also I can tell just by lookin'."

Roshi: "I'll rephrase it. You're a brat with nasty eyes."

Clicking his tongue, Roshi glared into Anastasia's round eyes. But

Anastasia didn't flinch in the least; she silently took that stabbing gaze head-on.

He clicked his tongue again, taking that as well. Then, at his profile —

Hetaro: "Roshi! Don't dodge the question! Your body—what do you mean?!"

It was Hetaro who closed in on him with a voice cracked high. Always quiet and reserved, the fact that he acted so was proof of just how desperate he was.

Roshi looked back at the pressing Hetaro with a calm gaze and said,

Roshi: "I taught you a buncha times to follow your gut. What you're thinkin' is on the mark. I ain't got long."

Hetaro: "…"

Roshi: "Knowin' that and still comin' around over and over. You really are a nasty brat."

Ruffling Hetaro's head, Roshi threw a barb at Anastasia. But she didn't cut in here.

Mimi: "Hey—Roshi, are you gonna die?"

The one who did cut in was Mimi. At her straightforward question —very like her—the little brothers started, but Roshi broke into a grin.

Roshi: "Ohhh yeah. I'm gonna die. Sorry 'bout it—looks like the call came earlier than I thought."

Mimi: "I see—can't be helped. Hetaro and Tivey are still teeny, so if Roshi dies I'll be suuuper worried."

Roshi: "You're the same age as them!"

Staying smiling, Roshi retorted to Mimi's conclusion after she'd put herself on a high shelf. Then he tapped a finger on the written order he had spread out.

Roshi: “This here’s gonna be my last job. I ain’t lettin’ anyone complain. Abacus girl, I don’t wanna have to ask you for somethin’ like this, but…”

Anastasia: “Mm, I’ll take good care of Mimi and the others.”

Roshi: “Don’t go sayin’ it before I do.”

With her thin chest thrust out, Anastasia answered proudly, and Roshi’s cheek twisted. Then he looked at the two who still couldn’t quite grasp things—Hetaro and Tivey—and spread his arms.

Roshi: “C’mon, get over here, you runts.”

Called, Mimi took her frozen brothers by the hands. Tugging them forward, she leaped all three at once into Roshi’s chest. Roshi hugged the three kittenfolk tight and—

Roshi: “You three are my pride and joy. —Really, my real pride and joy.”

Mimi: “Mm. …Hey, Roshi.”

From within his chest, Mimi looked up at him as he spoke softly. With himself reflected in her round eyes, Roshi asked, “What is it.”

Receiving the question, Mimi prefaced with a, “Um, see—” and—

Mimi: “Sorry, ‘kay?”

Roshi: “Huh? Gah-gu—!”

In a flash, Mimi’s tail whipped up and smacked Roshi hard at the nape of his neck.

It was so sudden he reacted a beat too slow; Roshi let out a strangled groan and toppled with whites of his eyes showing. Seeing it, Hetaro and Tivey sprang back and briskly produced rope.

Then, working in swift coordination, they threw the rope over Roshi and bound him up.

Anastasia: "…The way you three breathed together was amazing, but what exactly is this?"

Unable to keep up with what she'd just seen, Anastasia muttered in amazement. Hearing her, the three siblings, after confirming Roshi was fully restrained, said—

Mimi: "'Cause if we leave him be, Roshi'll push himself and die, right? That's no good, we won't let him."

Tivey: "Even if it's not long, we still want to be with Roshi a while yet…"

Hetaro: "I figured Miss wouldn't be that obedient, yes yes."

I see—given how deep the little brothers' bond ran through the Divine Protection of Trisection, they understood their wild sister's thinking very well. On that point, it couldn't be helped that Roshi fell a step short.

—And this situation suited Anastasia just fine as well.

From the start, Anastasia had no intention of letting Roshi die on some last "job."

Anastasia: "I'm just surprised I wasn't the only one thinkin' I'd swipe the job while he wasn't lookin'."

Hetaro: "Eh? Then, Miss Anastasia, you…"

Anastasia: "What? You weren't thinkin' of just tossin' the job in the trash either, were you, Hetaro?"

She didn't think they should simply throw away his so-called duty. It was true that this job weighed on Roshi more than appropriate—enough to balance against time with Mimi and the others.

In that case, rather than removing the scale without leave, they'd take it upon themselves to handle its contents.

Anastasia: “What is it…”

Mimi: “Ooh, what’s it say? Can Mimi and the others do it? Can we pull it off?”

Mimi rested her chin on Anastasia’s shoulder as she picked up Roshi’s document and checked the contents. Feeling that light weight, Anastasia ran her eyes over the lines.

Then, wetting her lips with her tongue at what she read—

Anastasia: “Looks like what Roshi was told to do was to recover some weird “Meteor.””

6

—When Ricardo first met Reisel, he was sprawled on a cold, hard floor.

The slave pen where slaves were crammed was something like a prison. If there was any difference from a prison, it was that inmates were criminals, while slaves were just folks whose luck had run out.

Ricardo, unlucky enough to become a slave like the rest, was rebellious, and he frequently drew the wrath of the watchers who oversaw the pen. He couldn’t stand their overbearing attitude, and they apparently couldn’t stand that even after falling to slavery, Ricardo refused to lose his fire.

Called out for the pettiest reasons, he’d be wracked with pain all through his body by the collar’s function each time, then beaten to their hearts’ content and thrown into solitary.

The watchers’ violence grew worse by the day; a new wound would be layered over the old before it healed. That had gone on for more than two months, and he was just about ready to accept death when—

Reisel: “—Tch tch tch, you’re somethin’ else. After takin’ that much, you’re still alive?”

Peering in from outside the punishment cell was a tanuki-man—Reisel—and their eyes met.

—It seemed Reisel had managed to play things quite cleverly inside the slave pen. He was in the watchers' good graces, and thanks to him the beatings on Ricardo stopped right away.

From then on, though still a slave, life in the pen got a lot easier. Of course, there was still harsh, grueling labor, the meals were never enough, and some died when they couldn't endure the drudgery.

But Ricardo's tough body and spirit didn't bow to life as a slave.

Ricardo: "Why'd ya help me?"

Once, during a break while they were digging into a wall in the mountains, Ricardo asked Reisel that. Reisel's face went blank for a heartbeat like he didn't know what he meant, then he nodded with an, "Ahh, right," and said,

Reisel: "As ya can see, I'm a scrawny tanuki-man. I needed muscle to live on here. On that point, I'm plenty satisfied with you, brother."

Ricardo: "…That so. Then fine."

He was grateful. Thanks to Reisel, it was true that Ricardo hadn't died. Still, apart from any sense of obligation, Ricardo just couldn't bring himself to like Reisel.

Like stagnant pond water, the man's eyes looked murky. Maybe it was a conviction that Reisel had never once shown his belly—his true self.

And in fact, that was true. In the middle of that very digging work, Reisel incited multiple slaves and pulled off a jailbreak from the slave pen.

Ricardo wasn't invited to the breakout. But the watchers surrounded him, insisting he had to have known about Reisel's scheme, and they beat him within an inch of his life. He endured that hell on his own, took off his collar, and worked properly until he earned the status of a freed slave.

And now—still wearing the collar he'd earned the right to remove, sitting at Reisel's side like back then—

Reisel: "I heard you had it rough after I was gone?"

Sitting on the ground, looking down on the mountain road, Ricardo heard Reisel toss that out.

The question lacked a subject, but Ricardo understood immediately what it meant. He scratched his own head with a thick finger and exhaled, "Reckon so."

Ricardo: "It was real bad. They said, "You were friendly with him, so you must know somethin'," and they beat me to a pulp."

Reisel: "My bad, my bad. Never thought they'd turn their eyes on you. I was in a rush back then, and kinda clumsy 'bout it."

Ricardo: "Nah, don't pretty it up. You figured the watchers'd glare at the one left behind—me. That's what I was there for, wasn't I?"

Ricardo's low question made Reisel narrow his eyes and choose silence.

They were in the mountains away from the city of Banan. A mountain path traced the edge of a sheer cliff, and the Falo cart with their target cargo was slated to pass along it. Blended into a stand of trees overlooking the road, they were lying in wait to ambush and spring a surprise attack.

Killing time with old stories was just part of whiling away the wait.

Ricardo: "…Oh, rare bird flyin' up there."

He lifted his gaze toward the call overhead and murmured in a dazed tone.

Reisel: "Why?"

Ricardo: "Huh?"

Reisel: “If so, why’d ya take my invite today? You coulda just brushed me off sayin’ you didn’t owe me nothin’. Wouldn’t be strange.”

Reisel was eyeing Ricardo—who was looking at the sky—with a gaze like he was watching something uncanny. Ricardo shrugged at that stare and clicked his fangs.

Ricardo: “What’s there to explain. You usin’ me as a decoy and you helpin’ me in the punishment cell are separate. A debt’s a debt; I’ll pay it back. But you keep the promise.”

Reisel: “No bodies, grab the goods, ‘n beat it—right?”

Ricardo: “I ain’t puttin’ lives on the line for some dumb reason. I got a place in the world now.”

Ricardo glared, drawing a firm line. Reisel lifted both hands and nodded with a, “Hey, hey.”

Reisel: “Whatever form it takes, long as ya neutralize ‘em, no problem. Luckily the cargo’s escort ain’t much. We’ve already got the driver wrapped around our finger.”

Ricardo: “Thorough as ever. —’Bout time?”

Catching a subtle change in the air, Ricardo snorted and swung his head around. The rumble of wheels on the mountain road reached them, and in the far distance the Falo cart eased into view.

Falo were mild-tempered animals with greater endurance than ground dragons and ligers, prized even outside Kararagi. But their temperament made them that much more skittish.

—For example, a dog-man dropping down from above could spook them so badly their minds just shut down.

Driver: “G—aaAAAA—!!”

Ricardo sprinted down the cliffside to block the path, hefting a great cleaver, and let out a roar. At the sound, the Falos drawing the cart froze up, cried out in fear, and couldn’t move.

All that was left was to leave the cart to Reisel and the driver he'd bought off, while Ricardo peeled off the escorts—

Ricardo: "—!"

In the next instant, a flash grazed his face, and Ricardo snapped his whole body back hard.

An utterly blindsiding strike—if he'd been any slower in dodging, his head would've flown. Fur bristling with danger, Ricardo turned his gaze toward the one who'd just attacked.

His foe spun the thin blades gripped in both hands, tilted his head, and glanced back.

???: "What now, ya dodged it, did ya. Figured ya were just some death-wish bandit, but looks like ya got some spine, don't ya."

Looking up at Ricardo slowly as he spoke was someone of small stature.

With swords near as long as he was tall in both hands, red eyes fixed this way, he was a white-furred rabbit-man. Clad in a kimono, a leaf between his lips—those features told Ricardo who he was.

So much for "the escort ain't much." The fool Reisel had been tricked by false intel.

A twin-sword style with white scabbards—this rabbit-man was—

Ricardo: "—The "Beheader," Shiroro Tonerico!"

Shiroro: "Ohh? So ya know me, do ya. Knowin' and still comin' at me—ya done a mighty stupid thing, haven't ya."

With a slicing whirr in the air, the rabbit-man—Shiroro—only about a meter tall, flaunted a gust from his blades. Half Ricardo's height he might be, but his mastery left no doubt—he was the real deal.

Say "Beheader," and you meant one of the captains of Scratch of Silver, the mercenary band with many beastmen. His legends were countless; rumor had it he took ten heads in a single clash. Hopefully that was an exaggeration, but sadly, that first stroke didn't feel exaggerated at all.

Shiroro: "Thought ya were the sort to hide yer face like a coward, but seems ya're a man who can do a little. Why don't ya strip off that constrictin' thing and show me yer manly mug."

Ricardo: "…"

Pointing his blade this way, Shiroro threw his words at Ricardo. Reflected in the steel of the sword in his grip was Ricardo's face hidden by a mask.

Since the goal was to keep the body count at zero, he had to avoid having the involved parties see his face. That was why the disguise—but at this rate, the original goal was looking shaky.

Of course he had no intention of taking lives, but right now he was more worried about becoming a corpse himself.

And naturally, under these circumstances, Reisel's aim—the attack on the Falo cart—was—

Shiroro: "—Oh?"

A small sound escaped him as Shiroro sprang sideways. What he'd dodged—quick as he was—was a wheel grinding furiously through the dirt and, right behind it, the Falo cart barreling straight ahead.

Naturally, Ricardo, who'd been facing Shiroro, also leaped aside to avoid being run over. He rolled, the Falo cart thundered past him—and up on the driver's seat—

Ricardo: "…"

For a split second, his eyes locked with Reisel's up on the box, and then he was left in the dust. There wasn't a trace of concern in Reisel's eyes as he went.

Spitting out the grit and bad taste in his mouth along with his saliva, Ricardo realized.

Reisel hadn't been duped by any false intel. From the start he'd known the target Falo cart would have a top-tier escort—and that was why he'd picked Ricardo.

Not because he believed he'd win for sure, but because he needed someone who could buy time—just enough.

Shiroro: "Well now, I dunno the what 'n why of it… but if I'm to believe my driver showed some wit, it felt a tad too strange."

Ricardo: "…"

Shiroro: "Which is to say, sorry, but I can't spend long on ya. I gotta knock that thick neck o' yours clean off and hurry after that cart. If I don't, the captain'll pitch a fit."

Cracking his neck, Shiroro leveled the guardless, white-sheathed blades. The sword aura bathing him scorched through Ricardo's whole body, and he tore his focus from the cart and poured his all into the foe before him.

He had no time to be angry about being used yet again. He threw everything he had, in the little time he had, into bringing down this enemy.

And then—

Shiroro: "—That thick neck looks worth the cut."

Two silver flashes burst forth, rending the wind straight for Ricardo's neck to cleave it clean.

7

Reisel: "Some things never change. Big lugs don't use their heads. They think that's fine, and that's why they're useless. You think so too, don't ya?"

Coachman: "…"

Reisel: “Ahh, right. You can’t talk anymore.”

With a vicious grin, Reisel kicked the coachman beside him. The coachman’s neck had been slashed clean through; his life had already run out.

The body he’d kicked toppled, tumbled off the Falo cart, and dropped over the cliff. Without even seeing it fall, Reisel’s lips eased in satisfaction at his own handiwork.

He urged the Falos faster, putting distance between himself and the fight he’d left behind—Ricardo versus the escort. He had a fair grasp of Ricardo’s skill, but there was no way he’d beat the “Beheader.”

At best, Ricardo would buy a little time, and that would be enough for Reisel’s side to silence mouths.

All that remained—

Reisel: “—Hand over the target, and my end of the job’s done.”

Fishing in his breast, Reisel drew out a scroll. It was the inventory he’d obtained beforehand of the goods to be carried by this Falo cart, and what he wanted was a single item among them.

Of course, he intended to make practical use of the rest as well, but not getting too greedy was the trick to long life. There were other tricks to long life, and by those lights he couldn’t tell how Ricardo had managed to live this long.

Reisel: “Whether it’s ill luck or plain misfortune, either way, since he’s gonna die here today, it don’t mean much.”

He had no interest in a dull debate over what one lives for, but if he had to answer for Ricardo’s life, it was for this day.

—Today, Ricardo’s life existed to grant Reisel’s wish.

Reisel: “Tch tch tch, thanks, brother. Thanks to you, my life’s gonna shine.”

Clicking his tongue, Reisel guided the Falo cart onto the route he'd planned, confirmed there were no pursuers, and moved to inspect the cargo.

Unable to wait, he checked the inside of the bed—and—

Reisel: "—Huh?"

He stood frozen amid a load bed full of nothing but empty wooden crates, a dumbfounded sound slipping out.

8

Hetaro: "B-But, it really went this well, huh?"

Anastasia: "Turns out folks don't look around as much as they think they do. Well, I'm relieved it all went smooth-like for us, too."

Patting the jittery Hetaro on the head beside her, Anastasia smiled sweetly.

The two of them sat on the driver's bench—the driver's bench of the dogcart pulling the freight wagon. Steering the dogcart drawn by several ligers, Hetaro kept glancing back again and again.

She understood how he felt, worrying they might be chased, but—

Anastasia: "Ain't no need to fret so much; they won't be after us that quick. We're runnin' the opposite way, so they won't catch up before we swap wagons."

Hetaro: "Maybe so, but…"

Cautious by nature, Hetaro still couldn't shake his unease. In any case, this was a moment when they were counting on how alert he was to his surroundings. In fact, if Hetaro hadn't been ratcheting up his vigilance at every step, they weren't sure this plot would have succeeded.

—Anastasia and the others had decided to restrain Roshi and carry out his charge in his stead.

It seemed the objective was to recover the "Meteors" riding on the wagon being transported, but Anastasia and company didn't try to fulfill it the easy way.

Anastasia: "If we wind up in danger instead of him, Roshi'll get mad, y'know."

Their aim to begin with was to keep Roshi from doing anything reckless, so if the end result was that the stress took a toll and brought his time sooner, there'd be no point. "Time of death"—not words she wanted to dwell on.

Anyway, given a few such conditions, the method Anastasia came up with was very simple—namely, swapping the wagons.

Anastasia: "We check out the target Falo cart ahead of time and prepare a wagon that's the spittin' image. Then just make the inside look the part, and swap it cleanly right before departure."

Hetaro: "That alone wasn't exactly easy either, though…"

Anastasia: "That's where Mimi and Tivey did real nice, huh? They distracted the driver, then lured the rabbit guard away, and while they were gone we quietly… big success."

Mimi and Tivey, not present here, had supported Anastasia and Hetaro's actions in directly swapping the wagon. They were to regroup with the two at the rendezvous point and trade kudos anew for pulling the plan off.

That said, whether the rope was thick or short, it was still a tightrope they'd walked. If that fact itself was Hetaro's complaint, there was nothing Anastasia could do about it.

Only, that was just Anastasia's needless worry—and—

Hetaro: "Back when we got caught by the slavers with you and drew a map with our wounds, it was like this too, but…"

Anastasia: "…"

Hetaro: "Miss Anastasia, you're amazingly outrageous. Kinda like my big sis."

At that, Hetaro smiled at Anastasia. She blinked for just a second, then smiled faintly.

Anastasia: "That so, that so. Then mind holdin' the reins a bit? I'll go check the cargo. If Roshi's prize ain't there, that'd be a real mess."

Hetaro: "Okay, got it. Be careful."

Leaving the reins to Hetaro, Anastasia crossed the swaying dogcart and slipped into the wagon. The tarpaulin-wrapped bed looked for all the world like it was crammed with a rather atmospheric assortment of goods.

Peering over the likely collection of art pieces and bolts of cloth stuffed into the bed, Anastasia roughly estimated the total and held her head. For the money needed for what she wanted to do in the future, these could be a key that brought her much closer—but—

Anastasia: "Nope. Everything but the target item's gotta go back to their owners. Hoshin's saying: "Cheap means make life cheap." Cutting corners to take a shortcut's the worst."

If you learned ways to make money the easy way instead of sweating for it, people would drift that way in no time. Anastasia could easily picture herself turning out like that.

Precisely because of that, she wouldn't walk that road by choice. That was Anastasia's pride.

To state that resolve, Anastasia patted her own soft cheek with her palm. Then, as she looked around the bed for the target—

???: "—I see. For someone so young, you're a child who thinks very admirably, aren't you."

Anastasia: "…"

Startled by an unfamiliar voice, Anastasia's eyes flew wide, and then she sprang around toward where it had come from. Whoever had slipped into the wagon bed—stowaway or thief—could only be someone with ill intent, whichever it was.

She thought she had to call for Hetaro at once and deal with it.

However—

???: “Hold on, hold on. I don’t mean you any harm. I just, you know, wondered what kind of party had come to ruin me, and before I knew it I was checking for myself.”

Anastasia: “…Who are you?”

The breath she’d drawn to scream, Anastasia spent on a question. Taking that as willingness to talk, the owner of the voice let out a faint chuckle.

Then, before the fearful Anastasia—who still couldn’t see the speaker—a lid on one of the wooden boxes stowed in the corner of the bed was knocked from the inside. Knocked, knocked, knocked—

Anastasia: “…Won’t it open?”

???: “Seems not. If you could open it, that’d help. I’m rather feeble, you see.”

Anastasia: “I ain’t much for showin’ off my strength either, though…”

Muttering that, Anastasia crept up to the wooden box and gingerly hooked her fingers under the lid and lifted it off. —In that instant, what was inside slipped out and alighted on the wagon floor.

She snapped her gaze that way, and Anastasia’s light blue-green eyes opened wide.

???: “Phew. It wasn’t much time, but freedom’s still better than being boxed up.”

Anastasia: “…What are you?”

???: “Oh my, from “who” to “what,” is it. Hard to say whether that’s a demotion or a promotion, but in deference to the whirl of questions in your heart, I'll prioritize an answer."

With that roundabout phrasing showing no consideration at all for prioritizing an answer, the speaker stood on all fours on the bed's floor, a fox shaking out its white fur—and—

Echidna: "—I'm Echidna. For the moment, a humble, short-lived spirit. Pleased to meet you."

9

At the presence that had alighted onto the wagon bed's floor, the young Anastasia frowned.

Slender body twisting under a coat of fluffy white fur, black eyes narrowing impishly—the creature was a white fox with a charming face. If it had been merely a fox, she could have accepted it as some rare animal taken by poachers or the like—but—

Anastasia: “If it talks, that’s another story… uh, so, what are you?”

Before a white fox that understood human speech and could converse, Anastasia tilted her head. In response, the fox seemed to chuckle deep in its throat.

Echidna: “I just answered, didn’t I? I’m Echidna, a spirit. If that doesn’t get through, then…”

Anastasia: “If it doesn’t?”

Echidna: “Would you be satisfied if I said I’m one of the dangerous legacies you came to destroy?”

Even as the question marks refused to leave Anastasia’s face, the fox—Echidna, as it had named itself—washed its face with a forepaw and spoke.

That faintly provocative wording carried a sense of pride and stubbornness—like a final bit of spite at someone who had come to kill her.

However—

Anastasia: “Even if you get all fired up like that, it doesn’t ring any bells for me at all.”

Echidna: “…Eh? Don’t be ridiculous.”

Folding her short arms and again tilting her head, Anastasia left Echidna wide-eyed.

Echidna: “No, no, I’m the one you’re after, aren’t I? Not to be immodest, but I doubt there’s anything in this cargo more valuable than me. You even crossed a dangerous bridge to swap wagons—masterfully, I might add. So this is where you finish me off… isn’t it?”

Anastasia: “What I heard was it’d be something you can tell at a glance is dangerous. As for you… Echidna, I don’t really get you.”

More crestfallen than taken aback, Echidna spoke, and Anastasia only shrugged.

In fact, this wasn't a lie.

Anastasia and the others planned to take on Roshi's so-called final errand, but the written order Roshi had received didn't spell out the target in detail.

There had been only a single line—"Evil, obvious at a glance."

Anastasia: "It said to burn it after reading, so I burned it. But a letter that short, I'm not gonna misread."

Echidna: ""Evil and obvious," huh. Then it can only be me after all."

Anastasia: "How so? You don't look evil to me, Echidna. Just a pelt—no, since there's meat on it, not a pelt. Just a white fox."

Echidna: "…"

At Anastasia's casual reach of her hand, Echidna went stiff.

Anastasia: "…"

Anastasia recognized that reaction.

It was the reflexive behavior of a victim used to being harmed—bracing in an instant. In the slums there were rules of a sort; the young and weak were made to obey the older and strong. Under the name of discipline, violence was common.

Before she met Ricardo, Anastasia herself had suffered that sort of thing.

So she couldn't blame Echidna for bracing herself.

Anastasia: "Relax. I only wanna touch that white coat of yours."

Echidna: "…"

Anastasia: "See, it's fine—wait, I'm not fine! What is this feel?! It's insanely nice!”

Echidna: “C-Could you exercise a little restraint…?”

The reassuring smile Anastasia had been wearing took on a breathless excitement.

A supreme softness that her fingertips sank into—the highest-praise handfeel, which Anastasia, who’d had her share of contact with Ricardo and Mimi and the others, could recognize at once—

Anastasia: “This—this is truly demonic…! So this is the true nature of the dangerous legacy…!”

Echidna: “No, not in that sense. …You’re coming off quite different from at the start.”

Anastasia: “Aahn.”

With an exasperated murmur, Echidna slipped neatly out from Anastasia’s hands.

Deprived of that supreme feel, Anastasia looked after her with lingering yearning. Reflecting the girl in her round black eyes, Echidna let out a long, deep sigh.

Echidna: “Seems it’s not an act to make me lower my guard. In the first place, you wouldn’t need any silly tricks to ruin a frail thing like me.”

Anastasia: “I told you, my target ain’t you, Echidna. If you can’t listen properly, don’t blame me when you get scolded, okay?”

Echidna: “You’re the one not really listening to me…”

Echidna muttered sulkily, then went on, “Anyway—”

Echidna: ““Catch me and treat me like a child,” you say. I’ll have you know I’m a true spirit who’s lived for centuries.”

Anastasia: “Echidna, you’ve been here this whole time, right? Then don’t you know which box has what I’m after? Opening ‘em all is a pain.”

Echidna: “Would you please listen properly!”

A spirit, not a beastman—the expressions of Echidna’s purely animal face were hard to read.

Even so, they were ruffled enough to raise her voice, and Anastasia waved a hand with, “Kidding, kidding.”

Anastasia: “Don’t worry, I ain’t that airheaded. …I took a proper look at the box you were in. What is this?”

Echidna: “—It means it needs to be that secure.”

Lowering her voice, Anastasia spoke—and Echidna’s tone shifted to meet it. The focus of their talk was the contents of the crate Echidna had been sealed in.

When little Anastasia stood on tiptoe to peep inside, the box’s interior was tightly packed with a great many magic stones. The quality seemed none too good.

Anastasia: “For a trade in magic stones, they’re handled sloppy, and normally you wouldn’t pack ‘em in a crate with an animal. Isn’t this to get someone sick-drunk?”

Grimacing at the scheme, as if smelling something foul, Anastasia waved her hand.

Magic stones were a catch-all for things where the mana floating in the air had crystallized.

Like gemstones, the fewer the impurities, the higher the price. From that angle, every magic stone in this crate was a failing grade—junk unfit for any proper trade—yet, even junk became a threat in numbers.

Living beings were equipped from the start with an organ that circulated mana inside and out—the “Gate.” While the circulation varied by individual, even someone with a robust Gate, if exposed to mana beyond their capacity, would fall into poor condition called mana sickness.

Unlike drunkenness from alcohol, mana sickness wasn't something that wore off if you just gave it time.

For that reason, it was sometimes used to deliberately induce mana sickness, pacify dangerous criminals, and transport them safely.

Anastasia: "Even with things like that, you seem fine, Echidna."

Echidna: "Luckily, my Gate is a special make. It's very picky about mana."

Anastasia: "Meaning you can choose what mana to absorb, so you don't get sick-drunk?"

Echidna: "—. I see. Seems you're not just a sly little child."

Echidna let out a breath of impressed surprise at Anastasia's characteristically digestible understanding.

As praise it was a bit ambiguous, but if she'd caught this bizarre being off guard, that was enough to soothe her feelings for now.

All the same, problems abounded. For example—

Anastasia: "How far we should follow Roshi's letter…"

Echidna: "—Unfortunately, it doesn't look like we've time to discuss that."

Anastasia: "—? What—"

She couldn't finish.

In an instant, the dogcart carrying Anastasia and the others surged forward, the lurch sweeping her feet out from under her.

Letting out a small "Kya—!" Anastasia pitched onto the wagon floor. A moment later, the lid of a crate that had come loose slammed down with force. It would hit—she squeezed her eyes shut.

But the expected pain didn't come. When Anastasia opened her eyes, timidly—

Echidna: "…I'm not cut out for manual labor. I'd prefer you protect your own body, if you please."

Echidna, who had blocked the falling lid with her body, was giving Anastasia a resentful look as she spoke.

Anastasia caught her breath at Echidna's action. In that instant, she didn't know whether to voice "why" or "thank you" first—and got out neither.

Because the situation moved before she could.

Hetaro: "—Miss Anastasia, sorry!"

Anastasia: "Hetaro?! What happened?! Why'd you suddenly push the dogcart so fast…!"

She hurled the question at the boy gripping the reins of the great dogs on the driver's bench that had just accelerated. The boy—Hetaro—answered in a voice that couldn't hide his panic.

Hetaro: "—There's a whole bunch of pitch-black shadows chasing us from behind!!"

10

Reisel: "Oi, oi, someone really pulled a fast one on me—who the hell was it?"

Forcing out a curse steeped in grudging rage, the tanuki beastman—Reisel—muttered with bloodshot, pitch-dark eyes.

In his hoarse voice and the way he savagely clawed at his own head was a clear intent to kill.

It was a pure animal impulse—unlike when he'd drunk with Ricardo, unlike the instant he abandoned him before the enemy, unlike the moment he exulted at having seized the target goods.

It was nothing but the eruption of his beast nature at having his prey stolen from him.

Reisel: “Tch tch tch. —You know how much prep I sunk to pull this off? And you call it poachin’ my take? Not a chance I let that slide.”

Clicking his tongue as if it were a tic, Reisel yanked some of his own fur and flung it from the Falo cart with a sweep of his arm, scattering it through the air.

Short and wiry as wire, his hairs spun on the wind and drifted—only for, at the instant they touched ground, each hair to swell, and jet-black shadows to rise up.

The shadows had no faces—no front or back. It was truly as if shadow itself had crawled out of the earth: human-shaped silhouettes welling up in numbers matching the hairs that had fluttered down.

Apart from the cart’s path, Reisel had been repeating the act over and over, and already birthed a countless host of these shadows. The newborn shades scattered in all directions, fanning out as scouts to hunt Reisel’s quarry.

The thief who’d poached his prize and was having a fine laugh about it—

Reisel: “—Found ya.”

With a twisted grin, Reisel worked the reins, driving the Falo cart toward his aim.

He burst through the smoke plume and shot out into open wasteland. His view opened up, and what leapt into sight was a dogcart far off, kicking up a trail of dust—that was the target.

Around was a stretch of rough, barren plain, no cover whatsoever, and the fleeing dogcart’s speed matched the Falo cart’s. So what would be the greatest factor to run the enemy down?

The answer was plain and simple: numbers.

Reisel: “Don’t think you can get away from my shadows, you stupid monkey.”

Before him, the dust cloud ringed the fleeing dogcart.

It wasn’t a smokescreen the dogcart raised by tearing across the wastes at full tilt. It was the work of the countless black figures swarming after the fleeing dogcart.

Reisel’s precious pieces, obeying him, working to fulfill his purpose —

Every one of them was an avatar of Reisel wrought from pitch-black shadow.

Reisel: “—If you can get away, go on and try!”

Baring sharp teeth, Reisel howled like a beast.

In the tanuki-man’s mind there was nothing but brutal reprisals for the enemy who’d pulled this stunt on him.

His avatars, the shadows, had substance—they could harm the foe.

He could have them seize the limbs and tear the four apart. Or else, let the shadows pile on one by one, adding weight until the victim was crushed to death.

The possibilities thrilled him; his heart pounded. And right before his eyes, the dogcart, beset by a great many shadows, slewed violently and nearly flipped.

Don’t you go gettin’ thrown off and dying on me—Reisel, savoring the excitement of the hunt after so long, offered up a prayer. And indeed, that prayer was heard.

Except—

Reisel: “Wh—?!”

—what answered was a series of vividly colored blast-winds that blew the shadows clinging to the dogcart clean away.

Magic stones were scattered from the dogcart’s bed, and the blasts chained one after another.

In the next moment, she saw the countless silhouettes clinging to the bed swallowed by the blast wind and blown away as if torn to pieces.

The identity of the figures was unknown; their numbers were a menace, but each one was quite brittle.

Anastasia: “Good thing Mr. Chuden’s place deals in magic stones, too—saved our hides.”

Tapping the side of an empty crate, Anastasia let that slip after finishing the job.

What they’d used were low-grade junk magic stones prepared to get Echidna sick-drunk. They tipped the box and dumped its contents, and with that, they quelled the abnormal situation outside in one go.

Of course, it wasn’t as simple as the words made it sound. Using poor-quality stones, it wouldn’t have been strange if destruction had begun in ways that didn’t match their intent.

That she’d ignored that risk and still managed to set them off exactly as she wished was thanks to luck—and guts.

Echidna: “You really don’t seem to be a girl who’s as she appears.”

Anastasia: “Rude way to put it, when I just did what you said. But looks like those toy-like explosions blew ‘em off… so those are…?”

Echidna: “Ah, no doubt—”Meteors” I know. “Void Garb.” That’s one of the very legacies you’re supposed to destroy, isn’t it?”

Anastasia: “That’s why… oh, fine, whatever.”

She shook her head, refusing to engage with Echidna’s teasing turn of phrase.

In truth, it was thanks to Echidna's advice that she'd thought of using the stones to repel them. Without that, their dogcart might already have been flipped.

That said, the situation hadn't improved dramatically.

Anastasia: "…Still plenty coming after us."

She poked her head out from the bed, glanced behind the dogcart, and grimaced.

Figures racing across the wide-open waste, trying to catch the dogcart—here she ought to call them "shadow-men" instead—their numbers were only increasing. The first salvo had shaved them down somewhat, but at a pace that would count as a rounding error; she couldn't help breaking into a cold sweat.

Anastasia: "Hetaro, can't we shake 'em?"

Hetaro: "Don't say impossible things! The ligers are doing their best! I'll try to find us a way out, but…"

Anastasia: "So that's a long shot, huh. Echidna, if it's come to this, then together with us—"

Echidna: "—Before that."

Anastasia had concluded they should link up with Hetaro on the driver's bench and talk through a breakthrough—but Echidna was the one who called a halt to that conclusion.

For convenience, let her be "she": she slowly shook that slender neck from side to side and said,

Echidna: "Could you not tell the cute kitten on the driver's bench that I'm here? You don't seem to feel it at all, but my existence is abnormal."

Anastasia: "Still with that…?"

Echidna: "This isn't like my jokes from just now… well, those weren't jokes either, but in any case this is different. It's a more serious matter.”

Anastasia: “…”

Echidna: “And earlier, I advised you because of how things unfolded, but I’ve resigned myself to being destroyed in the first place. So I don’t intend to struggle desperately against fate.”

With that world-weary murmur, Echidna curled her tail around herself and lay down on the floor. There was no lie in that posture; she had abandoned the rights to her own life.

Thus, she regarded Anastasia and the others from a detached vantage, as if to say there was no reason to resist the oncoming shadow-men.

That stance—

Anastasia: “—Really ticked me off.”

—was an act that touched Anandstasia’s one reverse scale no one should touch.

Anastasia: “…”

She hated the idea of not clinging to life, of denying life’s value.

Not because life was dear or noble. Because it was the very first asset a person possessed. Whatever the person, at the very least, they had themselves.

Even without talent or pedigree, everyone had themselves from the start.

Anastasia: “Hoshin’s saying: “Even if you start with nothing, look at the palms of your hands first.””

“Hoshin of the Wilderness,” a byword for rising in the world, built his own country from nothing. Even Hoshin proclaimed: know your own worth.

Know what you can do, and what you must never sell cheap—without that, nothing begins.

Therefore, Echidna deciding to end things on her own was intolerable to Anastasia.

Anastasia: “—Echidna. You said you were ready to toss your life down the drain, didn’t you?”

Echidna: “If I’m to drown, I’d prefer a tidier watering hole, but yes.”

Anastasia: “Then I’ll buy that bottom-priced life of yours.”

Echidna: “—What?”

With a dubious look, Echidna stared at Anastasia standing before her. Met head-on by those light blue-green eyes, the white fox’s slender throat tightened.

It was from surprise—and from a feeling close to a faint joy.

Anastasia: “You’ve got a beautiful coat, you’re incredible to the touch, you’re a bit of a cheeky chatterbox, but you’re smart and you know where the toilet is. —For such an Echidna, I’ll put a price.”

Echidna: “Are you serious? Me? Me, whom many will be aiming to destroy? I simply can’t believe you can protect me to the end.”

Anastasia: “If it ain’t enough, then it means my vessel was lacking. In that case, sooner or later, you and me will die together. But…”

Breaking off there, Anastasia extended a hand to Echidna.

Looking at the outstretched hand, Echidna fell silent, and Anastasia smiled at her.

Anastasia: “—Even if we die someday, that day is not today.”

12

Shiroro: “Is today a fine day to die, hm? Eh? How ‘bout it, you.”

Ricardo: “…”

Shiroro: “Playin’ silent now—ya makin’ fun o’ me, are ya.”

Contrary to words that almost sounded leisurely, silver flashes were swung without mercy to reap a life.

Chuckling raspily in his throat, the rabbit-man Shiroro wielded his twin longblades as if they were his own limbs. Ricardo skimmed away from that terrifying swordplay by a hair’s breadth and sprang far back.

—On a narrow mountain path, the wolf and the rabbit crossed blades with ever-mounting ferocity.

But at present, Ricardo was on the back foot. Failing to fully evade the slashes of those blades, multiple cuts scored across his body were bleeding.

His foe Shiroro was small—barely half Ricardo’s height. But differences in build or the size of their weapons weren’t an excuse for a close fight. Ricardo’s great cleaver was a hefty weapon, but each of Shiroro’s longblades was near as long as the little rabbit-man was tall.

It was sheer skill as a swordsman that had driven Ricardo this far.

Only, that wasn’t the only reason for this disadvantage.

Shiroro: “Seems bein’ tossed aside by yer own’s got to ya. Tryin’ to match me with yer mind wanderin’—I’m honored. But heart, skill, ‘n body lined up—that’s the basics. With that all in disarray, how much longer d’ya think you can manage?”

Ricardo: “…Would’ve been nice if I could say you were way off the mark.”

Bitterly, he had to admit Shiroro’s read was mostly right. In truth, the lack of sharpness in Ricardo’s movements came from his mind being on the absent Reisel.

Not because he was worried about that cold-blooded old acquaintance—the opposite.

Ricardo: “The reckonin’—I’m the one who’s gotta settle it.”

Shiroro: ““Reckonin’, reckonin’,” says you. I like reckonin’ myself. There’s honor seepin’ through it. Which is why I gotta take yer head.”

Ricardo: “Sorry, but this neck with the collar’s already promised out. —I ain’t givin’ it to anyone else. ‘Pologies.”

Shiroro: “Like hell that line’s gonna fly!”

Shiroro’s red eyes sharpened and he leaped as Ricardo flicked his collar with a finger. A slash came straight for Ricardo’s thick neck.

With a flash of silver worthy of the nickname “Beheader,” it bore down to take Ricardo’s life—

Mimi: “Ukyah-ooooo!”

Ricardo: “What the—?!” Shiroro: “Hah?”

A shrill cry cut across the duel, and both mercenaries’ focus flicked aside on reflex. In the next beat, Shiroro raised a white scabbard to intercept a little flying kick that came in at blistering speed.

With a “Wahya—!” the intercepted something bounced along the ground. Curling into a ball to soften the shock, it was an orange-furred puff—no, a kittenfolk girl.

Ricardo: “You—you’re the little brat who plays with Ana-bo!”

Mimi: “Ah—! That’s the bad thing where if Mimi gets found out before she gives her name, it ruins the bit! The customary thing! Uncle does not get it at allll!”

Ricardo: “To hell with “customary”! It’s dangerous—stay outta this!”

Mimi: “What a way to talk! That means—total war!”

Plopping down cross-legged on the spot, Mimi showed a mulish attitude. She was the eldest of the kittenfolk siblings Anastasia wanted so badly, and Ricardo had met her a few times.

Unlike her two very capable little brothers, it was also well-known she didn't listen to a word anyone said.

Ricardo: "What're y'all doin' out here?! This is way too far to be out just playin' around!"

Mimi: "We're not playin' around! Mimi and the others got a super-duper important du-tee? Du-mee? Job! We're in the middle of it! So Mimi can't play with you, Uncle!"

Ricardo: "C-Can't even have a conversation…"

Turning her face away with a pout, Mimi left Ricardo's fangs trembling. At this rate, only a fruitless back-and-forth would continue to no effect.

However—

Shiroro: "—Ahh, havin' my fighting spirit killed? Same here."

Folding one ear deftly, Shiroro cut into Ricardo and Mimi's exchange. He flicked a pebble up with his tip and then batted, batted, and sliced it to pieces midair.

As a mere diversion of the hands, the display was far too advanced; after showing it, Shiroro sighed.

Shiroro: "Bringin' a brat to a place like this—what are ya thinkin'. Thanks to that, now I gotta do a job that'll leave a bad taste in my mouth."

Ricardo: "Hold on. This little one ain't got nothin' to do with it. Yer enemies are me and the gutless one who ran first."

Shiroro: "After all that talkin', "nothin' to do with it" ain't gonna pass. I don't wanna do it either. When I cut a kid, that cryin' face sticks with me a while."

Ricardo: "…"

At Shiroro's voice dropping to a growl, Mimi edged a step back, tilting her head with an, "Oh?"

She likely wasn't aware she'd been cowed by Shiroro's sword aura. Given Mimi's youth, it was no surprise. Firstly, if you could survive being bathed in this killing intent, that would take either ridiculous luck—or—

Ricardo: "One hell of a tactical win. Hey—you really, what'd you come here for?"

Mimi: "Mm—ah! That! Important! See, the young lady and Hetaro 'n them are in trouble! Like, sooo many pitch-black things! Tons!"

Ricardo: ""Young lady"… you mean Ana-bo?!"

"Lots of pitch-black things" sounded like being swarmed by Zodda-bugs, but despite the wording, a stark urgency colored Mimi's attitude.

Two—no, three—pressing situations.

The Shiroro before him, the Reisel who fled, and Anastasia in dire straits.

It would be hard to deal with them all. If so, there was no need to hesitate over priorities.

Ricardo: "Whichever I pick, the one I gotta deal with first don't change."

Shiroro: "—Ho. You're makin' me see you in a new light."

Exhaling hotly, Ricardo turned to face him, and Shiroro's cheek twisted in a grin.

It was the smile of a battle-madman welcoming the flowering of a worthy foe. In just this instant, Ricardo had changed; to put it in Shiroro's way of speaking—

Ricardo: "Looks like heart, skill, 'n body lined up."

Shiroro: “Fine look on ya now—but what changed you? A woman? It’s a woman, ain’t it?”

Ricardo: “—Yeah. A woman.”

He gave the answer Shiroro wanted—though with a meaning somewhat different from Shiroro’s intent. Hearing it, the rabbit-man laughed in a rough voice that canceled out his cuteness.

Shiroro: “Then you won’t mind losin’ ‘n dyin’, will ya. —There’s a woman who’ll cry for ya.”

Ricardo: “Too bad for you—she’s the kind of sturdy lass who’ll come shake me down that much harder if I make her cry.”

With a slicing whisper of wind, the twin blades eased into their guard.

To face them, Ricardo hefted his great cleaver up onto his shoulder.

Shiroro: ““Beheader” Shiroro Tonerico.”

Ricardo: “…”Hound” Ricardo Welkin.”

Shiroro: “Kah! That foul-mouthed brat, is it!”

With warriors’ names exchanged, Ricardo—who had been hiding his identity—pulled off his mask. Shiroro clacked his teeth and cried out in delight as he matched the face to the name.

In the next instant, both launched at once, plunging into the range where one strike would decide it.

13

—Can’t press the attack.

Grinding his molars at that fact, Reisel kept the fury in his chest penned and seething.

The excitement of the hunt after so long had burned off in the first few minutes of this chase. What remained was only the anticipation of brutal reprisals. But even that didn't last long; it was steadily drowned out by a rising impatience.

Reisel: "What the hell is goin' on…?"

A voice leaked between crooked teeth as impatience gnawed at his heart.

In step with it, his claws raked at his own body more and more. The fur that came away became avatars by the power of the "Meteors," and shadow-men sprang forth one after another to hound the enemy before him.

Yes, they were hounding them. Overwhelming numbers robbed the enemy of any route of escape and threatened to crush them.

The shadow-men and the original shared their senses in a hazy way, and what those eyeless heads "saw" was, dimly, visible to Reisel as well.

Using that power, he had succeeded in finding the dogcart that had butted in. So the strategy wasn't wrong. It wasn't wrong—so why—

Reisel: "If so, how the hell are they slippin' outta the net?!"

The shadow-men headed them off, laid traps, funneled them onto roads with no way out, and tried to run the dogcart down. Fearless resolve and infinite numbers made it possible.

Yet the dogcart kept slipping past their strikes by a hair's breadth.

Picking out only the shadow-men's moves that could turn fatal, and repeatedly choosing the best line to snuff those options. As if viewing the whole board from the heavens and placing pieces unerringly.

—And right enough, Reisel's imagining was correct.

Hetaro: "…"

On the driver's bench of the hurtling dogcart, drawn by four great dogs—ligers—the hands clutching the reins were those of a young boy, Hetaro, whose awareness was watching their route from the sky.

—No, to be precise, not the sky, and not Hetaro's own eyes.

Hetaro was taking in the feel of what his younger brother, Tivey, was seeing from a far-sight platform as he observed them, and choosing his path from that.

Hetaro, Tivey, and Mimi, the three siblings, were linked by the "Divine Protection of Trisection."

By nature, that divine protection's greatest effect was thought to be sharing one's physical and mental burdens with the other two to lessen the strain. However, by heightening the divine protection's sensitivity, they could to a degree adjust the ratio of influence they received from the others.

And now, more than ninety percent of Tivey's senses were flowing into Hetaro.

Hetaro: "Run straight for a bit, then…"

In Hetaro's vision, he could see their dogcart in a flickering bird's-eye view. The shadow-men chasing it, the schemes trying to block the road—everything.

—They had, to begin with, taken out insurance for the wagon-swap plan, and it had paid off.

Far-sight platforms across the Kararagi City-States were facilities with "Meteors" installed that observed specified coordinates from directly overhead. There were limits to the distance that could be observed, and by the nature of specifying a position, it was difficult to keep eyes on a moving target. —Hetaro and the others were the exception.

The plan worked only because they could constantly and accurately pinpoint their other selves' positions.

Even so, that heaven's-eye method couldn't remain perfect.

Hetaro: “Miss Anastasia!”

With a cry like a scream, Hetaro called the name of his partner in the wagon bed.

In Hetaro’s sight was the desperate situation Tivey’s observation showed. The shadow-men had moved around in front, linked shoulders, climbed atop each other, and built a bulwark of shadows.

The fan-shaped wall of pitch black couldn’t be avoided even if the dogcart changed direction. The only gap was to the rear, but there a host of shadow-men were in full pursuit.

All is lost, Hetaro’s throat froze, and he calculated a breakout in an instant.

Just the two of them, himself and Anastasia—abandon the dogcart and use the ligers as decoys, and—

Anastasia: “—Hetaro, straight ahead.”

Hetaro: “…”

Hetaro, who had started to calculate an escape, was called back by a voice from the wagon. He held his breath at that voice and asked, “Miss Anastasia?”

Hetaro: ““Straight ahead,” but there—”

Anastasia: “Have I ever told you wrong before? …Trust me.”

At Anastasia’s calm reply, Hetaro had no words. Instead, he closed his eyes and counted his heartbeats.

And then—

Hetaro: “Straight ahead. —Because big sis believed in Miss Anastasia.”

To Hetaro, the one who made the right choice in this world was his big sister, Mimi. Without her, he and Tivey couldn’t have lived through this harsh world.

So he believed what his sister believed. He would support that choice with everything he had.

Hetaro: “…”

When he clenched the reins hard, that intent carried to the ligers too. Ahead, the shadow bulwark crept into view, slowly, and the four great dogs charged without flinching.

If they slammed into that wall—or if it toppled over on them—the dogcart wouldn’t stand a chance.

But Hetaro had already chosen to believe.

Hetaro: “Miss Anastasia!”

Not a scream this time—he called the name full of trust.

In that instant, as if bursting through the wagon’s wall, a white heat ray swept sideways across the dogcart’s path.

—A tremendous heatwave turned the black bulwark to dust in one stroke.

14

Echidna: “Your Gate is defective. This isn’t something that can be handled properly at all.”

Anastasia: “My, what a thing to say.”

The moment Echidna said that upon touching the hand Anastasia had extended, Anastasia pouted. But Echidna lightly placed a forepaw on Anastasia’s hand and slowly shook her head with, “This isn’t a joke,”

Echidna: “It’s probably a congenital defect. In your Gate, the mechanism for taking in mana is incomplete. Your body can expel mana, but it can’t take it in. Therefore…”

Anastasia: “Therefore what?”

Echidna: "—If you were to use magic, you'd be consuming Od. It depends on the Gate's sturdiness, but unlike mana—which in a sense can be supplied without limit—Od is finite. It doesn't recover. In other words, it's equivalent to shaving away your life."

Anastasia: "Mm, I get it. It means I'll have to stake it even knowing the danger."

Hearing Echidna's explanation, Anastasia drew up her slender chest and answered. At that answer, Echidna fell silent for a moment, then—

Echidna: "You're not death-seeking, are you?"

Anastasia: "Me? I've never once in my life thought I wanted to die. I haven't got a single thing I want yet. So I can't die in a place like this."

Echidna: "…"

Anastasia: "Echidna, a match won't wait on you. From here on, you've got no choice but to fight with what's in your own wallet."

To set up this position, Anastasia had spared nothing and used up everything she had on hand. Since it still wasn't enough, there was nothing left but to shave away life or whatever else it took.

That was the sort of decisiveness needed to keep it from being fatal in the truest sense.

Echidna: "—I'll say this first: this isn't a contract. I'm defective as a spirit, too."

Anastasia: "Really? How so? When you're this fluffy."

Echidna: "I admit I'm proud of my coat, but that's irrelevant. …As a spirit, I can't enter into a contract. So what I'm about to do is one-sided extraction."

Whether because it pained her, there was a bitter note to Echidna's words. But Anastasia thought. She didn't know how contracts differed between humans and spirits, but—

Anastasia: “I don’t know the spirit style, but I do know human-style contracts.”

Echidna: “…”

Anastasia: “Only, it’s Kararagi merchant-style, so it won’t be lenient, okay? Think hard about the contract.”

At Anastasia’s words, paired with a wink, Echidna’s eyes went round. Then the white fox let out a short breath and laughed.

Echidna: “To think a spirit like me would be lectured on contracts by a human. Heh heh, amusing. It’s worth living long. Not being destroyed was the right call.”

Having changed her mind, life surged into Echidna as she met Anastasia’s eyes. Then Echidna hopped up onto Anastasia’s shoulder and buried Anastasia’s slender neck in fur.

A soft, overwhelmingly fluffy feel wrapped around Anastasia.

Anastasia: “Paradise…!”

Echidna: “I’d rather you didn’t ascend. —Abnormal situation ahead of the dogcart.”

At the warning, Anastasia turned her gaze toward the front of the bed, to the driver’s bench.

Hetaro: “Miss Anastasia!”

She heard Hetaro’s scream-like cry.

Hearing it, Anastasia drew a breath. This was the crucial moment, the big scene of this stage.

Anastasia: “—Hetaro, straight ahead.”

Tossing out a word that could sound cruel, Anastasia slowly stretched a hand toward the front.

And—

—A sweeping white heat ray burned away in one stroke the bulwark formed by densely packed shadow-men.

There was no sound to the destruction, and even the shadow-men that turned to dust left not a trace. In stark contrast to the sight of white light swallowing the inky shadows and the spread of ruin, the devastation advanced far too quietly.

Reisel: “G-Gggoaaaaaaa—!!”

As a pursuer, Reisel witnessed that scene of ruin with a scream.

It wasn’t a cry born of anger or humiliation. The scream was caused by unbearable pain.

—The shadow-men shared their senses with Reisel to some extent.

That was why they could share vision, and he could move countless shadow-men with a single will. But the flip side of that was that it also meant sharing pain and the sensation of annihilation.

Each annihilation was no more than the pain of being pricked by a needle. However, what if it became a hundred, a thousand—nearing ten thousand? If stabbed by needles ten thousand times, the agony would defy imagination.

Reisel: “Gah— ggo…!”

Drool dripped from the corner of his mouth, and bloody tears flowed from Reisel’s eyes.

His instincts told him that any further was dangerous. But he couldn’t withdraw. Reisel had his own reason he could not retreat.

Reisel: “Not yet— n-not yet…!”

He hadn’t actually suffered wounds to the flesh. There was no bleeding, no shattered bones. If his mind could overcome the pain, then pain that felt like it was burning his body wouldn’t hinder movement.

From that mental depletion and from continually yanking out his fur, Reisel's features had changed drastically.

Reisel: "Don't think you're gettin' away like this, tch tch tch."

He tore more fur from his cheek and sent the shadow-men he birthed to chase the dogcart. With the jet-black bulwark gone, the dogcart burst through the cloud of shadow-dust, and the distance closed greatly.

Glaring straight ahead, he moved to feast his eyes on the faces of the enemies riding that dogcart—and—

Reisel: "—ah."

Into Reisel's field of view fell a large figure standing all alone in the middle of the wastes.

Scorched-brown beast fur, a wolf's visage that could only be called downright ferocious. An old acquaintance of a big man with an orange kittenfolk girl on his shoulder had his great cleaver buried in the ground and his jaws opened wide.

They went way back. Which was why Reisel understood at a glance what that meant.

Casting off all kinds of feelings, Reisel was struck dumb.

—Around the Falo cart were shadow-men in numbers equal to, or greater than, when he'd created the bulwark.

Reisel: "W-Wait, Rica—"

Ricardo: "Wa—ha—!!"

—The roar swallowed Reisel, Reisel's shadows, everything—and the world exploded.

16

Ricardo: "…So, how'd it end up, Ana-bo?"

Anastasia: “Um—promise you won’t get mad?”

Ricardo twisted his cheek at Anastasia, who was pressing her index fingers together and looking up at him. Then he patted the girl’s head with his big palm—

Ricardo: “‘Course I’m gonna get mad! What the hell were you thinkin’, you blockhead!”

Anastasia: “Owowow! See! See, I knew you’d get mad! I knew it!”

Her head roughly waggled, Anastasia teared up and wriggled out from Ricardo’s hand. At the girl’s unrepentant attitude, Ricardo let out a long, deep breath.

Having ended his fight with Shiroro, Ricardo had rushed to the scene per Mimi’s appeal. If it was Anastasia in dire straits, it was only natural to put off settling accounts with Reisel.

So he hadn’t imagined for a second that both problems would get wrapped up at once.

Ricardo: “That damned fool Reisel…”

Reisel had dragged along some uncanny beings with creepy little tricks. It seemed to be a trump card Ricardo hadn’t known about, but Ricardo’s own trump card had blown the lot of it away.

The Falo cart they were riding had been pulverized along with it; he likely hadn’t survived. And even if he had, there was no avoiding a near-death state.

Shiroro: “—So that “reckonin’” falls in our purview, then. No complaints, brat.”

Ricardo: “…Could ya not call me “brat.””

Shoulders sagging in exasperation, Ricardo glanced back. Shiroro, who’d been watching his back-and-forth with Anastasia, chuckled low, the leaf at his lips bobbing.

The one-on-one between Ricardo and Shiroro had ended with neither taking the other's life. The plan had been from the start to avoid needless deaths; to Ricardo, that outcome was only natural.

Shiroro: "Both my blades're snapped, 'n I ain't got a chance. If I can't be content with not gettin' chomped in one bite, I ain't fit to keep at the merc trade."

Between a hirer and the hired it was money, not a bond of life—that was the iron rule for mercenaries like Shiroro.

Thus, the moment the tide turned and Ricardo proposed a truce, he'd sheathed his broken blades at once. That clean break had saved both Ricardo and Anastasia.

Had he resisted to the end, there would have been no grand happy ending here.

Mimi: "Maaaan, Uncle was amaaazing! Voice so looooud! At the end you went, "Gaooon!" Mimi wants to do that! Really really wants to!"

Hetaro: "I-I'm just glad you're safe, sis. B-But, calm down, okay…"

A little ways off near the great cleaver buried in the ground, the reunited kittenfolk siblings were making a racket. Mimi seemed utterly taken with Ricardo's trump card; her eyes sparkled with emotion.

With her being that delighted, it was hard to raise his voice and scold her.

—In truth, he had at least one complaint about having let Anastasia be put in danger.

Ricardo: "…But I reckon it was Ana-bo who suggested it first, huh?"

Anastasia: "As expected, you really get me, don't you, Uncle."

Ricardo: "Idiot! Reflect on what you did!"

Clutching her head in an exaggerated pose, Anastasia paid no heed to Ricardo's bark.

That said, Anastasia and the others' contribution wasn't something to scoff at. In fact, had they not butted in, Reisel would've easily achieved his objective and gotten away clean.

That it hadn't gone that way was due to a pileup of coincidences—but it was to their credit.

Thanks to that—

Ricardo: "Shiroro, we'll return the cargo. My goal from the start was to settle things with an old acquaintance. I figure that's done. How 'bout we call it even here."

Shiroro: "That's a mighty convenient tale for us. If you had a mind to, you could kill us 'n run off with the cargo. Why not do that, eh?"

Anastasia: "Ah—so that was an option. Didn't think of it. Shall we do that now?"

Shiroro: "Kakaka! You sure do talk!"

Shiroro tipped up his face and laughed, his red eyes staring fixedly at Anastasia. Under the swordsman's sharp gaze, Anastasia ducked behind Ricardo.

Anastasia: "Wh-What?"

Shiroro: "Nothin' but gettin' a look at the face o' the one who played us for fools. Now then—am I just gettin' rusty, or else…"

Eyes narrowing, he measured her up; under that appraising look, Anastasia straightened her back.

Shiroro: "By the by, little miss—the fur scarf on yer shoulder…"

Anastasia: "—This is mine."

At that answer, Shiroro's gaze flicked to Ricardo. But before Ricardo could respond, Anastasia went on with, "And this,"

Anastasia: "I'm givin' to you. The inventory list of contraband in the cargo."

Shiroro: “Hoh?”

Anastasia: “You probably bribed the checkpoint clerk to get it through. If you show this, won’t they write off the failure of the job?”

At the black-hearted proposal from the little girl, Shiroro’s red eyes went round. Beside them, Ricardo put a palm to his face and looked up at the sky as if lamenting.

Bearing the wolf and the rabbit’s stares head-on, Anastasia stroked her own neck—her fluffy fox scarf—and said,

Anastasia: “If they still give you grief over the job, you can come to my place. —I’ll take care of you too, Uncle Rabbit, all together.”

17

Roshi: “So? Abacus girl, what are you gonna say to apologize to me, huh?”

Anastasia: “Me, to Gramps? Do I got anything to apologize for?”

Roshi: “Kakakakak! Of all the dumb things to say—what, you got a screw loose in that head o’ yours?”

Having returned with the three siblings after wrapping up that so-called “duty,” Anastasia was greeted by Roshi, the master of the ramshackle house in the slums, who ran a hand through his white hair and snapped that out.

At Roshi’s line, Anastasia puffed her cheeks with a “hmph” and said,

Anastasia: “What kinda way is that to talk. I just did exactly what you said, Gramps.”

Roshi: “What I said? And when did I tell ya to tie this old wreck up and leave ‘im, huh. The brats sure got good at trussin’. Took me a while to slip the ropes, it did.”

Anastasia: “Don’t remember? —You told me to take your duty in your place.”

At that brazen claim, Roshi’s cheek stiffened. Dumbfounded by Anastasia’s total lack of fear, he shook his head.

Roshi: “You tryin’ to forge my words now?”

Anastasia: “Gramps, you said you had a favor to ask me. And from how the talk was goin’, I figured that was it. ‘Cept, before you finished sayin’ it, you went and fell asleep.”

Roshi: “That weren’t sleepin’, that were me bein’ put to sleep—ah, hell! So that’s how it is.”

Roughly scratching his age-dried skin, Roshi clicked his tongue.

He’d clearly decided he wouldn’t be able to break through Anastasia’s specious argument.

Anastasia: “Gramps, give it up and spend your old age quiet. … Then when you die, Mimi ‘n them’ll properly be mine. That’s fine, isn’t it.”

Roshi: “Looks like yer makin’ it sound like a compromise, but that’s just how you wanted it, ain’t it, little rascal.”

Anastasia: “And what’s the problem with that?”

Tilting her head, Anastasia asked.

Roshi: “—Nothin’. There ain’t nothin’. And that’s what pisses me off.”

Shaking his head, Roshi answered.

Answering thus, he looked out the broken window at the sky, blue, blue, and muttered,

Roshi: “Damn, what un-cute brats. Can’t hear a thing an old man says.”

Anastasia: “…Well then, I’m goin’. Be nice to Mimi ‘n them, okay?”

Roshi: “Hold it, girlie. If you took my job, what’re the results?”

Anastasia: “…”

As she stood to leave, Roshi asked.

Roshi’s duty—the disposal of the dangerous article that should’ve been mixed in the cargo—only once that was carried out would he reach satisfaction.

So—

Anastasia: “—There wasn’t any such thing in that cargo. Nothin’ evil you could tell at a glance.”

She answered while stroking the white fox scarf at her throat.

18

Echidna: “Was that really all right? Did that old man accept it?”

After leaving the ramshackle house and stepping out into the slums, the scarf spoke to Anastasia.

Looking around restlessly and confirming there was no one nearby, —

Anastasia: “If Gramps said that, then that’s Gramps’s conclusion. More importantly, don’t just start talkin’ all of a sudden. If people see, it’s big trouble, right?”

Echidna: “Well, depending on the case, I’d be confiscated and you’d be subjected to a harsh interrogation. They’d use drugs, magic—anything—and your personality could be broken. Refrain from careless acts.”

Anastasia: “I don’t much like bein’ the one told that, y’know.”

Puffing out her cheeks as she answered, the scarf—Echidna—laughed.

So long as she settled at Anastasia’s neck like this, Echidna could pass as a scarf of unknown origin. Fortunately, she seemed confident in that kind of concealment.

Echidna: “It’s one of my traits as a spirit. Think of it as constantly projecting “Cognitive Disruption.” It’s only a faint interference—just enough to keep others from feeling doubt.”

Anastasia: “But it doesn’t work on me?”

Echidna: “That, too, is likely a side effect of your Gate being defective. …Ana, your body—are you all right?”

Being called “Ana,” by nickname, tickled both physically and emotionally.

Still, Echidna’s concern was only natural. In fact, some effects had already shown.

—To break through the shadow-men’s bulwark, Anastasia had lent Echidna her body. As a result, Echidna had used what they called Anastasia’s Od to cast magic, but—

Anastasia: “Maybe there’s just a little effect?”

For example, though today’s weather blazed down mercilessly, she didn’t feel the heat at all. Even with Echidna wrapped at her neck, not a drop of sweat ran.

Anastasia: “Is this gonna be forever?”

Echidna: “…I told you. Od that’s lost doesn’t return. The side effects are the same.”

Anastasia: “I see. —Then I’ll have to get creative so folks don’t find it strange.”

She would have to be careful in the fire season or the ice season—times when temperatures swung to extremes. It wasn’t as if anyone would say anything just because they found out, but causing worry wasn’t what she wanted.

And it also felt wrong that Echidna would be treated like the villain because of it.

Anastasia: "—? What's wrong?"

Echidna: "No, you're so composed I was at a loss for words. Normally, anyone would panic that such a thing shouldn't be."

Anastasia: "What happened happened. And it was my decision. I won't lie about that."

Life was a string of gambles; all you could do was stack victories and defeats and move forward. And Anastasia had chosen to pay a price in order to win, and stepped into the fray.

If the result was that there were things lost and things gained, it was more meaningful to talk about the things gained.

Anastasia: "What about you, Echidna—are you fine with me? I'm a defective product, ain't I?"

Echidna: "…Don't hold it against me. Those were words I chose to make you let go of me. For now, I've decided to go with you. For the time being, anyway."

Anastasia: "It's fine, it's fine. All I gotta do is make it so you can't bear to leave me."

Making that forward-looking declaration, Anastasia looked straight ahead.

Down the street she could see Ricardo standing with arms folded, and Mimi and the others hanging from those arms and playing. It seemed this incident had brought them all much closer.

Echidna: "Ana, about my existence…"

Anastasia: "We keep it secret from Ricardo 'n them too?"

Echidna: "—. Yes, that would be best. My existence makes you an accomplice who knows, and you alone."

Anastasia: "Why d'ya gotta put it in such scary terms?"

Echidna gave no answer to Anastasia’s tilted-head question. At the attitude of this “accomplice,” Anastasia shrugged and winked as if to say it didn’t bother her.

She didn’t expect they would open up to each other right away. Just as she had taken time to open her heart to Ricardo, Echidna would need time as well.

Anastasia: “So I’ll wait till we go from “accomplices” to “family.””

Echidna: “…”

Echidna still didn’t answer Anastasia’s call. But it wasn’t because she preferred silence—rather, they had come within earshot of Ricardo and the others.

Ricardo: “Ana-bo, how’d it go. The old man gave you a real good scoldin’, yeah?”

Mimi: “Oh—did Roshi get mad? Was he mad? Are Mimi ‘n them gonna get super scolded?”

Anastasia: “Mm—hard to say from me, but…”

At Ricardo and Mimi’s concern, Anastasia smiled gently. Her hand softly stroked Echidna’s fur.

Then, to Ricardo and the others, who tilted their heads in unison, she went on.

Anastasia: “Whatever the problem is, we’ll solve it together. We’re pretty much family, after all.”

19

—And thus, under the same Kararagi sky, at the very hour a single family was born…

Reisel: “Hah, ha… hah…”

Clinging to life, Reisel crawled along the ground in tatters, dragging his ruined body.

His ragged breathing alone sounded painful—he was half-dead, half-alive.

—Bathed in Ricardo’s howling shockwave, all of Reisel’s shadowmen were wiped out at once. The backlash, no less than what he’d suffered when the white heat-ray mowed them down moments earlier, crashed over him.

Ten thousand needles stabbing into him; the terror of being ground down by sheer mental wear shredded Reisel’s heart to pieces.

So, on pure reflex, he put survival first.

Reisel: “D-Damn it… b-but… this means… I blew it. I gotta… get out… fast…”

In the breast of the man crawling away, the Meteor that had filled Reisel with invincible omnipotence had lost its shape, its effects gone—the spent remains of the “Void Garb” that birthed his countless shadows.

At the last instant—before the recoil of all those vanishing shadows came roaring back—Reisel smashed the Void Garb himself, cutting the damage to the bare minimum.

Thanks to that, he avoided dying on the spot. But a different problem reared up.

The Void Garb had only ever been on loan to Reisel—entrusted for this job. He’d lost the borrowed piece and botched the work besides. Unforgivable, by any measure.

The one who’d issued Reisel his orders was merciless. He had to vanish. Now.

Ricardo, and the meddlers who’d butted in—he’d caught the briefest glimpse at the end: the brat he’d seen in town with Ricardo. Meaning he’d been taken for a ride—no, a hundred rides—by that mutt who didn’t even know how to use his head.

That big dumb dogman, who had no idea the guard a greased palm had set upon him in the slave pens, who’d been beaten, who’d been “rescued” so Reisel could stick him with a debt—all of it, and he still got played.

Reisel: “That brat… and Ricardo… I’ll kill ‘em both. …Next time, for sure—”

???: “—Think you’ve got a “next time,” you third-rate little snipe?”

Reisel: “—Hk!”

???: “If you do, you’ve got one hell of a rosy brain in there! If you don’t use that head to think, doesn’t that mean you don’t need a head at all? Kyahahahaha!”

A foot slid into view and barred the path of the man crawling across the dirt. An ice-cold terror seized his heart as Reisel slowly raised his eyes.

He met a pair of red irises that housed cruelty beyond words, framed by golden hair.

Reisel: “W-Wait… listen, I was just on my way to report—”

???: “No, no, no, I don’t need your report, like, at all? I was watching every last bit myself! You burned through my collection piece and wound up like this? I’m so exasperated I don’t even know what to say! Kyahahahaha!”

Smiling as she spoke, the girl with red eyes and golden hair—no, “Mother”—laughed. Hearing that laugh, Reisel’s instincts screamed louder, higher.

Words, action, pleading, honesty—every option stampeded through his skull; his thoughts caught fire.

But before he could put any of them into motion—

“Mother”: “Too slow. I called you a wonderfully hard-to-kill little thing—but I guess I overestimated you.”

Reisel: “Ah…”

“Mother”: “Good-bye, my cute little son! But bad children have to be pruned, you know. Flowers and grass are the same, right? That useless head of yours—Mommy’s going to put it to good use!”

The “Mother” who’d borne such a fool of a “son,” who had failed his role, lightly thrust out a hand. The moment her small palm pressed to his brow, Reisel’s awareness warped.

—No, not his awareness. His very being. His limbs vanished; with a wet crunch his body changed. It split, was crushed, was remade; his brain, his guts, were churned.

Reisel: “Abu… abubu… abubububu…”

“Mother”: “Ugh, I was so excited to add to my collection, and now I’ve lost a piece and a son? I’m the picture of misfortune! A tragic heroine!”

He could still hear “Mother.” Still—how? He had no ears, no eyes; he no longer had the shape of anything living. And still—his awareness, himself, what “himself” even meant, whether it had meaning—thinking, thinking requires a head, what is that, what is “what”—

“Mother”: “Kyahahahaha! You shitheads! Die, every last one of you!!”

She laughed and howled.

If she was laughing, that meant Mother was pleased, so he should be pleased, too.

As that twisted compulsion rewrote his brain, Reisel—what had once been Reisel—was dutifully, meticulously pruned.

“Mother”: “Someday, someday—I’m absolutely going to make it mine. —Say, “Witch’s Legacy.””

—Pruned.

The Three Idiots Set Out!
Earth Spider Episode
(LQ AI Translation)

1

—The forest was shrouded in gloom, a stagnant air spreading through it.

Wiping the sweat beading on his brow, he drew a deep breath to steady his ragged breathing. The stale, fishy humidity filled his lungs with discomfort, yet he deliberately ignored it and faced forward.

Thick greenery walled off his vision; even objects mere inches ahead were uncertain.

Extending a hand to confirm his position, his fingertips met the rough bark of a tree. Relying on that for the moment, he slid his hand along it—and suddenly felt the warmth of human skin.

Garfiel: “…What the hell d’ya think you’re doin’, ya punk?”

Otto: “I wonder what it might be. Where, exactly, am I touching?”

Garfiel: “That’s my amazin’ self’s gut, ya hear?! Oi, get the hell offa me, now!”

With a rough voice and movement, the extended hand was slapped away. His right hand tingled from the impact, yet he seized the other’s shoulder with his opposite hand, saying, “Please wait.” A click of the tongue followed.

Garfiel: “Ya messin’ around at a time like this…?”

Otto: “I am not joking. Unfortunately, I cannot see anything at all right now. There is too much noise here for me to find a breakthrough by conversation. Therefore, I must rely on your nose.”

In the green darkness, the clack of bared fangs rang out.

That sound signified both irritation and consideration; the lack of rebuttal meant the idea had not been rejected. Relieved by that, Otto shrugged in the darkness he could not see.

Otto: “Let us cooperate. Left as things are, Natsuki-san will die lost out here.”

Garfiel: “Tch, that damn Captain’s gone and dragged us inta somethin’ real bothersome.”

Otto: “I am in complete agreement on that.”

Agreeing with his disgruntled companion, he probed their surroundings, yet the person they sought was nowhere to be sensed.

Their missing third member remained thoroughly lost.

They had to regroup somehow and escape this forest safely, but—

Otto: “I was supposed to be on vacation, was I not?”

Placing a hand to his head, the young man—Otto Suwen—let out a deep sigh.

The beginning of the affair traced back a few days earlier, to that sigh of Otto’s.

2

Subaru: “Come to think of it, I never did ask where your hometown is, Otto. Are you a born-and-bred Lugunican?”

Otto: “And there he goes again, springing questions out of nowhere.”

With Subaru’s usual sudden curiosity, Otto could only shrug in exasperation.

Their setting was the new Roswaal Manor's dining hall, the very moment when everyone was gathered around the table.

The mansion had burned down, the grounds and the interior were now entirely different, yet some things remained unchanged—one of them being this mealtime scene.

At Roswaal Manor it was customary for the entire household to share their meals together.

Subaru had always approved of that tradition, and it was alive and well in the new residence. The headcount had nearly doubled, the bustle doubled with it, and the sheer liveliness made every meal delightful.

Subaru: "Even Beako—who used to skip meals all the time—shows up for all three these days."

Beatrice: "Hmph, naturally. Betty has a duty to supervise you, Subaru, lest your picky self leave anything behind, I suppose. That is part of being your… p-p-p-partner, in fact."

Subaru: "You're adorable, you know that?"

Unable to say "partner" smoothly, the blushing Beatrice received a gentle pat from Subaru.

One month had passed since the two formally forged their contract and became partners in both name and deed; the fledgling duo still kept an undeniably fresh distance.

That sweet awkwardness was part of their new life's charm, and it was not limited to those two alone.

As Subaru ruffled Beatrice's hair, his gaze swept over the assembled Emilia Camp.

Someone was usually absent for work, but today saw a rare full attendance. Thanks to that, the table was more vibrant than usual, and the eagerness of Frederica and Petra radiated throughout the hall.

There was the shameless Roswaal at the head, tended dutifully by Ram; Petra, rushing about to serve the large group, quietly supported by Frederica's warm smile; Garfiel devouring his food with characteristic gusto while the adjacent Ryuzu stealthily distributed vegetables onto his plate. To Subaru's left sat a satisfied Beatrice—and on his right…

Emilia: "Now that you mention it, Subaru might have been right. It does feel a little odd."

With a finger to her lips, Emilia tilted her head cutely. Subaru nodded solemnly.

Subaru: "Right… though which part of what I said was right again?"

Emilia: "Otto's story. You were just asking him, weren't you?"

Subaru: "Was I? Guess the chatter was so purely small talk it slipped right out of my head."

Scratching his cheek, Subaru offered a sheepish grin. The sight before him had been so precious he had drifted into it unawares; shaking himself, he refocused.

Subaru: "Anyway, Emilia-tan's curious too, so—what's the answer, Otto?"

Otto: "Answering after that extremely half-hearted segue does not appeal to me, you know?!"

Faced with Subaru's careless inquiry, Otto, seated opposite, let his voice crack. Hearing that squeak, Emilia poked Subaru's shoulder with a chiding "Hey."

Emilia: "Quit saying weird things. Honestly, Subaru, you contrarian."

Subaru: "Yeah, yeah, sorry. For some reason I can't be straightforward with Otto. Bear with me."

Otto: “You’re a troublesome person!”

Otto slumped, while Emilia gave a thin smile.

Emilia: “Alright, that’s enough. So, Otto-kun, where are you from?”

Otto: “Goodness. I could ignore it from Natsuki-san, but even you, Emilia-sama…”

Subaru: “Why’re you dodging so hard? Heavy backstory? Destroyed your hometown yourself?”

Ram: “I see.”

Otto: “It is not “I see”! Ram-san, what kind of light are you casting me in?!”

Ram snorted “Ha!” at Subaru’s banter, piling on, and before long the dining hall’s attention had drifted toward Otto. Under the gathering gazes, he brought a hand to his forehead uneasily.

Otto: “…Well, it is not an interesting tale, so there is little to tell.”

Roswaal: “Oh, no, no, everyone is sooo interested. The second son of the Suwen Company in the Commercial City of Picoutatte, what colorful history might he regale us with, I wooonder?”

Otto: “And with that you have exhausted everything I could possibly say!”

Half resigned, Otto suffered Roswaal’s critical interjection and fell in rhetorical battle. Roswaal, pleased by his mischief’s success, hummed, while Subaru frowned.

Subaru: “So the Suwen Company wasn’t just some figment of Otto’s daydreams.”

Otto: “It is a respectable firm, thank you very much!”

Frederica: “The Commercial City of Picoutatte is a real metropolis in the south of the Kingdom of Lugunica.”

Raising a finger, Frederica offered a calm explanation, then placed a hand on Petra’s shoulder beside her.

Frederica: “The rest, Petra will explain. You can, yes?”

Petra: “Y-Yes, Nee-sama! Picoutatte lies on the border with the Vollachian Empire to the south, and it's said to be one of Lugunica’s five great cities. It’s always been a bustling center of trade and commerce, and it’s even been fought over with the Empire several times.”

Frederica: “Very well done. Excellent, Petra.”

Petra: “Ehehe.”

Displaying her newly learned knowledge and winning perfect marks, Petra beamed brilliantly. Watching the heart-warming scene from the corner of his eye, Subaru folded his arms.

The city was Otto’s birthplace, and the Suwen Company his family business.

Garfiel: “So, that Suwen Company—how big’s the place, huh?”

Otto: “It has some history, but it is not exactly a giant. At best a mid-sized firm, conducting stable business, neither bold nor reckless.”

Subaru: “Huh… that does sorta sound like your family. Though, really? If you were that stability-oriented, you and I would’ve been dead ages ago…”

Otto: “Drag me into that with you after Natsuki-san if you must, but leave me out alone, please!”

Subaru and Garfiel eyed Otto’s protest with skepticism.

The Sanctuary had been one life-threatening tightrope after another, and some of those rope walks had been ones Otto chose himself. His excuse, therefore, carried no weight.

Otto: “Anyway, that is quite enough about my family. …Yes, enough.”

He settled deeper into his chair and sighed. Emilia tilted her head.

Emilia: “Otto-kun, are you alright?”

Otto: “—Yes, I am fine. I merely drifted into a little reflection. I have always caused trouble for my parents and siblings, and I have not contacted them in quite some time.”

Showing a wry smile, Otto sighed again. Emilia brushed that sigh away with a hand and nodded firmly.

Emilia: “Roswaal, I have a request. —Could you give Otto-kun some time off?”

Roswaal: “Ho.”

Receiving the proposal, Roswaal narrowed his heterochromatic eyes meaningfully. The surprise was not his; it was the man in question —Otto—who nearly leapt from his seat.

Otto: “E-Emilia-sama? Why would you bring that up…?”

Emilia: “Because of what you just said. If you’ve worried your family that much, you should meet them and talk properly.”

Otto: “I do appreciate the concern, but…”

Emilia: “You traveled alone before, but now you’re with us, helping with the Royal Selection. We ought to let your family know you’re safe.”

Pressed by Emilia’s earnestness, Otto shrank a little under the weight of her concern. Then she delivered the clincher.

Emilia: “Family is something you should talk to while you can. … It’s reaaally important.”

Her quiet words shook him hard; Otto swallowed a lump in his throat and looked around for help, but—

Subaru: “She’s right, Emilia-tan’s exactly right. Gotta talk while you can…”

Subaru rubbed his reddened nose, fully backing Emilia. Even Beatrice at his side and Garfiel with folded arms nodded in agreement. For this group, the topic of “family” struck all too deeply.

Subaru: “Roswaal, I’m asking too. Give Otto some leave and let him visit home!”

Otto: “Uh, a letter would surely suffice…”

Subaru: “Idiot! How could a letter possibly convey all you feel? March back home in triumph and spread your wings—let’s do this!”

Emilia: “Yes! I think that sounds reaaally wonderful!”

Subaru leapt to his feet and thrust a fist skyward, Emilia following suit. Their raised hands met in a high-five, sparkling eyes turning on Otto.

Overwhelmed by the twin force of two people pierced hardest by “family,” Otto faltered. Roswaal, wearing the air of a sympathetic benefactor, nodded.

Roswaal: “Very well. I shall arrange the time. After all, Otto-kun will be working most diligently for me from now on. Familial understanding is sooo important, I do believe.”

Otto: “There is absolutely no sincerity in that, is there?!”

Otto’s cry rang hollow—alas, not strong enough to overturn the decision of his homecoming.

3

And so, Otto’s vacation—doubling as a trip back to his hometown—was settled in a flash, but…

Otto: “Why, exactly, are you and the others coming along with me, Natsuki-san?”

It was the morning of departure. Having finished readying the dragon carriage, Otto posed the question in a hopeless tone.

His two companions, Subaru and Garfiel, tilted their heads in perfect sync.

Subaru: “Don’t be so cold. What if we let you go alone and then lost contact with you? That’d be bad, right? Plus, I kinda wanna meet your family.”

Otto: “The second part is definitely the real reason. So why is Garfiel coming?”

Garfiel: “I’m the trip’s bodyguard, obviously. Forget my amazin’ self—if somethin’ happened to the Captain, the Royal Selection’d be in trouble. I’m taggin’ along as hired muscle.”

With a thump, Garfiel struck his proud chest. Otto answered with a weary “Haah,” then leaned close to whisper so only Subaru could hear.

Otto: “So… what did you say to talk Garfiel into this?”

Subaru: “Nothing crazy. I just said “bodyguard on a journey” sounds super cool. I mean, doesn’t “yōjinbō” feel way cooler than plain old “escort”?”

Otto: “Hmm… I can’t really relate to that feeling.”

Still, Otto let out an inward sigh of relief; traveling with just these two was an acceptable compromise.

At worst he had feared the entire camp might insist on tagging along—an unlikely but not impossible suggestion coming from that group.

Fortunately, only these two would accompany him. Garfiel’s protection on the road would be welcome. As for what Subaru would contribute… that was anyone’s guess.

Subaru: “I’m the official witness, see? If you turn up alone saying, “I’m working for a Royal-Selection candidate now,” your family’ll never believe you. I’m here to save you from getting branded a liar!”

Subaru was fired up, but Otto already carried a handwritten letter from Roswaal guaranteeing his position and everything else. Subaru’s presence was, strictly speaking, unnecessary. Yet—

Subaru: “…Huh? What’s wrong?”

Otto: “Nothing; I’ve resigned myself. I’m just surprised Beatrice-chan agreed to be separated from you.”

Shaking his head, Otto masked his feelings by shifting the topic.

Ever since sealing their formal contract, Beatrice had been glued to Subaru; they acted together as though she could not bear a moment apart.

The sight was as endearing as a chick following its mother hen, which made it all the more surprising that Subaru had been allowed off on an all-male trip this time.

Subaru: “Well, I’d have loved to bring Beako, but the romance of a laid-back guys-only journey won out—and Beako’s got another job.”

Otto: “Another job… you mean?”

Lifting an eyebrow, Otto turned to Garfiel. The tiger boy clicked his fangs with an “Oh-yep.”

Garfiel: “Granny’s copies—the nameless bunch—there’re twenty-four of ’em. Before teachin’ ’em everythin’ proper, they need their core mana or whatever stabilized. Beako’s the best one for that.”

Otto: “Right, a spirit like Beatrice-chan knows that field better than anyone. Makes sense.”

Twenty-four copies: girls who looked exactly like Ryuzu, born of the Sanctuary’s tangled history. Setting those girls free from their ancient shackles and returning them to everyday life was the dearest wish of both Ryuzu and Beatrice.

Given that, it was perfectly understandable for Beatrice to weigh her dream against traveling with Subaru and choose, tearfully, to stay.

Subaru: “Anyway, everyone else is busy with their own jobs. Just accept this line-up. No glitz, super man-musk, but we’ll have fun all the same!”

Otto: “I don’t mind that, but… Natsuki-san, you seem awfully excited.”

Subaru: “C’mon, an all-guys trip is thrilling! I love Emilia-tan and Beako, sure, but until now it’s been girls, girls, girls. With you and Garfiel on the team, I’m honestly the happiest guy around!”

Subaru flashed a thumbs-up and a sparkle of teeth. Otto scratched his neck; such candid words left no room to turn him down.

Otto: “Garfiel, don’t you want to stay and watch Ryuzu-san’s big project up close?”

Garfiel: “Granny and Sis kicked me out: “Go on, do the Garakwan Waterfall Climb.” …Plus I wanna see the town that was the stage for ‘Silver-Blossom Mayhem.’”

Otto: “Ah, that’s why…”

Hearing Garfiel mumble his true motive, Otto sighed.

Garfiel loved hero tales and old legends. Otto’s hometown, Picoutatte, held several famous stories from decades past—clearly the real draw for him.

Otto: “That makes me feel a little guilty, but…”

Subaru: “Otto, how long you gonna mope? Let’s get going!”

Subaru called from the passenger compartment of the dragon carriage while Otto scratched his head.

They had said their farewells the night before and, considering the route, chosen to depart at dawn. It was merely a short excursion: Otto’s own beloved land dragon would pull the wagon.

Naturally, Subaru’s own Patrasche had protested fiercely, and Otto had apologized profusely to the offended mare in the stables—something Subaru never even noticed.

Otto: “Honestly, some people—some people and some dragons—have no consideration.”

With a weary “good grief,” he pressed a hand to his brow and sighed.

Sighing was an old bad habit of his; he wondered how many he would utter during this journey.

As those thoughts crossed Otto’s mind, only his land dragon, Frufoo, answered with a loud snort of agreement.

4

—The journey of the three men progressed exceedingly smoothly.

The highway linking the cities was well tended, and their land dragon sped along, scenery flying away behind them. Now and again they exchanged nods with passing dragon carriages—an idyllic, peaceful pace of travel.

Subaru: “Riding this dragon carriage with this bunch kinda… reminds me of that wild dash a month ago, y’know…”

Otto: “Wild dash… ah, the time we were racing toward the previous manor. Looking back on it, we were doing some prrretty reckless things then, too.”

The two sat side by side on the driver’s perch as they chatted.

What they were recalling was the Roswaal Manor, assaulted simultaneously during the Sanctuary incident. To prevent the tragedy awaiting at the mansion, Subaru’s group had raced down the road in a dragon carriage.

Save for Patrasche, the lineup now was identical to that ride—quite a nostalgic feeling.

Subaru: “I mean, it’s rare to be riding slowly in Otto’s carriage. Whenever I’m aboard with you, aren’t we usually doing something crazy?”

Otto: “I believe that is less my fault and more a problem with the fellow passengers. …Well, this time no such trouble seems likely, so I am relieved.”

While shifting blame back and forth, Otto idly gazed down the highway.

Otto: “At this rate we will arrive in about ten days… Counting the return, roughly a twenty-day trip.”

Subaru: “Whoa, that sounds like a turn-and-burn. You’re seeing your family after ages—staying a week wouldn’t kill you, right?”

Otto: “That would leave the manor short-handed for nearly a month, and I dread how the work would pile up. Lady Annerose’s butler is helping, apparently, but even so…”

Subaru: “Dude, fretting over work on your vacation? That’s full-speed corporate slave…”

Otto: “It is my nature.”

At Otto’s powerless reply, Subaru gave a wry grin and gazed up at the clear sky.

Thus, the hours of travel and boredom were being consumed in good order. Enjoying the journey exactly as hoped, the easygoing fun wafted a cool breeze through Subaru’s heart.

Subaru: “Still, a solo trip must’ve been rough. Didn’t you ever have nights of tears for company?”

Otto: “Why phrase it like poetry? …Well, loneliness is part and parcel of a traveling merchant’s path. I would be lying if I said I never felt it.”

Staring off into the distant sky, Otto spoke with quiet feeling.

Otto: “However, as you know, I possess a Divine Protection. Thanks to that, I could converse with my partner Frufoo during the journey, so the nights were not that lonely.”

Subaru: “Heh… whoa!”

The land dragon pulling them gave a low whinny the moment Subaru nodded, perfectly timed—like an aizuchi thrown into the conversation.

Subaru: “True, looks like we won’t be as bored as I thought.”

Otto: “Frufoo and I have been together a long time; I no longer find companionable silence awkward.”

With that, Otto’s faint smile held clear trust in the dragon.

Satisfied by the sight, Subaru pondered deeply in the gap left by the conversation.

What he mulled over was an important matter of the trip that even Otto did not know—indeed, not the true purpose, but the second objective behind arranging this journey.

Subaru's hidden aim was, plainly, to advance the relationship between Otto and Garfiel.

Subaru: "Well, "advance" might be the wrong word, but…"

It had been about a month since the two joined the Camp, and in that time Subaru had acutely felt the frustration of the subtle distance Otto and Garfiel kept between them.

Little wonder: in the Sanctuary the pair had clashed head-on. From what Otto claimed, he put up quite a fight despite Garfiel's dominance—Subaru half believed, half doubted.

Regardless, that history left a set space between them.

Subaru and Otto were friends; Subaru and Garfiel were practically brothers. Knowing the good in both, Subaru wanted them to stand with no rift. With the men of the same Camp together, deeper camaraderie could only help—

Subaru: "Yeah, Roswaal aside…!"

Otto: "What's wrong all of a sudden? Did Lord Roswaal do something again?"

Subaru: "Funny you say "again"; shows the trust you've got in him. It's nothing big."

Otto faithfully reacted to the context-less mutter; Subaru laughed it off vaguely. Best if this goal were met quietly, without anyone noticing.

Garfiel: "Yo, weren'cha bad-mouthin' that bastard Roswaal just now?"

Garfiel leaned out from the passenger compartment, planting his upper body atop the driver's seat back and clicking his fangs.

Subaru: "Thought you were napping—what a topic to perk up to."

Garfiel: "You guys're the cold ones. If it's trash talk 'bout him, let me in; I got heaps stored up."

Otto: "I have my doubts about the morality, but it has been a long relationship."

Apparently harboring much pent-up grievance, Garfiel was keen on the Roswaal gossip. Truthfully, bonding over a common enemy was a quick path to human unity.

Subaru: "Guess we'll swallow our tears and cast Roswaal as the villain… Not like he isn't one."

With conscience silenced for the moment, Subaru decided to mix oil and water.

Subaru: "Alright then, I've got a failsafe funny story—"

Garfiel: "Hold it, Captain."

Just as Subaru steeled himself to speak, Garfiel cut in. Thinking he could not wait for a gem of an anecdote, Subaru looked over—only to see Garfiel's gaze fixed not on them, but leftward. There, trees lined the road…

Subaru: "Garfiel?"

Garfiel: "…Somethin's rank. Real stinkin'."

The instant Garfiel said so, Subaru felt gooseflesh race across his body.

Subaru: "Uh…"

Otto: "Frufoo!"

Sensing the same abnormality, Otto urged the dragon on; mighty limbs pounded earth as the carriage shot forward—and in that instant, the forest exploded.

Subaru: “Wha—”

With a blast of wind and roar, the woods burst apart and something leapt onto the highway. It was the very space the carriage had occupied a breath before; had they not sped up, they’d have been swallowed.

Subaru’s eyes widened, fixed on the thing that tried to engulf them.

It looked like a grotesque, writhing mass of flesh.

A mound the size of a small hill—parts black, parts red, parts sheathed in white hide, with tufts of beast-fur sprouting here and there. Limbs—if they could be called that—gouged the ground, not in fours but tens, perhaps twenties.

No discernible head, yet facial organs dotted the mass at random, mismatched in number and size like a game of pin-the-face on a god gone mad.

A monster: a ludicrous god’s fukuwarai made out of bizarre biological parts.

That abomination mounted the highway and gave chase from directly behind.

Subaru: “Dashdashdashdash—!”

Otto: “Wawawawawawawa!”

Subaru, half-deranged, shook Otto’s shoulders violently, but the carriage was already at full speed—no further flight was possible. Behind, the lump of flesh plowed the road, closing faster than their dragon.

Subaru: “It’s faaaast! It’s gaining! What is that thing?!”

Otto: “No idea! Only that getting caught is absolutely bad!”

Subaru: “Don’t hafta tell me… Hey, wait?!”

In the racket on the driver’s seat, Subaru noticed one voice missing.

He glanced back—Garfiel, who should have been behind them, was gone. Searching frantically—

Subaru: "…That idiot!"

Behind the fleeing carriage, Garfiel stood spread-legged in the highway's center.

Fists clenched before his chest, the boy faced the onrushing flesh head-on. The meat-hill barreled on without slowing, intent on flattening the small figure—

Garfiel: "Raaaaaah!!"

Subaru: "No way?!"

With a single roar, Garfiel's strike pulverized the charging mass from below—

Or rather, the ground he stomped erupted upward in a titanic blow. Blessed by the Earth Spirit, Garfiel could bend the very land to his side, letting a single stomp deliver a titanic counter to a foe more than twenty times his size.

Hit by the upheaved earth, the monster's advance halted. Countless limbs dug in as myriad eyeballs writhed, glaring murder at Garfiel.

Garfiel: "What're ya starin' at! Come at me if ya're comin'!"

He jabbed a fist forward, voice like thunder. From the stopped carriage, Subaru looked back at Otto.

Subaru: "Could he be… stupid?"

Otto: "Too soon to relax. The situation's improved, but still…"

At least, Otto judged, it was not an unstoppable natural calamity. Yet its ghastly first impression lingered.

Subaru: "What is that, a witchbeast?"

Otto: “Told you—never seen or heard of it… And the stench is awful.”

“Fishy” had been too mild. A corrosive mix of rot and filth invaded their sinuses; foul juice dripped everywhere from the mass, befouling the earth each second.

Subaru: “Otto, how ’bout using your silver tongue to ask it to leave nicely?”

Otto: “Plenty of mouths, but I doubt any head understands words. Ha-Ha.”

With a dry smile Otto rejected negotiation. Truth be told, Subaru felt the same. If words failed, only Garfiel’s brawn remained.

Garfiel: “That’s right. Your opponent is me. Silver-Blossom Mayhem, Unclouded—gonna bust it loose!”

Leaning forward, he beckoned provocatively. Whether it felt provoked was unknown, but the flesh mass slowly undulated toward Garfiel—

Garfiel: “Huh?”

Garfiel’s green eyes widened, mouth agape upward.

The mass vaulted clean over his head, bounding back into the forest whence it came, rolling furiously deeper, deeper within. On innumerable limbs it was far faster than running—soon it vanished into the woods.

Subaru: “Eh? It ran?”

Otto: “It ran… yes.”

Stunned by the unexpected retreat, Subaru and Otto traded bewildered voices. Surprise one: it chose to flee. Surprise two: it had the wits to flee.

Most shocked of all, though, was the fired-up Garfiel.

Garfiel: “Don’t yaaaaa screw with me! Ya pick a fight ’n run off?!”

He stomped the ground, damning the cowardice. Left unchecked he looked ready to dive into the forest after it.

Subaru: “Hold it, hold it, calm down, Garfiel! If it’s gone, fine—leave it!”

Garfiel: “But, Captain! That thing’s bad news if we let it go!”

Subaru: “Yeah, I don’t doubt that, but…”

With Garfiel breathing hard against him, Subaru mulled their options. The creature was clearly dangerous; if it attacked travelers indiscriminately, casualties would mount. Yet chasing it down carried its own risk.

Otto: “Let us head to the nearby town of Pappelt.”

Otto offered a lifeline. At the unfamiliar name Subaru tilted his head.

Subaru: “Pappelt? That’s a town, right? Why there?”

Otto: “Our fear is lack of information on that creature. That’s why neither you nor Garfiel could agree. So—let’s gather information.”

Garfiel: “Ya got some lead that says we can learn in that Pappelt place?”

Otto: “Something that conspicuous? At least one or two sightings must be on record around here. If this was the first, our luck is abysmal.”

The thought was frightening, but Subaru shook it off. Otto’s reasoning held.

Subaru: “I’m in. Not warning people about that monster’d be basic apathy. Let’s head for Pappelt.”

He nodded while surveying the shattered forest. One concern remained—

Subaru: “This throws our plan to visit Otto’s home a bit outta whack.”

Otto: “Ah—about that.”

Scratching his head over the itinerary, Subaru saw Otto pull a bitter face. Furrowing his brow, Subaru listened as Otto slumped his shoulders.

Otto: “I kept meaning to say… but our destination this time isn’t Picoutatte. It’s, well, Pappelt.”

Subaru: “Hah?”

Perplexed words left Subaru; beside him Garfiel too growled low, snout wrinkling.

Garfiel: “Oi, that ain’t what ya told us. I heard we were goin’ to Picoutatte…”

Otto: “Indeed, which is why it was hard to bring up with you. Since we have come this far, I must confess…”

Seeing storm clouds gather around Garfiel, Otto exhaled a long sigh. After a brief hesitation—

Otto: “The truth is, back home, there is a hitman after my life.”

5

The explanation of the tinder Otto carried was more or less finished on the road to Pappelt.

All three men had squeezed themselves onto the driver’s seat, Otto in the middle for a forced excuse session; when Subaru at last heard it through, his impression was—

Subaru: “You’ve got plenty to say about other people, but you can’t talk about yourself at all, huh.”

Otto: “Eh? That is going too far, surely. I am not that strange.”

Subaru: “Don’t call me strange! Getting dragged into someone else’s love mess by false accusation, winding up target-marked by a hitman—if that ain’t trouble-maker material, what is?!”

He laid into Otto, who remained blissfully unaware of his own disposition.

Otto’s tale, put simply, was a man-and-woman mess he had stirred up back home—no, a mess someone else stirred that splashed on him.

Suspected of involvement with a certain woman, young Otto had used his Divine Protection of “Soul of Language” to clear his name by exposing that the woman was eight-timing. But she happened to be the daughter of a local notable, so—bang, he was a wanted man.

Lighting the fuse of his own bomb, he ended up hunted.

Subaru: “Listening to that, feels like you became a traveling merchant because you had to.”

Otto: “How can you say such a thing! I chose the merchant’s path of my own will, for my dream! True, the departure was unforeseen, but what matters is the result, not the process.”

Garfiel: “Ya got no results, tho. Ain’t that “wake up an’ you’re in Ramba”?”

Otto: “Nnnghh…”

Otto groaned at the unwanted turn, while Garfiel only clicked his tongue. Having looked forward to Picoutatte, Garfiel’s disappointment and irritation were enormous.

Given the circumstances, Subaru had quickly forgiven Otto, but—

Subaru: “At this rate we’ll lose the trip’s first objective and watch the second one crumble…”

No greeting Otto’s family, and instead carving a fatal rift between Otto and Garfiel—the journey could end like that.

Emilia: “Enjoy yourselves reaaally lots and bring home loads of stories, okay?”

Emilia’s words on the eve of departure flashed across Subaru’s mind.

She had been fresh from her bath, clad in a negligée, impossibly cute—but that was not the point. Well, it mattered, but the important point now was that they would betray Emilia’s expectations like this.

Subaru: “Can’t have that—my heart would die!”

Garfiel: “Captain, what’ve ya been mutterin’ this whole time?”

The imagined sight of sad-faced Emilia hurt his chest; Subaru looked up with renewed resolve. Addressed by Garfiel, he shook his head.

Subaru: “Just confirming where I stand. Anyway, let’s fix the immediate issue. Otto, about that Pappelt… Why was that our destination in the first place?”

Even without the flesh mass, Otto had aimed for that town. Asked for the true reason, Otto gave the reins a light tug.

Otto: “Simple. My younger brother lives there. As I said, I cannot return to Picoutatte, but I can meet my brother.”

Subaru: “So the original goal is sorta met. Fine by me.”

Accepting the explanation, Subaru murmured, “A brother, huh,” then—

Subaru: “Roswaal called you the second son, right? How many siblings?”

Otto: “Three. I’m in the middle. I’ve always troubled the family, so honestly I’m scared stiff this time too.”

Subaru: “Always, huh. I get it.”

Otto: “What d’you mean, “you get it”! What exactly do you get?!”

Surely Otto’s trouble magnet had long tormented his kin.

While they talked, the rumble of wheels changed; the carriage left the maintained highway for an even firmer surface—sign that a town was near. Soon a wooden gate came into sight.

Subaru: “So this is Pappelt… Pretty heavily fortified.”

Facing the gate, that was his first thought.

A stout log palisade ringed the town, watchtowers dotted along it—defenses unmistakably strict.

Garfiel: “More a fort than a town.”

Otto: “Strange. Two years ago it was nowhere near this strict.”

Subaru flinched at the grim air; Otto frowned at the change. Paying them no mind, Garfiel jerked his chin ahead.

Garfiel: “Yakkin’ here won’t help. ‘Sides, looks like we got a greeter.”

Indeed, a figure appeared on the watchtower. An ordinary townsman, yet visibly tense even from afar.

Guard: “T-Travelers! Pappelt is in an extremely dangerous state right now! I recommend you turn back immediately!”

At the trembling shout, the three exchanged looks.

Subaru: “Ah—thanks for the warning! But we’ve business inside, and we need to make a report too. Can you open the gate?”

Guard: “Eh… I-I wasn’t told how to answer that…”

Subaru: “Uugh, frustrating.”

Seeing the man flounder for an un-manualled response, Otto raised a hand.

Otto: “May I? I’m the elder brother of Regin Suwen, the town physician. Relatives of residents should be allowed entry, no?”

Guard: “Doctor Regin’s…?”

At the familiar name, the man peered hard at Otto—up and down for a moment—

Guard: “Ah, you do resemble him. Very well, come in.”

Subaru: “That’s all it takes?”

Otto: “It is. Say no more and accept the invitation.”

Clamping Subaru’s mouth, Otto smiled at the guard.

The gate creaked open, and they rolled the carriage inside.

Garfiel: “Huh, inside ain’t that different from the Sanctuary.”

Subaru: “The depopulation wave’s got to be lighter than there, surely.”

Looking about, Garfiel muttered; Subaru, while retorting, felt an odd discomfort. The town lacked vitality grossly out of proportion to its size and population. Older folks dominated, hope thin on the ground—neck-and-neck with the Sanctuary, which was… bad.

Subaru: “Why’s the mood so dark…?”

Otto: “First, we should find someone informed. Or at least tell whoever’s in charge about that flesh mass—”

They were discussing the next step when—

Frufoo gave a low whinny. Patrasche almost never voiced herself; likewise, Otto’s dragon rarely called. All three turned at once.

Beside Frufoo stood a single young man.

Young Man: “Hey, Frufoo. Glad you’re well. Grown even bigger, haven’t you?”

He tickled the dragon's neck and ears with slender fingers. Gray hair tied at the nape, a threadbare white coat, tall and lanky, a gentle face, something like a cigarette between his lips—a look somehow familiar.

At that, Otto leapt from the carriage.

Otto: "Regin! Long time no see, it's me!"

Smiling, he ran to the youth—so the man was Regin Suwen, Otto's brother. Younger in years, yet exhaustion etched his side profile beyond age.

Regin, hearing Otto's call, sighed lightly and—

Regin: "Open up now, Frufoo… Mm, nutrition looks good. They're feeding you properly. I'm relieved."

Otto: "Uh, um, hello? Regin? It's me, your brother?"

Regin: "Haha, don't lick me that much. If you get Frufoo's scent on me, the other dragons'll wonder what's up, right? Ease up, okay?"

Otto: "Hey, Regin! That attitude is unacceptable! Treating your brother like dirt… Are you mad? Because I never wrote? You are mad, aren't you?!"

Otto's plaintive cry rose, but Regin ignored him, continuing his bonding with Frufoo. Watching, Subaru crossed his arms and nodded.

Subaru: "Kinda get where he ranks in his family now."

And so the farcical little drama continued, to Subaru's rather fresh enjoyment.

6

Regin: "Once again, welcome all the way out here. I'm Regin Suwen—thank you for looking after my good-for-nothing elder brother."

Seated at last in the clinic's reception room, Regin served tea and smiled as he spoke.

At the introduction Subaru glanced toward Otto, who had been relegated to a corner of the room.

Subaru: “Good-for-nothing elder brother,” huh.”

Otto: “What’s with that face? For the record, my heart is already in tatters.”

Garfiel: “Ain’t much to brag about, ya know.”

Garfiel snorted while Otto tried to put on a brave front, sipping the tea.

They were in the Suwen Clinic near Pappelt’s front gate—Regin’s own practice. This reception room, part of the living quarters, was neat and white throughout, exuding the cleanliness of a hospital. One look at the orderly interior and Regin’s gentle features made it plain they were brothers.

(For the record, the little farce in which the younger brother ignored the newly reunited elder lasted a full ten minutes before Regin's irritation cooled enough to invite them inside.)

Subaru: "I'm Natsuki Subaru, and this is Garfiel Tinsel. We're… coworkers of your brother? Does that describe us?"

Otto: "Coworkers" will do for now."

If it were just Subaru he might have said "friends," but Garfiel complicated things—especially since the tiger-boy was still brooding over Otto's destination switch.

Subaru: "Still, a merchant family's son becoming a doctor—that's quite a path. Didn't you ever think of following your two elder brothers into the trade?"

Regin: "Well, no. The eldest kindly took over the family business, and the second showed me exactly what not to do with one's life, so I decided to live sensibly."

Subaru: "Perfect negative example—looks like you're a pretty good big brother, Otto."

Otto: "You can't possibly mean that?!"

Regin's barbs at Otto were razor-sharp—proof enough of the worry he'd caused. Otto: guilty.

Subaru: "Anyway, enough about our "good-for-nothing" Otto. Let's get to the point."

Regin: "Right—the lump of meat you encountered… the Earth Spider, yes?"

Straightening his posture, Subaru nodded; Regin lowered his chin and spoke the term.

Earth Spider—apparently that was the creature's name, learned only because Otto, driven to desperation while being ignored, had blurted it out during his recap.

Regin lowered his eyes, drew a green stick—a plant stem—from the breast of his white coat, and set it between his teeth. What had looked like a cigarette was in fact that stem. When he bit its tip between his molars a faint sloshing sounded, and a fresh fragrance —almost minty—filled the room.

Regin: “Stem of mimir. Calms animals—and works on people too.”

Subaru: “If it’s non-addictive, sign me up. Definitely a vet’s touch.”

Regin: “Definitely a vet, eh…”

Regin gave a wry smile; he was indeed a veterinarian by trade. Sensing a shade of darkness in that smile, Subaru frowned.

Subaru: “Sorry. I’m just… frustrated at being useless lately. Over this Earth Spider stuff.”

Garfiel: “Spill it, then. “Cross the Albis River”, right?”

Regin exhaled.

Regin: “…The Earth Spider was first sighted about three months ago. A townsman who’d gone into the forest reported a disturbing lump of flesh—child-sized at the time.”

The account was dismissed as illusion or mistake. Had a crowd gone in to exterminate it then, things might have turned out differently.

Regin: “While it was left alone, sightings gradually increased. And more than that—the Earth Spider—still unnamed then—began to cause actual damage.”

Subaru: “Damage? You mean people were attacked?”

Regin: “No. It preyed on land dragons and livestock.”

Pastured dragons and household animals began falling victim, and the creature's existence became undeniable once its feeding was seen.

Regin: "It swallowed a land dragon whole. By then it was already larger than a house."

Otto: "Swallowed… Then its grotesque shape is because—"

Regin: "It seems to incorporate whatever it eats into its own body."

Regin's polite tone slipped only in answering Otto, but revulsion outweighed noticing the lapse. The thing grew by absorbing its prey.

Subaru: "So what is it? A witchbeast?"

Regin: "We have no idea. At that size, of course its horn—if it has one—isn't visible; it could even have been broken off. If it is a witchbeast with a broken horn, the damage so far was man-made, but we have no culprit."

He raised both hands in defeat, yet his lip-chewing frustration bled through.

Subaru: "And the victims—land dragons and stock—that's all your field."

Regin: "Clinic's practically closed; I spend my days cleaning while grinding my teeth."

With a mint-scented sigh, Regin spat out the chewed stem. It missed the waste-basket and rolled across the floor.

Subaru: "So the heavy stockade and gate are a response to that Earth Spider."

Regin: "On the lord's orders, more or less. They even built watchtowers, but as you saw it's all amateur. Besides, the Earth Spider's hardly going to stroll in through the gate."

Garfiel: "That's for sure… but still."

Garfiel, listening, clacked his fangs and slouched deep into the sofa, tossing his boots up onto the table.

Subaru: “Hey—mind your manners, Garfiel.”

Garfiel: “What’s the point o’ manners, Captain? ’Stead of building fences ’n whining, there’s somethin’ they could do.”

His sharp stare fixed on Regin.

Regin: “And what might that be?”

Garfiel: “Simple. Get everyone in town, march into the forest, an’ smash the Earth Spider. If that ain’t enough, hire mercs. Quickest way there is.”

Regin: “…!”

Regin’s cheek twitched at the blunt suggestion.

Otto: “Garfiel, don’t make it sound so easy.”

Otto answered in his brother’s stead, gesturing out the window.

Otto: “Ordinary people can’t face an enemy that huge. All they can do is fortify and brace for attack—it isn’t easy to gather fighters.”

Garfiel: “Nice excuse for doin’ nothin’. What d’you know anyway, brother-boy? How d’you know the town’s givin’ it their all?”

Otto: “Because Regin’s here. If my brother’s involved, there’s no way they’re not doing their utmost.”

Rising with the heat of his words, Otto made even Garfiel falter. His proof was merely that his family was trying—but even so—

Subaru: “Give it up, Garfiel. Otto’s right—this is all the town can muster.”

Clicking his tongue, Garfiel swallowed further argument. With this group, the word “family” carried heavy weight; that was clear from the start of the journey.

Seeing him back down, Regin exhaled deep relief.

Regin: “Y-Your coworkers are terrifying, brother. I’ve met many people, but they don’t look like merchants at all.”

Subaru: “Ah, we are Otto’s colleagues, but not in the travelling-merchant sense—”

Otto: “W-W-Wait! Hold on, please!”

Otto frantically cut Subaru off, then cast about the room as if remembering something.

Otto: “The clinic aside, this room is very tidy, isn’t it? You used to be terrible at cleaning, Regin—you’ve grown.”

Regin: “There isn’t much difference between us there. And, well, truth be told, the neatness is thanks to someone who helps me.”

Subaru: “Someone helping?”

Otto’s clumsy topic-shift didn’t bother Regin, who answered plainly.

Subaru: “Not to pry, but that’s fine by you?”

Regin: “Brother’s stories always go off the rails. Um, well…”

Subaru: “Hm? Is it about your Divine Protection? Otto told us, and Garfiel and I both know, so no need to hide it.”

Regin: “Eh…”

Eyes wide, Regin turned to Otto.

Regin: “You told them?”

Otto: “Ehh, it sort of happened along the way.”

Subaru: “That sounds pretty reluctant…”

Otto’s half-hearted tone earned a pout from Subaru, but Regin’s shock dwarfed their byplay.

Garfiel: “Oi, that kid brother o’ yours okay? I’m gettin’ worried seein’ him so spooked.”

Otto: “Just leave Natsuki-san as he is. Really, it’s fine.”

Something in Otto’s calm gaze sapped further argument. The reception room lapsed into a lull—until…

???: “—Doctor Regin, are you in?”

A jaunty knock and a bell-like woman’s voice came from beyond the door.

The three visitors exchanged looks; the voice belonged to no one they knew. Regin, however—

Regin: “Ah, yes, I’m here. Come in.”

The door opened slowly to admit a beautiful woman.

A proud figure with striking red hair tied behind her head and resolute eyes; her posture straight, her feminine curves clear. Surprise melted quickly into a charming smile.

Woman: “Oh—I’m sorry, Doctor. I assumed you’d be idle again today and… eh?”

She began an apologetic grin toward Regin’s guests—only for both words and expression to freeze, wide eyes staring at the man who had just turned from Regin’s side—

Woman: “Number Two?”

Otto: “Miss Marone?”

Her startled call overlapped with Otto’s gasp of recognition.

An unexpected reunion with an unforeseen acquaintance sent the tale rolling in a new, unanticipated direction—

For now, let the surprise of that meeting linger, carrying us into the next act.

7

—Southern town of Pappelt, inside Regin Suwen's veterinary clinic.

In one of its rooms, a man and a woman stared at each other, bodies frozen in surprise.

Locked in place were Otto and the woman called Marone. Subaru, quick-eyed as ever, noticed how the woman's large, round eyes welled not only with shock but with other emotions as well.

By contrast, Otto's face showed nothing but astonishment—hardly entertaining.

Subaru: "Nice little reunion in an unexpected place, but how long are you two gonna stay petrified?"

His prompt shattered the tense silence; the pair seemed to remember how to breathe and their expressions finally moved.

Otto: "R-Right. I was just a bit surprised. Long time no see, Miss Maro—"

Marone: "Number Two—!"

Otto: "Uwaaah?!"

Smiles failed to align with actions. Otto, who had begun a gentle greeting, suddenly had to catch the leaping Marone, bending backward so far it was a miracle he did not topple. His waist and knees were bent to the danger point, Marone clinging to him all the while.

Garfiel: "Huh. Didn't think he'd hold out—color me impressed."

Otto: "Is that all you've got to say?! H-Hey, M-Miss Marone! A-A-Ah, s-sorry… If this keeps up we're both going to fall…"

Marone: "Number Two, Number Two, Number Two—! You, you impossible man, honestly, you're just—!"

Otto: “She’s not listening! I really am about to—about to—”

Garfiel folded his arms with no intention of helping; Marone was far too swept up in emotion to notice. Otto, lone warrior, could only sweat.

Subaru, watching the struggle, set a hand to his chin.

Subaru: “Can’t quite grasp the whole picture, but judging from her reaction you two are pretty close, huh? Even I can’t misread that. Looks like—”

Subaru: “A spring squall’s blowing in…!”

Otto: “Whatever dumb thing you’re muttering, could you please help me?!”

Otto’s shrill cry finally spurred Subaru to step forward. Behind him—

Regin: “…Number Two?”

Regin’s low, curious murmur reached none of them in the room.

8

Marone: “Um—sorry for getting carried away. I’m Marone Lisbon. I help out Doctor Regin here at the clinic.”

After the excitement had calmed, Subaru’s party took time to re-introduce themselves.

Seated on the reception-room sofa and watching Marone’s gentle smile, Subaru tucked his chin.

Subaru: “Hard to believe that’s the same person who was bouncing around a moment ago.”

Otto: “Natsuki-san.”

Marone, cheeks reddening in embarrassment, cast a glance at Subaru; Otto shot Subaru a glare while shielding her.

Otto: “Please stop teasing Miss Marone the way you do at the mansion. Beatrice-chan isn’t here to keep an eye on you.”

Subaru: “Yeah, my bad—though why’s Beako the chaperone? I’m the one who looks after her, right? Hey, Garfiel?”

Garfiel: “Looks-wise the Captain is, sure—but with Granny like that it’s hard t’answer.”

Subaru’s appeal for support failed; Garfiel, grandson of a girl-bodied elder, was no ally here.

Subaru: “Guess we’ll leave who outranks who till the mansion decides…”

Otto: “Yes, yes; just don’t make trouble.”

Letting Otto’s weary sigh slide, Subaru backed off. When the conversation paused, Regin—chewing a second mimir stem—spoke up.

Regin: “I can guess, but… You two knew each other already, right?”

Marone: “Y-Yes, Doctor Regin. Remember I told you? About that awful time in my hometown, when—”

Choosing her words, she glanced at Otto; seeing Subaru and the others’ questioning faces, she mustered a brave smile.

Marone: “A well-born boy in town had teamed up with a band of bandits hiding nearby. In exchange for them not raiding the town, he’d periodically hand over girls to be sold as slaves.”

Garfiel: “That’s “bad deeds can’t hide on the wind,” ain’t it?”

The vile tale made Garfiel bare his fangs in disgust; Subaru felt the same, but now grasped the link between the pair.

Subaru: “So Otto slaughtered the bandits bare-handed. Got it.”

Otto: “Of course not! What on earth do you think of me?!”

Subaru: “Combat-ready civil-affairs officer.”

Otto: “Only you call me that—and you know I’m not that strong!”

Denying while hinting at some rough-and-tumble, Otto rebuffed Subaru. Marone covered her mouth with a small laugh.

Marone: “No, no. Number Two was caught as a bonus on the way—after I’d been taken. I was Slave Number One, so—”

Subaru: “Otto became Slave Number Two, hence your calling him “Number Two.”

With that, their circumstances were finally clear, and Subaru mused:

Subaru: “So… you get trussed up by bad guys once or twice a year?”

Otto: “Can’t deny it—and I resent my merchant’s life for it…”

Though their “first meeting” of one loop lay erased, Subaru had first rescued Otto from the Witch Cult. Truly, Otto the kidnap magnet.

Otto: “I chose the merchant’s road knowing it was risky.”

Regin: “Sorry, but the risks you face don’t seem normal to me.”

Otto: “Et tu, Regin…”

His brother’s comment crushed Otto’s attempted self-defense. Marone pressed a hand to her shapely chest.

Marone: “Anyway, I and Number Two wound up slaves. But right before we were sold, the bandits lost control of their dragon carriage on a rough road and plunged into a ravine. Only me, Number Two, and his land dragon survived, and we parted vowing to live bravely. That’s my story till now.”

She ended with a polite “thank you for listening.” Her narrative almost drew instinctive applause. Still—

Subaru: “Bandits missing a turn by a cliff, huh…”

Pretty convenient, Subaru thought, glancing at Otto. Otto pressed a finger to his lips and winked—creepy. Clearly he’d had a hand in the bandits’ fate. He was sparing Marone the burden—or was too shy for gratitude.

Garfiel: “Never thought ya’d meet again out here.”

Otto: “Indeed. I never imagined Miss Marone would be with Regin.”

A curious bond, sure—but Subaru’s take was different. If it’s chance, isn’t it also fate?

Looking again, the two matched well in age and impression.

Since a month earlier Subaru had advanced his own relationships; feeling like a “human-relations pro,” he slipped into matchmaker mode.

Subaru: “You two must have lots to catch up on. Why not talk outside, bring Frufoo too? Don’t mind us.”

Otto: “…Why are you talking like that?”

Subaru: “Go on, go on!”

His busybody act sped along; hearing Frufoo’s name, Marone brightened—“Number Two’s dragon’s here?”—sealing the deal.

Subaru (aside): “Heh-Heh, perfect. Time to watch the fireworks…”

Garfiel: “What was that dumb play, Captain? What’re ya schemin’?”

Subaru wagged a finger.

Subaru: “That, my friend, is called adult consideration.”

Regin: “Feels more like nosy meddling to me…”

Subaru: “Pipe down! You’re always—oh, wrong brother.”

Realizing his mix-up, Subaru bit back his retort; the brothers’ voices were alike. A thought struck him: sending Marone away—how did Regin feel? Would this spark some sibling melodrama? His worry came late.

Subaru: “S-So, Regin—what kind of adult do you want to be?”

Regin: “What’s with that clumsy probing? My life’s goal is exactly what you see, Natsuki-san.”

“San” and all—he was very much Otto’s brother. Leaning on the wall, Regin gazed out the window toward the stable where Frufoo stood, Marone hugging the dragon while Otto watched.

Regin: “I owe my brother. He deserves happiness.”

His voice held a faint, tragic shade. Subaru and Garfiel exchanged looks.

Subaru: “Gonna ask straight: what’s your relationship with Marone?”

Regin: “—A veterinary doctor and his helper. Nothing more.”

Unsmiling, Regin answered. Subaru put a hand to his chest.

Subaru: “Oh, good—what a relief! I thought I’d stepped on a landmine…”

Regin dropped the mimir stem from his mouth; Garfiel caught it.

Garfiel: “Here—didn’t hit the floor.”

Regin: “Ah—th-thank you…”

Taking it back, he bit down again; minty scent filled the room as he pressed a hand to his brow—the spitting image of Otto.

Regin: “As expected of Brother’s friends… hard to grasp, all of you…”

He sighed, fragrant and weary.

Marone: “There, there, good boy. Do you remember me? Thank you for saving me back then—”

Frufoo: “I remember, young lady. Who would have thought we’d meet in a place like this—what a coincidence.”

Wrapping her arms around the ground dragon’s thick neck, Marone poured both words and an embrace into her gratitude. Behind her Otto watched as his beloved Frufoo rubbed his nose against her.

Thanks to the Divine Protection of the Soul of Language, Otto could follow their exchange perfectly. Happily, the feelings between the two were mutual; no interpreter would be needed.

Otto: “I never did tell Marone the truth about my Divine Protection, after all.”

Scratching his cheek with a finger, Otto recalled their very first meeting.

By and large, the tale he had given in the reception room covered everything, yet one detail lay hidden in his own chest: he had lied about the nature of his Protection.

At the very least he had not confessed to Marone that his gift was the Divine Protection of the Soul of Language. That was a survival tactic anyone blessed with such a gift learned naturally.

Honestly, even if Marone found out, nothing bad would happen—but the awkwardness of having lied on purpose lingered. If possible, he would rather steer the conversation away from it.

And yet—

Otto: “What on earth is Natsuki-san scheming…?”

Subaru’s affected tone and pushiness, driving him and Marone outside, bothered Otto.

Reading other people’s faces was his trade; a man harboring an ulterior motive stood out at a glance. Subaru’s was the face of someone with a shallow plot.

That shallowness was the problem.

Otto: “I could ignore it, but with Regin and Marone here I’d rather not let him do something stupid that makes them worry…”

Marone: “You’re making a hard face. Something on your mind? You look like someone with plenty of worries.”

Turning back to the brooding Otto, Marone spoke. Pressing her cheek to Frufoo’s face, those clear eyes and candid words drew a wry smile from him.

Marone was perceptive and stout-hearted; even on the verge of being sold into slavery she had remained dignified—a woman most admirable.

Marone: “Number Two? Why are you smiling?”

Otto: “Oh, nothing. It’s just funny seeing you get along so well with my Frufoo. Working with Regin aside, have you always loved ground dragons this much?”

Marone: “If you mean “from the start,” then no. I only grew to love them thanks to this boy.”

At Otto’s casual remark, Marone gently stroked Frufoo’s thick neck. Her fingers hit every spot just right, and the dragon’s breath quivered with pleasure.

Marone: “Remember, when those bandits were about to throw us into the ravine, this boy shook them off. I never forget grudges, but I don’t forget favors either. And so—”

Otto: “…So you help at a veterinary clinic where you can care for ground dragons?”

Marone: “I actually thought of going all the way to Flanders, the so-called City of Ground Dragons. But, well, that felt a bit too far.”

Otto: “—?”

The intent behind her words was hard to grasp; Otto frowned.

Seeing him, Marone dropped her shoulders in frustration.

Marone: “Number Two, you were peddling near my hometown of Gineb, right? If I went too far away, the chance we might meet again would disappear.”

Otto: “A-Ah—ah…”

Marone: “What kind of reaction is that?”

She laughed at his slack-jawed answer, while Otto, facing her smile head-on, was utterly at a loss.

Otto: “…It’s a lovely thought, but you didn’t have to cling to such a slender thread. You had every right to choose full freedom.”

Marone: “If freedom is the currency needed to do what I love, I spent it on this—and I won the bet. Praise me more.”

Otto: “When you put it that way… yes, this one’s my defeat.”

She thrust out her ample chest; Otto lowered his head in surrender.

Only, if he could add one thing to that surrender—

Otto: “Still, what comes of meeting me? Frufoo aside, our survival was pure happenstance—”

Marone: “—Number Two.”

Her serious, taut voice cut off his self-deprecating excuse; Otto could only fall silent.

Marone’s red hair swayed in the warm breeze. Staring straight at him, she said:

Marone: “I’m not stupid. I know it wasn’t an accident—and I know there was no bounty on those bandits. I know, Number Two.”

Otto: “…Ah.”

He looked to the sky, unsure what to say.

Using the Divine Protection of the Soul of Language, he had sent the bandits plummeting into the ravine. Afterwards he'd claimed they carried a reward, handed Marone part of his stash, and told her to use it for her future before they parted.

Otto had thought he'd pulled it off unseen, but—

Marone: "Your follow-through was sloppy. Show-off. If you're going to show off, do it in front of the woman."

Otto: "Technically I was in front of a woman…"

Marone: "Yet you didn't tell me. Was someone else there?"

Otto: "Uh, well, Frufoo was…"

Frufoo: "And now you drag me into it, sir!"

Dragged into a poor excuse, Frufoo whinnied low in protest. Marone widened her eyes, pointed at the dragon, and asked:

Marone: "I think he's on my side. How about that?"

Otto: "…No comment."

The more he spoke, the worse it got. Otto, proud of his silver tongue of late, felt his nose broken.

Seeing him so deflated, Marone sighed in exasperation—when a sharp voice cut in from the side.

???: "Lady Marone!"

The force of it made Otto twitch; Marone, equally startled, turned toward the voice—and her cheeks tightened.

The uncharacteristic expression was caused by a figure striding their way: a short, wiry young man with a keen face.

Lightly equipped yet girded with a longsword at his waist, bow in one hand and quiver on his back—he came armed for war. The sight stunned Otto; in the space that took, the youth reached Marone.

Youth: “The lookouts say the Earth Spider appeared—true? Then why have you not sounded the alarm and gathered the townsfolk in the hall? Do you even understand the procedure?”

Marone: “Uh, w-well, about the Earth Spider…”

Youth: “Your sense of danger is lacking—or perhaps you lack awareness altogether? Until now this town was peaceful and uneventful. Yet the moment outsiders, you, arrived, this happens. How do you account for that?”

His rapid-fire accusations drowned Marone’s reply. Beaten down by the barrage, she fell silent.

Seeing her mute, the youth’s expression grew more severe.

Youth: “Silent now, are we? Counting on men like Doctor Regin to shield you? I suppose you’ve been spoiled your whole life.”

Otto: “—That is far enough.”

He could stomach no more. Stepping before Marone, Otto faced the youth head-on.

The youth looked puzzled—apparently Otto had truly been invisible to him until then. Whether impulsive or narrow-minded, his insults to Marone were intolerable.

Youth: “Who are you? By what authority do you stand there?”

Otto: “I didn’t know one needed authority to help a friend. And since you also seem to have opinions about my younger brother, I believe I have brotherly authority to ask in detail.”

Matching the sharpness of the youth’s tone, Otto answered. Realizing the barbs, the youth stepped back, eyeing Otto and Marone in turn.

Youth: “Inviting outsiders at such a time—do you grasp the gravity of the situation at all?”

With a sigh he shook his head in dismay.

Youth: “I am Bungam Eastern, knight dispatched by Lord Cerlein, liege of this region. And you are?”

Otto: “Surprised you can hold a conversation.”

Bungam: “Surprised-you-can-hold-a-conversation,” eh? Unusual name.”

Arms folded, face solemn, Bungam’s reply made Otto narrow his eyes. Bungam tilted his head.

Bungam: “What is it, Mister Surprised? May I ask your reason for coming to this town?”

Otto: “I appreciate your eagerness to proceed but… well, he is like this, you see?”

Confirming Bungam’s stubborn mis-naming, Otto glanced at Marone; she nodded with a troubled face.

Marone: “Bungam was sent after the Earth Spider began appearing. He’s the one who put up the palisade and watchtowers.”

Otto: “I see. As the lord’s knight he’s done what he should…”

His sense of danger and duty could not be faulted. Against lesser witchbeasts or bandits, the defenses would work.

The question was how well they would fare against that colossal Earth Spider.

Otto: “If I may ask—have you seen the Earth Spider yourself, Sir Bungam?”

Bungam: “Hmph. I would rather be the one asking, but very well. As it happens I have yet to lay eyes upon it. No doubt the creature senses the difference in might. Faced with me, it would be helpless.”

Though he admitted “no,” Bungam puffed his chest with confidence. Whether warranted or not, Otto could not dismiss it outright; after all, the Earth Spider had fled from Garfiel.

Otto: “Then, Sir Bungam, to the first question: what brings me to Pappelt?”

Otto: “…On our journey we encountered the creature. We came to the nearest town seeking information.”

Bungam: “Oh! Then you—no, you, sir, are the one who warned us of the Earth Spider’s appearance! My apologies.”

His attitude softened at once; seizing Otto’s hands, he bowed repeatedly. Startled, Otto listened.

Bungam: “I assumed you were here to take Lady Marone away… alas, my hopes and wishes ran away with me.”

Otto: “…You seem awfully harsh toward Marone. May I ask why?”

Still holding Otto’s hands, Bungam composed his face.

Bungam: “Perhaps you should ask her heart?”

The sharp look he had yet to show, and those words, drew a gasp behind them.

Knowing a thorn had struck true in Marone’s heart, Otto tightened his grip on Bungam’s hands and started to swing him toward the ground—when a loud voice rang out above.

Subaru: “Gooo, Garfiel!!”

Garfiel: “Oryaaah!!”

Before Otto could throw, a vigorous shout split the sky.

A plume of smoke roared up in front of the stable where the dragon carriage was tied.

A cloud of dust billowed thickly, and in its very center Otto spotted a familiar back, letting out a weary sigh.

Otto: “What on earth are you two doing all of a sudden?”

Garfiel, rising from the haze with a thuggish scowl: “Hah? I only did it ’cause the Captain told me to. ’Sides, ain’t your fault for lettin’ some weirdo pick a fight with ya?”

Coughing behind his sleeve, Otto glanced down at Bungam, whom he had yanked to the ground.

Bungam, flat on his back and blinking: “Wh-What happened…?”

Otto felt a small relief—at least the clash of tempers would not explode further.

Subaru (dashing up, thumb raised): “Yo, Otto, you okay? Close one —but your cavalry’s here!”

He noticed the prone Bungam and muttered, “Aw, missed.”

Otto: “Missed?! Subaru, Garfiel—what’s with the instant hostility?”

Subaru: “You looked like he was hassling you from afar. Marone had a pained face, and that guy’s face ticked me off.”

Otto: “Depending on which of those is your real reason, I’ll either thank you or be offended!”

Subaru: “They’re all real. Anyway, who’s the stiff?”

Now that the joking tone had drained from Subaru’s voice, Otto sighed and gestured toward the man on the ground.

Otto: “A knight dispatched by the local lord. He’s supposedly in charge of dealing with the Earth Spider.”

Subaru (eyeing the garb): “Knight? In that get-up and with that face? Really?”

Garfiel: “Captain, ya ain’t one t’talk. Look at yer get-up.”

Indeed, Subaru’s trademark tracksuit was hardly knightly attire, though he was a knight in name.

Otto: “Anyway—Marone!”

The chaos had pushed her from his mind. Otto turned; Marone stood clear of the dust, Regin supporting her.

Regin: “Marone, are you all right?”

Marone: “I’m fine, Doctor. Just… surprised.”

Regin bit down hard on his mimir stem, a fresh scent sweeping the dust aside; calm returned to Marone’s face—and, it seemed, to Bungam’s as well.

Bungam (springing up): “Wh-What? Why was I lying down?”

Marone: “Sir Bungam—”

Bungam: “Oh! Doctor Regin! How shameful of me!”

He dusted himself off, then eyed the newcomers.

Bungam: “More unfamiliar faces… Doctor, as I keep saying—”

Regin (firmly): “They’re my elder brother and his colleagues. And this woman—Marone—has no link to the Earth Spider. Please, don’t chase rumors.”

Bungam: “Those rumors began with her own words, did they not?”

Regin winced, but kept his stance beside Marone. Bungam sighed.

Bungam: “Very well. Still, we cannot ignore the rising frequency of attacks. It is time to send the militia into the forest.”

Marone (near a shriek): “That’s reckless! The townsfolk could never manage it!”

Bungam spread his arms, indicating the palisade and watchtowers.

Bungam: “Preparations proceed apace. The enemy will not wait for our courage. Even in the worst of spirits, a knight must strive for the best battle.”

Marone: “Except you’re the only knight…”

Subaru (cutting between them, arms wide): “Okay! Time out! Mouths shut, both of you!”

Startled, the pair stared at the black-haired boy grinning back.

Subaru: “I get both sides. Bottom line—the Earth Spider’s the bad guy. Kill it, no more arguing, right? Capisce?”

Bungam: “Capi… sce…?”

Subaru: “Means “got it?” Anyway! Good idea to beat the thing, but worrying the townsfolk can’t fight makes sense too. So, compromise:”

A mischievous smile crept over his face—Otto felt a chill.

Subaru: “How about us passers-by take down the Earth Spider for you?”

Bungam: “You can do that?!”

Subaru: “Wouldn’t say it if I couldn’t! ’Cause my name is Natsuki Su—”

Otto (arm-locking him from behind): “Emergency strategy meeting! Now!”

Hauling the squirming Subaru away, Otto drew Garfiel and Regin close—Bungam excluded.

Otto (hissed): “Subaru! What are you thinking?!”

Subaru: “Gah, warn me! And don’t interrupt a man’s intro! Ever heard of stage etiquette?!”

Otto drove a finger into Subaru’s nose.

Otto: “That man holds the lord’s authority. If we, retainers of another lord, act on our own, it’s overstepping—makes trouble for Lady Emilia.”

Subaru: “Ooh, that is bad. Sorry—panic averted.”

Garfiel, arms folded: “But the knight has a point. Better t’fight than gripe. If the townsfolk can’t, somebody’s gotta.”

His sharp eyes bored into Otto.

Garfiel: “Somebody’s gotta take a risk.”

Otto lowered his gaze. Hot-blooded, yet not wrong. And indeed, the threat already loomed.

Otto: “Regin—why is that knight so hostile to Marone?”

Regin faltered, but Marone lifted her head, wearing the brave smile Otto had once seen in a dark cell.

Marone: “I… told everyone about my past. How trouble followed me. I joked I might be cursed…and that rumor reached Sir Bungam.”

Regin added bitterly: “And so the suspicion…”

Otto pictured her cheering worried townsfolk with a self-deprecating story—only for it to twist back on her.

Marone: “Maybe… bad luck suits me, Number Two.”

Her voice trembled, yet no tears showed. That look lit a fire in Otto Suwen’s soul.

Otto (calling out): “Sir Bungam!”

Bungam (brightening): “Have you reached a conclusion, Mister “Surprised”?”

Otto: “We have. The Earth Spider—would you entrust its extermination to us?”

Regin: “Brother?!”

Marone’s eyes widened; but Subaru and Garfiel showed no surprise at all—enough for Otto to trust his own words.

Bungam: “Your offer is heartening, but… can you truly face that terror?”

Though he’d never seen it, his worry was genuine. There were no villains here—only people wanting to protect the town.

Otto: “Yes, we can. Because I have a reason to fight.”

He glanced back at Marone; she coloured and lowered her gaze—understanding.

A hand clapped Otto’s shoulder—Subaru, thumb up.

Subaru: “Well said. That’s the model combat-ready civil-affairs officer!”

For once, Otto could find no comeback.

Thus, the secret Emilia Camp’s Earth Spider Hunt began in earnest.

11

Subaru: “Man, I knew you were a doer. That speech of yours—gave me chills. Bet it hit Marone hard, too. Seriously cool, dude.”

Otto: “Er… well, thank you—though I’m not sure that’s the right response.”

Despite Subaru’s high spirits, Otto answered weakly, shoulders drooping and face clouded. Subaru tilted his head.

Subaru: “What’s with that reply? Where’s the firebrand from a minute ago?”

Otto: “I wish I knew where he went… Honestly, I can’t believe I blurted all that out with no plan. Just imagining the fallout makes my stomach hurt.”

He clutched his belly, complexion pale. Behind him Garfiel clicked his tongue in small irritation—he had just begun to respect Otto after that bold promise, and now he had to revise his opinion again.

At present the three men were deep in the forest around Pappelt, searching for traces of the Earth Spider and gathering intel before attempting a kill.

“First collect clues, raise our Investigation Level, then engage—that’s the smart play,” Subaru, evidently used to this sort of quest, had said. Garfiel did not quite grasp this “level” business, but from context it seemed to be a measure of strength. He decided to remember the word.

Subaru’s strange vocabulary sat well with Garfiel—an oddly pleasant ring. Their “senses” matched; Subaru had taught him that phrase, too. Which made it all the more bothersome…

Garfiel (muttering under his breath while eyeing Otto’s back): “Can’t get meself to like that guy.”

He knew one could not befriend everyone, yet his fangs itched. Granny Ryuzu had told him to get along with his camp. So he had tried—watching Otto from treetops, tagging along at work, sitting opposite at meals, syncing bath times, even giving nightly greetings.

After a month of effort Garfiel had learned only one thing: Otto Suwen and he were fatally incompatible.

The man spent his room time buried in paperwork rather than training, bowed and scraped to Roswaal at work, preferred vegetables over meat, washed his hair first in the bath (Garfiel started from the feet—felt better that way).

Thus Garfiel’s evaluation remained complicated. He disliked many parts—yet he had once lost to Otto.

—In the Sanctuary he considered that bout a defeat. He’d danced in Otto’s palm the whole time and finally muscled out a win; he refused to boast of such a fight. He accepted it as a loss—yet…

Garfiel: “If that’s the case, at least let me acknowledge it honestly, you bastard.”

But Otto’s current gloom made that impossible. Even now he was stewing over his words in town, rubbing his stomach in regret.

A decision had been made; from Garfiel’s view a welcome one. All that remained was to give it their all.

Garfiel clicked his tongue again just as Subaru, head buried in a bush, voiced another question.

Subaru: “Still, where’s a monster that big hiding?”

He scoured the ground.

Subaru: “A walking mountain oughta be obvious.”

Otto (looking about uneasily): “Agreed… On that note, may I ask something? Why are you in the forest at all? Wouldn’t it be safer to stay back?”

Subaru: “Straight to the point, huh?! Sure, waiting for luck is fine, but I’m not dumb enough to hang around town in that situation.”

By now Bungam was surely whipping townsfolk into a militia—arming them and gearing up for a forest hunt. Garfiel had no objection; letting locals fight for their own peace was just. If anything, having only outsiders venture into the woods felt off.

Subaru: “Anyway, you can’t talk—if safety’s the issue we coulda sent just Garfiel.”

Otto: “After I asked for help? Hardly proper.”

Subaru: “Then leaving me to sip tea at the clinic isn’t proper either!”

Their bickering resumed. Garfiel cut in.

Garfiel: “Keep yer yappin’ down—if the bug gets spooked by yer noise we’ll have trouble.”

Subaru: “Spooked by noise? That huge thing?”

Garfiel: “Size ain’t guts. “Mythos fled a hundred fights.” Thing ran once already, didn’t it?”

He cracked his knuckles, recalling the earlier encounter. Cowardice and power did not correlate.

Just then he sniffed—still no stench. That blood-reek should linger, yet his sharp nose caught nothing. Some trick was at play.

Garfiel: “Not losing to cheap tricks—that’s my challenge.”

Otto: “Garfiel, something up? Found anything?”

Garfiel: “Shut it! You find somethin’, talky-talky merchant!”

Otto: “Why are you suddenly mad…?”

He faced away with a sigh, then frowned at the surroundings.

Otto: “Honestly, I’m finding… nothing, and that in itself feels odd.”

Subaru: “Odd how?”

Otto: “My Divine Protection works like hearing voices, right? Same as sound: if nothing talks, I hear nothing. But in this forest? It’s noisy. Like standing amid countless Subarus.”

Subaru: “Even I find that scary.”

Subaru: “But “too noisy” might be a clue. If a magic beast’s around, animals go silent—so if it’s noisy, maybe the spider isn’t a witchbeast.”

Otto: “Which raises a scarier question of what it is…”

Subaru: “We’ll untangle it step by step.”

Their private brainstorming left Garfiel restless, but he tried to follow.

They continued: livestock victims only, no humans—that seemed deliberate. Perhaps the spider targeted stock. Could some house profit? Unlikely—if it wasn't a witchbeast and no one controlled it, then… what?

Just as Garfiel thought to speak, a jolt ripped through them. He crouched instinctively; Otto clutched his ears in pain; only Subaru stared blankly.

Garfiel: "Captain! Under our feet—!!"

His Earth-Spirit blessing screamed danger from below, but the enemy moved first.

The ground exploded. The burrowing Earth Spider hurled forest and men skyward.

Even Garfiel couldn't keep footing when the earth itself launched him. He seized a single shard of ground—enough for one leap. Now he had to choose.

Otto and Subaru spun helplessly in the air—who to grab? Voices overlapped:

Otto: "Save Subaru!"

Subaru: "Grab Otto!"

Both shouting to rescue the other. The decision fell to Garfiel alone. Images flashed—Regin's face, left in town—

He kicked off, snatched Otto.

Otto: "Garfiel?!"

Garfiel: "Shut up! Dunno myself, damn it—Captain…"

He searched for Subaru. If the boy awakened some hidden power mid-air, maybe—

And then they saw.

Otto & Garfiel (simultaneously): "What the—?!"

A fleshy tendril from the Earth Spider coiled around Subaru's body, reeling him toward the giant mass.

The youth screamed—a mix of terror and outrage—but instead of swallowing him, the flesh slapped Subaru against the sticky surface and held him fast as the monster began to burrow again.

Garfiel: "Tch! Eat this!!"

He kicked a fallen tree—thicker than Otto's torso—like a bolt toward the beast; it speared into the flesh beside Subaru, spraying noxious fluid.

The spider's response was immediate: a massive sweep of tendrils, not a capture but a kill strike.

Garfiel shielded Otto; they were sent flying through the forest. Subaru, still plastered to the monster, sank into the earth.

Garfiel: "Captaaaain!!"

He roared to the heavens as branches shattered around them. Far away, Subaru's mouth moved, shouting something lost to the wind.

Then darkness—branches, soil, and shock swallowed Garfiel and Otto.

—So the Emilia Camp was cleanly split apart, and the Earth Spider hunt plunged into blind confusion.

12

Evening had long since slipped past the promised time, and in the east the curtain of night was slowly descending.

Regin: "…They said they'd just scout a bit and be back for supper."

In the examination room of the veterinary clinic, Regin, face clouded with worry, fretted over Otto and the others.

The three had marched into the forest, eager to slay the Earth Spider. Eager, at least, were the two who were not his eldest brother; still, if Otto had not strongly tried to stop them, he must have had confidence of success.

Just as much as he trusted his elder brother's steady reliability, Regin trusted his younger brother's shrewdness. Yet that same younger brother was forever toyed with by fate, which meant Regin worried just as strongly.

Had it been their family at home, a lack of news would simply mean Otto was busy and the household would let him be; Regin, however, could not think that way.

He felt anew that, for many reasons, he never could have become a merchant. For Regin, Otto was the benefactor who had given him the impetus to study veterinary medicine—burned into his memory was the image of his brother using his blessing to speak with animals.

Marone: "Doctor Regin, have Number Two—have your brother and the others come back yet?"

Regin: "Marone."

Marone, likewise waiting for the men's return, called his name. Normally so lively, her expression was stiff, and that pained Regin to see. The righteous anger that welled inside him was for his own powerlessness—he could not remove the cause of her suffering.

Regin: "No, not yet. My brother's hopeless with letters; he always leaves everyone on edge."

Marone: "Ah—yeah, I get it. He sorta looks the type. I bet you and his friends have a hard time."

She offered a faint smile at Regin's forced calm. Such stilted conversations had become frequent since the Earth Spider trouble turned serious.

Treating livestock and animals was the clinic's calling; the days were never all joy, yet Marone's bright, tough presence always helped Regin. All the more frustrating now, when he could aid neither her nor the patients—and if something befell Otto in the forest on top of that—

Bungam: “Doctor Regin, are you here!”

An unceremonious shout and footsteps barged into the small silence. Marone’s cheeks tightened; Regin instinctively stepped in front of her.

A moment later the small-statured knight—Bungam—strode into the room.

Bungam: “So this is where you were, Doctor Regin. …And you as well, Lady Marone.”

His reaction changed openly between them, stirring Regin’s indignation; he stepped closer.

Regin: “Storming in like that, Sir Bungam? What is this about?”

Bungam: “What is this about? That sounds complacent. The appointed hour is past and your elder brother and his companions have not returned from the forest… they were brave men.”

With a gloomy shake of the head, Bungam had apparently concluded the three had fallen victim to the Earth Spider.

Regin: “Please do not give up on my brother so easily. I believe in him.”

Bungam: “Feelings rarely sway results. Therefore we stake life and limb each day. …I failed to dissuade your brother’s reckless venture and needlessly increased the toll—my own folly. This time I shall fulfill my duty as the people’s knight.”

Brushing aside Regin’s words, Bungam tapped the hilt of the sword at his waist.

Bungam: “At dawn I will muster every able man, march into the forest, and mete out judgment on that abhorrent creature. Doctor Regin, skilled in healing arts, is indispensable and one of our people. And you”—he looked at Marone—“will accompany us to avenge your Number Two.”

Having stated this flatly, Bungam turned his back. He would begin rousing the townsmen, readying for battle come morning.

As he left he cast Marone a sidelong glance. Emotions flickered in the knight's eyes—Regin sensed the faintest disquiet—

Marone: "…I've had enough."

Regin: "Huh?"

An angry tremor in the voice behind him; Marone, gripping Regin's coat, was shaking with fury.

Regin: "Ma-Marone? What—?"

Marone: "I said I've had enough. I'm sick of it—of doing nothing, shut indoors, just praying things sort themselves out… sick of myself!"

She jabbed a finger beneath his nose; Regin reeled, Bungam gaped.

Bungam: "Wh-What has happened? Please, calm yourself, Lady Marone!"

Marone: "Happened? You ask what happened? I told you—I'm sick of myself! Shouldering guilt for things I never did, shrinking smaller and smaller—is that me? I'm no princess! I don't care for that feeble female logic!"

She barked, then marched toward the door—toward Bungam, really.

Marone: "Out of my way!"

Shoving aside the short knight, Marone strode from the room; the two men scrambled after her.

Marone: "Come on, Frufoo. We're going to find your master."

Outside, she called to the tethered dragon. Frufoo stared; Regin hurried.

Regin: “Marone, this is madness! I can’t let you—”

Bungam: “He’s right, Lady Marone! Night is falling—wait until dawn to—”

Marone: “I will not wait till dawn! What if something’s happened to Number Two!”

She whirled—the tears brimming in her eyes stopped Regin’s words.

Marone: “I spoke carelessly and frightened everyone; that’s my fault. But the spider coming has nothing to do with me—I kept telling myself. Even so!”

She drew breath, voice firm.

Marone: “If something happens to Number Two—Doctor Regin’s brother—that will be my fault, because he went into the forest for us.”

She vowed to take responsibility. The declaration struck Regin like lightning—Marone, fierce as flame, clear as water, noble as wind, steadfast as earth.

Regin: “…Frufoo’s a Suwen-trained dragon—you need skill to handle him. It’ll be tough for you. I’ll go with you.”

Bungam: “Doctor Regin?!”

Bungam cried out, but Regin’s resolve was set. Marone said nothing; she only drew herself straight and nodded deeply.

Regin: “Sir Bungam, we’ll search for my brother. If we aren’t back by dawn, don’t send a search party—focus on the spider.”

Bungam: “W-Wait—why speak in extremes? I cannot let just the two of you—!”

Bungam barred the stable door, arms spread. Regin considered forcing his way past—

Bungam: “I’ll gather men at once! Do not rush ahead!”

Instead of stopping them, Bungam said he needed time to fetch aid. Regin and Marone stared.

Regin: “We’re outsiders, Sir Bungam. You’d risk the townsfolk for us?”

Bungam: “I said I would fulfill my duty as their knight. Doctor Regin, you are indispensable to this town—one of us. And…”

Regin: “And?”

Marone: Lady Marone took responsibility. To choose willingly to suffer is the highest human dignity. As a knight, I respect it.”

Speaking solemnly, he saluted his sword and bowed deep, then dashed toward the town center. He would rally people and aid their search.

Marone: “Amazing… Bungam’s a lot more decent than he looks.”

Regin: “I agree—but he moved because of you, Marone.”

Perhaps his actions would ripple back and help the three in the forest.

Regin: “I hope so… Huh? This is…?”

Petting Frufoo’s neck, Marone noticed something. Regin gasped: a white gem—a twin-stone magic crystal. Split from a single gem, each half glowed to guide its partner to the other.

Merchant houses, Suwen included, often equipped their dragons with twin-stones so they could locate one another. Costly, and useless once reunited, it wasn’t employed lightly, but—

Regin: “As expected, Brother leaves nothing to chance.”

Proof of Otto’s cunning twisted Regin’s lips into a smile. Marone blinked, then let her own soften.

Marone: “Doctor Regin, you just smiled exactly like Number Two.”

Thus she bestowed a rather unflattering observation upon him.

13

Otto: “…It feels as though I’ve just been accused of something terribly unjust.”

Garfiel: “Quit yer bellyachin’, ya twig. Keep them eyes peeled—Captain’s in trouble.”

Standing at the head of the improvised trail, Garfiel ploughed through the under-growth with his boots, the emerald of his eyes flicking left and right. The bristling irritation in the boy’s tail-swing said everything: hours had passed since Natsuki Subaru had been ripped away by the Earth Spider, and the forest still refused to give him back.

A cloying, death-sweet scent drifted on the evening air.

Garfiel: “Tch. Necrosoul flowers—that rot’s so strong I can’t tell one stink from another.”

Otto: “At this time of year the necrosoul blooms, yes. Beasts crawl here to die, and the blossoms drink their remains…”

Garfiel: “I know what they are. How’s yer Soul of Language doin’? Hear anythin’ useful?”

Otto shook his head; his temples hammered with the effort of listening.

Otto: “Regrettably, no. The forest is—how shall I put it—too loud. It is as if I were surrounded by a thousand Subarus, all talking at once. My head feels ready to split.”

Garfiel: “Useless, the lot of it… Dammit, is Captain even alive?”

Otto: “Were the creature intent on eating him, it would have done so upon capture. It seized him—and then slapped us aside. Its behaviour suggests that mere feeding was never the objective.”

The merchant raised four fingers.

Otto: “First: Subaru was not absorbed immediately.

Second: it repelled us with force rather than attempting to devour us.

Third: every confirmed casualty thus far has been livestock or ground dragons—never a human.

And fourth—Sir Bungaum told us he has never once crossed paths with the creature.”

Garfiel’s lip curled.

Garfiel: “Ya sayin’ that fat little knight scared the big bastard off?”

Otto: “I doubt it was fear. The pattern implies the Earth Spider selects its encounters—twice it has fled from you, twice it has sought out Subaru. Therefore the only reasonable conclusion is that Subaru, not we, is its true goal.”

A silence fell as the pieces clicked. Garfiel’s ears flattened.

Garfiel: “…Ain’t a witchbeast at all, then. We’re dealin’ with an—”

Both men spoke in chorus:

Otto & Garfiel: “An evil spirit!”

The instant the words left their mouths, Garfiel’s hackles rose. He grabbed Otto by the collar and hurled himself backward.

The earth before them ruptured—meat-red feelers, slick with ichor, scythed through trunks like grass. Bark and loam exploded; air filled with fetid breath.

Otto: “The Earth Spider!”

Garfiel: “Bring back the Captain, ya sack o’ guts!”

The grotesque bulk erupted into view, a living hill of flesh and fangs. Otto’s gaze darted over its surface, searching for the black-haired boy—but the monster moved first.

All the creatures of the forest screamed.

A tidal wave of voices—inaudible to any but Otto—slammed into his mind. Blood burst from his nostrils; the world lurched and somersaulted. Consciousness frayed.

Through the blur he felt Garfiel catch his collapsing body.

And, just before darkness closed, Otto understood:

those countless voices were not shrieking in anger.

They were begging for help.

14

Otto's body collapsed, blood gushing from his nose; supporting him, Garfiel bared his fangs.

Garfiel: "Hey, hey, hey, hey, you gotta be kidding me, hey!!"

Before him stood the Earth Spider that had carried Subaru off. With Otto unconscious in his arms, Garfiel again faced the very same two-way choice he had suffered several hours earlier. Subaru or Otto— which life to save?

Garfiel: "—Tch! This is a damn pain in the neck!!"

A roar burst from his throat and bestial claws flashed. In the next instant a mass of flesh was severed, a tentacle torn free and sent flying, its putrid ichor splattering through the forest.

The severed limb exposed a repulsive wound, yet the Earth Spider still tried to envelop the area with writhing tentacles. Garfiel sensed its fear first-hand. At its core lurked the malicious spirit that had stolen Subaru. That same presence was now trembling before him like a child throwing a tantrum.

Garfiel: "Ain't pickin' one! I'm the strongest! I'll just take both!"

Power that only the strong could wield broke the dilemma as Garfiel charged. His left arm locked Otto against him; his free right arm and bared fangs shredded each tentacle that dared approach.

The onslaught of flesh crashed upon him like a dark tide, yet Garfiel's fury repelled it. One step, then another—

Garfiel felt a snag. A severed tentacle had coiled around his left ankle, and another had already begun to wind itself about Otto's torso.

Garfiel: "Not satisfied with the Captain, now ya want him too?!"

Strictly matching Garfiel's raw power, the Earth Spider lashed out to drag both prey away. Otto's unconscious body creaked under the pull; for an instant Garfiel tasted panic.

???: "—Release! Do not let it escape!"

Spears rained down, thudding into the Earth Spider's hide and spraying more corrosive fluid.

Bungam: "So this is the infamous Earth Spider! Hideous to behold, and vicious besides!"

The small knight rushed in with blade and bow, cleaving the tentacle binding Garfiel and freeing his movement.

Marone: "Two-Go!"

From behind, Marone and Regin hurried over. Regin: "Brother, thank the gods you are safe." Removing Otto from Garfiel's arms, he sighed in relief. Marone, initially pale, wiped the blood from Otto's face.

Behind them came yet more reinforcements: the townsfolk of Pappelt, weapons in hand, led by Bungam.

Regin: "Brother's safeguard led us here. Without any one of us, this scene would never have come to be."

Garfiel, however, could not share in their elation. Though the townspeople had risen— had vowed to protect their own sanctuary — he felt strangely left behind.

Bungam: “It’s burrowing— everyone, brace yourselves!”

Seeing the townsfolk’s assault, the Earth Spider attempted to sink back into the earth to flee. If it escaped now, Subaru’s fate would grow all the more dire.

Garfiel: “Like hell you will!”

Snatching Regin’s Mimir stalk, he hurled it with all his might. The stalk struck true, piercing the monster’s flesh. It did not stop the descent, but Garfiel grinned.

Garfiel: “‘Thrice you face Helga and live…’— there ain’t a fourth time. I’ll finish this, no matter what.”

15

Blood gushing from his nose, Otto toppled; Garfiel caught the limp body and bared his fangs.

Garfiel: “Hey— hey-hey-hey, you gotta be kiddin’ me, hey!!”

Before him towered the Earth Spider that had stolen Subaru. Otto unconscious in his arm, Garfiel once more faced the very same choice he had wrestled with hours earlier—Subaru or Otto, which life to save.

Garfiel: “—Tch! This is a damn pain in the neck!!”

He roared. Bestial claws flashed; a tentacle tore free, hurled aside with a splatter of putrid fluid.

Ripping open the ugly wound, Garfiel spat at the false dilemma.

Garfiel: “Ain’t pickin’ one! I’m the strongest! I’ll just take both!”

Left arm locked around Otto, right arm and fangs shredded every tentacle that struck. The meat-tide crashed, but it was not enough—never enough.

Garfiel: “…Dammit, trickery now?!”

A severed tentacle coiled about his ankle; another crept to bind Otto.

Garfiel: “Not satisfied with the Captain, now ya want him too?!”

He strained—flesh against flesh, impossible leverage—and Otto’s limp frame began to stretch between the two forces.

Voice rang out:

???: “Release! Do not let it escape!”

Spears hailed down, thudding into the monster’s hide and splashing more corrosive ichor.

Bungam: “So this is the infamous Earth Spider! Hideous to behold, and vicious besides!”

Knight’s sword flashing, Bungam carved away the tentacle at Garfiel’s ankle, severing the bindings.

Marone: “Two-Go!”

Marone and Regin ran up, leading the ground dragon. Regin took Otto, sighing in relief; Marone wiped the blood from the merchant’s face.

Behind them poured townsfolk of Pappelt, weapons raised—rallied by Bungam. Garfiel could only stare, half amazed, half unsettled.

Regin: “Brother’s safeguard led us here. Every piece had to fall in place, and everyone had a hand in it.”

Why, then, did Garfiel feel so left outside the circle?

Bungam: “It’s burrowing— everyone, brace yourselves!”

The Earth Spider, riddled with blades and spears, sought once more to sink into the earth. If it escaped, Subaru’s danger would only deepen.

Garfiel: “Like hell you will!”

Snatching Regin’s mimir stalk, Garfiel hurled it; the stalk stabbed deep into the spider’s flesh, scenting it. The brute still sank, but Garfiel grinned.

Garfiel: “‘Thrice you face Helga and live…’— there ain’t a fourth time. I’ll finish this, no matter what.”

Subaru’s consciousness floated in a drunken fog.

Subaru: “U… bu… eh…”

His body was bound; he could not move a limb. Even prying open his eyelids felt beyond him, as though all his strength were being siphoned away—much like when Beako drew mana from him (though nowadays she held his hand and used far gentler care—so cute when flustered).

Subaru: “Bea-ko… lovely…”

As he mumbled that useless praise his mind slowly clawed back to reality. Convenience-store, another world, et cetera—captured by the Earth Spider, and now this.

He was not being eaten, that much he knew, though not why. No—probably he had a reason. Something like the relentless interference of od coursing through him—a sensation akin to a spirit’s touch—that half-told him the true nature of the Earth Spider.

Not a normal beast: an aberrant spirit. It seemed to want to convey something to him, yet Subaru could not grasp it. If only those emotions came in words he could understand…

Subaru: “So kidnapping Otto next was pretty short-sighted, huh…”

He saw it from within: the creature surfacing, stretching a tendril toward the two men in the forest.

Subaru: “Ouch! I said it hurts, damn you, Garfiel!”

Blocked at every turn: the watchdog tiger refused. Reinforcements rained spears; the spirit fled.

Its wounds knitted; flesh rearranged itself. Subaru sensed each patch and suture as if it were his own body. Thin, distant, pieces of himself were shaved away—hope receded.

Subaru: “Emi—”

He felt himself thinning… fading…

Voice: “Like hell I’ll let that happen!”

A crash—Garfiel’s blow rammed through the monstrum. Mouths all over the meat-hill shrieked in chorused animal voices; a hundred rolling eyes now showed only dread.

The spirit tried to flee—only to find itself surrounded.

Garfiel: “Townies’ve got the perimeter. No more runnin’. Try ’n disappear, we’ll dig ya up.”

The stalk’s scent clung to the monster, betraying every path of escape. Panic beat within it: no routes above—only downward. It began to burrow—

Garfiel: “Told ya—there ain’t a fourth dance with Helga.”

The ground bucked; Garfiel up-ended the giant. Toppled, the flesh-mount thrashed, limbs tangled in its own confusion.

Garfiel: “Hand over the Captain. Otherwise I’ll carve ya down to scraps.”

Right arm lengthened, cloaked in golden fur; claws glinted. No answer came from the monster—only trembling and a fresh wash of fetid stench.

Garfiel raised his claw to begin—

Marone: “Wait! Please—wait!!”

She dashed in, arms spread, shielding the creature. Garfiel snarled in disbelief; not only he—Bungam, too, cried out.

Bungam: “Lady Marone! What madness is this? Now is our chance to end the evil that tormented Pappelt!”

Marone: “I said it—my responsibility! But this is Number Two’s request!”

Bungam: “N-Number Two…?!”

Garfiel glanced back: Otto, barely conscious, leaning on Regin, blood wiped from his face.

Garfiel: “Woke up just in time, huh. And now you’re stoppin’ us from pullin’ the Captain out?”

Otto (hoarsely): “Let’s just say… I don’t want you to regret your next move.”

Garfiel bared his teeth; Otto exhaled.

Otto: “Please. Let me speak. We need to separate the Earth Spider and Subaru the right way.”

16

—The very moment it first gained self-awareness, “it” was at a complete loss.

With no path to follow, no tracks to retrace, no reason for being to lean on, “it,” manifested as one of the world’s commonplace miracles, was overwhelmed by the vastness of a world that offered no refuge.

Knowing not the slightest thing it ought to do—for there were no signposts at all—it wandered the forest of its birthplace.

In that birthplace countless “voices” whirled. The owners of the voices were diverse, yet the messages they carried were always the same, and for the first time it felt interest in something.

Drawn by the scent of flowers, the owners of the voices came, bodies already weakened. Only later did it realize they were creatures wounded, diseased, seeking someplace to die.

Those voices were last wills heading toward death, or the final futile struggles clinging to life.

Intrigued, it wondered what death, what ending, what disappearance truly meant. Newly born, it overlapped with one of the dying voices and became one with it.

—Tasting the terror of loss as its very own, it came to know emotion for the first time.

At the same instant it pictured, vividly, insistently: I want to be saved. I must be saved. I must.

If this terror was what every voice on the road to death experienced, then they had to be saved. They had to cross that dark, bleak world and step into a place of light.

To begin, it started absorbing, one after another, the owners of voices in the same plight. To vanish was ever lonely and sad; perhaps sheer numbers might compensate.

Impossible. Merely absorbing them was not enough; with each life snuffed out, the terror only swelled.

Then if the dying voices were insufficient, why not gather voices far from death? In its birthplace there were owners of voices still distant from dying. It sought them out and absorbed them.

That worked—yet only as a stop-gap. The time it bought was brief. Once time passed, need returned. There had to be another way.

—In the intervals while it searched for that method, many were swallowed by death. There was never time enough.

Did no one know a way? The owners of the voices knew no means to escape. While it kept buying time, it learned of that place and understood.

At that place, those who raised cries of pain had the pain removed, were drawn away from death. That was what it wanted—that was the way to save them.

It was a place where many strange beings gathered. Wounded voices, voices ravaged by illness—were saved. They could be saved. They would be saved.

To save them, wills must be exchanged. For that, it needed the owner of a particular voice.

With that one, surely it could rescue the voices of its birthplace from that lonely world.

—Then no one would have to vanish alone ever again.

That, it knew, would be salvation.

17

Otto: “The necrosoul flowers blooming in this forest lure in animals that have sensed their own Death.

That was the very first feeling the spirit born here ever knew—so, to escape that fear—”

Garfiel: “It started attacking healthy livestock and passing ground dragons, then stuffed ’em inside itself.”

Everyone bowed their heads once they learned of the lonely struggle waged by the spirit called the Earth Spider.

It was a tragic collision of fate. Having tasted the terror of Death, the spirit heard the cries of the dying and kept flailing in its wish to save them.

Because a spirit has no concept of lifespan, it even tried to rescue those who simply reached the end of their natural lives—a naïve idea born of innocence.

Earth Spider: “Teach me how to save them.”

In a voice no human could truly grasp, the spirit pleaded its wish.

Carrying those words back and forth was Otto's task. That was why the spirit used Subaru's captured body, continuing the macabre conversation through his up-turned whites.

Earth Spider: "Teach me how to save them."

Again and again it demanded the same thing. There was no thought of compensation, no room for negotiation; such notions had never been allowed to grow inside the spirit.

It simply wanted to know—a way to save every being from Death.

Garfiel: "There ain't any way. Why don't ya just tell it straight?"

Arms folded, Garfiel—still worried for Subaru—spat out the words. Given the situation, he felt no need to spare the Earth Spider's feelings, and he was right: the spirit's wish was impossible.

Yet blunt truth alone would solve nothing.

Otto: "Right now this spirit stands at a crossroads—whether it can remain a spirit, or fall and become an Evil Spirit."

No certain method exists in this world to escape Death. How could they convey that to a spirit who did not know it?

Otto pondered. If it learned the truth, the Earth Spider might tumble into true evil, becoming a lump of carrion that devoured the living in search of salvation that did not exist.

Should that happen, the only path left would be extermination—and Subaru, still half-absorbed, might not survive it.

Otto was prepared for that worst-case scenario; Garfiel was here, and if strength alone could solve it, they had the means.

They could trick it into releasing Subaru, then slay the pitiful spirit, but—

Regin: "Brother… I'd like to speak with that spirit. May I?"

Otto: "…Regin."

The younger brother tapped Otto's shoulder and made the request. Otto hesitated for a heartbeat—because the Earth Spider had—

Regin: "It watched my clinic and thought there might be a way to save them, right?"

Otto: "Probably. But that isn't your responsibility. It's just another unfortunate coincidence."

Regin: "Unfortunate? I don't think so."

Shaking his head, Regin stepped forward, crouched, and sat facing the Subaru-Earth Spider, smiling gently.

Regin: "I'm Regin Suwen, a beast healer. By your reckoning, I'm someone who knows ways to ease suffering."

Earth Spider: "Oh… oh… You can save them? Save them. I want you to. Teach me."

To relay the words, Otto invoked the Divine Protection of the Soul of Language. The strain was heavy—he had only just recovered from the earlier collapse—but when a younger brother relied on his elder, quitting was not an option.

Regin: "Your wish to help the suffering is noble. I feel the same. If it pains you that you can't save everyone, then you and I share the same resolve. That's why telling you this is my duty."

The road of a beast healer had let Regin touch countless lives. What he had felt along that road was something neither Otto nor their family could truly understand, and that resolve now shone in his eyes as he prepared to deliver a cruel truth.

Regin: "Comrade who shares my resolve, it is sad, but we cannot save everything from Death."

Earth Spider: "…"

Regin: "Death presses on life in many forms—sudden accidents, incurable illnesses, and the Death that comes when one's time is fulfilled."

Earth Spider: “That… is not… the answer I need.”

Borrowing Subaru’s body, the spirit shook its head. It had not yet learned the emotion called rage.

Earth Spider: “Want to save them. Must save them… or they’ll disappear, all alone…”

Garfiel: “Hey, don’t stand up!”

Unsteadily, Subaru’s body rose. Seeing the movement, Garfiel’s golden eyes flashed with vigilance. The townsfolk held their breath. Otto worried for Subaru—and for Regin.

Regin also stood, matching the spirit’s height. Then, to the spirit who had just been told of an unavoidable end, he gently held out his hand.

Regin: “Death cannot be avoided. Yet it doesn’t prove our lives are meaningless. If an unforeseen Death is an incomplete ending, our fight is to guide lives that meet Death to completion.”

The sentiment was hard to grasp even for Otto and Bungam; yet Garfiel, realization striking, grit his teeth, and—

Marone: “You don’t have to shoulder this alone. Come to our place and think it through with us, okay?”

From behind she wrapped the spirit in a hug, pressing its head to her ample chest and speaking with eyes full of kindness.

If the Earth Spider had seen hope of escape at Regin’s clinic, then both Regin and Marone had surely been there.

Earth Spider: “Can… we be saved?”

Regin: “We’ll lift what’s within reach—together.”

Regin clasped the spirit’s stiff hand.

Cradled by Marone and holding Regin’s hand, the Earth Spider’s face softened, as though it had finally been allowed to set down a burden carried far too long.

A pale light then drifted slowly out from Subaru—no, out from the spirit itself.

Subaru: “Wh-What?”

Garfiel: “Captain?”

Blinking rapidly, Subaru found himself hugged by Marone, holding hands with Regin, and watched by Otto’s relieved smile.

Tilting his head at the baffling scene, he muttered,

Subaru: “…Uh, what’s going on?”

Alone, he had been left completely out of the loop.

18

Bungam: “Mister “Surprised”, I am deeply grateful for your efforts in this affair.”

Otto wore a rather complicated expression.

One night had passed since the Earth Spider incident, and matters were already winding down. The spirit once dubbed the Earth Spider would never again cause harm. That alone was a great result—but an even better one had come about, namely—

Garfiel: “Never imagined all those critters stuffed inside that slab o’ meat were still breathin’.”

Otto: “From the spirit’s point of view, it makes sense. A being desperate to prevent death wouldn’t want a mass casualty on its conscience… though I was scared half to death they’d melted beyond recovery.”

Bungam shivered at the very idea.

The happiest outcome of all was that every animal absorbed by the Earth Spider—thought hopeless—had returned alive. Each creature that had once been sewn into the mass of flesh was reborn, as if dropped whole from inside the corruption.

(Subaru—half-dissolved at one point—also came back safe, to Otto's immense relief.)

Otto: "Now let's hope life in Pappeltt gets back to normal."

Bungam: "Rest easy. Any road-worn ground dragons taken on the highways will be returned to their owners by order of my liege, Lord Sellrain… and above all, everyone survived."

He sighed, visibly relieved.

Otto found himself re-examining the knight he had once dismissed as an unpleasant fellow; Bungam's image had changed greatly over the course of events.

Otto (muttering): "…Seems my eye for people still needs work…"

Bungam: "Hm? Is something the matter, Mister "Surprised"? Are you uneasy about something?"

Otto: "Ah—no, not exactly. …Well, perhaps a little. How much longer will you be staying in Pappeltt, Sir Bungam?"

Bungam: "Once the post-incident formalities are settled, I shall withdraw to my lord's seat. Worry not, Mister "Surprised"—there will no longer be any need to make a villain of Lady Marone."

Catching the subtle change at the end of his sentence, Otto saw Bungam shrug.

Bungam: "A knight dispatched by the lord singles out a woman rumored to be the cause. If he is harsh enough, people will naturally side with her. One way or the other, once the uproar ends, the knight departs and the discomfort passes. It was necessary."

Otto: "…So you protected the townsfolk from the Earth Spider, and Lady Marone from the townsfolk?"

Bungam drew himself up. "That, sir, is a knight's duty."

Recognizing total defeat, Otto could only tip his head. He had never imagined he would end up so thoroughly played.

Bungam: “Accept my thanks, Mister “Surprised”—and convey my gratitude as well to that fierce boy and to the knight Natsuki Subaru. …I look forward to the deeds of the lady you serve in the Royal Selection.”

With that, Bungam Eastern returned to his duties, leaving Otto with a fresh appreciation of how completely the knight had seen through everything.

Subaru: “Hey, Otto, everything okay? He didn’t give you any weird trouble, did he?”

Otto answered by simply pushing Subaru’s clueless face away with his palm.

Regin: “Brother—are you leaving already?”

In front of the Suwen Healing House, where baggage had been loaded onto the dragon-carriage, the younger brother’s voice held a faint loneliness. Otto smiled softly.

Otto: “Yes, time to go. You’re going to be busy treating all the animals freed from the Earth Spider, right? It wouldn’t do for the elder brother to keep getting in the younger’s way.”

Regin grinned. “Too bad. With you around I could hear every patient’s voice and make you work for free.”

Otto: “Show some respect to your brother, would you!”

Regin’s teasing sounded just like their days back home. And indeed, the clinic was now swamped: deciding triage alone for the myriad rescued beasts was a monumental task.

Obstructing his brother any longer would only be a burden.

Regin: “Being busy is a blessing—that’s why I chose this job.”

Otto: “…Yes, I’m glad. You always did love animals, after all.”

Regin's expression held some hidden meaning, but Otto merely tilted his head.

Seeing the younger's bright face after so much darkness was satisfaction enough. Whatever terrifying detours they'd taken, it was worth coming to Pappeltt.

Before leaving the town—

Regin tapped Otto's shoulder. "Marone wants a word—this time you're not allowed to run."

With that, Regin headed off to bid farewell to Fluhu and the others already aboard.

Inside the doorway stood the red-haired woman, smiling gently.

Marone: "Always in a hurry, aren't you, 'Number Two'? Busy busy."

Otto winked. "Indeed. And if I stay any longer, my desk back at the mansion will eat me alive. Those two with me are busy men as well—especially Natsuki-san."

He laughed at how naturally he thought of the mansion as "home."

Otto: "…At least you've found a place to settle. Just be careful handling the Earth Spider."

Marone: "Leave it to me—I'll play mom. A single, but capable, mom."

She puffed out her ample chest. On her left shoulder sat a small, round, furry spider-shaped spirit.

Having been persuaded by Regin and Marone, the Earth Spider had chosen to remain in Pappeltt, helping at the clinic.

Training and nurturing it would be Regin and Marone's new task.

Otto: "That won't be easy… but if anyone can, it's you."

Marone: "Oh? Because a tough gal like me can raise a kid alone?"

Otto: “If ‘tough’ counts as praise—yes. But you won’t be alone; Regin will be there.”

Marone fell silent, stroking the spirit on her shoulder. The breeze played with her red hair. She closed her eyes, breathed once, and opened them.

Marone: “You really are unfair, ‘Number Two.’”

With spirit in hand she stepped forward, eyes glistening softly.

Marone: “I’m Marone Lisbon, first slave. And you are?”

Otto pinched his cloak theatrically and bowed.

Otto: “Otto Suwen—Number Two, at your service, senior.”

Marone: “…Thank you for everything, Number Two.”

Thus came the quiet conclusion of Otto and Marone’s story.

19

Subaru: “I still say Marone would’ve been perfect for you, Otto…”

They were on the homeward road in the dragon-carriage. Subaru lounged at Otto’s side on the driver’s bench, elbow on the rail, muttering with an oddly grave face. Otto, reins in hand, stared back in exasperation.

Otto: “We did get along. She’s a pleasant woman, and I’m sure life would be fun around her. Plus she clicks with mild-mannered Regin just fine.”

Subaru: “…If you’re satisfied, fine. I just worry you blew your shot and now you’ll die alone in forty years—that’d break my heart, man.”

Otto: “That is not your concern! I never said I wanted to stay single forever!”

He snapped, palm to forehead—but added after a beat:

Otto: “Anyway, right now I’d only make any woman miserable. No matter how hard I tried, I couldn’t put her first.”

Subaru: “Whoa, grown-up view. Yeah, you gotta put the other person first. Like me—I’m always thinking about Emilia-tan, and Rem, and Beako, and then there’s—”

Otto: “Come back once you can count, please.”

He sighed at Subaru’s breezy reply, then glanced upward. Garfiel sat cross-legged atop the carriage roof, and had been silent a very long time.

Ever since the Earth Spider affair ended, the tiger-youth’s words had been few.

Otto: “You’re unusually quiet, Garfiel. Something wrong?”

Garfiel: “…Go on, laugh. I was bloody useless this time around.”

The voice sounded half sulky, half ashamed.

Garfiel: “I’m supposed ta guard the Captain, an’ he got nabbed. If Bro hadn’t been there I might’ve killed the spider and the Captain together. Townies only caught up ’cause Bro stuck a twin-stone on his lizard… Mouth’s all I got, huh.”

Subaru: “Hey, me getting grabbed was actually a save. If it had caught me after Otto, our merchant would’ve splatted on impact, remember?”

Otto: “Right. And without you we’d never have cornered the spider. Even with Bungam’s net we couldn’t have blocked its burrow without your Earth-Spirit Blessing… not to mention tracking by the mint scent was your job.”

Subaru: “Only thing purely Otto’s merit was giving Fluhu that beacon-stone. Face it—without you, he’d have kidnapped both interpreter Otto and me for good measure… we’d be a gross Natsuki-Suvat-o now.”

Otto: “Can we not fuse with me as the minor component, please?!”

Subaru added, sotto voce, that Beako would probably scold him for getting his mana drained by another spirit… but that was tomorrow’s problem.

Despite the jokes, Garfiel’s grim mood didn’t lift.

Otto: “So what do you want, Garfiel? Brawn plus omniscient eyes plus top-tier paperwork chops?”

Garfiel: “…Skip the last one.”

Otto: “Pity—that’s the one skill I’d like you to master, though it’d put me out of work.”

Garfiel murmured, eyes lowered.

Garfiel: “What do I wanna be…?”

Otto flashed a little grin.

Otto: “How about learning shatranj? Strategic board game—move pieces in turns to capture the other side.”

Subaru: “Ah, like chess. Hard pass. I’ll play Othello.”

Garfiel sniffed.

Garfiel: “Any use in that?”

Otto: “You’ll learn there’s yet another thing at which you can’t beat me. Critical for reaching that lofty place you aim for.”

Garfiel’s fangs showed. “You’re on—I’ll wipe that grin off ya.”

He still carried some haze of doubt, but he’d bounce back soon. Otto found it oddly nostalgic: teaching someone shatranj again.

He’d learned from big brother Oslo, then taught Regin. Now the board would accumulate yet more memories.

And though work was sure to be piled on his desk when he got home, reins in hand, Otto Suwen found himself almost looking forward to returning to the mansion.

END

Arc 6:
The Corridor of Memories

Volume 21

Chapter 1-18

Chapter 1:
The Dragon Carriage's Way Back

1

—Natsuki Subaru's group continued to head directly east upon leaving the city of Pristella.

They were heading towards the eastern edge of the world—the area in which the Augria Sand Dunes were contained, a plot of land with a rich history of having the Witchbeasts that have existed there for hundreds of years reject every existence from stepping foot onto their territory.

It contained Miasma that would cause travelers to lose their sense of direction and gnawed at their hearts.

It contained groups of Witchbeasts as evil vanguards, who would indulge themselves in devouring human lives.

And then, there was the person who sought world peace—the person at the Watchtower, who determined each and every one of the successes and failures made by those who came close. This person was the Sage, Shaula.

???: "Knowing that alone, it feels like we're lining up for suicide."

Just being reminded of the obstacles that were ahead was enough to cause dejection.

In reality, those that journeyed towards this place, while fully knowing what awaited them, were perhaps beings like suicidal people, or perhaps Witch Cultists. At any rate, it seemed like they were nothing but people with brain abnormalities.

However, these people were neither of the above, and possessed no intention to die. It was rather the opposite; they intended to live.

They would provide a path of life, to each and every one of the people who had lost their way of living.

They had begun this expedition in order to obtain this seed of hope.

???: "…Nevertheless, it's strange."

While imagining the swaying of the dragon carriage, Subaru whispered these words to the faces in front of them. When the people in the guest room heard his whisper, every single one of them had their eyes turn towards Subaru.

A total of four glances came his way—adding in Subaru to the other people in this carriage, would make for a final sum of five passengers. This was what the situation looked like.

???: "Strange? Did something happen?"

Subaru: "No, it's nothing important, Emilia-tan. It's just, wellll~, it's just that I feel it's quite unexpected all these faces to be sharing the same dragon carriage and getting along so well."

Subaru responded this way as he brushed off Emilia's question.

To Subaru's right and left, securing both his sides, were Emilia and Beatrice. These were his allies. It was a given that these two would be with Subaru, but still, the question at hand would regard the two people up front.

???: "Well, it may be normal for ya to feel like that. Actually, I thought it was really surprisin' too. So it'd be natural for Natsuki-kun to feel uncomfortable, huh."

???: "…Ahh, that is correct."

The person who let out a high-pitched laughter and spoke with a Kansai dialect, or rather, Kararagi dialect, was Anastasia. After her reply in fake Kansai dialect, she gazed towards him with a meaningful look while feeling her hair.

Anastasia: "Though, if we're gonna talk exclusively 'bout bein' uncomfortable, I ain't so sure ya can beat Julius-san here."

Julius: “How harsh. However, please do not worry—I am also a Knight at heart. Just a single night is enough for me to adjust my heart. Not to mention that a few days have already passed… I promise to never to show a sight similar to the shamefulness I displayed the other day ever again.”

Anastasia: “So graceful. I’ll be takin’ ya on yer word, then.”

The manner in which Julius bowed in reply to Anastasia’s banter-like remark was much like how he acted previously.

But of course he would. He had sustained damage incurred by the Authority of Gluttony; but to be specific, it had borne effects on everyone around his person, rather than on himself.

Thus, the people that had changed their behavior had been his friends, rather than himself. He could not conceal just how upset he was upon receiving these reactions. But as he himself had just stated, he seemed to have accepted it with ease.

Subaru: “…You’re outrageous.”

Albeit he would not let his voice carry such praise, it was a pretty big deal.

That weak part of his heart was not able to clearly express great praise. It was not as if Subaru was unfamiliar with that feeling as well—the feeling of having your own existence being left behind, having nobody around that shared his own memories.

Natsuki Subaru, able to go back in time with Return by Death as he was, definitely possessed recollections of worlds that nobody else remembered.

If he were to recall a single experience in which he had built up relationships only to have them lost, that would perhaps be the initial days at Roswaal mansion—those repeated days of his beginning at the Roswaal mansion.

He had been summoned to another world, had struggled at the Royal Capital with the objective of helping Emilia, and then as a result, he had been invited to Roswaal’s mansion. He then proceeded to experience four iterations of events before stepping foot into the fifth world.

The memories of the four worlds up until then, were held within Subaru and nowhere else.

Even now, it was difficult to forget the shock he had experienced from being treated as a stranger by the very same people with whom he had built relations with during those days at the mansion.

That pain and sadness would never fade away.

???: "…What is it, I suppose? Subaru, why have you suddenly started petting Betty's head, in fact?"

Subaru: "Don't worry about it. It's just, I'm deeply emotional by the fact you seriously saved me back then. Thankyou thankyou."

Beatrice: "I don't understand, I suppose. Also, my hair is getting messed up so sto… you don't have to stop, but pet it just a little softer, in fact."

Beatrice tilted her head towards Subaru as she occupied the seat half-an-ass away. Just like she had requested of him, Subaru delivered some pats to her head, not allowing him to forget his state of mind at the time he was truly saved.

The only person whose feelings towards Subaru did not change during the loop of days at the mansion, was Beatrice. They had met before Return by Death's save point. So after that, she remained as the one person whose manner of coming into contact with Subaru did not alter.

Moreover, the way he had been saved would also stay a secret to her, for a long, long time.

Subaru: "After that, Emilia-tan saved me, huh."

Emilia: "—?"

Emilia made a curious face in response to Subaru's reminiscence.

Subaru was right here, right now, because he had been saved by her kindness, voice, attitude, as well as the warmth of the lap that she had lent him.

Subaru: "…"

That was why Subaru was able to recognize how impressive it was that Julius had actually accomplished it all on his lonesome. It had taken so much help, and so many times, four times' worth of time in fact, for Subaru to overcome what Julius had.

Or maybe, it was because a certain someone was there to lend him a helping hand.

A certain someone that was forgotten by Anastasia; a certain someone that did not seek for help from anyone in his own camp; a certain someone who had his ties severed with the Quasi Spirits whom he contracted with; a certain someone that did not recall his blood brother either.

If that were the case, then he would be grateful.

Julius: "Staring at people's faces for quite a while now… Is there something wrong, Subaru?"

Subaru: "I'm doing nothing wrong. I was just thinking that it's not pleasant to see you smiling with such elegance after someone calls you graceful."

Julius: "Beautifully elegant, that indeed has a splendid sound to it. I had never expected that I would receive praise from you. I am pleasantly surprised… Or well, that may be an exaggeration. Well, is it not a given?"

Subaru: "I didn't mean to praise you, and it does piss me off to hear you put it like that!"

With his same manner from the past—Or rather, with his reaction that made it seem as if he had become even more skilled with his tongue slips, Subaru ended up being the one annoyed.

The evident frailness on his face back when in his brother's hospital room at Pristella had been hard to digest. Subaru had recollections of that time, when a lack of satisfaction was evident in his expression prompting Subaru to complain. However, all of that seemed like completely forgotten history now.

Emilia: “You and Julius, get along. Hmm, were you like this before the way you are right now?”

Subaru: “Emilia-tan, you got it wrong. There is no way me and this guy get along well. Did you see my face? My eyes had the scariest look ever. Although, that’s just my viewpoint.”

Emilia: “Really? I don’t think you’re right, but… Ah, I’m not talking about the look you had in your eyes. I’m talking about you saying that you two don’t get along well. Subaru’s eyes were the same as ever, they were reaaally scary.”

Subaru: “The same as ever, reaaally scary?!”

Emilia: “Well for me, I like Subaru’s eyes. I’m being truthfully truthful.”

Subaru: “Ah, dammit. How I wish that part about my eyes was cut out from the audio recording…”

Emilia let out a wry smile as she filled Subaru with regret. She then turned towards Julius with an inquisitive look, causing him to take a glance towards Subaru.

Julius: “I myself have no room to deny those words. In reality, to say that me and him are close… would not be the most correct statement. Although in my eyes, we are compromising with each other, despite how things may look.”

Subaru: “To put it as compromising, that’s already condescending. Humble down there a bit… it’s going to piss me off even more.”

Julius: “What an abrasive point of view. Can you tell him that too?”

Julius sought Emilia’s agreement on the matter, but she reacted to their exchanges by brushing up her hair and, Emilia: "Just as I thought, you are reaaally close, right…?"

Subaru: "Come on, it should be already clear."

Emilia: "Eh? Well, I guess you are close then…"

There was a slight disagreement with Emilia, but Subaru and Julius acted as if nothing had happened. This made Emilia become more and more baffled. Anastasia tried to restrain herself from laughing, letting out chuckles with a smile.

Anastasia's reaction caused Julius to suddenly loosen his lips, as if indicating that he had calmed down—That transient master-servant relationship was hardly strange to Subaru, being someone who was familiar with the other side of it.

The Anastasia at hand differed from the genuine Anastasia Hoshin, and was a fake, merely a fake.

Anastasia's body was currently being used by the Artificial Spirit Echidna—otherwise known as Eridna. This so-called Eridna had no intentions of taking over her body, but he was unsure of how much he could trust her. Being someone who was aware of this situation, the one thing that Subaru did not fail to do was to prevent those unaware of the situation, like Emilia and Julius, from realizing it.

Beatrice: "…Subaru, cut it out, in fact."

Beatrice called out to Subaru, who was surely in a state of deep thought. This girl's hair was in a messy state, as Subaru was petting her head all throughout this period of silence. Her cute face had a sour look.

Subaru: "Ohhh?! My bad, Beako! Your cute appearance is a mess… your hair's all messed up now."

Beatrice: "Perhaps you shouldn't make it sound like Betty's cuteness is ruined from just her hairdo, I suppose! Moreover, your face is starting to look scary, in fact."

Half-an-ass away from Subaru, Beatrice spoke while frantically fixing her messed-up hair with her hands. Subaru let out an "Oh", preventing himself from talking, as Beatrice held a face that made it look like she thought him helpless.

Beatrice: “There’s no point in making such an excessively worrisome face, I suppose… Betty will take care of it, in fact. If something happens, Betty will notice it much faster than Subaru, I suppose.”

Subaru: “…Yeah.”

Beatrice spoke these words in response to Subaru’s anxiety. Beatrice—the other person besides Subaru who was aware of Eridna and how she was replacing Anastasia.

Originally, Subaru had promised to keep it a secret for two reasons: first, to avoid causing any unnecessary commotion about it; second, because Eridna had claimed to have no intentions to snatch control of Anastasia’s body. However, Beatrice would be the only one to realize if something happened, albeit belatedly.

They both were the same type of Artificial Spirit, two beings sharing a relationship with the Witch Echidna. If it seemed like Eridna was planning something, Beatrice would surely sense it.

Although, if he were to consider Beatrice’s emotions, he did not feel like it was very advisable for Beatrice to get involved with Echidna, but,

Beatrice: “Putting your unnecessary suspicions aside, it’s fine that Subaru acted like Subaru and sought help from anybody without caring about who it was, just like you always have, instead of worrying about it alone, in fact. Though, you came to Betty first, I suppose. I’ll give you my praise this time for that, in fact.”

She replied with this, so that was the end of that.

Emilia: “—I see it.”

Just when he thought that the dragon carriage had fallen into a state of silence, Emilia suddenly whispered these words.

It seemed that Emilia had seen their destination afar, as she gazed out the window of the dragon carriage. Subaru also understood that the view out the window was changing into familiar scenery.

Subaru: “What a nostalgic road. We’ll arrive at Roswaal’s mansion soon, huh.”

He murmured these words, first making sure to restrain his feelings from being near their first checkpoint, remembering their original goal.

This group’s destination, as mentioned before, were the Augria Sand Dunes—the place where they would seek to consult Sage Shaula. However, they had already arranged to stop by Roswaal’s mansion on the way, as so to prepare for their trip and to make a stop in their long expedition.

There were many things that they wanted to talk to the fellow member of their camp about, including the incident at Pristella and the occasion of getting to speak with the Sage.

Also, moreover—

Subaru: “It’s not just a simple stop.”

There was meaning in dropping by Roswaal’s mansion before beginning their expedition to meet the Sage.

When looking at the big picture, its meaning would be meager, and small to the world. However, through Natsuki Subaru’s small human eyes, it possessed great potential.

Subaru: “…”

Subaru squinted his eyes to envision the Roswaal mansion, so distant that could not yet be seen.

Each of the four people inside the dragon carriage were looking at Subaru. Various emotions were held by the colors of their eyes, but Subaru had no composure to take notice of any of their glances.

When the dragon carriage arrived at Roswaal's mansion, more than one hour had gone by past noon.

The long migration from the city of Pristella, which had taken about ten days, went on a temporary hold.

???: "Subaru!"

Subaru: "Ohh, Petra, woahwah?!"

They rode the ground dragons towards Roswaal's mansion, gave their thanks to the coachman, and then got off the carriage. A petite maid rushed towards Subaru from the mansion, and jumped at him with unrestrained force.

She came into his chest with might and force, and Subaru somehow managed to catch her while backing up. He then petted the head of the girl who had flown into his arms.

Subaru: "Petra, if you do that so suddenly, you'll startle me, you know. I've been gone for nearly a month now, but have you been doing well?"

Petra: "I've been fine, as you can tell. However, Subaru…-sama has been having it rough, right? I've been worried ever since that letter came in two days ago. You were injured so much again, right? Can you handle the pain?"

Subaru: "Embarassing, embarassing."

Petra touched Subaru's body to confirm his pain as her reddish brown-colored hair swung back and forth. As subaru reacted to this with a wry smile, other people got off the dragon carriage.

Subaru: "Hey, Petra. Do your job as a maid of the mansion properly. If you don't, Ram and Frederica will get mad at you."

Petra: "…Okay. Tell me about what happened later."

She returned promptly, but it seemed like Petra's trust had been thoroughly damaged.

Petra's worry would be inevitable if he told her about how he got involved in what seemed to be a city-wide uproar to try and obtain the crystal. Though, it was not something that Subaru intended to cause for the Witch Cult. However, that excuse would also be meaningless.

It would be pointless, considering the truth was that most of the Witch Cult's purposes were related to Emilia's camp.

Petra: "Welcome guests. Compliments to your efforts to make this long trip. I am Petra Leyte, a maid of this residence. I will be your guide towards the mansion."

Subaru's recollections were put aside, and then Petra let out a vocal message coupled with a dignified gesture.

Julius took Anastasia's hand to help her descend the carriage, and they both had looks of admiration on their face. Also visible was a somewhat prideful look on Emilia's and Beatrice's faces.

Anastasia: "Quite the well-behaved child, even though you're little, huh. You're being thorough with yer trainin'."

Julius: "It certainly seemed like she was a completely different person, with her attitude of jumping at Subaru upon first sight."

Petra: "—How embarrassing."

Julius agreed with the smiling Anastasia, and then Petra's face grew redder and redder from their remarks. Julius looked down at her, then proceeded to look at Subaru, and,

Julius: "I see… I understand the reason why you are given the moniker of Lolimancer."

Subaru: "I'll have you know, Petra isn't as small as a little girl, and even if you call me that, the only loli I will «mance» is Beako. Get your facts straight."

Beatrice: "Betty also isn't a girl that works hard to be used by Subaru at his convenience, I suppose. Subaru, you should get your facts straight as well, in fact."

Subaru replied to Julius's banter in a cold way, and then Beatrice rebuked Subaru in an even more glacial manner.

Subaru's mouth turned into a frown, falling silent, and Beatrice let out a sigh. She then looked at Petra's lower area. She stood aside her, and then made a slight movement to grab onto the edge of the skirt of the latter's maid outfit.

Beatrice: "Also, look, not much has changed throughout Betty and Petra's time, I suppo… Wait a second. Betty feels like Petra has grown a bit, in fact. Her hair has grown a bit too, I suppose…!"

Petra: "It's because one month has passed, and it's also my growth period right now. I will grow, and my hair will grow too, if I don't cut it. Beatrice-chan will stay small, though."

Beatrice: "Wh-What in tarnation, in fact…!"

Petra smiled as she hugged an astonished Beatrice tightly. Continuing to embrace the pouty-faced Beatrice for a sufficient amount of time, she then walked away, speaking, "Well then, allow me to guide you all".

Subaru: "Alright, we'll finally be going to the… Mmgah."

He sought to follow her, but then someone's hand grabbed onto the back of his collar. Upon raising a choked voice, he looked back, only to be surprised by the fact that Emilia was the one who had reached out to his scruff.

Emilia jerked Subaru's chin while holding onto the back of his neck, and directed him towards the dragon carriage behind him.

Emilia: "Subaru, Patrasche doesn't seem to be happy."

Anastasia: "Hm… 'Tis has become a selfish affair, huh."

If one were to throw their gaze towards the ground dragons as per Emilia's point, out of the two ground dragons that they traveled with, it would be noticeable that the beautiful, jet-black ground dragon was glaring at Subaru with frightfully piercing eyes.

That was Subaru's beloved dragon, Patrasche. When Subaru tried to return her look, she turned away bluntly, then letting out a light but very displeased sound.

Emilia: "You seriously weren't able to make up with her, even though you had ten days, huh."

Subaru: "Yeah, I know, but I really don't think it's my fault this time…"

Subaru scratched his head as he thought of what to do about Patrasche, who was leaning onto his belly.

Ever since they'd left the city of Pristella, Patrasche had been giving Subaru the cold shoulder—or rather, a bit before that. When he went to the ground dragon's stable to pick her up, after the defensive battle against the Witch Cult was done and dusted, she was already in a bad mood.

He didn't talk to Patrasche, as Otto was out-of-commission because of his injuries. However, he had a long-standing relationship with Patrasche. It was about time that Subaru found out what this beloved dragon was so angry about.

Subaru: "That's, well, I know I neglected her during the uproar, and that I even made her feel lonely, but… Guh, foahhh?!"

Emilia: "Subaru?!"

Subaru was on the very end of his statement when Patrasche lashed out her tail at him, causing him to become covered in dirt after taking a direct hit. As expected, Patrasche had no mercy in her aggressive response. If he were to reply to her in a deceitful way, she would come to strike him without any hesitation.

Subaru: "I would've never expected it… To think that I was able to avoid Regulus's attacks before, but can't avoid this, is just…"

Emilia: "Are you alright? Patrasche decided to suddenly wave her tail again, doesn't this mean that you'll get hit once more if you don't say the right thing?"

Emilia made that terrifying point as she went on one knee to lend him a hand. He looked at Patrasche, and she certainly was there, shaking her long tail. She sliced through the air with the end of her tail as if to threaten Subaru. It felt like she was saying that she'd double the power for each mistake he'd make.

He unconsciously lost the ability to speak properly, and his throat became cramped as he realized that he couldn't afford to reply carelessly.

Julius: "Even if you're careless like that, your ground dragon has an overwhelming amount of sympathy towards you anyway."

However, that statement made by Julius, who was disheartened by the guidance's lack of success, would cause the undesirable effect that she would come at Subaru. Subaru pointed at himself and Patrasche in response to Julius's argument, and,

Subaru: "Really? I'm kinda covered in all this dirt, you know? You call this sympathy?"

Julius: "Can you not even feel the proof of deep affection with your own eyes? She is a kind-hearted ground dragon. She is mostly aggravated that she was unable able to help you during that turmoil, and she is mad at you for not seeking for her help. So it might just be indignance, rather than anger, towards you."

Subaru: "What are you saying? Just how high are you going to make her heroine power? Stop it."

The level of correctness of Julius's points was unknown, but at the very least, his words made Patrasche's tail swinging come to an end. Subaru looked at Patrasche once again, and she turned away, just like always, but—

Emilia: "Looking at her now, it seems like she's somewhat embarrassed after hearing that."

Subaru: "Emilia-tan, you noticed that too? I also noticed that. It makes my heart flutter, so don't do that too often please, Patrasche."

He said these words, reached out nervously with his hand, and then Patrasche finally lowered her head, allowing Subaru to touch her body covered with tough scales. And with this, it seemed like the cold war where he had 10 days to make mends ended on a good note.

Petra: “Isn’t that enough? Is everything fine now?”

Petra was letting her impatience show through her shouts, as they continued to remain at the mansion’s front garden without paying attention to the time. She had come out here having been instructed to guide them, and yet they were still taking so much time.

Petra: “If we don’t return soon, Ram-neesama will get mad again and…”

Ram: “—If you can worry about such thngs, that means you were just a little bit short on your efforts.”

Petra: “Kyaaa—?!”

Petra, who had been making light sounds with her footsteps, let out a shriek and then straightened her back due to that voice. Upon turning back, she saw a pink-haired maid far away, coming from the direction of the mansion.

It was Ram, no mistake nor doubt about it. Ram slowly turned her gaze towards Subaru’s group and the guests after Petra became as still as a stone statue because of her glare, and—

Ram: “Even when I thought that Petra had gotten better at her tasks, seeing this situation on the cusp of recognizing your efforts… Ram is really disappointed.”

Petra: “S-Sorry Ram-neesama… about my work, you were about to recognize me?”

Ram: “Yes. Your cooking is better than Ram’s, your cleaning is more sensible than Ram’s, you’re better at doing laundry than Ram; and you wake up earlier than Ram, so I was close to recognizing you.”

Subaru: “You should have more self-doubt when you point these things out!”

Just how bad was this veteran maid in comparison with this girl who held one year of experience as a maid under her belt? Even if one were to take Petra’s ability to learn quickly into account, the hurdle was so low that it wasn’t even worth considering.

In response to his shout, Ram snorted her nose with a “Haa”, in a way that Subaru was completely familiar with, and,

Ram: “How does one proceed to have doubt about oneself? Ram only holds expectations and self-confidence for herself.”

Subaru: “I always felt like that part about you is the one thing that really deserves respect.”

Subaru thus responded to Ram’s majestic declaration while being astounded.

In reality, there was reason to emulate Ram’s optimism—or rather, there was reason in emulating her fortitude. He just wished that she would be a bit more reflective of herself, but,

Subaru: “If you did that, I guess it wouldn’t really feel like you’d be the real Ram, huh.”

Ram: “That is a scary thought. Moreover, I do not think it would be ideal to leave guests out here for so long. Let us hurry up and enter the mansion.”

Subaru agreed with Ram’s dismissive words.

They had taken too much time outside the mansion. It wouldn’t be surprising for Frederica or even Roswaal to show up eventually, if they wasted any more time.

The Royal Candidates and the Margrave were all to gather here, to talk about what they would be doing.

Emilia: “Is Roswaal at the mansion proper, right now?”

Ram, who had begun walking to guide the others, tapped Petra’s shoulder to relieve her stiffness. At Emilia's call from behind, Ram replied with a "Yes" without taking a look back.

Ram: "Fortunately, he was sojourning at this residence when the letter arrived, so he has remained here. There was a summary in the letter about the Pristella affair… and there should be details to discuss."

Subaru: "Yeah there should be, considering a lot of things did happen…"

Ram: "The number of people here now in comparison to when you first left has changed, huh—Did Garf and Otto die?"

Subaru: "Like hell I'd let them die! They aren't dead! They're just coming back home later because of their injuries!"

Just as Subaru was about to breach the topic of the letter, his charge was countered. Ram let out a shrug with an indifferent manner in response.

Ram: "I am all too familiar with the depths of men who lack composure. Barusu's especially is one that has an open hole from which his contents are being poured out, so you should be careful. To have people become aware of your depths and then finding out you are empty inside is the worst."

Subaru: "That really hurts, so cut that out! Also, moreover…"

If the letter that had been sent to the mansion before their departure from Pristella—if those details were written in the letter, they should understand that this was no simple trip back for Subaru and the others.

Therefore, when Subaru attempted to confirm the contents of the second half of the letter, and upon settling the words he would speak, Ram readily raised her finger.

Ram: "I told you, didn't I? Rest assured. Roswaal-sama is at this mansion… Also, preparations have been made for both the Sleeping Beauty and the Confinement Room. Although—"

Ram cut off her words towards Subaru at the end and then gently licked her lips.

She wet her lips with the red tip of her tongue, with a gesture that had a sense of gracefulness embellished somewhere in it, and said this,

Ram: “Although, neither of them were Ram’s doings. It was Frederica and Petra’s job.”

Subaru: “Why did you make a prideful face there?”

Anyhow, even though a whole month had passed until he had met her again, she still remained to be the same.

Chapter 2:
His Way of Providing a Warm Welcome

1

Albeit this is late in saying, but the base for the Emilia Camp, had been moved to the main residence of the Mathers Territory, different from the mansion that had been burnt to the ground in the past.

However, the layout of the mansion didn’t differ from the layout the past one possessed, as it was formatted in a familiar way; the main building was placed in the center, and the west and east wing buildings were established to the left and right. It was also formatted this way so that the spaciousness would be just about the same, so they would seldom become confused when roaming it.

The only problem was that it was just a tad too similar, making it much easier to forget Arlam Village was no longer located nearby. There had been several occasions where Subaru would wake up energetically, seeking to perform radio calisthenics in the village, and then somewhere along that long road, he’d realize he didn’t know which way to turn next.

Beatrice would subsequently catch up to him in a fuss, and she would be really angry.

Anyhow, they had arrived at Roswaal’s mansion, got welcomed by the same old Petra and Ram, and entered the parlor where Roswaal, the owner of the mansion, awaited them, but—

Roswaal: “Ohhh~, welcome baaack~. It’s great that you came baaaack~ safe.”

Roswaal sat on the couch as he clapped his hands, welcoming them on their return. Subaru and Emilia were reflexively taken aback by Roswaal’s smiling welcome.

They looked at his excessive and amicable smile, and then they looked at each other.

Subaru: "…Emilia-tan, was anything weird written in the letter?"

Emilia: "I-I don't know, okay. Moreover, you didn't even go as far as to prepare a weird gift? Because, you know, Subaru and Roswaal have secret talks sometimes, so…"

Subaru: "N-No way! And even if I were to plan on giving Ros-chi a gift, I'd put in my usual gratitude and consult Emilia-tan, Beatrice, Petra, Frederica, Patrasche, and maybe even Ram to help me think of a way to reduce the amount of time and money needed for the gift."

Beatrice: "Those were only names of girls, I suppose."

Subaru: "Isn't it embarrassing for me to ask people like Otto and Garfiel about a gift from a man to another man?!"

Subaru responded to the displeased Beatrice, and then sent a wry smile in response to Emilia's scornful eyes.

Incidentally, he had deliberately left out Rem's name in order to avoid causing anxiety for the others, so not for anyone to misunderstand, he did feel guilty about it. Anyhow, Roswaal, who was witnessing the whole exchange, shrugged his shoulders.

Roswaal: "Whaaat~ a surprising reaction. I worry about you guys' safety, so I wonder what's so weird about me being glaaad~ that you're all safe. It's natural, right?"

Emilia: "That's, true but… Roswaal, you haven't really showed that side of yourself to us that much until now, so…"

Roswaal: "It meaaans~ I've had various changes in my way of thinking this past yeeear~. Shouldn't Emilia-sama be a bit happy about me becoming cooperative?"

Emilia: "Hmm, you're right."

Emilia responded to Roswaal's brazen rejection in a way that was typical of her tolerant self, accepting his change of mind. He nodded his head at Emilia, and just seeing her waving her palms back and forth made Subaru unable to leave it at this inadequate level of trust, but—

Beatrice: “Even if you were to try to understand his way of thinking, it wouldn’t be possible because it’s too odd, in fact. Subaru… Subaru is also a bit like that, but the like of that is more, I suppose.”

Subaru: “You’re being too vague with your words.”

Stroking the head of Beatrice, who seemed to have chosen to put in vague and senile words into her remark, Subaru now stepped into the parlor, following Emilia.

The cheery Roswaal—they were skeptical about him, but were somehow aware of his ulterior motive. In reality, he actually had just spoken of his motive himself just a moment ago.

Roswaal was seriously glad about Subaru and Emilia coming back safe.

Now that his Book of Wisdom was no longer in his possession, being amiable was the best move he could take in order to fulfill the purpose that he had yet to reveal. His only objective was to have Subaru’s actions break the obstacles that stood in the way.

Subaru: “If you feel that way, then that’s fine. Though, it’d be helpful if you were a little cooperative.”

Roswaal: “You will reach your goal with or without my help. That’s why I believe my cooperation is an unnecessary portion of your power. It really isn’t an eeeeven~ relationship.”

Subaru: “It feels like I’m suffering an arrangement in an RPG where I can’t use a support character normally, it does.”

It was an arrangement where the extremely powerful support character would do anything but participate in the battle.

Roswaal avoiding from participating in battles was much like such a condition; in his case, he would become more and more entertained while he continued to sit back and watch Subaru, someone who believed in his own power to change fate with his ability Return by Death, take desperate measures, continuing to drive himself deeper and deeper into predicaments.

He was a cunning fellow, which made Subaru want to click his tongue.

Anastasia: "—Ain't it 'bout time ya introduce us as well?"

Subaru: "Sorry to keep you guys waiting. Roswaal, they're visitors. Allow them to seat themselves."

Roswaal: "I'm listening. Nevertheless, those are some interesting faces."

The girl who was waiting out in the corridor spoke out to the people having a conversation at the entrance. Subaru let out a light apology to them, and then made a hand gesture towards Roswaal, who was sitting at the couch, signaling him to let them in.

Roswaal stood up and then sat back down in the chief seat with dead silence, then directing the two guests over to the visitors' sofa. Subaru and the others slowly took their places on the sofa that faced Roswaal.

Roswaal: "Welcome, from so far you have come. The last time we spoke to each other face-to-face like this was at the Recognition Ceremony."

Anastasia: "That's true. Also, it's not like we'd spoken to each other in a proper conversation before… This essentially feels like the first time we'll be speakin' to each other."

The Recognition Ceremony that had come up in this conversation was the formal recognition of the suppression of the White Whale, accomplished by a combination of the Emilia Camp, Anastasia Camp, and Crusch Camp, where they had been evaluated.

As the small-scale ceremony had been carried out in the Royal Castle located at the Royal Capital, naturally, every member available immediately after the resolution of the Sanctuary affairs had been present, as the representatives of each camp were to gather.

He had vivid memories of Otto having a tense, pale face, and of the castle shining within Garfiel's eyes, and Roswaal had nonchalantly decided to participate, even after all the trouble he had put them through. What a guy.

Well he'd been nervous, yeah, but he couldn't say Emilia was any better than him in nervousness and fidgeting. It made sense, considering how she was being praised for achievements she didn't even have memory of achieving.

Anyway, that was a meeting from the past. Mutual greetings were carried out in a hurried manner.

And so, the conversation would immediately move onto the main topic, a report about the the city of Pristella—

Roswaal: "—And just like the letter said, Otto-kun and Garfiel have withdrawn because of their injuries. I see, undeeerstood~. These achievements are truly promising."

A sigh of admiration escaped Roswaal, after hearing the report. This made Emilia raise her eyebrows, voicing a "Hey" with a slightly stern tone.

Emilia: "They were injured so badly they couldn't even return. Yet, you still put it like that. What are you trying to say?"

Roswaal: "Let's refrain from jumping toooo~ any hasty conclusions. Yes, it is heartbreaking that they were injured like that, and yes, their forced, temporary withdrawal is no less heartbreaking than their wounds. However, on the other hand, no one in the camp has suffered fatal damage. If you consider the other camps, and taking into account you have encountered multiple Sin Archbishops… Indeed, this outcome really is miraculous."

Emilia: "…"

Roswaal: "Naturally, the scars caused by the Sin Archbishops should be treated promptly, but Emilia-sama and everyone else who endeavored to protect the city did their best so that the damage was kept to a bare minimum. I think that you ought to recognize that for yourseeelf~.”

Emilia: “…Oh, thanks.”

Her face one of someone who had not been convinced, Emilia delivered her thanks.

In actuality, his words should have sounded like a sound argument. However, it was important to consider the impression one had of the speaker. Subaru had the thought that he was shady, and so all the others probably followed suit.

Roswaal: “Weeell~, putting the question of people’s thoughts on me aside, shall we move onto something else—Incidentally, the person who summoned Emilia-sama to Pristella where such a ruckus occurred was Anastasia-sama, was it not…? What do you have to say about that?”

Anastasia: “It’s inexcusable that she was dragged right into that hubbub. If ya want me to apologize, I’ll do it properly, as I’m mentally prepared to do so.”

Roswaal: “And if you sincerely bow your head, this would end without having you paying back a single diiime~… Oh, but you do not need to apologize to me. Emilia-sama has already turned you down, correct?”

Emilia: “Because, shouldn’t the blame be put on the Witch Cult if they were the ones to cause mischief? Anastasia shouldn’t be responsible for anything, because she merely invited us there. Also, it’s not like we didn’t accomplish the goals for which we were summoned out to Pristella…”

Roswaal cast a side glance, to which Emilia responded by feeling the pendant worn on her neck.

A brand-new, large spellstone was attached to the pendant. At this very moment, a fast-asleep Great Spirit was quietly awaiting for its revival. Obtaining this highly pure crystal gem, which would become Puck's Anchor—that was something the camp had set as their goal, and something that had been achieved.

Emilia: "Also, isn't it possible that the Witch Cult was driven back simply because we happened to be there? If you think about it that way, it should be seen as Anastasia's achieveme…"

Anastasia: "To think of it like that'd be too favorable to another camp, so I'm gonna stop ya there."

For some reason, Anastasia was being rescued by Emilia's words of optimism.

However, Roswaal's current questioning was just an attempt to keep people in check. In fact, it was plausible that most of the Witch Cult's targets had been brought into Pristella by Subaru and the others. If that were to be pointed out, there was no doubt the atmosphere would become heavy because of the evil of the Witch Cult.

Thus, it would be in their best interest to solidify the opinion, "Let's work together. The Witch Cult blows!".

Subaru: "The other three camps have already agreed on that. One Sin Archbishop was killed, and one was captured… Man, one thing was happening after another with the witch's cult."

Roswaal: "Though, their organization skills are a bit dubious. In their case, they're a group of outlaws that have nothing to do with words such as «cooperation» and «unity». Even if one of them was the last to stand having lost aaall~ of their allies and, that lone lunatic's morale wouldn't be damaged in the slightest."

Subaru: "…I can agree with that."

Roswaal's opinion was the same as Subaru's, so it was probably the correct one.

The so-called "organization" of the Witch Cult was now more of a ragtag gang of lunatics rather than an actual organization. They could not bring themselves to be naive now that they thought lacked organization; they would not be obedient from now on, simple as that.

The remaining Gluttony and Lust's brutality would never be stopped.

Subaru: "That's why we need to find a way to resist them. The next thing I'll talk about is related to that."

Roswaal: "…Coming in touch with Sage Shaula, hmm~."

Subaru: "I know that it's not gonna be easy. But there's no choice but to try it as long as we can't come up with any other measure. Finally, an omnipotent and omniscient… Or well, let's say omniscient. If the Sage's really like that, there's no harm in just trying to talk to the person, right?"

Roswaal: "Aaalthough~, everybody in the past couple hundreds of years who's tried that ended up suffering a big loss by paying with their liiives~."

He presented this common knowledge, and it certainly was a disturbing view of the situation. However, they had something up their sleeves for that reason.

When Subaru exchanged looks with her, Anastasia replied with a gesture of slight acknowledgement using her chin. Then,

Anastasia: "There's where I come in. Fortunately, I've got a way we can make it to the Sage's Watchtower safely. So there ain't a reason to worry about getting lost. Does that calm yer worries?"

Roswaal: "Well, should I truly believe your words just becaaause~…? First of all, if you do have this method, the people who would pay a great sum to know such a thing are many. So why are you the only one aware of it?"

Anastasia: "Money's certainly important to me, as a merchant—However, there are things in this world that money can't replace. This is one such thing."

Hand upon her thin chest, Anastasia—Eridna proclaimed that with pomp.

Despite the fact she was pretending to be Anastasia, her word had a wondrous power; a power that astonished even Subaru, one who was aware that it was not her true self at this moment.

Being faced with that Anastasia, Roswaal responded by closing one of his eyes. Glaring at her for a brief period with only a single yellow eye,

Roswaal: “Ohhh~ myyyy~. This is why it’s difficult to deal with those who are cognizant of both fighting and gambling. Moreover, I am sure Emilia-sama has already agreed to this, anywayyy~.”

Emilia: “I’m sorry for making these decisions all by myself, okay?”

Roswaal: “But you won’t stop taking these decisions of your own accord. It is fine, however. You’ll dare to proceed in choosing this thorny path. That’s where he comes into the frame as well.”

Roswaal retorted in a half-hearted manner, though he was interested in how they would get there after all.

The height of the hurdle Subaru had to climb over would become be correspondingly higher, based on the difficulty of the road Emilia had chosen. This was, because he was now the hope that replaced the Book of Wisdom, for Roswaal.

Subaru: “Anyways, as per Anastasia’s information we’ll come across some sort of desert. Although it’ll take a few days.”

Julius: “It is not «some sort of desert», it is the Augria Sand Dunes. You have had this mistake corrected so many times so far, so how about you hurry up and remember it accurately already?”

Julius presented an input of his own as he let out a sigh in reaction to Subaru’s vague memory.

The person that had been watching in silence while sitting on the sofa next to Anastasia the whole time directed his intellectual gaze at Roswaal, and continued,

Julius: “I do believe that this might be a very difficult proposal to accept for Roswaal-sama. However, in the city of Pristella, there remain many who have been exposed to the Witch Cult's barbarism, and the number of people who are still wounded both mentally and physically is vast. If we could somehow take any action that may pose as salvation, then I would like to wish to have permission to do so."

Roswaal: "You have quiiite~ the graceful way with words. It appears that you are an owner of extraordinary abilities… But it makes no sense how I have no recollection of that. Which means, that. Riiight~?"

Julius: "…"

Roswaal understood the situation based off his non-existing memories of Julius's being. The gaze of Julius turned downcast, at which Roswaal rested his chin on the hand of the arm he had placed on the armrest.

Then loosening his lips with a sense of cheerfulness, he—

Roswaal: "You've been forgotten by everyone because of the Authority of Gluttony. It feels like you've been left behind by the world. In order to break out of the conundrum you find yourself in, you're looking to pursuit the thin amount of hope that is Sage Shaula. You do not need to make excuses on how it's for everyone else, you knooow~."

Julius: "—Kh. By no means am I doing this for selfish reasons!"

Roswaal: "I'm not blaming yooou~. It's actually a natural thing, and so, I find that way of being preferrable. Doing anything for yourself over doing basically anything for someone else's sake is a desperate act. Even if other people were to be saved as a result with your actions, while feeling satisfaction and feeling achievement from doing so, there'd be no need to deny your condescending heart."

Julius' face stiffened as Roswaal continued slamming him with word upon word.

Under his clown makeup, the smile on his face turned even deeper.

Roswaal: “And even more, if you save yourself, then there’s a high chance that other people will be similarly saved as well. You even carry a just cause to act upon, so there’s no need for you to take a little blame, riiight~?”

Julius: “I…”

Anastasia: “—Margrave Mathers, may I ask ya to stop there?”

Anastasia restrained Julius with her voice, taking his place in confronting Roswaal. She let out an elegant smile and then tilted her lovely head. And then,

Anastasia: “I also ain’t got memories of him, but… even then, this boy seems to be my Knight. That’s why it doesn’t feel to watch him getting bullied while unable to do anythin’ ‘bout it.”

Roswaal: “You’re saying that the bond between a master and a servant still exists between you two, even when he has disappeared from your memories…?”

Anastasia: “I wonder. I ain’t too certain ‘bout that either. Though it did feel natural and pleasin’ that Julius cared for me during the trip… Moreover—”

Anastasia gently raised her finger and pointed towards the sofa facing her and,

Anastasia: “I wanna prevent ya from tearin’ your camp apart if ya keep doin’ that, yeah?”

Roswaal: “—My, oh my.”

In response to Anastasia’s point—he looked at Subaru, who was on the verge of eruption, and then promptly shrugged his shoulders. Subaru was on the verge of shouting. Naturally, Emilia and Beatrice were on the cusp of doing so as well.

Raising both of his hands in surrender, Roswaal made his statement.

Roswaal: “Okay, okay. I’m sorry about this. Thoooough~, I do think that I was just pointing out the possibility of a certain aspect.”

Subaru: “That was unnecessary. You really need to stop fucking around.”

Roswaal: “Was it though? You will most likely come across people who don’t care about how many people benefit from the outcome, and distrustful comrades who bring you down with abusive complaints. It seemed like you weren’t aware of that possibility, so I just thought to advise you to anticipaaate~ it.”

Not doing this for someone else’s sake, but for one’s own.

As a matter of fact, Subaru was experienced in being berated for such actions, which remained in the form of a painful wound.

That had been what he had told Emilia at the Royal Castle; that he was acting for her sake, but her response was that he was acting for his own sake. As a result, he would never be able to forget the heartache that ensued. That was a definite truth.

However, whether that had been the truth or not, there often would be times where people would mention it with the intent of hurting him. But that did not mean that—

Subaru: “It’s not as if the feeling of accomplishment decreases depending on the amount of people who approve of one’s actions. As if this person is like that. Stop it.”

Roswaal: “It cannot be helped, riiight~? Because unlike you, I’m not familiar with his personaliiity~… Although your relationship with him doesn’t seem like the sort a person would have after a few days on a trip.”

Roswaal turned to Subaru, who was about to lose his temper. In just this moment, Roswaal’s eyes, bordered by his long eyelashes, became overcast with a full-blown sense of tragedy. Then,

Roswaal: “This means that you’re the only one who remembers again. Just like in Rem’s case.”

Subaru: “Though, I do wonder what kind of fate this is.”

Roswaal: “It is proof your existence is a special one. You should care for it. You should treasure iiit~—Because there are many things out there that cannot be obtained even when one wished for them.”

Nobody besides Roswaal himself followed the second half of his emotionful statement.

However, even if he were to continue tp ask him questions until he shed light on it, Roswaal would not let out the truth; henceforth, Subaru quickly gave up on the situation. Anyhow, the things that needed to be said should have been said by now.

Next would be—

Subaru: “Just like the letter said, the Confinement Room and…”

Roswaal: “And the Sleeping Beauty will be taken out, yes. What a drastic measure. I was sure that you really hated people touching her, after all.”

Subaru: “A way to wake her up might be found, so I’ll try it. Isn’t that a given?”

Roswaal: “I was surprised to find out that you’d first try this measure with that girl. You give off the impression of a selfish person, but in reality you punish yourself. Somewhere in your heart, somewhere in the corner of your mind, ever since the onset, you believe that she should be the first to be saved?”

Subaru: “…”

He had hit the bullseye, and Subaru reflexively sunk into silence.

Ever since they had set out on their journey towards the Pleiades Watchtower and up until the time they arrived at the mansion, Subaru had been constantly wondering if bringing Rem along as one of Gluttony’s victims was indeed the right approach.

Of course, he was not averse to waking up Rem, not at all. If there was the possibility that she would wake up, he wished that she would awaken as soon as possible, even if just for a day, even if just for a single second.

However, the certainty of Natsuki Subaru being the one to do it was a different matter.

All those people in the city of Pristella were suffering the same kind of damage as Rem. A situation where those who were sleeping were not even taken into account by their own families, unaware their existence had been stolen.

The more Subaru thought about it, the more he felt the piercing of a strange wedge in his haert.

It was the feeling of guilt from saving her first over a multitude of other people. This was why he had hesitated this time around, on the subject of bringing Rem out, but—

???: “I’ve already convinced Subaru, so there’s no problem.”

Roswaal: “…My my, this is quite surprising.”

In the place of the stricken-silent Subaru, the one replying to Roswaal was Emilia.

Turning his gaze to Emilia, her chest puffed up with pride, Roswaal quizzically closed one of his eyes,

Roswaal: “You say that, but wouldn’t her awakening be troublesome for Emilia-sama? Subaru-kun has strong feelings for that girl, no matter how you look at it. In fact, they’re as strong as the feelings he holds for Emilia-sama…”

Emilia: “Yeah, I think that’s right. Subaru will devote himself to that girl for a while, and he might stop caring about me as well.”

Subaru: “No, under no circumstances would that…”

Happen. It should not happen.

His feelings towards Emilia had never wavered, and he swore they would never either.

However, a different part of him possessed intense feelings for Rem. That was a fact, and just like Emilia said, if she were to wake up, there was no doubt that he'd become devoted to her.

However, Emilia turned to Subaru with a "It's fine", then resuming her words,

Emilia: "If it makes Subaru turn away from me, that just means that I'll be the one this time to do my best for him to turn my way. I'm going to be troubled if Subaru isn't here after all that. Therefore, I'll also have you come my way, no matter how madly in love you are with Rem with how cute she is."

Subaru: "Eh? Emilia-tan?!"

Emilia: "That's my resolve and that's what I have decided. And nobody will complain about you saving her—So it's fine. Let's wake up Rem."

Emilia supported Subaru's decision with her strong words.

Those words somewhat sounded like a confession. It surprised Subaru and caused his knees to shake. On many occasions, Emilia had told him things that sounded like affection. That had indeed happened, but in none of those times did she go over the level of deep affection—

Emilia: "Me, Rem, Beatrice, Petra, Patrasche, Otto-kun, Garfiel, we all want you to be reaaally reaaally happy!"

Subaru: "Though you did mix a ground dragon and men at the latter half of your statement."

She had mixed in a loli at the middle too.

Anyhow, he accepted this, and then Beatrice, who was sitting beside him, poked his shoulder. An "Oh, eh" escaped Subaru's lips, looking towards his side right after. Beatrice had her usual indignant look plastered on her face.

Beatrice: "It's not like I'm going to complain about Subaru's tendency to fool around with girls… But one of his hands should be always free, I suppose. This is Betty's exclusive special privilege, in fact."

Subaru: "…You're ridiculously cute."

Beatrice: "That's a given, I suppose. Betty's adorableness resounds to the gods of heaven and earth, in fact."

He didn't go as far as to care about what the gods of heaven and earth thought of the issue, but it did resound in Subaru's heart.

Backed by both Emilia and Beatrice, Subaru would endeavor to wake Rem up.

—He longer hesitated about doing this.

Subaru: "So that's that, Roswaal. Sorry for being loved so much. Rem will be taken out."

Roswaal: "You'll just surprise Emilia-sama and Beatrice-sama when you make them sound like alternates like that. It's fine, do whatever you want. I never planned on stopping you anywaaay~."

Subaru: "Alrighty, then about the talk from before."

Roswaal: "I was feeling concern and just wanted to make sure that you understood the meaning of those actions. I also hurt your guys' incredible, nameless Knight, so my apologies."

Subaru: "It's okay."

Roswaal spoke in a way that felt like banter til the very end. Julius on the other hand inhaled slightly, and took turns exchanging looks with Anastasia and Subaru,

Julius: "I am Julius Juukulius. This only remains within his memory as of right now, but I am an Royal Guard of the Kingdom of Lugunica. I am not so inept that my heart would be perturbed by something of this caliber."

He makes his declaration in such a manner, a splendid job of brushing aside the pestering from the wickedly evil mage.

Subaru: "…Not very firm."

Julius: “Just whose side are you on, really? I feel like I have been stabbed in the back just now.”

He sneaked in his last statement just after their conversation had been brought to its conclusion.

2

The conversation had ended, and Subaru and the others had left the parlor.

They were heading towards the Confinement Room that resided in the east wing of the mansion. Over there, they would come in contact with a person who was possibly one of the key factors in reaching the Augria Sand Dunes.

A year prior to this or thereabouts, a person had been brought along with the residents of the mansion’s migration and had been kept inside the Confinement Room ever since then.

That really was not the type of acquaintance one would wish to come in contact with, nor was it really safe to do, but—

???: “I’m really wondering what kind of results they’ll bring. Making me having that sort of expectations, I wonder if theeey’ve~ perhaps influenced me yeeet~ again.”

Roswaal rested the weight of his back onto the sofa, sinking deeper and deeper into it as these words trickled out of him.

One person was left in the parlor. The sorcerer thought over the lingering memory of the previous discussion, had someone come to mind, and then let out a slight laugh. Then,

Roswaal: “Does this mean that I’m becoming one of his favorite members too? What do you think?”

???: “…You sure say some disgusting things I suppose, is what I think, in fact. You really have no limits to the point it’s frightening, there’s no other way to put it, I suppose.”

Roswaal: “It’s not like I lack principles to go as far as to get close to him with thiiis~ body.”

???: “You were a woman before as well, in fact. Betty is just adequately staying on-guard, I suppose.”

Roswaal made an increasingly cheerful smile, and then the little girl who had responded to his statement—Beatrice, began playing with her own hair by pulling on it, keeping a composed expression.

It was possibly because she was bored, or perhaps it was a habit she would adopt when starting to get irritated.

Roswaal: “Subaru-kun and the others are going to the Confinement Room, you know? Don’t you think it’s unsafe without you byyy~ his side?”

Beatrice: “A stray that bares its fangs is less troublesome than a pet dog that polishes its fangs, in fact. Which is why I thought to keep that in check properly, I suppose.”

Roswaal: “Calling him a pet dog is truly cruel. But being Teacher’s dog would be something I’d yearn for.”

Beatrice: “You are a deviant beyond saving, in fact… Roswaal, don’t test Subaru too much, I suppose. Betty won’t allow you to provoke him too much, in fact.”

Roswaal let out a smile containing a hint of obscenity, and was properly rebuked by Beatrice and her bitter face. Roswaal removed his smile afterwards, and just like always, he closed his one eye—his blue eye, returning Beatrice’s look solely with his yellow eye.

Roswaal: “You and I view things a different way. You act carefree, while I act with a single purpose in mind.”

Beatrice: “That would mean that you see a side of me that is completely different from Mother, the Betty that holds Subaru’s hand is several hundreds times better than that, I suppose.”

Roswaal: “That is what I’m refeeerring~ to. It’s fine for you, who put on the airs as the Guardian of the Forbidden Library, to becooome~ as happy as possible.”

Beatrice: “That’s a given, in fact. Which is why I’ll have you allow me to act in order to protect that happiness, I suppose.”

Roswaal, still seated on the couch, and Beatrice standing right before him; with the two’s line of sight at the same height, sparks flew in all directions. Roswaal squinted, as if to attempt to peek into the heart of that round-eyed girl, and,

Roswaal: “With one of the Sin Archbishops being killed, a second one should’ve entered Subaru-kun.”

Beatrice: “…There should be candidates other than Subaru, in fact.”

Roswaal: “But none of them come close to him nor do they overlap with him. Which one will be chosen is a matter-of-course, between the one who only grazes him and the one who overlaps. Cease with the dull pretenses.”

Beatrice: “—I won’t let you say much more, I suppose.”

Beatrice responded to Roswaal’s argument with a voice coated with determination that she had previously hidden.

She grabbed tightly onto her arm’s sleeve, then glared at Roswaal.

Beatrice: “Betty is Subaru’s, in fact. Therefore, Subaru will remain Subaru, I suppose.”

Roswaal: “I don’t mean to hinder yooour∼ efforts. The lower the number, the more convenient it is more me. That’s aaall∼.”

Beatrice: “—Tch.”

At the very end, Beatrice sent a scathing look towards Roswaal, heading towards the door.

This was the end of the discussion.

Roswaal: “Beatrice.”

Roswaal called out to the girl’s back as she moved away.

Beatrice stopped walking, but did not turn around.

Roswaal: “I want you to be happy, at least much more so than the others. You are… like a younger sister to me, that’s why.”

Beatrice: “—A pretty disgusting thing to say, in fact. Also, you’ll never be like Mother, I suppose.”

Roswaal: “Isn’t that what love iiiis~?”

There was no rebuttal.

There was merely the sound of the door opening and closing, echoing quietly in the parlor.

And after that, there was no further sound being made within the parlor.

Chapter 3:
A Little Girl’s Cell

1

???: “How did your talk with Master go?”

Subaru: “You could say that it went the same as usual, and that he irritated me more than usual. You get the point.”

???: “Well, I understand what you mean.”

Subaru’s group had left the parlor, and Frederica had been entrusted with guiding them towards the mansion’s east wing.

This scary-faced woman with her beautiful, long blonde hair and courteously-worn maid outfit, finally exchanged polite greetings with Anastasia and Julius as one of the mansion’s honest maids—and then spoke to Subaru, who was walking away discouraged.

Frederica: “Was Garf useful in your journey and in the city? For him to get heavily injured to the point of not being able to come back, even when I told him specific instructions… I am worried about him causing trouble for Emilia-sama and the others.”

Emilia: “No, don’t worry about it. Garfiel worked reaaally hard, after all. He’s resting along with Otto-kun right now, without causing any trouble… Well, I’m not so sure about the «without causing any trouble» part. I hope that’s not what’s happening. But anyways, we did request that they rest.”

Frederica: “My apologies for having my foolish younger brother cause you trouble.”

Emilia didn’t finish her follow-up much due to the fact she half-doubted it, while Frederica offered her apologies.

Anyhow, Garfiel’s behavior worried Petra, Ram, Roswaal, and Frederica, but his mentality had changed in some way or another during the incident at Pristella—one could say that he had matured. No doubt about it.

To begin with, for a fifteen-year-old boy, Garfiel's strength was already outstanding.

Even considering just how fierce the battles with the Bowel Hunter and the Eight Arms had been, he was still far from being able to boast himself as the strongest. But even then, he certainly possessed a level of strength that contended with not just the Emilia Camp's, but the whole continent's top ranks as well.

His biggest problem? Perhaps his immature mentality, still. Once that mental frailness were overcome however, he would go a level beyond.

Well, there was still a ways to go. That was something that shouldn't be rushed. Steadily and assuredly becoming stronger, stepping firmly on each step of the stairs before moving on to the next stage, was the appropriate way a fifteen-year-old should mature.

And in addition—

Subaru: "There's another reason for him not coming back right away this time."

Emilia: "Is it Mimi?"

Subaru: "There's that too, but."

Emilia cut into the conversation as if through sharp hearing, and he smiled wryly.

Even Emilia, someone whose knowledge of romantic relationships between men and women, seemed to be curious about the love affairs of other people to some extent. She was very interested in Garfiel and Mimi's relationship.

Of course, Garfiel should feel something for Mimi, who had risked her own life to guard his, and she was not shy in proclaiming her affection for him both before and after the battle.

Frankly speaking, there was no man out there who would not waver upon being struck with affection from a girl he didn't hate. Subaru too, was also no exception. He was unable to say anything about that phenomenon, considering he was one that had experienced it before.

He would have to wait and see how Garfiel would respond to Mimi's feelings, considering the fact that his fondness for Ram was clear.

But that was a concern different from the one Garfiel had left in the city of Pristella.

Frederica: "—Subaru-sama? Do you need to ask me something?"

Subaru: "No, nothing in particular. It wouldn't be right for me to talk about this matter."

He looked at Frederica's profile with a profound look, and was questioned about its meaning.

Taking Garfiel's true feelings in mind, Subaru dodged her question. At Pristella, a family that Garfiel worried about—a family of golden hair and green eyes, traits that would remind anyone of Frederica and Garfiel, who were brother and sister.

Garfiel's relationship with that family was like his relationship with Frederica. It was certain that relationship was something Garfiel wished to report to his family, Frederica and Ryuzu, himself.

Subaru: "So I won't say anything. Natsuki Subaru will leave it at that in a choukou suteki way."

Emilia: "Oh, speaking of Garfiel, at Pristella there were some children that were reaaally friendly with him, and they were…"

Subaru: "Emilia-tan, Emilia tan, you're gonna make my monologue go to waste!"

His mediation was about to go to waste, so Subaru literally covered Emilia's mouth to stop her from talking. The synergy would be scary if he were to leave it as it was, so he decided that he would make the time to properly explain the gist of the setting later to Emilia.

Subaru waved his hand with a forced smile at Frederica, whose face became more and more puzzled.

Frederica: “Sorry to interrupt you guys while you’re happily heating up your intimacy, but do you have any idea of where you guys are headed?”

Subaru: “Oh, that place called the Confinement Room. That person we talked about before’s there.”

Julius: “Hmm, that person, huh—I wonder if the conversation will go well.”

Subaru: “It’s something that hasn’t been done before, so, dunno. Anyways, I’ll at least try asking to make sure.”

Julius responded to Subaru’s explanation by going into deep thought, his face complex as he follows the latter’s back.

In reality, Subaru was also aware of the many problems this proposal had in store. However, if all went well, then they would lower the risk of their journey by a considerable amount.

Emilia: “Also that girl’s rather fond of Subaru, so shouldn’t it be fine?”

Subaru: “That girl’s fonder of Garfiel than she is of me. Maybe she likes him more because he’s feline… Hm, we’ve arrived.”

While he was replying to Emilia’s optimistic words with a strained smile, Frederica stopped walking. Subaru and Emilia too halted their movements, having entered somewhere with a view and atmosphere distinctively alien in the mansion.

The floor layout was roughly identical to that of the previous Roswaal mansion, however, the basement part of the eastern wing —this was the only place that was starkly different.

In the central building of the mansion, there was the main center wing that concentrated the facilities needed for daily life. The west wing contained multi-purpose facilities, such as the maids' rooms and the guest's rooms. And then there was the eastern wing, a place that acted as a storehouse/safe for the history and heritage of the ancient Mathers bloodline, such as books.

However, the only place that was different was the eastern wing's basement. There was a clear goal set for the cold, stone room in the basement of the noble mansion.

Anastasia: "Quite the unpleasant atmosphere floatin' 'round this place, huh."

Anastasia snorted her nose, complementing her brief comment on the different atmosphere.

There was no denial to her view on the mood, so it was indeed a clear assessment that everyone agreed with. The atmosphere that drifted about in this level of the mansion could not be described in any way other than "unpleasant".

Anastasia: "It's still different from Miasma it seems, but my body ain't feelin' too good 'bout it for sure."

Julius: "The matter of the building's structure and this facility's purpose in the first place… It may be completely unrelated to that, but I do believe that this structure was ultimately erected due to the presence inside."

Anastasia and Julius looked down at the continuous stairs leading down to the basement of the mansion filled with darkness, as they exchange these words.

The Confinement Room had already been brought to their attention. It seemed that both of them had correctly imagined the sort of establishment that existed in the basement. Or were as close to the right answer as possible.

Frederica: "Well then. I shall be guiding you all, now. Please be careful to avoid having your feet slip."

With those words, Frederica led them down the stairs. Subaru and the rest followed her tall back, headed for the basement. Julius's face indicated that he had steeled himself for what laid ahead.

The footsteps they made while walking down the stone stairs resounded very clearly throughout the space they were in. A cold breeze blew upwards from the basement, causing his bangs to shake slightly, which got on his nerves incomprehensibly.

Frederica: "I am going to open it."

Having descended towards the basement, they were blocked by an iron door standing right in front of them. The door had many solid locks installed onto it. Frederica released several of them, one by one.

The key to the door made a sound, the locks were undone, and then the door opened with a creaking noise. Beyond that gate, a stone pathway laid in front, with yet another door to be found deep inside this place, at the back.

Frederica: "The person you are looking for is beyond this door."

Frederica stepped to the side of the door, making way for them to enter, and then bowed. They gave acknowledging gestures with a nod of their chin in response, and the four people headed straight towards the door, with Subaru in the lead.

—The door at the deepest part of the basement had no lock.

He reached for the doorknob. If he were to push it open, they would surely meet what was inside.

Upon having come in contact with the door, Subaru looked back with baited breath.

Everyone: "…"

Emilia, Julius, and Anastasia all stared at Subaru's actions. The three nodded their heads at Subaru, and he took a deep breath, then putting strength into the hand that gripped the knob.

And with a sound, the door was pushed open—

???: “Roaar, roaaar! I’m gonnaaaa~ eaaat~ yooou~!”

???: “Kyaaa~, help me, nooo~.”

???: “Hehehehe. Nobody will come to save you even if you cry for help.”

With the door’s opening, a lovely voice was heard as the pathway became bathed in light.

On the other side of the open door, a lone girl was to be seen inside the room, a multitude of dolls placed around her. Her back faced the others, as she continued to play with the dolls in her hands.

She changed into an imitative voice, though it was unclear just what exactly she was imitating. Nonetheless, she was pretty into it.

???: “Nope, he’s coming. Because he promised to come to me if I was in trouble, after all… Hmm?”

Holding a doll representing a little doll, the child stood up, having suddenly noticed something. Looking back timidly, she sees Subaru and the others standing still at the entrance dumbfounded, and then opened her round, large eyes.

She had braided, light-brown hair, and had simple but lovely facial features.

Subaru: “Sup, how are you?”

Addressing her, Subaru raised his hand, as if nothing had happened at all.

???: “O-Onii-san, you idiooot! At least knock before you come iiin!”

Unsurprisingly, he was yelled at as a result of his little prank.

2

Subaru: “So yeah, this is the prisoner of this mansion. Meili here will advise us regarding to Witchbeasts.”

Meili: “I’ve been disgraced, onii-san hurt my feelings… Sniffle sniffle…”

Subaru introduced the depressed girl, who was crouching at a corner of the room, surrounded by stuffed toys—Meili, Julius shook his head, putting his fingers between his eyebrows.

While keeping the girl at the corner of his vision, he spoke this as if blaming Subaru, who had gotten carried away.

Julius: “It was a bit clumsy of me to not have gotten more information about this beforehand… But the poorness of your character is showing. It is inexcusable that you pull these pranks at every opportunity.”

Subaru: “I don’t think I’m playing around that much, though… Or well, I do agree that it’s in bad taste. Also, she really was someone dangerous before, you know?”

Julius appeared to have misgivings of Subaru’s justifications. Ignoring those all-suspecting men, Emilia and Anastasia lined up and spoke out to Meili.

Emilia: “Sorry, Meili. We’ll scold Subaru later for this, so don’t worry.”

Anastasia: “My, what a cute girl, ain’t she? Beatrice-chan, Petra-chan, ain’t this quite tellin’ of Natsuki-kun’s tastes?”

Subaru: “That’s a ridiculous opinion of me. Mind saying something more fitting?! I thought to gather people, and not specifically lolis!”

There was suddenly some sense of grounding to his nickname “Lolimancer”, so he wished she wouldn’t say such frightening things.

Putting that aside, Meili hadn't listened to Emilia and her words either, as she was indignant in earnest. In that sense, there was an imbalance in that she possessed child-like sensitivity.

Subaru: "Meili."

Meili: "Can't hear you."

Subaru: "Meili, come on."

Meili: "I don't care."

This was the situation. She was a nuisance, having entered a mode in which she'd refuse to listen.

Thus, Subaru decided to hurry up and bring out the last resort as quickly as possible. Subaru reached around his back, and then showed Meili the ace up his sleeve.

Subaru: "Look Meili. It's a present, take it. It's a new stuffed toy, Darepanda."

Meili: "—! Wow! It's cuteee!"

What Subaru presented Meili with was this stuffed toy, one that he had fixed up during the dragon carriage trip back from the city of Pristella.

As someone who had improved his skills in domestic assistance this past year, Natsuki Subaru's sewing skills had become twice as good as before. He could now produce stuffed toys, and if he so wished, he could maybe even create women's clothes now.

Anyhow, this new stuffed toy was an innovative work, that had merged the panda theme with a "lazy from the heat" taste. He more-or-less felt like he had seen something akin to it before, but since that was something from beyond this world it wouldn't be a big deal, so whatever.

And so, he presented the new piece that had this and that to it, and Meili accepted it with glimmering eyes.

Meili: “Cute! It’s a new animal! Wonder what I should name it… Okay, I’ve got it! I’ll call this one Big Panda!”

Subaru: “I see you’ve named it what it literally is.”

Putting aside her naming sense, she was extremely skilled at understanding the essence of things.

Hugging the stuffed panda in a loving way, she looked at Subaru and the others with a face that indicated that her mood had been salvaged.

Meili: “By the way, welcome back onii-san, onee-san. Looks like you guys have been away for quite a bit, huh. Petra-chan missed you, you know?”

Subaru: “We were gone for a whole month, after all. And we’re going to be away for a while again, so I don’t really wanna think about how it’ll probably anger Petra, but…”

Meili: “Petra-chan does love onii-san, after all… Hm, new people?”

As she was lining up her scattered plush toys onto shelves, Meili suddenly noticed Julius and Anastasia, which showed on her face. Julius became surprised at that change in mood, but Anastasia simply gave a nod with a composed look.

Anastasia: “Compared to Mimi, it’s like the feelin’ of bein’ manipulated’s just the surface.”

Julius: “…Now that you say it, I agree. Let us give our thanks to Mimi.”

Master and servant display a strange scene of agreement, and after that Julius’s eyes swiftly dart around the room. After briefly taking a look at that underground space,

Julius: “Nevertheless, I had assumed that it would be a harsh environment after hearing that it was a Confinement Room… But contrary to my expectations, it seems to be a peaceful place to spend time in.”

Emilia: “The person in here is a little girl, so it’s not like we wanted to torment her…But, she can’t go outside either, so it’s complicated.”

Emilia lowered her eyebrows, her visage complex.

Just like she had stated, the Confinement Room—or rather, Meili’s living space, to put it bluntly, gave off a very lenient feeling for a place of incarceration.

It did seem cold precisely because of the stone pathway, but there colorful wallpaper and carpet decorated this girl’s room, and she was free to do whatever she pleased with how she wasn’t even restrained. On the shelves, there were countless stuffed toys that had been crafted by Subaru’s hands, along with many books and play equipment.

She was being given food, and there wasn’t any problem with bathing or going to the bathroom. In short, it was a place where a Hikikomori could live in peace. It was so comfy that even Subaru wanted to be confined in it. However—

Julius: “It seems that there is a peculiar air, similar to Miasma, leaking endlessly.”

Anastasia: “It also seems to be comin’ from that girl… is that it?”

In response to Anastasia and the others’ look, Meili nodded with a smile on her face.

She had an honest smile, but something emanated from that girl, so dreadful and disgusting that it could not be hidden. That was the biggest reason as to why Meili had been confined here, and was not released.

Subaru: “I did talk about it on the dragon carriage, but this girl actually aimed for Emilia and us others before… Hmmm, so she’s like a killer-for-hire. Guess you could put it like that, right?”

Julius: “I feel that is wrong already at that point, but please, continue.”

Subaru: “Feels like you’re implying something with the way you say that… Anyways, she’s a professional killer. So, as for what Meili’s small body can do, in short, she can manipulate Witchbeasts. She is a Beastmaster.”

Meili: “Yep, me and the bad animal-sans get along preeetty well.”

Meili said that with an “Ahem” as she puffed up with pride, but the contents of her words were shocking.

Witchbeasts were harmful threats to mankind and were never friendly with humans in the first place. It seemed that there was one exception, an arrangement in which Witchbeasts would obey the person who had broken their horn, but—

Subaru: “In Meili’s case, the presence of the horn is irrelevant. I’m not too good with that theory so even if I explain it you wouldn’t understand.”

Meili: “From what Mama said, I play the same role as a Witchbeast’s horn. Sooo, I can be friendly with the Witchbeasts.”

Fulfilling the role of a Witchbeast’s horn—the meaning of that was obscure.

That being said, it seemed like there had never been any type of research done on the ecology of Witchbeasts. Of course, there was the possibility there were people who hunted Witchbeasts for a living, but even if they held information about their traits, they would not be looking at them from a research point of view most likely.

Emilia: “Initially, Meili came to attack us with one more person. Garfiel defeated that person, and this girl was caught. Ever since then, this girl’s always been sheltered by this mansion.”

Anastasia: “Why did ya do that much? No matter what’cha say, if she was an enemy before, ya should’ve dealt with her quickly… Or wait, it doesn’t seem like this child can be dealt with.”

Emilia: “…There’s no way we can even think of killing her. But at the same time, we can’t expel her either. Because this girl says that if she gets released…”

Meili: “Mama’ll get mad at me. Elsa died, and I failed, so she’ll definitely kill me if she finds me. So, staying here is the safest option.”

Meili answered with a calm tone, but it seemed like her expression had become clouded.

Meili had lost Elsa, who she worked with, and had failed in carrying out her task. Their guardians were most likely something like professional killer managers, and their failures would definitely never be allowed.

Banishing her, would mean she would receive punishment—those would be her own personal affairs, and even though Subaru and the others were completely unrelated to that,

Subaru: “It certainly is a nightmare to deal with.”

Julius: “This is not the first time Emilia-sama’s and your ideations have been brought up. It was out of line for us outsiders to utter such nonsensical things… Incidentally, who is this Mama of hers?”

Subaru: “We don’t know. Any other thing besides this mother’s name, Mama, is an unknown. Based on what Meili said, she doesn’t even know what her face looks like. What kind of family environment is this?”

But, considering the professional killer business, perhaps that grim way of life was unavoidable. It seemed difficult to figure out who this mother was based off the content of Meili’s statements, so they could shake off anxiety about the future.

Subaru: “That Roswaal bastard was also useless after Elsa died, since there was no one like an intermediary.”

Julius: “Did you say something?”

Subaru: “Just talking to myself.”

The Insignia incident that occurred on the very first day, the day

Subaru had been summoned, in the Royal Capital, had been orchestrated by Roswaal. Of course, Elsa, who had attempted to reap Emilia's life, was also the one who he had commissioned to do so. Considering the flow of events of that request, it should have been easy to draw that conclusion.

However, the intermediary of that communication line had perished somehow, and it seemed that they were unable to contact the person. If Roswaal's words were anything to be trusted, Elsa and Meili's subsequent attack was unrelated to his intentions—This was where this Mother or whatever had become a concern.

Subaru: "Anyhow, that's our relationship with Meili. This girl's here out of necessity. It's not to spoil her, at least for now."

Meili: "Considering that, Subaru and everyone are being a little too nice."

Subaru: "In regards to that, it's our dreamy good virtues taking over!"

Because after all, it was painful seeing this small, youthful girl being confined to a cold basement. It was not something they could just decide to forget, and if they attempted tried to disregard it, they would end up getting bad dreams.

So, it's not like he had any grudge against her, and so he was better off being in a good mood with her.

Anastasia: "…Wouldn't'cha normally have a grudge against her?"

Subaru: "…Should I?"

Anastasia: "I mean, didn't'cha say that she tried to kill you? So…"

Subaru: "There's a thing such as idle malicious intent, although a crime is a crime regardless of age."

In response to Anastasia's question, Subaru went into thought while scratching his cheek. Once he took a peek at Meili to the side, Subaru noticed that she was looking at himself with unreadable emotions in her eyes.

He wasn't really concerned about her, but he spoke his thoughts honestly.

Subaru: "If someone orders a person who doesn't know any better to commit a crime, then the person who made the order should be blamed. Even more so if it's a kid. If they're capable of thinking for themselves and do it regardless, I think there's no difference. «An eye for an eye», I think the Hammurabi Code is nothing but negative."

Anastasia: "That's some lip service. Then do ya think the people this girl has murdered would agree with that that?"

Subaru: "I don't think so, they're free to want revenge on Meili. As for myself, had I died, even I don't think I'd state my forgiveness like I did now."

In the end, Subaru's opinions and thoughts would change depending on first impressions.

If he were told things such as that he wasn't right in the head, or that he was being ruled over by his emotions, then so be it. Actually, that was probably true.

Subaru: "Back when I was a kid, my parents and other adults would take responsibility for me. So, I thought that if the kids near me do something that they can't take responsibility for, how about I take them up instead? That's all."

Anastasia: "…A valuable opinion, thanks."

Anastasia cut off Subaru's words, as she had lost interest halfway.

Of course, he felt like that was a typical reaction, so his feelings hadn't been hurt. In an organization where clean judgement was not taken into consideration, then any crime would be judged to as a crime, regardless of age.

A grace period, however, was given because this camp a lenient one. Subaru didn't dislike that atmosphere and environment.

Julius: "I…"

Subaru: “—Hm?”

Julius: “I believe what Subaru is saying makes sense.”

Subaru: “…Thanks.”

He had not been expecting completely positive reactions, but words such as those were akin to salvation for him.

Then turning to Meili, who had been forgotten even though the conversation had her as the topic, Subaru matched his eyesight with hers.

Subaru: “I have something that I need your help with. Mind coming along with me?”

Meili: “…Okaay. I’ll go with Onii-san.”

Meili quietly nodded at Subaru’s request.

Subaru, nor anyone else, pointed out how they felt like they could witness slight tears from the girl who had hidden her face with the panda in her embrace.

3

Meili: “I’ve only been to the Augria Sand Dunes twice.”

Subaru and the others’ explanation ended, and Meili said those words while fiddling with her braided hair. She closed her eyes as if looking back at her memories before resuming,

Meili: “I visited to replenish the Witchbeasts in my control. There are lots of Witchbeasts there, so a lot of progress was made, but…”

Subaru: “But?”

Meili: “Onii-san, are you really going there? Everyone besides me will probably die, you know…?”

It seemed that their actions were seen as reckless, in the eyes of this girl who was devoid of morals. The Beastmaster’s opinion carried quite some weight in regards to just how much they were striving for.

Subaru: “I really want to use the expertise of those with experience as a reference, but the idea that we’ll die if we go’s been thrown around a lot already, so it’s a bit late for that. Also, if it’s just like a maze in the desert, then we have preparations to break out of it.”

Anastasia: “Yes, that’d be me.”

Anastasia waved her hand, emphasizing her role as a guide.

However, avoiding getting lost on the path in this endeavor to conquer the desert to get to the Watchtower was only worth thirty points—failure would be inevitable with this score. Or rather, as long as they remained unable to find an answer worth a perfect score, they would probably have difficulty getting out alive.

The three problems were the Desert Labyrinth, the Witchbeast Den, and the Sage’s Eye”.

The Desert Labyrinth would work out with Anastasia being Eridna, and as for the counter for the Witchbeast Den, this is what they wanted to prepare a measure for.

That was why he wished to hear more details from Meili, but—

Subaru: “How should I put it… Don’t you know any way to avoid the Witchbeasts? Or on the contrary, ways to lure them away from us?”

Meili: “Onii-san, if you run on by yourself, a looot of them will definitely chase you, you know?”

Subaru: “I’ve already done that a few times and they were painful experiences.”

It had happened once a year ago at the mansion, and once again a little after that by the Whale on the plain. He felt like it was about time to stop this.

Of course, he wasn’t reluctant to do it if there was no other measure to take, but Subaru wanted to avoid being the only one left behind in the middle of the desert if possible.

Meili: “If onii-san doesn’t want to do it, then maybe you could prepare a lot of decoys for it. All Witchbeasts jump at living things over normal food, so maybe something like that.”

Emilia: “That’s definitely a no! I’m against it! I am against it!”

Subaru: “You don’t have to disagree so frantically. Nobody will be chosen, so it’s fine.”

That being said, it seemed like no useful opinions were coming up.

Or at least, as far as the Witchbeasts’ ecology was concerned, with Meili, someone who was better at handling them than anyone else, incapable of coming up with an effective plan, they were helpless.

Subaru: “Yep, guess we’ll have to beat the Witchbeasts that come at us one-by-one. Gonna expect a lot from Emilia-tan and Julius.”

Julius: “I am wondering about your self-appraisal, considering how you were not included there… But do you think it’s possible?”

Julius reacted to Subaru’s proposal by asking Meili about its feasibility. Upon hearing that, Meili looked at Emilia and Julius in turn, and,

Meili: “Probably not. Can onee-san use magic for about a week without rest?”

Subaru: “You want us to have something like a final fight in a trench?!”

Emilia: “I-I’ll try…?”

Subaru: “You don’t have to! This is the flow of an unreasonable conversation! Emilia-tan’s hair and skin will dry up, so let’s not! Okay, rejected!”

It seemed like the plan to break through by force already had some unreasonable details to it.

Just how much of that scenario Meili had actually seen was unknown, but if there no such thing as childish exaggeration in her statements, then they could never perform the unreasonable.

Emilia: “How about smearing Witchbeast blood on the dragon carriage and fooling the other Witchbeasts’ sense of smell?”

Subaru: “No, the ground dragons won’t be able to fool them, and there’s the possibility that the Witchbeasts won’t band together. Something like hiring guards… How about hiring a big army for this, much like what was done for the White Whale?”

Julius: “That will not be possible either. That was done before by other people who challenged the Pleiades Watchtower. Even though it was not as big as an army, it was still a big group. Feel free to guess the result. How about breaking the horn of a powerful Witchbeast and use it to fend off other Witchbeasts?”

Subaru: “If it’s not as overwhelming as the Whale, then we’ll be overrun by their numbers. It ‘d be nice if avoiding them were simple, such as using something like insect repellent spray.”

Subaru’s odor—or rather, the Witch’s Lingering Scent, was a spray that brought insects towards him, so he was useless.

Roswaal was the one responsible for constantly managing the barrier that separated Arlam Village from the Witchbeasts’ habitat. Something like creating a barrier around people, one that moved together with them—It seemed like that sort of thing was not possible.

Subaru: “Perhaps we should have Roswaal hold onto us, and attack from the sky.”

Julius: “If we could slip by the Sage’s Eye, then that may have been an option.”

Subaru: “Ahh, damn, right. We have to consider the Sage too.”

His unrealistic viewpoint was denied by a realistic one.

Even if they could evade the Witchbeasts and the desert, there was still the Sage to worry about. Just how had nobody ever been able to slip by this person, it was honestly the only thing they were completely in the dark on how to handle.

Subaru: “If we could at least narrow it down to one problem…”

Meili: “—Geeez, I guess I’ve got no choice.”

Subaru: “Oh?”

Subaru and the others all sat in a circle in the room, getting headaches from thinking about the way out of this conundrum, and then, finally, Meili spoke. She stood up, shaking her small head at Subaru and the others.

Meili: “I can go with you guys. If I’m there, the Witchbeasts won’t care what you do. You’ll be free to keep away from them, make them pets, make them kill each other, or make them eat the Sage person.”

Subaru: “We won’t do the second half! Or anyways…”

He opened his eyes wide at that fairly extreme remark, but the proposal shocked him even more.

Not only was Meili being cooperative, but she was willing to go out on her own, an opinion he thought she would never express.

Subaru: “Aren’t you scared to go outside? Is that alright?”

Meili: “It’s not like I’ll be found by Mama right after I leave the mansion, you know? I’m scared of being found, but I can’t just stay in here my whole life.”

He was surprised with Meili being conscious of the fact that, sooner or later, she would have to leave.

But, that may have been natural. He had been taking turns checking on her whenever the chance presented itself, but even then, the time that girl spent confined in her room by herself was multitudes larger. Certainly, she had had so much time to think, that the silence would become scary.

Being confined in a room, alone, was both relaxing and terrifying. And even if those sensations evoked lethargy in her, one day, her heart would be tortured suddenly.

Emilia: “Subaru…”

And while Subaru was feeling unusual sympathy for Meili’s heart, Emilia gently pulled on his sleeve. Subaru knew what she was thinking, as he agreed with it as well.

Subaru: “This isn’t just a fun walk outside. We have a guide, we’ll be crossing the desert, and even though we have you, we’ll have to get through the Witchbeast Den. To make matters worse, some scary Sage guy might be on the watchout too.”

Meili: “Isn’t it nice taking a walk after a while?”

With those bullish words, Meili replied to Subaru. Just how much of it was a bluff was unbeknownst to him, and likewise, just how much of it was her telling the truth was too, but—

Emilia: “She is the trump card for the Witchbeasts, right?”

Subaru: “Ahh, yeah that’s right. We’ll be counting on you, Meili.”

Meili: “I’ll try my best even if you don’t.”

Emilia and Subaru exchanged gazes with each other, and then nodded to Meili. The girl, the receptor of their words spoke as if she would push herself beyond her own utmost abilities, and hugged the panda tightly.

And so, this became a single step forward towards accomplishing their journey, at which Julius folded his arms, some words spilling from his, his face one of admiration at the result he had just witnessed.

Julius: “I really wish that I would not utter these words, but persuading little girls really is one of your strong points… Although, I do not believe that this is not a good ability to be renowned for.”

Subaru: “It’s because you guys are steadily treating me like a little girl user! I'll have you know that Meili isn't as small as a little girl! She's not a little girl!"

Subaru pointed at the room's entrance in frustration in response to Julius's useless words. Right as he did however, the door was opened, and a person showed up on the other side of the door,

???: "—I was wondering what was so noisy, only to find out that it was just Subaru making a racket again, I suppose."

Having finished her private talk with Roswaal, yet another little girl had joined them. Another fuzz was made again, but that was an incident to be put aside as something not worth bringing up, so that will be left as that.

Chapter 4:
The Reason to Bring You Out

1

The conquering of the deathly Augria Sand Dunes in order to reach Pleiades Watchtower.

The Beastmaster, Meili, joined Subaru's group as a member that would boost their confidence in escaping from the sandy labyrinth—a maze in which laid a Witchbeast Den.

However, even though it had been settled that she would be brought along, this girl had been the sole resident of the mansion's Confinement Room for a long period, one year to be exact, because she had assisted Roswaal. She had an history of cooperating with the Bowel Hunter in attacking the mansion, and naturally, Subaru had thought that arguments about releasing Meili from her solitary confinement would be natural, but—

Roswaal: "There's nooothing~ wrong with it, is there? If Emilia-sama and Subaru-kun have decided to let you out, then there shouldn't be any problem with that? Even if their judgement turns out to be inaccurate and she indeed has bad intentions, you guys are the ones that she'd aim for, youuu~ know."

Roswaal readily gave Meili permission to leave. The contents of his reply were truly Roswaal-ish, but what mattered was that she had gained his permission for the moment anyway.

And thus, Meili was finally allowed out of her year-long confinement.

Meili: "Mmmmm~! Just as I thought, the atmosphere outside is sooo different. Being in that cramped room for soooo long made it hard for me to breathe."

Subaru: "But still, we tried doing a lot of different things to make you feel otherwise, huh. It wasn't as bad as you say it was, you know?”

Meili: “Reaaaally? I welcome the concern, but being able to freely move your body is a whooole different feeling. Onii-san, if you don’t learn to appreciate the small things, you’ll be hated by onee-san and ojou-chan long before you know it, you knooow.”

Meili’s lips aligned in a pout while holding her plethora of stuffed animals.

Incidentally, the person Meili was referring to as “onee-san” was Emilia, while the person she was referring to as “ojou-chan” was Beatrice. She would refer to Petra as “Petra-chan”, Garfiel as “fanged onii-san”, and thus she’d reasonably refer to Otto as “weakling”.

Meili: “Can I rest in this room?”

Subaru: “From what I’ve been told, there shouldn’t be a problem. Someone came in to clean this place, despite it being a room that isn’t used very often, so you shouldn’t feel uneasy about it being dirty or anything like that. Frederica should have come to clean the room right around the time we were bringing our luggage out as well, so.”

Meili: “…Okay.”

Within the western wing of Roswaal’s mansion were many private rooms for servants—The inside of one of them, was currently being inspected by a curious Meili.

Meili had been freed from the Confinement Room. However, her position remained complex. Naturally, expelling her was out of question, as she needed to be taken care of at the mansion. But what exactly was her role? Was she a guest? Was she a maid? She couldn’t be pushed away to the point of calling her a guest, but she wasn’t as close as to be labelled a maid.

Thus, they had settled on branding her a cooperative worker of the mansion, as it would have been insufficient to call her a maid, and it would have been insufficient to call her a guest, and was assigned a room on the servant's floor.

Her belongings, that were kept in the Confinement Room, would be brought over, making it seem as if this bland room had been dyed with colors of her choice.

Meili: "Even if I've been freed, I don't know how long I'll be staying here, you know. Once something that seems like an opportunity to live peacefully appears, I might immediately run away, after all."

Subaru: "Well, what's most important is that you don't cause trouble nor go back to that Mama of yours. You can do whatever you want other than that. Oh, but, I'll make sure you carry out this duty properly. After that, then you can do whatever you want."

Meili: "You're saying that, when i-i-i-it's all taken care of, I can die wherever I want?"

Subaru: "I have to even hear about stuff like that? Why would I care about where someone dies…? That's what the cynical, pretentious me of the past would say, but I won't say stuff like that now."

After Subaru had set down all her belongings into the room, he petted Meili's head as she stood still at the window. This girl with braided, chestnut hair twinkled her eyes as Subaru continued to pet her head.

Subaru: "I want the gang to live decently, and die decently, no matter what. You're free to leave if you want it, but at least send us back a letter or something. Just enjoy this time as genuinely as you can."

He gave a light pat to her head at the end of his statement, then brought his hand back. After receiving that tap to her head, Meili glared at Subaru with scornful eyes, putting her own hand where Subaru's had been.

Meili: "…Onii-san, did you win over ojou-chan and Petra-chan like that? Jeeez, even being in constant caution of you isn't enough."

Subaru: "That aaactually wasn't my intention, you know."

Scratching his head, Subaru then finished helping Meili bring her personal belongings in and headed towards the room's exit. He did not have any intention of helping with the rearrangement of the room upon completing the task of bringing in her stuff. On top of that, there probably was a helpless wall separating Subaru's sense of remodeling and Meili's own.

Thus, he decided it would be best to depart before doing anything unnecessary that would cause her to dislike him.

Meili: "Well, I'll take your words with a grain of salt. Besides, you're going to be throwing your life away soon at the Augria Sand Dunes anyway."

Subaru: "We aren't going to throw away our lives; we're going to assemble our lives. And that's where we'll be heavily relying on your powers, so we'll be counting on you."

Meili: "Okay, okay."

Swinging his hand back and forth to the girl who was blowing him off so that he would leave, Subaru went out the room. She brought out each of her belongings out from a box, all while wearing an indifferent face as she avoided looking at Subaru, and her possessions were displayed in a first, tentative manner.

Just like Meili had said, this was a room that made her feel like she didn't know how long she would be staying, nor that she knew if she'd return.

Meili: "I'm having fun, ahhh."

This girl indulged herself in her own room, as she walked around with a gait that exemplified unrestrained enthusiasm. And as she went around arranging her favorite stuffed animals, the happiness of the young girl, having obtained her own room for the first time, was plain for all to see—it would make anyone feel pleased, to see such a spring in the step of a young girl.

2

With the decision of adding Meili to the group, the participants in the Exciting Tour to Inquiry the Sage would include this group of seven—Subaru, Emilia and Beatrice, as members of the same organization, and Julius, Anastasia, and Meili, as outsiders-made-collaborators. And, another girl would be taken out. Rem.

The aforementioned were the seven members of the party who would face the Augria Sand Dunes located at the eastern end of the world.

The Augria Sand Dunes, a place located at the edge of the world, laid in a straight line east of the new Roswaal mansion—but, as the path they would travel was longer than the one leading to the Watergate City of Pristella, it would take close to twenty days for just a one-way trip.

In other words, just the roundtrip journey would take a total of forty days. They would safely arrive at the Watchtower, and considering they would be staying there for a couple of days, the length of this large expedition could very well turn into something close to two months instead. The problem with this was—

Subaru: “Heyy, Petra. Sorry for leaving you alone, but let me at least brighten your mood.”

Petra: “Don’t worry~. I’m not angry, it’s fine. Subaru-sama can go to as many faraway, dangerous places as he wants, just like he always has, right?”

Petra was yielding to the harsh depression that resulted from having to stay behind during the Pristella affairs for a whole month, which would soon become a period of two months.

This girl walked impetuously around the mansion with a cold, clear face, as she waved around her maid outfit, an outfit that was befitting for her petite body. As for Subaru, he was following her back, showering her in apologies, in the midst of trying his best to repair her humor.

Anyways, why was it even necessary for Subaru to be this frantic in fixing Petra’s mood? Well, the common assumption was that, in all times and all places, whenever a girl became displeased in such a manner, it was usually the guy's fault.

In reality, Petra was the girl with the most prominent girl power in the mansion. She would proudly display this girl power as the representative for the girls. In this mansion, the only possible unfortunate men that could have possibly harmed her mood were Subaru, Roswaal, Garfiel, Otto—Wait a second, isn't that a lot of people? And wait… Weren't all guys unfortunate when it came to power? Once he was revived, Puck would probably join the ranks of these bad boys. It was beyond pathetic. But anyways—

Subaru: "I know that leaving you behind with Ros-chi at the mansion for a month would stress you so much to the point it'd be hard for you to breathe, but if just reason that it's just part of your job and can't be pick ab… Guh!"

Petra: “I don’t get mad over things like that! I’m not a kid! Stop saying weird things like that when I have Ram-neesama and Frederica-neesama.”

Subaru: “To think a girl who headbutts the pit of a man’s stomach would claim she’s not a child is just…”

Petra, having caused Subaru to collapse in agony with a strike to a vital part of his body. truly resembled anger.

She stuck a prideful pose as she held her waist with both of her hands, and she stuck out her chest to insistently convince him that her appearance was indicative of anything but a kid. However, a lady’s essence was something that would be reached before her body. As for Beatrice, her body’s growth rate would not catch up at all, so it felt like her attitude was being dragged along as well, but…

Subaru: “But Petra, wasn’t this headbutt from a higher place than your previous one? Well even then, it felt like there was a small moment at the start of your previous headbutt where you were on your tiptoes before you came flying towards my chest.”

Petra: “…I’m dumbfounded. Didn’t I tell Beatrice? Hey, look! I’ve grown up in this past month, my back has grown, my legs have grown, and hasn’t my face become cute as well?”

Subaru: “Ah, I guess you did grow a bit? Your back and your hair I mean. Although, your face was cute from the beginning.”

Originally, Petra was the beauty of the Arlam Village. Having been lured away by the mansion to serve as one of its maids had caused a great fuss, as Petra, being the village’s boys’ dream girl, was the one girl everyone wanted to marry.

To be more specific, you could cause a sumo wrestling tournament to unfold in the center of the plaza if you challenged these crybabies. The adults would barge in at the end, and the celebration of lifting the somehow beaten-up Subaru into the air would reach its end. It would be an enigmatic rite of passage.

Anyhow, Petra was this girl who was loved by the villagers. She was a girl who often expressed her sorrow about helping with the mansion. He wanted to use the convenience of having her in the mansion as much as possible, for the sake of the extraordinary future potential Petra had in store. That being said, at the same time, Subaru held no power within the mansion, so he would cherish these days to an extent so that he'd continue on without forgetting this type of ordinary life, although—

Subaru: "Also, you weren't able to be the extremely playful girl that you are. As for neesama and her well-known temper… I am aware of how you feel suffocated from having her tell you to work all the time."

Petra: "It's not like that, though…"

Subaru let both of his arms open to console the pouting girl. Petra showed a slightly hesitant gesture, and then she jumped into Subaru's arms. He hugged her small body, and then petted her head as to reward her.

Petra: "Subaru… I mean, Subaru-sama, you're going to do something dangerous again?"

Subaru: "It's not as if it's completely settled that it's going to be dangerous, you know? Actually, it kinda sounds like I'm saying you shouldn't consider the possibility of it being dangerous, but the truth is, it really might be a reasonably safe expedition."

Petra: "What's the probability of each outcome?"

Subaru: "I guess it would be a ratio of eight-to-two, with the safe outcome being the lowest, maybe?"

Petra: "To me, that sounds like it'd be pretty dangerous then."

Not being able to lie in a meaningful conversation was one of Subaru's bad habits.

Subaru felt like Petra had begun to becoming displeased while being held in his arms. He then he let out a sigh, as he did not understand what was wrong with her. Suddenly, Petra started to rub her forehead against his stomach.

Petra: “I’m worried. Subaru-sama is always like this, ever since you first came to the mansion, and ever since I met you at the village. You’ve been through so much, and going all over the place diligently, without even taking a break… It would be nice if you would learn a thing or two from my lazy Master.”

Subaru: “Nah. Even though Roswaal gave his stamp of approval, he probably has some sweat rolling down his forehead whenever we’re somewhere he can’t see. I agree that he’s useless when it comes to life-threatening matters, though.”

Petra: “It was rough with the Witchbeasts, it was rough with the Witch Cult, it was rough with the Earth Spider, it was rough with the Goddess Statue, it was rough at the Great Forest of Elior, and it was rough cleaning the graves too. Despite all that, you still fought with the witch cult at Pristella, and then Otto and the others died… Well, almost.”

Subaru: “Otto nearly died us back then.”

Otto dies too much.

Amazingly enough, Subaru was in complete agreement with this notion, but he wished that he wouldn’t simply die. If Otto died, Subaru would not be able to avoid dying himself as well.

Not to boast of it as a friendship that not even death would tear apart, though.

Petra: “Why can’t someone other than Subaru-sama do it? Someone, another person… You should just leave it up to someone stronger or something like that, like Master, since he has the time.”

Subaru: “I… I understand. I understand just how much frustration you’ve had piled up because of how Roswaal wastes his time so often. Stop trying to drive Roswaal off to his death every time you can. There’s way too much friction in this camp.”

It wouldn’t be a problem if it were just things like Roswaal not noticing how Petra would put squeeze juice out of her cleaning cloth into his tea. However, it would obviously be bad if she started showing her hostility and malice in clearer terms.

Before it turned out like that however, Subaru let out a commanding voice, but Petra eyed Subaru with a serious look. It seemed like half-assed deception and insincere words would not be able to convince her. Also, above all, Petra was seriously worried about Subaru's safety.

Saying anything unnecessary and careless in this situation would be disrespectful to Petra's feelings of anxiety.

Subaru: "Well, I get your point. I really do. It's true that there seem to be Witchbeasts on the way to the Sage's tower, it's true that the desert's maze is rumored to be ridiculous. And I know how ridiculous it is in the first place to aim for a Sage that'd get mad at us for coming close to the tower… But even then, there's no way in hell I'd leave this up to someone else."

Petra: "…Why? Subaru-sama, aren't you perhaps overestimating your own strength? Just let Garf-san make an embarrassing assumption like that."

Subaru: "Petra's grading is seriously strict to the extreme! There's no way in hell I'm going to let Garfiel hear that!"

Petra's critical standards were so harsh that it would make many men tremble upon hearing them.

It would be appropriate to characterize Garfiel's attitude towards his weakness as one of making false expectations while being unfazed. However, Garfiel made sure to put in earnest efforts to change these false expectations into reality. Also, in this case, the problem was probably the fact that he would be stronger when holding these erroneous beliefs.

The matter at hand thus could not be heard by Garfiel, considering his interpretation of his strength and his actual strength.

Subaru: "Well, putting aside Garfiel's impression and his way of thinking… It's not like I… It's not like I think there's no one out more suitable for the task. And first of all, leaving everything up to Reinhard would be safer in all kinds of ways as a preparation to escape the sand maze.”

Petra: “Then why don’t you let him do it?”

Subaru: “I wonder why. Despite being someone who’s fond of being pampered, I thought I was someone that didn’t yearn for honor.”

In actuality, he really did not understand why he desired to do it like this. However, if he were to dare and put it in words, perhaps these would be how to best put it?

Subaru: “—No, never mind, this is something I want to do myself, after all. Even if there’s someone more suited for it out there, even though I know there’d be a higher chance of success that way, I still want to do it.”

Petra: “Why?”

Subaru: “It’s embarrassing but… It’s because I want me to be the first person she sees when she wakes up.”

Petra: “…”

He did not specify who. But even so, Petra understood who it was.

If a way to wake up that girl—the girl that laid in a state of continuous deep slumber, were to be found at the Sage’s tower, he wanted to be the one to seize it.

Even if there was someone else out there more suitable for the endeavor, even if someone other than himself with a higher chance of success existed, this was the sole thing he would not give up. He did not want to give it up. This was Subaru’s ego.

Subaru: “If I were to disregard my feelings and think of it from a rational viewpoint… Anyone could be the one to wake her up. If something like a ridiculous disease of never being able to wake up were to spread, and were this only about saving them, I wouldn’t care about anyone else developing a vaccine or a wonder drug to cure it. I wouldn’t care about the process, if it meant saving them.”

Petra: "…Yeah."

Subaru: "But if I allow my feelings to come into the picture, I want to do things myself. I want to be the one to help them. I want to be the one to wake them up. I want to give it my all and save everything."

—Thus, Natsuki Subaru would be the one to go.

There were countless others who were stronger.

There were countless others who were more reliable.

There were countless others who were wiser.

There were countless others of class who were more wonderful.

But Natsuki Subaru's own ego would ignore all of that, and so, he would be the one to go. Only because he wanted to be praised by this girl after saving her.

Subaru: "Sorry for disappointing you with my selfishness."

Petra: "—You really did disappoint me. Nothing you said changes anything for me."

Subaru: "Hmm?"

After Subaru's own acknowledge of hiss shamefulness, Subaru petted Petra's head, bracing himself for her hatred. But after Petra let out an unclear voice, she lifted her head from Subaru's arms.

Subaru was surprised that her round, large eye had become clouded by giant teardrops. And then—

Petra: "Ey!"

Subaru: "Another headbutt—?!"

Petra swung her pointy head downward, and then her forehead caused great pain to the pit of Subaru's stomach.

She had aimed at Subaru's defenseless vitals, making him fall to his knees, promptly escaping from his arms with an anticlimactic leap, then closing one of her eyes and sticking out her tongue.

Petra: “Subaru-sama, you idiot! You’re selfish! Why don’t you just go do whatever you want?!”

Subaru: “Guh, oh…”

Petra: “Because when you return after two months, I’ll surprise you by becoming a really beautiful girl. Feel free to regret not being able to see that growth up close!”

Subaru: “Mhm, there’s really something unfortunate about that.”

It would not be unusual for a kid to change during their growth period so suddenly. Petra was a glamorous thirteen-year-old after all, so after two months she might give out a completely different impression.

Subaru: “To tell you the truth, I also grew nineteen centimeters between the seventh and eighth grades…”

Petra: “Huh? That seems a little impossible…”

Well, Subaru’s case was rare; he had only grown so much because he was originally short. Although Petra almost broke down due to the size of the expectations he had of her, this girl clenched her fists soon after.

And then, thrusting both of her fists towards Subaru, she declared.

Petra: “Anyways! What Subaru-sama should do is to go ahead and travel to whatever dangerous places he wishes. worrying everyone and troubling everyone, and after that, come back like you always do.”

Subaru: “It sounds like I’m a pretty big nuisance to others when you say that…”

Although, looking at it that way, the way she had described him surprisingly did not sound far from the truth. Anyhow, Subaru pushed out both of his hands as well, and then matched Petra’s fists with his own.

Subaru: “It’s always troubling for Petra, but I’ll carelessly head towards dangerous places like I always do, and you just wait for me to return after all those things are done and dusted like you always do. It’s Petra’s own special right to welcome us back once we return from our journey.”

Petra: “…You won’t let Frederica-neesama or Ram-neesama say it before me, right?”

Subaru: “Yeah. I promise.”

Petra: “Including Master?”

Subaru: “Don’t worry about that, if Roswaal is the first one to appear after we come back, I’ll smack him.”

Petra: “…Mhm, I understand. Alright, that convinces me.”

She pulled back the fists that were matched with Subaru’s, and then that triumphant spirit started to flow out of the sighing Petra. Largely because he had let Petra take over the flow of the conversation, though.

Petra: “Jeez, Subaru-sama can’t be helped…”

Somehow, it felt like her statement had been delivered in a way that made it seem as if she were talking to everyone. Subaru thought that he couldn’t wrap his head around that.

3

Although he was not worried to the point of anxiety, in order to settle an uncertain matter that lied within the mansion, Subaru finally stepped inside that room.

Subaru: “…”

Entering this room was the only time Subaru would naturally hold his breath and lighten his footsteps. But even if he were to enter the room while singing loudly and tapping his feet, the situation within the room definitely would not change.

Still, perhaps he unconsciously decided to keep silent within the room simply for the sake of the girl who was laying on the bed within the room, whose figure would cause pain to swell up within his chest if he were to look at it excessively.

It was a deep sleep. If she were able to wake up, he would wish for her to wake up right this instant.

However, he felt that disturbing her deep sleep would be akin to blasphemy. This girl, who had sunken into a deep sleep of everlasting dreams, was precious to him to such degree.

Subaru: “I say that but, that of course is just my own overly subjective belief, huh…”

Saying those words with a tone of dismay, Subaru pulled out a chair aside the bed to sit on. Just like that, one month had passed since he last stepped foot into this room, and he reunited with the face of a sleeping Rem, whose state showed no change, still in a state of deep slumber—ever since a year ago.

Subaru: “I’m back, but I’m sorry for coming to see you so late. I had some business to take care of… and on top of that I showed a bit of hesitation, making this visit very last-minute.”

Rem: “…”

It was obvious but, of course, there was no response from the sleeping Rem. Subaru reached out with his voice, despite knowing that there would be no response, and held a calm expression even then. Natsuki Subaru had an expression that he would expose only to this specific girl.

He owned this determined expression, indicating he was ready to throw away his own life in earnest, that he would only show to Emilia.

He owned this trustful expression, that made it seem as if he would be able to entrust his life, that he would only show to Beatrice.

And then he owned this expression that exposed his weaknesses which he so often tried to conceal, the expression that he would only show to Rem.

Subaru: “What should I tell you… Actually, there’s so many things I can talk to you about, you know? While I couldn’t come here, I was at the Watergate City of Pristella, and a lot of things happened there. It was such a big uproar that, even if I talked to you about it all night, there’d still be more to tell you about… But even then, I have plenty of time in the world to talk to you about all that.”

Subaru gently slipped his hand within the bed, searching for the hand of the girl who had a towel blanket up to her chest, and began speaking upon grasping Rem’s hand.

Within her long fingertips, with her slender, pale arms, her gentleness and existence of her warmth were evident, but for some reason there was the mysterious sense of bloodflow—No, a sign of life within her was missing.

A lone force within her was preserving her life. However, there was no force within her that simultaneously preserved her life and made it whole.

Rem’s life, with this contradictory situation, had her time frozen even now, trapped within a state of deep slumber. However—

Subaru: “I might finally reach you.”

Rem: “…”

Subaru: “Of course, it’s also possible that my expectations are too high and I’ll end up not being satisfied. Of course, it’s also possible that, in the end, the Sage will fail to live up to their name and end up with nothing, only to have them apologize for the inaccurate information.”

Rem: “…”

Subaru: “But.”

A clear path to a solution, other than defeating Gluttony, finally was coming into sight.

Although the fact that the path he had followed to reach this answer had been shaped by others was a source of disappointment, even so, it resembled a ray of light, one that seemed like he was finally able to grasp—

Subaru: “Because I was too busy freaking out to ask Echidna.”

Within the Sanctuary, within the Witch’s Tomb, back when he had been invited to a Tea Party in a dream, he confronted Echidna, the Witch of Greed, and in rejecting her, Subaru escaped her control. It was a choice taken to protect Natsuki Subaru’s fragile soul, but at the same time, it was a decision that distanced himself from the one person who might have assisted him in finding a way to save Rem (possibly).

Of course, it was hard to gauge just how much insight Echidna, a Witch most knowledgeable of the past, could lend about an Archbishop brandishing their power in the present. But maybe, had he revealed the situation to her, listening to the Witch’s input might have been helpful.

Right after determinedly rejecting the Witch’s request, he had been confident that the right decision had been made. But as time went on, he became aware that it felt that the passing seasons and the relationships’ development were leaving Rem behind, he became worried about whether his decision was the correct one after all.

Even if he had promised from the bottom of his heart that he would save her, he himself had yet to take any definite action for that end. But finally, he was now able to do something for her sake, having slipped out of the deadlock that had stagnated every time.

In the city of Pristella, a multitude of people had suffered the same type of fate as Rem—and for the purpose of saving them, they would embark on a journey to the Pleiades Watchtower. However, if he were to point out his real motive, the real reason that drove Subaru towards the Watchtower was of Rem.

Even while understanding that it was both unreasonable and inappropriate, Subaru—

Subaru: “I will save you, Rem. That is the oath I made.”

Just like she had been there for Subaru in those fragile days, in those times. Now, in these times where Rem needed someone’s hand the most, was when Subaru wanted to be the one there for her and offer his hand.

???: “—Hurts.”

Subaru: “—?!”

Subaru, who had his eyes closed tight while speaking words of determination, heard a voice which made him raise his face abruptly.

He took a look at Rem with inconceivable surprise within his eyes, only to find that she was laying there, quietly, her eyes closed, holding onto Subaru’s hand in silence. Then whose voice was—

???: “Let go of her hand, Barusu. Just looking at how strongly you are holding her hand brings me pain.”

Subaru: “…Oh, it’s Ram.”

Looking back at the entrance of the room, Subaru saw Ram standing there, her cold look shooting daggers at him. After being relieved by her gaze, Subaru hurriedly released his hand—the one that had been holding to Rem’s own, having realized that he had been grasping it with more strength than he thought.

Ram: “I cannot bear watching Rem’s whitebait-like fingers being violated by Barusu’s sexual desires.”

Subaru: “Can you not say it like that? That’ll make me feel like my previous determination has turned into something completely loathsome.”

After Subaru let go of Rem’s hand, Ram, who had stepped into the room, took her hand instead. The older sister gently caressed the slender, white fingers of her younger sister, then regarding Subaru with a side glance.

Ram: “Was your determination really that pure? Carefully reflect on yourself a bit more and make your speech again… If you lust after me instead, someone who looks extremely similar to Rem, Ram will also get down shivers up her spine and run away.”

Subaru: “Calm down. Even though your physical appearances are extremely alike, I will never confuse you two because of the differences in your inner selves’ radiance. I am not a half-hearted man who judges only the outside.”

Ram: “Is that so? I guess that is fine, then. Even if you have found a way to wake her up, it is hard to imagine how Rem would feel if Barusu had forgotten her during this year. It would be surprising if she does not hold any detest for you, if your depictions of her during our idle conversations were not just wild fantasies, that is.”

Subaru: “Just how little faith do you have in me… We’ve known each other for a long time now, you know?”

Ram: “Haa.”

Snorting with her nose like she always did, Ram’s movements indicated that she was about to leave her seat. Along with getting up from her seat, she looked around the room and then,

Ram: “I need to get ready to leave so, someone also needs to prepare a second set of clothes for Rem. She doesn’t sweat, so changing her clothes really is unnecessary but… her body still requires being wiped off.”

Subaru: “…”

Ram: “Something’s widening below your nose, disgusting.”

Subaru: “I didn’t say anything because there wasn’t really anything to say but, even when I don’t say anything this is the treatment I get?!”

Taking care of Rem’s body—Rem, fallen in slumber due to having both her Name and Memories eaten, was basically unreactive to any physical stimulus. There was no real practical reason for doing things like wiping her body and changing her clothes.

The reason of those around her for doing such things was no more than to simply feel some comfort occasionally, that her existence was not being left behind.

Subaru: "…"

Only considering the practical aspects of doing all this, actions like Subaru making a speech and Ram taking care of her younger sister's body, neither did anything positive for the situation.

Yet, despite that, the reason why neither attempted to stop such pointless actions, was because everyone realized that even if they did not say it out loud, they knew that people still acknowledged the fact their actions would not be accompanied by actual consequences.

Subaru: "Isn't about time for you to start feeling as if Rem is your real sister?"

Ram: "…"

Subaru asked this question unexpectedly to her as she was looking down at the figure of a sleeping Rem, lending her own hand, with a gentleness that did not befit the girl named Ram.

Even though Ram bravely took care of Rem, no memories of this girl who represented her other half remained within her. The girl was so similar to Ram, it was impossible for anyone to claim that they were unrelated. But if one were to solely consider Ram's true feelings, Ram's relationship with Rem was a weak one.

Still, days like these passed by for a whole year. Even though she had lost her memories, it was possible for new, different ones to form. Perhaps, right now, definite memories were taking form within Ram.

Ram: "Earnest feelings such as those do not sprout that easily. No memories of her remain in me and I have never witnessed this girl in an awake state. Although I could imagine that she was probably someone of excellence and dignity, similar to Ram."

Subaru: "Sure she was excellent, but I don't really have any memory of her being that dignified. Rather, I've had my fair share of worries because she would be in such a hurry to the point of being reckless."

She did blow away half his body, well, there were circumstances.

Ram responded to Subaru with an "I see", her voice listless, similar to the wind.

Ram: "Speaking of memories that I do not remember, even if just for amusement, is nothing more than moving backwards. It is something Ram is not very fond of, Barusu."

Subaru: "Is that so? If you say so, then I'll stop."

Ram: "…After she wakes up, if I regain my memories of her then, we can talk about plenty of things. But even if they are not restored, as long as she wakes up, then you may talk as much as you wish."

Peeping into the face of her younger sister, Ram played with her bangs with an unchanging expression. Rem's hair freely drifted down from above her pale forehead, Ram let out a small sigh.

Her profile looked cruel, yet gentle, to Subaru.

Even if she remembered nothing, even if memories of her had been lost, it was not as if their bond had disappeared. And even if it had indeed vanished, that did not that they could not be forged anew. Those were his thoughts.

Subaru: "Well, leave all that to me. I'll conquer the Sage's watchtower and then definitely make Rem wake up. And then you two sisters will have your emotional reunion."

Thus, Subaru said these words in an excessively bright manner, with a deliberately loud voice. If anything, this moment between Subaru and Ram did not befit the quiet atmosphere within the room.

However, Ram looked back at him after his remarks with an extremely confused look.

Ram: “What are you saying, Barusu?”

Subaru: “Huh?”

After that, Ram looked at Subaru with a look like that of looking at an idiot.

Ram: “Ram will also accompany you on this next journey, so putting it that way is pretty condescending. If it is going to be an emotional reunion, Ram will be having it herself.”

Subaru: “That’s news that I haven’t heard before, you know!”

In response to Subaru widening his eyes in surprise, Ram looked at Subaru with a look even more full of spite.

However that gaze was unreasonable, for he could not know what he had not been told about, and he could not be aware of things that he had not heard about.

Ram: “…”

In response to Subaru asking what she was talking about, Ram held a manner of blocking her ears from his words, rejecting him.

And after that, this day of preparation would go by, and the two would not be able to have a straightforward conversation.

—Ram and Rem, the sisters, had been confirmed to accompany them.

A journey to the Pleiades Watchtower, to meet the Sage, Shaula.

That was the type of situation that seemed to lie ahead, for a total of eight participants, a large group.

Chapter 5:
Each of Their Unease

Various discussions were had, along with some confusion when taking a decision on the travelers; many problems arose when bidding the people left behind farewell, but still, the morning of their departure had finally arrived.

Subaru: “It turned out to be a bigger group than I thought, but…”

Folding his arms, Subaru gazed at the people who would travel alongside him in the “Tour to Conquer the Sage’s Tower”.

The two camps to participate were the Emilia Camp and Anastasia Camp. The Emilia Camp was represented by, of course, Subaru, Emilia, and Beatrice, along with Rem, the perpetual sleeper, and Ram, who accompanied her. There was Anastasia, the guide for the Augria Sand Dunes, and her Knight, Julius. Including Meili, who was brought along as the Beastmaster so they could pass by the hordes of Witchbeasts that lived in the dunes, that made up for a total of eight people.

If their aim was to have a simple plan for their movement, then they had a lot of the people involved in reclaiming Pristella, and in regards to commanding people, Subaru had experience with the subjugation of the White Whale, as well as the battle against Sloth.

However, when it came to moving towards that faraway land—these eight key people, despite being a large number of people on the road, no experience.

Subaru: “Wonder if it’ll actually be fine…”

???: “Worried about something, Subaru?”

He twisted his neck while imagining the distant future, and saw Emilia pop up in his vision. Subaru cleared his throat with a “Ahem”, directed at the girl wearing a lightweight dress for traveling afar and spoke, Subaru: “When I think about the place we’re going to, I can’t stop being nervous. Other than that… I feel afraid about going to a dangerous place with such a large group, since it’s hard to protect so many people.”

Emilia: “You may be right. Rem and Ram are coming along too. Subaru will have to be protected by Meili and Anastasia.”

Subaru: “What the?! I’m already being treated as a non-combatant?!”

Emilia: “Come on, Subaru. Obviously it’s just a joke. You’re being taken seriously, after all.”

When Subaru suddenly screeched at Emilia, whose fists were balled up, she began laughing, being unable to contain it. Subaru too laughed after that reaction, but the stiffness of his slight smile was forgiving of her joke.

To tell the truth, Subaru’s combat ability was overwhelmingly inferior to Emilia’s. From Emilia’s point of view, Subaru was the one who should be protected— Of course, she didn’t mean to think of him only as that.

Subaru: “The next specific thing to feel uneasy about would be…”

When Subaru took a breather from his conversation with Emilia, he turned his attention towards the front.

They were already at the Roswaal residence’s front garden, and the preparations to depart were going swimmingly. Beyond Subaru’s line of sight, was a passenger carriage, large enough to carry ten people or thereabouts. The heads of two ground dragons were connected, for the purpose of pulling the dragon carriage. Both were races that were adequate to travel long distances.

The problem would be the situation next to the dragon carriage. There, was a jet-black ground dragon, casually standing still, and a small silhouette that had come face-to-face with the ground dragon’s snout, the latter glaring at the former.

Exhaling a stunned sigh at the situation, Subaru cut in between the two staring at each other.

Subaru: “You’ve been exaggerated as a Witchbeast user, but you can’t even get along with ground dragons?”

Meili: “Come on, onii-san. Can you not misunderstand me? The only animals I can discipline are ones that are bad and have horns. Any other animal won’t like me, as I smell like those children.”

Subaru: “So that’s how it is… Isn’t it rough like that?”

Subaru shrugged his shoulders at Meili’s explanation, and stroked Patrasche’s snout, still glaring at the girl. When Subaru touched this very prideful female ground dragon, it took a blunt sniff of his hand’s stink.

It was as if she was doing this to override the stink of the girl in front of her with Subaru’s own stench.

Subaru: “It’s really unusual to see Patrasche be this blunt, as someone tolerant and good at being considerate… Seems like you’re really incompatible.”

Meili: “I can be kinda friendly with other animals, but that ground dragon is too attached to onii-san. She’s so attached that it feels like if I let my guard down, I will get bitten. Onii-san, if you don’t discipline her properly, I’ll become that animal’s food, so be careful.”

Subaru: “Don’t say such scary things like it’s nothing… Here, Patrasche, go with her.”

Calming down the slightly agitated but very loving dragon, Subaru quickly put Meili on the dragon carriage. Furthermore, this Beastmaster, who would travel along, had little luggage. She was a girl who rarely carried any belongings to start with. But even then, she had brought the stuffed panda Subaru had craft. The childish charm she had was indeed lovely.

???: “Looks like you’re havin’ trouble Natsuki-kun, always tryin’ to put girls in a good mood.”

Subaru: "…If you think so, then it'd make me happy if you didn't bother me."

As Meili was pushed onto the dragon carriage, Anastasia called out to him with a teasing tone. Anastasia—However, inside was the white fox, Echidna.

In the twenty days from Pristella to the mansion, most of the differences had been smoothed out. If she resumed playing the role of Anastasia, it seemed like it would eventually become hard to tell them apart.

Anastasia: "I'd appreciate it if ya wouldn't doubt me like that. Didn't I tell ya that I've got no motivation to do it? That's why I've volunteered to be ya guys' guide for a dangerous path."

Subaru: "That bit too, considering your creator, my stance's that there's a possibility of you having various plans. I've said this many times too, so remember it. It's not like I don't want to believe you. It would make me feel a lot more at ease if I could believe you."

Anastasia: "It is not amusing, being at such a disadvantage because of someone I do not recall. It seems like this creator, of whom I have no recollection, has quite displeased you."

Subaru: "…"

Anastasia: "Don't get so mad at me. Geez, how frightenin'."

When he glared at Eridna, she went back to disguising herself as Anastasia and pursed her lips, returning to her original state. With that, she passed by Subaru and stepped into the dragon carriage. After that, the number of people was—

???: "Subaru-kun, can I speak to yooou~ for a bit as weeell~?"

Having been beckoned verbally, he turned around, witnessing Roswaal at the mansion's entranceway.

Next to the Margrave dressed in a clown outfit, were two people, Emilia and Julius. Thinking about the oddness of the combination, Roswaal turned to the three people as he closed one eye.

Roswaal: “First off, I imagine that this journey will take almost two months. Because of that, I’m thinking that there might be some unforeseen situations along midway. Emilia-sama and Anastasia-sama surely shall be able to deal with each of the problems that arise, buuuut~…”

Emilia: “Mhm, you can count on me. It’s not like I sat around being idle either, after all.”

Roswaal: “Those words are reassuring. I’m honestly pleased with Emilia-sama’s growth… Alright, putting aside the anxieties of the journey as something to be taken care of by each of you, there is one importaaaant~ thing to note—It’s Ram.”

Everyone: “…”

Roswaal said that with a lower voice, and it made Subaru and the others’ expressions changed.

Emilia’s long eyelashes twitched, while Subaru’s cheeks stiffened as if sinking into deep thought. And then Julius, the only person unrelated to the camp at this place, frowned slightly.

Julius: “Regarding what you are saying, is it truly fine if I am present? Mathers-kyo, as Anastasia’s Knight, to discuss the state of camp affairs is… Although I am a mere servant, you should understand that revealing them would not be a good idea.”

Roswaal: “It’s not like I proposed the idea without caring about anything and anyboooody~. Julius Juukulius-dono. After seeing your behavior at your mansion, and the way you behave with Subaru-kun, I have come to understand that you are a reliable person. I would like you to believe that, and so that’s why I am requesting a favor of you.”

Subaru: “This is the shadiest you’ve sounded in a long time, Ros-chi.”

Emilia: “Sorry, I kinda thought so too…”

When Roswaal replied to Julius’s worry with a serious voice, Subaru and Emilia both raised their hands up almost in tandem and teased him.

Even ignoring his past criminal offenses, what Roswaal had stated was too uncharacteristic of himself. He said “It’s not liiike~ that”, perhaps because he himself was aware of how atypical he had been. Sending a wry smile at Subaru and the others’ way, he then continued,

Roswaal: “Weeell~, maybe my lack of persuasion just can’t be helped. Julius-kun is doing everything he can so other camps can find faults… I really do think you do not possess a lowly personality. That’s why I want you to listen too. This is a life-threatening matter, after all.”

Julius: “Life …”

When Julius whispered that with an extremely serious face, Roswaal said “Yes, life”, and nodded.

Roswaal: “As Subaru-kun and Emilia-sama know, Ram’s constitution is just a little special. Her body cannot withstand the talent that was poured onto her. Or perhaps, you could say that her body cannot provide the fuel proper for the flame called talent.”

Subaru: “…You know, I’ve never heard about it in such detail.”

Roswaal: “Is that so? Theeen~, how about her being an Oni?”

Subaru: “Well, that’s…”

Of course, he knew that Ram and Rem were both Onis.

More than twice now, he had been saved by Rem, who could exert her Oni power to her heart’s content by growing her horn. He had also heard from Ram herself about how she lost her horn and was “hornless”.

Therefore, Subaru thought that it really was not something surprising,

Julius: “—An Oni, you say?”

Subaru: “Julius?”

The person who lowered his voice and revealed his astonishment was the person next to him, Julius. On his handsome face, his eyebrows had been lifted, a disturbance visible in his yellow eyes.

Julius: “I have heard that the Oni Clan has been destroyed.”

Roswaal: “About ten years ago, their last settlement was burnt down, and Ram was the last survivor… Sorry, including Rem, the two sisters are the last survivors.”

Subaru: “…”

It was a loaded statement, but Subaru did not butt into the conversation. He was more surprised at how those sisters were part of a rarer species than expected, more than irritated.

Emilia: “Is there a reason as to why the Onis have perished?”

Roswaal: “…Rest assured, Emilia-sama. The downfall of the Onis was inevitable because of natural selection. It was a result of them not going along with the flow of the times and clinging onto old customs. They didn’t lower in numbers because of discrimination and prejudice, consequently being destroyed, assuredly.”

Emilia: “…I see.”

Emilia made an understanding, melancholic look at Roswaal’s explanation.

She too was of a rare birthplace; Emilia was a half-elf. It was natural for her to feel unease and some sympathy for the Oni Clan that had perished, having left the two of them behind.

Subaru: “We get that those two are all the members of the Oni Clan. So what?”

Subaru sensed the conversation starting to stagnate, so he moved the conversation with an intentionally loud voice. When Emilia and Julius lifted their faces in response to that voice, Roswaal touched his chin and spoke, Roswaal: “Putting aside Rem, whose bodily activity has ceased, there is a deficiency in Ram’s body, just like I said earlier. Thiiis~ is because she lost an organ that is important for the Oni Clan. That organ is the horn. Essentially, the enormous amount of Mana that powers her body, which should be supplied by her horn—isn’t readily available, and so her body is constantly plagued by pain and fatigue.”

Emilia: “That’s how it is…?!”

Roswaal: “It’s no wonder that Emilia-same is surprised. That girl is too strong. Not once has that caused her to have a frown on her face, after aaall~.”

In response to Emilia, whose throat had caught, Roswaal shook his head slowly.

Emilia’s shock was shared by Subaru. He was aware that Ram had no horn. From Rem’s words, he also knew that Ram had possessed outstanding abilities before losing her horn.

It was just that, he had not realized that there was a penalty for lacking a horn beyond the decline of ability and that it was eroding her, even now.

Julius: “—I see. I have come to understand Mathers-kyo’s thoughts.”

Then, Julius suddenly spoke, having only heard the conversation until then, and nodded. Roswaal raises his eyebrows and hummed in response to that, and then Subaru and Emilia looked at each other as well.

The flow of the conversation had only them confirming Ram’s constitution. Julius adjusted his bangs in front of Subaru and the others, who were shocked, as if he understood Roswaal’s request.

Julius: “The Oni Clan possess traits like the ability to manipulate an enormous amount of Mana, and possess a strong body boasting quite the fighting strength. The essential thing that supports those two traits is the horn, which no other species possesses—If an Oni’s horn fails to fulfill its role and they suffer for it, there must be a replacement that fulfills the role of a horn.”

Roswaal: “I can only lament not knowing your name, seeing how intelligent you are. Being seen through that much from so little is a gooood feeling.”

Emilia: “Oh, so that’s how it is…”

Roswaal admired Julius for his explanation. Emilia also clapped her hands from achieving understanding. On the hand, Subaru was the one person still perplexed and left behind. When the situation came to magical powers, Subaru was nothing but slow to understand them, as he was an amateur.

Subaru: “Don’t just understand it by yourselves like that. What exactly does this mean?”

Julius: “It is a simple affair. Miss Ram’s body is seeking the same amount of Mana from the outside as it did back when she had a horn. She lost her horn, and as she cannot find the Mana, then someone else is required to provide a means for an external source… That is where we may come in.”

Roswaal: “Although, normally I would take that role and supply her secretly at niiight~.”

Subaru: “…Ah?!”

Inside Subaru, Julius’s lecture and Roswaal’s words allow the cogwheels of his brains to catch.

Every night, he would see Ram rush to Roswaal’s location with excitement. To be honest, Subaru looked away from the vividness of the suspicious relationship between a master and a maid.

After understanding the circumstances, thinking back on it, perhaps this was all there was?

Roswaal: “Something come to your mind, Subaru-kun?”

Subaru: “N-No, nothing important. Go ahead and continue.”

Roswaal: “You sure?”

Even though the misunderstanding he had held for over a year had been cleared up, it still was not enough to correct it.

In the first place, Roswaal’s family were a bunch bursting with shadiness, with how they had tried to meet with the Witch Echidna for generations and generations. Roswaal himself was remarkably attached to Echidna, something that was difficult to forget. Upon finding out that he was not cheating on her with Ram, he became even more convinced of his obsession.

Julius: “Though, there is one caveat, Mathers-kyo. Regarding that request, I feel like I am not competent enough to take it up.”

To Subaru’s side, who was having useless thoughts, Julius shook his head apologetically. That action made Roswaal squint his eyes.

Roswaal: “It doesn’t seem that it is not a reason borne of humbleness, or out of a wish to not support people from a different camp… Offering Ram Mana would require Fire, Water, Wind, and Earth attributes. Just from those, you would be more fit for the job than Emilia-sama.”

Julius: “Mathers-kyo, you probably hold these expectations because of these girls around me.”

With that said, Julius loosened his lips with a frail smile. Then, the man who had responded revealed faint lights flying around, six kinds of light being visible.

They were known as the six Quasi Spirits that Julius had contracted with—However, as of right now,

Julius: “About my buds… As of now, their connection with me is gone. Though, if their original titles still remained, I would not have any qualms in accepting a request.”

Roswaal: “Your Contract with the Spirits has been severed from having your Name taken away… huh. That being said, it seems like the Spirits aren’t trying to leeeave~ you.”

Julius: “Perhaps there are remains of the lost connection inside of them. Or perhaps it was bleached over, and the Contract is still there, albeit invisible… Either way, I am only being saved by these buds’ kindness, with how they are not abandoning someone unskilled like myself. There is little left in this body, so I wonder if my poor abilities would be able to help.”

Julius exposed the connection with the Quasi Spirits, and sighed. After that, he looked at Subaru for nary a second. Subaru could not instantly figure out what he wanted with that look, so all he could do was to look troubled.

Julius: “—As of right now, I am merely a devoted Knight. My apologies.”

Roswaal: “I seeee~. That’s too bad. It is serious damage, but…”

Emilia: “It’s fine. If Julius can’t do it, then leave it up to me.”

Roswaal also lowered his tone due to Julius’s sadness, but the person who took his place, puffed up with pride, was Emilia. Energetically moving forward, she brought out her own Micro Spirits around her.

Emilia: “They’re a little different from Julius’s Quasi Spirits, but I can borrow the powers of the Micro Spirits too. The Fire attribute is too strong with just my magic, but if the Micro Spirits can lend me their powers, then I can use magic of different affinities too. How’s that sound?”

Roswaal: “Of course, I had thought of asking not only him but Emilia-sama as well, so there shouldn’t be a problem if you are willing to do it. Hooowever~, I believe there will be extreme trouble at first with stabilizing your magic. For assistance with that, please borrow Beatrice’s abilities for help.”

Subaru: “Beako’s?”

Roswaal: “Beatrice really is excelleeeent~ with magic theory and employing it, wouldn’t you agree? Right now she is connected to Subaru-kun, so I feel like there is some wasted talent, but things are working out despite the lacking magical power, right? In regards to that knowledge, I would like you to refer yourself to Emilia-sama for that."

Subaru: "Don't call it lacking magic. But, I understand."

There was no problem if Ram's burden became lighter through Emilia and Beatrice's cooperation. Subaru had begun to be convinced, but right after he nodded, he cocked his head in puzzlement.

Subaru: "No, wait. If that's the case, then why are you telling me this, instead of saying it directly to Beatrice? I mean, I want to listen too, but it would be logical to tell this to Beako."

Roswaal: "Because if I talk to Beatrice, obviooously~ she will say it's meaningless and refuse. Beatrice is more bitter with me than you think. Perhaps you could tell her to be a bit mooore~ lenient with her criticism towards me?"

Subaru: "Ah, not happening. If I had to say which side I'm on, I would say that I'm completely on Beako's side, after all."

He declined Roswaal's request with ease, who had a pitiful look on his face.

Things were done and that fact could not be changed. It was no trench that would be filled up in just a year, give or take. The times were not so nice that she would simply open her heart with someone who would have had her killed, had the events been a bit different.

Subaru: "Now that I think about it, isn't it a bit troubling how I am doing things with people who've killed me and people who've beaten me up…?"

Emilia: "Ah, Subaru, you've got that look like you're getting carried away with yourself."

Subaru: "Do I really look like that sometimes?!"

Anyhow, he had accepted Roswaal's request.

As for Ram, Emilia and Beatrice would handle her. Emilia was motivated to do it, so there shouldn't be any problem if Subaru talked to Beatrice later.

Roswaal: "I'm counting on you, Subaru-kun."

Subaru: "Huh, this really is special. You rarely ever say things like that."

Roswaal: "You are becoming admirable—This is the first time Ram has requested to leave my side, after all."

Subaru: "…"

That was the only thing Roswaal said that didn't give off a joking feeling, instead speaking with seriousness.

Removing his gaze from Subaru's face, he looked up at the blue sky.

Roswaal: "Ram and I have no memory of her younger twin sister. But, I suppose the people involved still hold some feelings. Seeing Ram emotionally going against my opinion like that is chilling—So, I want to ask you guys to talk to her."

Subaru: "…Yeah, I'll remember that."

Even after the incident at Sanctuary that had taken place a year ago, Ram devoted herself to Roswaal. Despite Roswaal saying that anything and everything came second after the one and only thing that was most important, he still held a soft spot for Ram, as someone who had gone to such lengths to devote herself.

If that could be called a change, then by no means was it a bad one.

Or at least, it was far better being human and worrying with unmanageable emotions, than it was burdening friends as an incomprehensible monster.

Roswaal: "—Seems like it's time."

Before he could speak further, Roswaal turned around.

The mansion's door opened behind him, and four girls appeared on the other side. All of them made up for the entirety of the maids of Roswaal's mansion. Seeing them all together was a pretty magnificent view.

That being said, one of the girls was sleeping, and another girl, who looked extremely similar to the sleeping one, had an appearance of having prepared for a journey, so their beauty was slightly lacking.

Frederica: "Master, the preparations for the two are set."

Roswaal: "I appreciate your diligence—Ram, be careful on the trip."

Roswaal replied to Frederica, who had given her report very quietly, and called out to Ram, who was equipped for the journey. Upon hearing that, Ram pinched the edge of her skirt and bowed politely.

Ram: "Roswaal-sama, thank you for granting my selfish request. I will definitely bring back results you deserve."

Roswaal: "I'll be looking forward to it. Although, make sure you don't do anything unreasonaaable~. Also, make sure the two of them, Emilia-sama and Subaru-kun, don't do anything unreasonable either. That is also part of your role as well, after aaaall~."

Ram: "I am fully aware of that."

He wanted to retort to those words, but Ram's glare silenced him. Subaru gave in to that look, and looked at the short figure next to Ram.

There, was Rem. She was in clothes suitable for the trip, and was now being carried in a wheelchair driven by Petra—Subaru had relied on his memory to replicate something from his original work.

A model of the wheelchair already existed in this world, but quite an amount of work had been put into remodeling it; it possessed caster-like front wheels that wouldn't pose a hindrance when changing directions, along with a scaffold and a modified seat. Of course, seat belts and cushions to protect her head had been implemented as well.

It was a one-of-a-kind wheelchair that Subaru had had Roswaal produce by spending Subaru's own salary.

Subaru: "I'm worried about the maintenance when we get far, but…"

Frederica: "Subaru-sama is clever, and the materials are what they are, so I believe it could handle being used for two months. Of course, please do not do anything unreasonable."

Petra: "Please be careful, Subaru…-sama."

Receiving Frederica's endorsement, he took over the wheelchair's handle from Petra. Accepting it, and going behind Rem, he felt a lot more ease this way compared to carrying her on his back.

This was because the road was pavement. It wouldn't be effective in the desert, on grass, or on gravel.

Subaru: "Yoshi, looks like it'll work. Petra, Frederica, you guys take care too."

Frederica: "Please leave the Master to us."

Petra: "We'll be taking care of Otto-san and Garfiel-san too."

Petra and Frederica replied to Subaru accompanied with a nod while he moved the wheelchair.

Even if the trip were to take a couple of months, Otto and the others at Pristella would probably be healed up, and so they should be coming back to the Roswaal residence.

He left that up to the maids, who would take care of stuff while they were gone. Subaru pushed the wheelchair and turned towards the dragon carriage.

Subaru: "Alright then, it's a shame, but I guess we should depart now."

Ram: "Why must Barusu boss people around? Don't get so full of yourself."

Subaru: “I’m not bossing you around, though. How about you take over then?”

Ram: “Does Ram appear to have such ill manners to you? Ram would appreciate it if you don’t make her behave like that, as a maid who needs to be graceful and considerate.”

Subaru: “What’s up with you? Are you at that age where you can do nothing but complain?”

Ram: “It is not the case. It’s just that…”

Then, she cut off her sentence, and Ram threw a meaningful look at Subaru’s hand. As of right now, Subaru was pushing Rem’s wheelchair. He guessed the meaning of that look, and let out a deep sigh.

Subaru: “If you want to switch places, then just say so…”

Ram: “Given the meaning and purpose of Ram coming along, it is only natural to give that up to me… As for guessing what Ram wanted without having her put it into words, you are now seen in a better light.”

With Subaru reluctantly giving up his position, Ram took his place and pushed the wheelchair. She showed care for her sleeping sister sitting on the wheelchair as it slowly headed forward toward the dragon carriage.

Subaru opened and closed his hand for no reason as saw their backs take off. Then, a small hand gently grabbed his own from the side.

Subaru: “Oh, it’s Beako.”

Beatrice: “You don’t have to make a pathetic look like that, it’s not that you have to worry because your feelings for that girl are weaker than the feelings her sister has, so you don’t have to worry, in fact. Subaru should just be himself, and do what he can do, I suppose.”

Subaru: “That’s not quite… Or well, that’s how it is?”

It wasn’t as if he felt like his role had been taken away from him, but looking from the outside, perhaps the look on his face could be understand in such a manner.

Subaru touched his cheek with his free hand, pulled on it, and pinched it. Then, this time his hand was snatched away by a different white hand.

Emilia: “Yeah, yeah, I’ll take that hand.”

Subaru: “Oh, Emilia-tan…”

Beatrice: “After that girl wakes up, we’ll have to see what Subaru will do with both his hands taken, in fact.”

Emilia: “Ah, I might be interested in that too.”

Subaru had been caught in between Emilia and Beatrice, looking at them with embarrassment. However, he was only returned with two things, a serious look and an anticipating look. To make matters worse, Petra’s own gaze was piercing him from behind, and even Ram was throwing him a cold, scornful look, having turned around in front of the dragon carriage.

He was being unbelievably surrounded on all sides—Then, Julius let out a “Hmm” accompanied with a nod, while witnessing that. In response to that craving for a reaction, Subaru’s lips slanted grandly.

Subaru: “What is it? If you have something to say, say it. Go ahead!”

Julius: “Really? Alright then, I shall say merely one thing—You really could not be more blessed as a man, being surrounded by beautiful girls like that. I cannot help but feel a lot of doubt on whether your hands are able to satisfy all of those flowers.”

Subaru: “What’s this, I’m being blamed?! Did I do something wrong?!”

Julius shrugged his shoulders with a shocked face, as the pathetic shout Subaru replied him with soared towards the heavens.

Unfortunately for him, at this place were neither the Internal Affairs Minister nor the Head Military Officer to follow up on his statement.

Subaru had no choice but to fight alone in this upcoming two-month journey.

Understanding that reality, he felt the trust and the deep affection of the warmth being transmitted into his hands fill up his chest. He felt anxiety in his chest about not falling behind. That was the type of morning it was, the one they had departed on.

Chapter 6:
The Juukulius Inscription

The journey had begun with a morning filled with unease, and the journey, which had lasted for about a month, had been long. However, no significant accidents happened along the way.

They went straight along the main road towards the east. It was a boring journey, in which nothing had happened.

Subaru: “It was like that with the round trip to Pristella, and it was like that with the Lifaus Plains… But Kingdom of Lugunica’s pretty safe when on the road, eh?”

Julius: “Maintaining the roads and patrolling them to maintain the public order is essential to protect the Kingdom’s peace. Lugunica is particularly thorough with such aspects, even when compared to other countries. There should be low rates of damage from groups of bandits and Witchbeasts.”

Subaru: “Are you saying other countries aren’t like that?”

Julius: “In the Holy Kingdom of Gusteko, being always covered in ice and snow, it is impossible to properly maintain the roads in the first place. The roads are deep in the snow that was there from the start. As for the Vollachian Empire and the Kararagi City States, there are many people of all sorts of different races and customs. Such cultural differences may lead to quarrels. In that sense, it may be hard to say that public order is kept there.”

Subaru: “I see.”

As Subaru and Julius had their conversation, the two ground dragons’ were running energetically, their heads side-by-side as they cut through the wind.

Subaru’s Patrasche and Julius’ blue cavalry dragon were leading them ahead, the two pulling the large dragon carriage.

Everyone in the dragon carriage would be late to react to the occasion of emergencies. That was the arrangement they had, but as was noticeable from the conversation they were having out of boredom, the journey was peaceful.

Subaru: “Ahh…”

Julius: “Subaru.”

On top of the journey being boring, with how the scenery wasn’t changing, he started to yawn. Subaru put his hand on his mouth and became full of drowsiness, as Julius gave him a blaming look.

While entrusting his weight to his beloved dragon, he quickly lifted his bangs that were kept from swaying through the Divine Protection of Wind Evasion.

Julius: “I understand that you want to get rid of this feeling of tension, but the moments you loosen your stiffness are the most dangerous ones. I am not saying that you are allowing your mind to wander off, to act in a way that anyone witnessing would perceive as lazy is unacceptable.”

Subaru: “Just how much are you gonna say just because of one yawn? Even you at least yawn too. Right?”

Julius: “Of course I have those kind of bodily functions. But, if you possess the self-consciousness of a Knight, then it should be possible to hold it in when in front of other people, you know? That is what you still lack.”

Subaru: “Yeah, yeah.”

He was pressing for a reaction with piercingly sarcastic force, but Subaru was already becoming a master of parrying it. It was already nearing twenty days in this journey accompanied by Julius. From Pristella to the mansion, and now on their way to the Augria Sand Dunes, they had been making the ground dragons run side-by-side. And so, he had learned how to deal with him.

Julius: “I thought it was a part of manners to look at the person you are talking with when having a serious conversation?”

Subaru: “The person is looking away during the serious conversation because he hadn’t asked to have said conversation. You should take it easy too. You’re straining yourself too much.”

Julius: “You and I are on watchout duty, that is why…”

Subaru: “You don’t have to be so nervous; they won’t attack us just like that. If anyone tries to jump us, they’re not gonna do it in the middle of nowhere.”

Julius: “…”

Subaru interrupted him, speaking as he cracked his head. Julius blinked his eyes, as if Subaru had said something unexpected. After that, this handsome man let out a small sigh.

Julius: “Is it clear that I am impatient right now, in your eyes?”

Subaru: “Yeah, I have a feeling it’s a shot in the dark, though. But, I feel like everyone thinks you’re straining yourself. More than usu… Actually, you might just be acting like your usual self…”

Julius: “As of right now, you are the only person who knows that I am being my usual self, after all.”

Subaru: “…Yeah.”

When Julius’s lowered his tone, Subaru also naturally dropped his.

They couldn’t hear the girls’ conversations back in the dragon carriage, so the girls should not be able to hear their conversation either.

It was a complicated relationship between two men, but as of right now, they were working together. Perhaps this was a time when they should speak a little more frankly.

Subaru: “It’s been talked about with Roswaal before, but how are your Quasi Spirits?”

Julius: “It is as I have stated previously. The buds are gathered around me, but they will not rest their feathers on the arm I hold out as a perch. It seems my words do not reach them either."

Julius raised his arm in response to Subaru's question, and the Quasi Spirits came into view.

The six Quasi Spirits shining faintly still remained floating around Julius, as he made the ground dragons run. However, they flickered on the hand he had held out as if in confusion, and attempted to move away.

Indeed, it seemed that the bond between Julius and his Quasi Spirits had been severed.

Subaru: "Can you not contract them yet again? You're attracting them somehow, so doesn't that mean your Divine Protection is working?"

Julius: "It seems like my Divine Protection of Gathering Spirits is still going strong. And in turn, it contributes to these girls' incomprehensible awareness. It is like certain large, incomprehensible, unmanageable emotions are present."

Subaru: "Not sure if I should say it like this, but how about taking measures through other Spirits?"

Julius: "I would have considered that idea, were I a Spiritual Arts User that could borrow the powers of Micro Spirits present everywhere, much in the vein of Emilia-sama… But I cannot bring out the Spirits' utmost abilities in such a way. I needed a few years to bind with these buds too, after all."

Subaru: "…Well, it is true that Emilia-tan can't bring out Puck's average power from other Spirits too. I guess becoming aikata with a Spirit is a special thing after all."

Julius: "Emilia-sama and the Great Spirit. And like you and Beatrice-sama."

It was rough. As a fellow Spiritual Arts User, Subaru was unable to say something like "Go find the next Spirits" right away. It would be like asking him to let go of Beatrice even after their bond had been cut off. Of course, he would raise his middle finger and refuse as a response. As for Julius, his relationship with the six Quasi Spirits was the exact same thing.

Julius: “Therefore, as of right now, I can only use swordsmanship to fulfill my duties as a Knight. Of course, I do not believe the sword inferior to the Spiritual Arts, but it is true that my abilities make it insufficient.”

Subaru: “This is also a journey to get that back, and with your sword skills you saying that is mere sarcasm. And if it’s me who you’re fighting against, it’s even more sarcastic.”

As Julius had mentioned, there was his insufficient ability aside the Spiritual Arts.

A year ago, at the Royal Capital’s Training Ground, that ability had been the one that had ravaged Subaru. Subaru did become better compared to back then, but it did not feel like the distance had been fully covered. From Julius’s point of view, fighting Subaru at that time was like taking candy from a baby. The current Subaru was as difficult as dealing with a five-year-old. That was just about how different they were.

Subaru: “Reinhard is also like that, you guys have a bad habit of underestimating yourselves. Too much humility turns into poison! I think that type of words is used everywhere.”

Julius: “I want to return the same phrase to you, but hmm—You and I aside, Reinhard most likely is not being humble or underestimating of himself.”

Subaru: “Not being humble or underestimating…?”

That instant, he imagined the redhead hero, but he cocked his head at the difference in his perception of the man.

He had never thought that he would run into differing opinions on Reinhard, because from anyone’s perspective, he was the strongest, completely peerless, a superman.

In response to Subaru’s doubt, Julius spoke a “No”, shaking his head.

Julius: “In regards to Reinhard’s true strength, you and I both rate it highly. Most likely, everyone who is aware of him shares the same sentiment. They all think that that he is the peak of humans, or that perhaps that he transcends humans.”

Subaru: “It’s amazing how that isn’t an overstatement.”

Julius: “Not only his real ability, but his way of being has likewise been perfected. I first met him when I was around ten years old… But it has never changed.”

Subaru: “Ever since you were ten? Are you for real?”

As he gripped onto Patrasche’s bridle, Subaru was astonished by Julius’s recollections.

Just when had Reinhard become the person he was now? He thought it was quite the philosophical question, but at the very least, it seemed that the version of himself from about a decade ago had been completed.

Which meant, that boy had carried a very heroic fate on his shoulders.

Subaru: “Reinhard has been the Sword Saint since then?”

Julius: “He was five years of age when the Divine Protection of the Sword Saint was inherited by him. The previous Sword Saint was Thearesia van Astrea-sama… Reinhard’s grandmother. She passed away in the Great Subjugation fifteen years ago, and the Divine Protection was transferred to him.”

Subaru: “Yeah, I was aware of that.”

The previous Sword Saint, who had perished in battle with the White Whale, yet still was humiliated after death. Reinhard’s grandmother, Wilhelm’s wife, but this time, at Pristella, the soul of that woman finally returned to the heavens.

However, fifteen years ago, Reinhard had inherited that Divine Protection.

Subaru: “How does he feel…”

Julius: “Hm?”

Subaru: “He received his grandmother’s Divine Protection at the age of five, and to make matters worse, he is descended from the blood of a legendary hero? I can’t imagine how he feels.”

—Subaru somewhat understood the weight of holding up to parental expectations.

Subaru could empathize with the the pain of being crushed by the weight of the expectations of those surrounding him.

Of course, the weight and the responsibilities Subaru and Reinhard carried were extremely different, so comparing himself to Reinhard may have been rude in itself.

Subaru: “I honestly am so weak. I’m so weak that I’m always frustrated because I’m weak and not good enough, there’s not a night that goes by without me wishing to be strong enough to hold my own.”

Julius: “I feel like that’s pretty groundless.”

Subaru: “Shut up.”

In the middle of his important speech, Subaru was made fun of, causing him to click his tongue.

Subaru: “Anyhow, I personally feel his worries despite being on the polar opposite. I don’t think Reinhard is the same as he was when he was five, but I do wonder how he felt back then.”

Julius: “As you would expect, I also do not know what he felt back in those days. But…”

Cutting off his words, Julius then lifted his face. Gripping tightly onto the bridle, looking in front of him, Julius squinted at the sunlight that bathed him in a daze.

Julius: “—The time I first saw Reinhard was the big turning point for me.”

Somewhere from those words, pride was oozing out. Julius was squinting from the sunlight, but perhaps he may have not been squinting because of the sun.

Perhaps, back then, he had gazed at Reinhard in the same way.

Subaru: “Which means that you and Reinhard have known each other for about a decade, I guess. I do think that barely satisfies the requirements for you guys to be childhood friends, but is that right?”

Julius: “No? Yes, that was when I became aware of Reinhard, but he only found out about me long after… When I was appointed as a Royal Guard. That happened when I was sixteen, so I have known him personally for six years.”

Subaru: “…That’s a very big empty period of time, isn’t it?”

Julius: “At the time, I was not qualified enough to stand alongside someone who had just taken over as the Sword Saint. The fact that he was younger than me too was a painful reminder, and that was my beginning.”

Julius said his words quietly, while his tone of voice was passionate on the contrary.

In response to the distant look his yellow eyes contained, Subaru nodded at that one word, “beginning”.

Despite the vague wording, that day was probably vivid within Julius. If that was Julius’s beginning, then it was a given for it to be clear in his memory.

Subaru’s memory of his own beginning was hot in his chest, seared into his soul.

The time he was saved by Emilia in a different world, the time Rem supported his back about to collapse, the time he took Beatrice’s hand amidst the flames, all those times, to Subaru, were “beginning”.

Subaru: “When you say that was your beginning, does that mean you were surprisingly naughty as a kid? Like debauched aristocrat or a son of loose morals.”

He went against the flow of emotions in the other person’s affair, and spoke with an intentionally teasing voice.

There was no way that was Julius’s case, but upon first meeting him, he really did think that the latter was a young gaudy noble. And if it were to be a story, it was seemingly a given that this young noble had lived a haughty life in his boyhood.

With those feelings in mind, Subaru changed the topic to alter the flow of the conversation, which made Julius suddenly loosen his lips,

Julius: “I would prefer if you changed the way you express it. Just a little… but there are parts that I cannot deny.”

Subaru: “Seriously?! You really were a gaudy noble?! Did you kick commoners from the top of a horse, and persistently pressure servants by bullying them?!”

Julius: “I cannot help but wonder as to why you are expressing such glee.”

Julius sent a cold look at Subaru, who got excited. After that, Julius peeked behind himself.

Perhaps he was concerned about not only the dragon carriage, but the girls in it as well. Of course, to go to such lengths to confirm that they were uncapable of hearing their conversation was unnecessary, but it was a matter of him feeling like doing it.

Julius: “How much do you know about the Juukulius Family?”

Subaru: “Nothing at all.”

Julius: “You answered so immediately that it seems you feel pleased about it.”

He really did have zero background knowledge.

Subaru threw out his chest, dexterously on top of the dragon, and Julius displayed a strained smile. After that, he felt his Knight's sword on his waist. Perhaps it was handed down through Julius's family. From his face, it was plain for all to say that he felt some trepidation about having the qualifications to wield it himself at this time.

Julius: "—I am not the original heir of the Juukulius Family."

Subaru: "…"

Julius: "To put it more accurately, I should say that I am not the official heir. Alviero Juukulius is the current Head of the House of Juukulius. My father, Klein Juukulius, was his younger brother. As he has already passed away, I have been adopted by the Family Head."

Subaru did not respond to those words, as they had been more surprising than expected.

It was difficult to say how much the structure of this world's noble society meshed with Subaru's knowledge of the society he knew, but Julius's position definitely was complicated.

Also, in that case, then what was the position of his younger brother, Joshua Juukulius? That young man, who adored his older brother Julius, was now lost from the memories of the world.

Julius: "I do not know what is the actual natural of the relationship I have with Joshua, left back at Pristella. Is he my own younger brother that has inherited the blood of my real father, Klein Juukulius? Or is he a true, legitimate child that inherited the blood of my foster father, Alviero Juukulius?"

Subaru: "…What's the difference?"

Julius: "«Siblings» is merely a figure of speech, so perhaps our relationship would essentially be cousins. In that case, the position of Head of the House of Juukulius would be inherited by Joshua Juukulius, most likely."

Subaru: "…"

Julius had delivered those words in a flat manner, and just from that, he was convinced of their veracity.

Even though this pertained to himself, this conversation was complex because Julius himself was unaware of his position. If Julius and Joshua were real siblings, then Julius would be the one in succession for the House of Juukulius. However, if Julius and Joshua were not blood brothers, then it would be correct to say that Joshua would be the one in succession for the House of Juukulius.

And then Julius did not know how to confirm that; Joshua's existence had been wiped from the world, and Julius had lost his memories of his brother. For that reason, he was cognizant of where he stood.

Julius: "It is somewhat unavoidable, but when I think about it, my position has become very complicated. Not knowing about your own tomorrow is not very appealing, although as of now, I should worry more about myself being unable to ground myself, than I should about the House of Juukulius's leadership."

Subaru: "…"

Julius said that in a seemingly joking way, perhaps because Subaru had received a surprising shock.

Subaru's mouth was dry, grinding his teeth while feeling irritation in his stomach. He was ridiculously worried about Julius, with how he was right now.

Julius: "Because of my upbringing, at the time, I was unconfident. My foster father led me to the Royal Castle, and that was when I showed the poor etiquette I had been taught just as we were about to depart. There, I laid my eyes on Reinhard, who was an eight-year-old—That's all there is to it."

Albeit forcefully, Julius chose to end the conversation.

There was no courage to deliver a retort or even some sort of clever remark. Subaru saw Julius look ahead in a lonesome way, and he stopped biting his molars.

And then, what came out right away was a question.

Subaru: “Why’d you suddenly feel like telling that to me?”

Julius: “I believe you were the one who enquired. Perhaps I was mistaken?”

Subaru: “No, that’s true and all… that’s my bad, but that’s not where I’m getting at. Isn’t it weird for you to have this kind of talk with me?”

Julius: “No, it is not. This affair was common knowledge for Reinhard and Ferris… For people among the Royal Guards. Of course, Anastasia-sama also knows too. It’s nothing special.”

Subaru: “…”

Subaru did not understand one bit, as his face turned into a frown.

Even if he said that it was something everyone was aware of, that did not mean it was something he could spread around. After all, those words sounded unnatural.

Perhaps Julius understood Subaru’s discontent from his frown. He pulled onto the bridle, and quickened the beloved dragon’s pace just a bit.

Julius: “Yes, it is something everyone is aware of—So that was why I might have wished for you to know about it just now. You, the person who remembers the most about me in this world, right now.”

The blue ground dragon accelerated while swinging its tail, and Julius’s expression could no longer be seen.

That being said, he was not going so fast as to leave him behind in the dirt. It was his way of smugly declaring the end of the conversation, as usual, simple as that.

???: “…”

Subaru: “Hmm, it’s fine. Thanks for the concern, Patrasche.”

The running jet-black ground dragon had raised her head, glancing at Subaru. In response to her gesture, which said “Shall we rival the ground dragon ahead?”, Subaru showed his thanks and petted the head of that lady.

Subaru: “…That was uncharacteristic of me.”

Those small, sullen words poured out from his mouth.

Was he becoming weak? Or perhaps, was he putting on airs as a protagonist of a tragedy?

As a matter of fact, “irritating” was the only word his feelings could be expressed.

Subaru: “Ahh, dammit. Am I an idiot? No, I am definitely an idiot…”

Subaru scratched his head, and he released his irritation only from his mouth.

In the end, he had not found any accurate response to what Julius had spoken this time.

And he would have no accurate response until they had just reached the Augria Sand Dunes.

Said answer would not come, even after the party had arrived at the town of Mirula, the nearest one to the Sand Dunes.

Chapter 7:
Aim for the Desert

1

The town nearest to the Augria Sand Dunes, Mirula, truly was a deserted inn town.

The town was of a reasonable size, but of course, it paled considerably when compared to places such as the Watergate City of Pristella, Industrial City of Costuul, and the Royal Capital of Lugunica.

The roads that stretched all throughout the Kingdom were well-kept. It had been steady trip on the dragon carriage all the way to Mirula, but that final destination of the east end was as lacking as it could've been.

Emilia: "But perhaps that just can't be helped. Looking at the map, from here on out towards the there's only the Augria Sand Dunes… and the Kingdom's biggest forest to the south, right? We're far away from the five major cities, and we can also see that there isn't much pedestrian traffic."

Emilia let out that impression while looking around the town, walking besides Subaru.

She was wearing a white robe that covered her head, her beautiful silver hair and face concealed. A beautiful girl like Emilia appearing at a rural area would be a blow to the townspeople's sense of beauty—that was Subaru joking, but she did also have a position of high standing. That was why she showed slight consideration to avoid any trouble, not just for her appearance, but for her identity as well.

That being said, those weren't the only reasons as to why her head and her mouth were hidden by cloth. The other reason to conceal oneself, other than her identity, was Mirula's renowned disaster, the Sand Wind.

Subaru: “It can’t expand to the east nor south, and on top of that, there’s always this Sand Wind. That’s rough.”

Emilia stood downwind, while Subaru stood upwind to act as a slight resistance to the wind while he pulled up the cloth he wrapped around his face, murmuring those words while covering his mouth. Whenever he moved his tongue, he would feel sand rubbing between his teeth, and it made him feel quite sick.

This sandy wind came flowing into the town, as if blowing down from the sand dunes to the east. It seemed that the Sand Wind would blow against the town continuously on days of strong wind, and for that reason it was imperative to wear sand-protecting fashion like this, just for the purpose of walking through town.

Emilia: “—? Subaru, what’s wrong?”

Subaru: “It’s nothing. I was just thinking about how this turned out different than what I had imagined when I heard it was a desert.”

Emilia tilted her head at Subaru, glancing at him sideways.

Her bare body was concealed to the utmost limit, covered from head-to-toe in a cloak. Subaru’s thoughts were basically that beautiful girls should please the eyes of the people around them with various outfits. However, they couldn’t be eye candy with outfits of such high defense.

Speaking of the desert, that dancer-like outfit to protect against the sunlight—what was it called?

Subaru: “Nevertheless, perhaps we should’ve listened to the innkeeper’s advice.”

Emilia: “It’s Sand Time right now, right? There’s no one in the streets, after all.”

The wind wasn’t very strong, but perhaps because it was light, a small dust cloud had formed. In this yellow, hazy field of vision, nobody besides Subaru and Emilia could be seen in streets of this town.

The townspeople, completely accustomed to this environment, would shut themselves inside during Sand Time, that was, when the Sand Wind blew, and even the gaps in the doors and windows of the buildings would be sealed.

In truth, within the Sand Wind, not only being able to see but being able to breathe too took considerable effort. It was so bad that the innkeeper had stopped them, saying that they shouldn't go out during Sand Time.

However, there was a reason as to why they had disregarded the innkeeper who had halted them, and went outside anyway.

Subaru: "This is how it is in the town. The Sand Wind at the sand dunes isn't like this, right?"

Emilia: "…Mhm, I think so."

It wasn't a dry run per say, but they had purposely gone outside during Sand Time to prepare themselves mentally.

Outside of Sand Time, the circumstances of the sand dunes, which had Sand Wind blowing and sand spread in every direction, were not ideal for travel. They were distant from the sand dunes, and they couldn't see well in this town dense with buildings.

They had to prepare themselves at once for the severeness of the sand dunes' path.

Emilia: "Anyways, how about we enter a shop somewhere? Since Subaru and I will turn into blocks of sand at this rate."

What Emilia pointed towards while swiping away the sand that clung onto her, a the building at the other side of the road. A place that appeared to be a bar or something of sort, it seemed to be a temporary refuge shelter. It felt like the other stores were refusing visitors, but the entrance to this one was open, at the very least.

They hurried over to that building just like Emilia had suggested. They removed as much dirt as they could from the door, and after that, they slowly entered the bar.

???: “…Welcome, you from the Sand Wind.”

Upon entering the bar, the shopkeeper at the other side of the counter who was polishing a glass looked at them, and greeted them with a low voice. He sounded unwelcoming with his low voice, probably because, with a single glance, he had noticed that Subaru and Emilia were smeared with sand.

They did remove as much sand off themselves as they could, but there was still a huge amount sticking onto them. Although they did feel bad about it, they scattered the sand and set foot into the store.

Shopkeeper: “What would you like to order?”

Emilia & Subaru: “Cold milk.” / “Hot milk.”

Shopkeeper: “…”

In response to the two people who sat down at the counter and said their orders, the shopkeeper squinted his eyes but remained silent. Incidentally, Subaru had ordered cold milk, while Emilia had ordered hot milk.

Subaru: “Doesn’t feel very prospering… Is business terrible during the Sand Time?”

Subaru took off the hood he covered himself with, and asked a question of the shopkeeper while tasting the milk he had been brought. The unsociable shopkeeper responded with an “Ahh”, before continuing,

Shopkeeper: “Even at the best of times, very few outsiders come and go, at this town. Running a shop during sunrise is just like a hobby.”

Subaru: “I see. Then as outsiders and customers we must be regulars, eh?”

Shopkeeper: “You can’t just go to a bar, ask for milk and act all proud. Here, this is yours, Miss.”

Emilia: “Oh, thanks.”

The shopkeeper held out the hot milk to her. Emilia grabbed onto the ceramic and took a breath. Subaru bent forward onto the counter, gazing at the girl blowing on the milk.

Subaru: “There’s no other customers, so do you have a little free time now right? Mind hearing me out for a bit?”

Shopkeeper: “Even if I did, it’s taboo to start talking to someone in the middle of working while, saying that they have time… What would you outsiders like to know?”

Subaru: “I’d like to know about the Augria Sand Dunes.”

With his finger raised, Subaru thrusted an enquiry to the shopkeeper. Once he had heard it however, the shopkeeper had his expression collapse for the first time.

The rough shopkeeper with short gray hair squinted the eyes under his dark eyebrows in suspicion. After that, he sized up Subaru and Emilia and let out a slight sigh.

Shopkeeper: “I don’t know what kind of joke this is, but don’t bother going if you’re gonna treat it like a picnic. You’ll just end up dying.”

Subaru: “Hey hey, what are you saying? Do we really look like we’re fooling around to you?”

Shopkeeper: “What else did my warning just now seem to you? That place is a sand sea of death , everyone who goes there never comes back, and dies. It’s not a place to have a date with a woman.”

Subaru: “I certainly do think that the suspension bridge effect is a valid approach, but I’m not that cornered. Emilia-tan, you tell him too.”

Emilia: “Fuu~ fuu~, hothot… Eh? What was that? Sorry, I wasn’t listening.”

Subaru: “Behold, the ways of EMT.”

Shopkeeper: “I’m gonna give you some useful advice. Go home before you die.”

Witnessing Subaru and Emilia’s interactions, the faith the shopkeeper had in the two got worse and worse.

That being said, it was not like the shopkeeper was saying this out of spite. He actually did know about the danger of the Augria Sand Dunes from its reputation. However—

Subaru: “We don’t have the option to retreat. We only have the path to move forward and on top of that, the only thing we can do is pick the safest path possible. You understand, right?”

Shopkeeper: “You’re the ones who don’t understand. Listen up. Those sand dunes are hopeless. The Witch’s Miasma drifts about in the Witchbeast Den, and you can’t get close to that tower you see faraway.”

The shopkeeper began speaking of the threats of the Sand Dunes, while Subaru’s persistent behavior began to irritate him. Pointing at the window that was closed to prevent the sand from coming in, towards the east side of the town, he curled his lips.

Shopkeeper: “Every year there are people like you guys who make a reckless attempt at the sand dunes. They aim for the Sage’s tower at the sand sea… but no one has ever reached it. They’d be lucky to come back alive, but the majority either end up drying up at the sand sea, or they become Witchbeast food.”

Subaru: “Has no one really reached it before?”

Shopkeeper: “I believe the sand sea’s tower was built hundreds of years ago. The number of idiots that have tried to go there hasn’t decreased. If a person did reach it, there’d be no way they wouldn’t come forward and boast of it. Don’t you know? That even the Sword Saint failed that achievement.”

Subaru: “…”

Even Reinhard had failed the challenge to conquer the Pleiades Watchtower. Reinhard himself had conveyed him that tale, and he had also mentioned the abnormally high difficulty of conquering the Watchtower.

But even then, the people who had to overcome it were Subaru's current group.

Subaru: "Of course, we won't do something stupid like tackling it without any plans. That's why we're gathering information. Doing that in a bar is a basic step, don't you think?"

Shopkeeper: "Is it really? Why do it at a place where you drink alcohol?"

Subaru: "If you ask me to explain in detail, I probably can't, but isn't it because everyone gets talkative after drinking alcohol, and then they'll end up pouring out various rumors?"

Shopkeeper: "So basically, you're looking for drunken ramblings. It's unacceptable to go in there without any plans, but leaning towards stupid plans is bad too."

Subaru: "Guehh! Your sound argument is piercing!"

Subaru got knocked down head-on by the truth and promptly sunk as he ingested his milk.

Usually whenever Subaru talked with proper adults, his normal conversational pace would be overwhelmed. The shopkeeper also was used to talking to people like Subaru, with the goal of challenging the sand dunes recklessly. As a matter of fact, it wasn't as if Subaru's challenging of the sand dunes was reckless, but the shopkeeper did not know the reality of the situation, and as such, he would be treated the same way.

At this rate, they would end up returning without gaining a single clue and—

Shopkeeper: "Anyways, for you to even bring a girl to a hell like that is…"

Emilia: "Sorry, Shopkeeper-san. You've been showing care for us, and yet Subaru is doing nothing but complaining."

Just when Subaru was about to give in to the stalemate, Emilia stopped the shopkeeper, his sermon about to begin. The shopkeeper widened his eyes at Emilia's words that had been prefaced with an apology.

With the shopkeeper like that, Emilia quickly bowed her head.

Emilia: "Thank you for all the help you've given us, even though we aren't even acquaintances."

Shopkeeper: "I'm sorry too for nagging. However, I don't think I've said anything wrong. I come across youngsters like you constantly."

Emilia: "Are there really that many people that have tried to see the Sage?"

Shopkeeper: "Well, there's really not that many people with will strong enough to meet the Sage. The majority of people trying to conquer the Augria Sand Dunes just want the honor. Sure, there are people who say they'll obtain wisdom from the Sage given that things go well, but the idea that they'll get a reward if they make it to tower is a bit of a stretch."

The shopkeeper dropped his shoulders and sighed with what you could call a fed-up look.

Just like he had stated, he had probably seen off many people who had gone to challenge Pleiades Watchtower. Perhaps he looked kind-hearted even with how his face looked, something that brought him shame.

Emilia: "Does that also mean that people haven't met the Sage…?"

Shopkeeper: "Never heard of anyone getting that far. According to rumors, the Sage is still watching for anything below, in the dunes, from the top of the tower, punishing insolent people… But it's not like I've witnessed it. I can't help thinking that the sand dunes themselves are a bait, a trap for hunting prey."

Emilia: "You mentioned the Witch's Miasma. What is that?"

Shopkeeper: "It's as I said. There is a Witchbeast Den … All over the Kingdom, you’ve got all shapes and sizes of Witchbeasts. But, those sand dunes are a special case with all sorts of beasts.”

The shopkeeper quietened his voice, yet he was talkative, perhaps getting carried away with the fun.

When Emilia gulped and nodded, the shopkeeper’s gaze turned distant.

Shopkeeper: “Spotted Rex and Blackwinged Mice have their charm. Unicorns and Sand Earthworms are endemic species, only seen here. Also, if you find a flower garden on the sandy soil, that’s a Courtesan Bear’s hunting place. Think of it as a nightmare.”

Emilia: “Courtesan Bear…”

Shopkeeper: “It seems that they’re only found at Kararagi. They’re Witchbeasts that have bloomed flowers all throughout their body. Once you are fooled by their appearance and approach them, they’ll slurp on your guts.”

Subaru: “As expected, Witchbeasts sure are… nasty…”

Who was it that had informed him that Witchbeasts had the purpose of killing humans?

The shopkeeper snorted his nose at Subaru, the latter frowning while listening attentively, as if saying “Told you so”.

Shopkeeper: “But the danger you must watch out for the most, even more than the Witchbeasts, is the Miasma. Yes, there are dangers like the Sand Wind and the changes in environment, but your biggest concern should be the Miasma.”

Subaru: “That Miasma doesn’t seem makes sense to me.”

Subaru titled his head towards the shopkeeper, who had lost his voice again.

Subaru heard the word “Miasma” many times before, and he could even imagine what it was like based off the impression the word gave off. Basically, it was bad air, which had bad effects on mind and body alike.

He felt like it was different from a noxious gas, but perhaps it was something akin to it.

Emilia: “Hmmm, Subaru. If described, Miasma is sort of like Mana that was polluted by bad things. You can’t see it, but it’s something that’s everywhere, don’t you know?”

Subaru: “Eh, so Mana is Miasma?”

He was surprised at what Emilia had pointed out. The explanation was easy to understand, but the implications were a bit different from what Subaru had imagined.

Mana truly did influence magic users and Spirits alike to an extreme degree. However, he’d thought that it would not pose much of an issue for just existing, or moving about atop a dragon.

But, as if she could see through Subaru’s disappointed inner thought, Emilia slowly shook her head.

Emilia: “You can’t take Miasma lightly. Normal Mana is something that’s pure, has no color and no directivity. But Miasma… Mana that has been polluted by bad things can be absorbed via the Gate, and can corrupt creatures from the insude. Considering how gate is an organ that naturally takes in Mana, that’s something that can’t be avoided.”

Subaru: “Can’t have your breathing stop for good, after all.”

Shopkeeper: “The lady’s interpretation is correct, but the Miasma drifting about at the Augria Sand Dunes is even worse—The Miasma over there ruins not only living being, but also food and.”

Subaru: “You mean food becomes inedible?”

Shopkeeper: “I mean that once you eat it, the Miasma’s pollution will progress fast. You’ll go crazy just from taking even a little bit of it through your Gate. Try taking it in directly through your stomach. The pollution will swallow you whole.”

Subaru: “What happens then? It won’t stop just because I’ve gone insane?”

Shopkeeper: “People commonly say that you’ll die from madness. To tell you the truth… Well, I can’t deny it.”

The shopkeeper spoke succinctly, shaking his head. His complexion was terrible.

He had probably seen it before, although he was not relating it directly. He had seen people’s last moments, being violated by the Miasma and going crazy as a result, arriving at their death.

Shopkeeper: “It’d be far better for you guys to not go over there. Do that.”

Emilia: “—Thank you for the milk. Thanks for the talk too.”

Emilia gobbled up her hot milk and expressed her gratitude towards the shopkeeper, who had concluded the conversation.

The shopkeeper was probably aware of how they had begun prying out information from his conversation halfway through. To pile on further, he had also continued to speak until now, attempting to change Subaru and the others’ plans.

He simply felt sad for them. But even then, Subaru and the others would still go towards the same place.

Emilia: “I’ve paid. Subaru, let’s go.”

Subaru: “Hmm… let’s go then.”

Pulling onto Subaru’s sleeve, Emilia placed some silver coins onto the counter. She had given him way too much for two cups of milk, but it did also include a tip for the information and his care.

They got up, conveyed their thanks to the shopkeeper, and moved to exit the shop.

Shopkeeper: “—For about a year now, people have noticed there are birds flying towards the sand dunes.”

Emilia & Subaru: "…"

They covered themselves with their robes again, preparing themselves for the Sand Wind, and a voice called out to them from behind. When they turned back, the shopkeeper had already turned his own back, and continued speaking as if having a monologue while wiping a glass.

Shopkeeper: "The people that saw them say that the birds are flying towards the tower, and it spread as a joke. It's a story without any legs to stand on, but…"

That, was when the shopkeeper cut his sentence and put down the glass. And then,

Shopkeeper: "If you ever become lost in the sand dunes, try looking for a bird. If you're lucky, it might lead you towards the tower."

Emilia & Subaru: "…"

Shopkeeper: "Though, if you're lost amidst the sand dunes, your luck is already at its worst."

Subaru and Emilia left the shop without replying to the Shopkeeper's words.

Upon going outside, they noticed that the Sand Wind was now considerably weak. Emilia looked back at Subaru, confirming that her vision was now better to some extent in comparison to the time they entered the bar.

Emilia: "For now, let's return to the inn and meet up with everyone else. Anastasia and the others might also be back now."

Subaru: "Yeah, sounds good. I'm also interested in the results they've obtained too."

Standing in front of Emilia, who had covered her face again, he began walking while posing as a windbreaker.

And then, once they reached a point where they could no longer see the bar, Emilia murmured quietly.

Emilia: “The person from the store just now was missing a leg.”

Subaru: “…I didn’t notice.”

Emilia: “I don’t know where he was injured… But I wonder if it was because of that.”

Subaru could perceive what Emilia wanted to say from her thoughtful words.

The shopkeeper had nicely and warmly expressed his strong feelings on the dangers of the sand dunes to the two strangers.

If that was indeed a warning based off his experiences, then they were terrible people to have shaken off that care and head towards the dunes nonetheless. That was what he felt.

2

???: “Looks like Natsuki-kun and Emilia-san’ve returned safely.”

They had returned to the inn. The person that greeted Subaru and Emilia was someone who should have been outside, just like they had been. Anastasia.

She had changed from her outside clothes, a gorgeous and elegant smile on her face as she sat down on the bed.

The inn the group was staying at was a first-class inn at Mirula.

It was still unfair to compare it to Pristella’s Water Plumage Pavilion, but there was no other reasoning other than the qualitative difference between both cities.

Subaru: “Where’s Julius?”

Anastasia: “After droppin’ us off at the inn, he said he was gonna take a look ‘round the town for a bit. Perhaps he’s getting’ used to havin’ sand in his eyes. Just like Natsuki-kun. How was it?”

Subaru: “I really do wish we had goggles to protect against dust. They’re made of transparent glass, and they cover this part of the face as protection. Can’t we make some of those?”

Thinking of underwater goggles, Subaru asked while pointing to the area around his eyes. Anastasia tilted her head at those words and voiced an “I see” as she nodded.

Anastasia: “We’d have to worry ‘bout things like glasswork and durability, but it’s somethin’ worth considering… perhaps. The Sand Wind problem ain’t a matter unrelated to Kararagi, so it might be a useful idea.”

Subaru: “I’m not talking about patents far into the future. If we don’t have those things… Well, as long as we avoid Sand Time, I don’t think we’ll be incapacitated.”

Emilia: “It seems like the bigger concerns are the Witchbeasts and the Miasma, as opposed to the sand. Beatrice and I can try dealing with the Miasma with Micro Spirits… but we’ll have to depend on Meili for the Witchbeasts.”

Emilia said those words, and looked towards the room next door, which laid on the other side of the wall.

Right now, Beatrice should be monitoring Meili in that room. He wanted to be sentimental and believe Meili would not betray them, but a previous offense was a previous offense. They could not trust her, and they could not state with complete confidence that her connection with her mother had been cut. Likewise, there was no guarantee that her mother would not attempt to silence her.

Subaru: “So we’ll be relying on Anastasia to guide us. It’s pretty risky.”

Emilia: “Although it’d be valid to call it the usual.”

Subaru: “You’re not wrong.”

Subaru loosened his lips at Emilia’s rare interruption and then looked at Anastasia. She straightened her back while still on the bed, and continued the conversation by saying “But well”.

Anastasia: “Don’t’cha worry, we’ve fulfilled the purpose of our trip.

The dragon carriage's wheel adjustments 'n the way to enter the sand dunes should be as we requested."

Emilia: "Right… Sorry. We're somewhat having you do everything."

Anastasia: "It's aight, it's aight, since in return, we'll be countin' on Emilia-san when it comes to fightin' power."

Anastasia calmly waved her hand.

The goals she had spoken of—one of them was tuning the dragon carriage they'd enter the sand dunes with. Usually, dragon carriages would only travel along a well-maintained road, or at least, a road. However, the road this time was mostly a sand road, so an ordinary dragon carriage would be unable to move properly.

Ditching the dragon carriage and riding the dragons would have been a good choice—were there not many women and children. Considering how there was also Rem, unconscious, the option was not viable.

Thus, it was necessary to adjust the dragon carriage to suit it for desert areas, and it was also necessary to make some changes to the ground dragons.

Subaru: "Can't leave Patrasche behind. Leaving her behind would be ridiculous."

Emilia: "That girl is reaaally smart. If he told her she'd be left behind, she might bite Subaru…"

That actually could happen, so he could not give a response. Plus, he was unable to leave her behind.

Emilia: "So, other than the dragons, about the discussion …"

Anastasia: "It was no discussion, really. All I did was try to placate their fears 'n make 'em listen to me."

She showed an adorable smile, but, sensing that it was not what it seemed, Subaru's back began to get some chills.

There was the dragon carriage and another matter to be taken care of. Simply put, it was the rite of passage to deal with the sand dunes. That was, if the Royal Candidates Emilia and Anastasia were lost in the Augria Sand Dunes, who would be responsible?

As of now, it was possible to say that these two held the most important position in the Kingdom. If both were buried under the Augria Sand Dunes, it would be quite a big deal, and naturally there would be confusion over the person responsible.

The Augria Sand Dunes—never mind the one who managed the sand dunes themselves, the weight of responsibility would be unbearable for the Lord that governed the area around Mirula, their last stop.

Thus, Anastasia had gone to write a letter to the Lord beforehand to convince them with “No matter what happens, it’s the Candidate’s own responsibility”.

Anastasia: “But still, they might be blamed for not stoppin’ me… our lives ain’t just our own. It’s a big responsibility, don’t’cha think?”

Emilia: “That’s been true from the start. Not because of things like the Royal Selection or being a Candidate, but there will be a lot of people that won’t be saved if we don’t meet the Sage and find a way to get those things back. It’s not something that has come up now.”

Anastasia: “Ya sure are being as dependable as ya can.”

Anastasia looked back at Emilia, who had declared so, in what appeared to be a happy way in some respects. After that, she tilted her head, looking at Subaru with a “So,”.

Anastasia: “Did’cha guys get any results from yer stroll? There’s no way ya guys actually went out to simply get used to havin’ sand in your eyes, right?”

Subaru: “Well, it’s not like we went out on a date in the middle of Sand Wind. We got the chance to listen to someone informed for a little bit.”

Emilia: “The store person being informed was just a coincidence, though.”

Subaru: “My foresight is on point for choosing that bar.”

Emilia: “I have a feeling that I was the one who chose the shop…”

Anyhow, whatever the flow of events was and whose achievement it was, were both irrelevant. Anastasia had a pondering look after they had finished telling her about the bar.

Anastasia: “Catchin’ sight of a bird… Hmm.”

Subaru: “Really, that’s what you’re curious about?”

Anastasia: “Well, the other parts are just things like challengin’ the Augria Sand Dunes ‘n stuff that’s just half-a-step up from common knowledge. Anyways, the very interesting part is that change. Stuff like birds oughta be the most sensitive to wind mixed with Miasma.”

Emilia: “Now that you say it, that’s right…”

In response to Anastasia’s words, Emilia went into deep thought while caressing her hair. Glancing sideways at Emilia pondering, Subaru gently brought his face close to Anastasia.

Subaru: “—There’s no way you actually do have something in mind, right?”

Anastasia: “Nothing special’s come to mind. However, that really was somethin’ very interesting to me.”

Subaru: “…”

Anastasia: “Don’t make such a doubtful face. Look, she’ll get suspicious.”

He could see Eridna’s true feelings on her face slightly, but he had no choice but to withdraw after she had pointed that out. Fortunately, Emilia had not seen the interaction just now as she was in deep thought, but for some reason, in Subaru’s heart, it felt like he was an adulterer frantically hiding his cheating.

Subaru: “When should we leave?”

Anastasia: “The sooner the better, right? The worryin’ conversation about the dragon carriage’s been settled already… Perhaps we should leave immediately after we’ve loaded on supplies again.”

Subaru: “Tomorrow would be too quick, how about around the day after?”

Anastasia: “Guess we’ll go with that.”

When Anastasia voiced her agreement, Emilia also gave an acknowledging nod. After that, she directed her gaze towards the room’s window, that had been shut tight as to keep the sand out, squinted her eyes.

What Emilia’s amethyst eyes were looking at, was the view of the east, on the other side of the window.

A very long shadow, standing conspicuously tall, its height taller than the stores and houses on the streets, was present there.

Emilia: “The Pleiades Watchtower.”

A voice like a silver bell called upon the building’s name.

The tower that was their destination was so high that it could be seen from Mirula.

—Was it even possible to lose track of something that big?

Before they had even set foot in Mirula, with the appearance of the Pleiades Watchtower during their journey, that question had been present in Subaru.

What could have gone wrong, to not be able to find such a large landmark?

But, on the other hand, as he thought that, the bartender’s warning also pierced him.

Subaru: “Having no plans is out of the question, and a stupid plan is a poor plan, was it?”

Whatever the case, they did not have the option to back out from the challenge.

That was exactly why they had chosen the means that would increase their chances, means that were available to them. They should be different from the adventurers the shopkeeper spoke of, unprepared with their stupid plans. That was what he believed.

And that was why Subaru did not realize it. And he would not realize it.

—Whatever the case, they did not have the option to back out from the challenge.

He did not notice that, at this point, he had already closed off the first path for himself.

Chapter 8:
The Sand Dunes Initiation

1

—The morning of their departure had arrived.

One day had been allocated for rest, and it was now two days after the prior arrangements and the information gathering.

At the entrance to the town of Mirula, Subaru and the others had gathered with their respective equipment on, having finished their preparations to cross the Sand Dunes with their respective equipment on. Gazing at the dragon carriage, Subaru let out a sigh of admirable

Subaru: “Wow, this is…”

Julius: “A ground dragon to cross the Sand Dunes—the Gyras species is a species that shines on sandy soil. Their species is adapted to Sand Wind and dryness alike, characterized by large figures and gentle demeanor. You will find that this endemic species has an easy-to-handle nature.”

As Subaru looked at the ground dragons tied to the dragon carriage with eyes widened, Julius added an explanation.

They had to break through the Augria Sand Dunes, so that they could reach Pleiades Watchtower. The legs of a typical ground dragon would not be capable of dealing with the difficulty of treading that path filled with sand.

Therefore, they had exchanged the ground dragons that had brought them this far via the road, and now would have to use the Gyras species of ground dragons, endemic to this land, to carve open a path.

Subaru: “Endemic, huh. There were water dragons in Pristella too, but wow, the world is big.”

Folding his arms, Subaru gazed at the yellow-skinned ground dragon connected to the dragon carriage right in front of him.

Subaru had already spent more than a year in this world. His initial surprise towards the ground dragons had faded, and thought he would never again feel a breed of excitement similar to what he had felt at first, but he'd been too narrow-minded.

Subaru: "…"

A yellow ground dragon, with thorn-like scales all over its body, its head flat. They had a physique similar to Otto's beloved dragon Frufoo, which was of a species with excellent stamina even among ground dragon; its owner had boasted that it was capable of travelling for three days and three nights. It would perhaps be similar to the triceratops that Subaru knew.

On the other hand, attempting to compare the ground dragon in front of him to similar knowledge would have a person find them rather resembling an ankylosaurus. However, their tails were short, so it seemed like their tails could not be used as weapons, unlike the original's. Also, what was more characteristic of them, more so than their skin and general looks, were their feet. —Every end of their four thick, short legs were round, and their sharp claws acted like spikes which moored their bulking bodies to the ground.

Subaru: "It sure does look like their hooves can cause unrecoverable damage to anything they step on."

Julius: "The grains found in the Augria Sand Dunes are fine particles. Without feet like this, there would be the possibility of slipping off slopes. People say that the Gyras species' feet changed to adapt to that."

Subaru: "So they adapted to the desert areas, eh. They are replacements for horses and camels, but what about water dragons? Thinking hard about it, it's not like I've seen animals pull boats back at the original world."

He went into deep thought and a swan boat came to Subaru's mind, but that was just a boat imitating the form of a swan, and ran on man-made power. However, he'd never heard of a custom in which crocodiles or hippopotamuses pulled on boats, so he couldn't think of any replacement for water dragons. Even beyond that—

Subaru: "These dragons adapted to sandy soil are going there, but can we really bring my Patrasche to a place like that? Can't do anything unreasonable with the lady of the camp."

Julius: "Your beloved dragon belongs to the Diana species, which is considered the ancestor of all ground dragons. The founding forefather dragon, dominant on land, sea, and air is present in her lineage… It has excellent adaptability, no matter what the environment is. Unfortunately, my Shaknar will be left at the town."

Julius answered Subaru's question, then looked upwards towards the inn with lonesomeness.

Shaknar was Julius' beloved, beautiful blue-skinned ground dragon.

It was a loving dragon, but it had forgotten about Julius, who had had his name eaten by Gluttony. However, this well-trained dragon would be polite to anyone that rode it, at all times. Even at their one-sided meeting at Pristella, it had been accepting of Julius from the beginning, and it seemed that during this trip that had lasted about a month and a half, an intimate bond much like the one from before had been formed.

For that very reason, he had what you could call feelings of shame for leaving that beloved dragon at the town.

Julius: "Nevertheless, for your beloved dragon to be the lady you use the most out of all the people around you… I do not know if I should praise you for knowing how to use your ground dragon, or if I should complain about your evaluation of the women around you."

Subaru: "…Actually, you shouldn't make light of how high Patrasche's girl power is."

Julius had an emotional look for a second, so he immediately covered up his feelings with some banter. Subaru also sensed those thoughts of his and went along with it.

Seeing that, Julius went to greet the ground dragon of the dragon carriage whose reins he would be holding. As a response, Subaru looked towards the dragon carriage, stepped towards it, and knocked on the door.

Subaru: “So the inside of the dragon carriage will be left as-is, but the wheels have been replaced and…”

Subaru inspected the remodeled dragon carriage before there was an answer to his knock.

Having said that, the changes that stood out were in the carriage’s inferior structure—the wheels, and the window frames had installed with sand protection for the Sand Wind.

This dragon carriage, which had been devised for long-distance journeys, was something like an RV with its multipurpose features. Inside and at the front of the carriage, there was a row of seats, and the middle and backsides were exceptionally good to simply chill.

On top of it ensuring comfort, it could hold up to ten people at max. Subaru was honestly surprised by how the dragon carriage easily surpassed his expectations on first sight.

Subaru: “Without electricity and electrical appliances, those tools can be replaced with magic stones. Humans really are creatures that seek convenience anywhere.”

???: “—I do not know what you are talking about so seriously, but are the preparations finished, Barusu?”

While he was puzzled at the exterior, the dragon carriage’s door opened, and a cold voice poured down at the same time.

Turning around, there was Ram, standing up from the seat closest to the door, looking down on Subaru.

Subaru: “Well, the previous preparations were finished yesterday, so it’s ready. Next, we’ve got to prepare our hearts and bodies, but I'm also done with that. How about you?"

Ram: "Let's see. Considering how many days we will be in this carriage, no amount of care will quell this feeling of lack of safety. Ram will not cry for help as a delicate person in the middle of the sand dunes, even if attacked."

Subaru: "—It'll be fine, don't worry."

With Ram narrowing her eyes meaningfully, Emilia then made her appearance having heard them talk. Emilia seemed to have been tidying up the back of the dragon carriage. She then stepped up to Ram's side, tapping on her shoulder.

Emilia: "No matter what attacks us, I'll protect everyone in here. There's Subaru and Julius outside too, so we've got everything covered."

Subaru: "You are as reassuring as always. See, look, Ram. Emilia-tan is saying this too, so don't worry."

Ram: "Yes, Emilia-sama. Ram is very reassured as well. However, it will not be just malicious beings that will attack us. Among us there are also those with evil intentions…"

Ram spoke meaningful words, while directing a meaningful look at Subaru.

Once Subaru understood Ram's look and the underlying meaning of her words, he frowned immediately.

Subaru: "You're still doubting me like that, even after spending close to one month of peaceful nights?! There's no way I can do something like that with you around! I don't have that type of courage!"

Ram: "It is pathetic how you are insisting that with a loud voice, it is not unthinkable for you to lose control of yourself because of how beautiful it is in this carriage. Ram is always afraid. Sympathize with a maiden's heart."

Subaru: "Always afraid? Not always threatening people?"

Ram basically repeating the saying that boys and girls should be separated once they turned seven, had caused Subaru's voice to shake. Incidentally, Emilia did nothing but tilt her head in confusion.

It was Emilia's usual EMTness, and Ram's insolence. However, as there was something bothering him, Subaru scratched his head unenergetically with an "Ah",

Subaru: "Nee-sama, how's your physical condition?"

Ram: "…Weird of you to ask that. Why do you wonder?"

Subaru: "Your worry is unnecessary, but is mine unnecessary? I just want to know the answer to that."

Ram: "Barusu, you sure are cheeky with how attentive you are."

She did not have a pale face, and it did not seem like she was having trouble breathing, and albeit Ram appeared to be acting like her usual self, she had not denied Subaru's words.

She did not act tough, nor had she attempted to hide it. In that sense, Ram was being surprisingly sincere.

Subaru: "Looks like your wicked tongue doesn't have its usual sharpness. If your body's condition really is bad, then…"

Ram: "After having spent twenty days to reach this place, you expect me to stomp my feet with the objective at hand? It is the same as usual, but today you are being particularly ridiculous."

Emilia: "Ram, don't speak like that."

Ram interrupted Subaru, directing him an even fiercer look. Emilia raised her eyebrows at that girl's behavior, putting hands on her hips like she was angry.

Standing next to Ram, she pointed her hand towards Subaru while being next to Ram and spoke,

Emilia: "Subaru is worried about Ram. I'm also worried about you.

Everyday I'm giving the treatment Roswaal told me about, but…"

Subaru: "Still unsure if you can call it treament, but it's not like it's your specialty. Even if Emilia-tan and Beako both do it, they can't do it as well as Roswaal."

Ram: "…Not trying to use that as a reason. I do not want to be a bother."

Subaru: "We are worried, you know?"

Ram: "If you were the usual Barusu, then I could fool you."

Subaru: "You aren't the usual Ram, so you can't fool me."

They weren't inflammatory tit-for-tat words, nor were they comebacks.

Anyhow, there was a quiet exchange of words, and Ram bit her lips in a seemingly displeased way at the way Subaru spoke. However, there was a lack of vigor in the eyes she stared at him with.

She probably was aware of it herself. Ram let out a sigh and looked inside of the carriage. There was a wheelchair right next to her seat, a single girl placed on it.

The space had been remodeled to allow the wheelchair to be placed there, by removing the dragon carriage's seat. Their interactions did not disturb the sleeping girl, and so she remained there, in slumber.

Ram: "I shall not be left behind. Also, not like my pain will improve if I do get left behind. Actually, being separated from Emilia-sama with how I am now would put my life at risk. You trying to kill me?"

Subaru: "Calm down. I've never even said a single word about leaving you behind since the beginning. Also, if you were to be left behind, Emilia-tan would be too."

Emilia: "Hmph! Subaru, there's no way I'd let that happen."

Subaru: "Liiiike I saaaaid, it's fine! I just want to check on Ram!"

Emilia: “What do you want to check?”

Subaru: “Didn’t I say it…?”

Subaru gave a wry smile, as his earlier words had been forgotten because they had repeatedly jumped to conclusions. Seeing Emilia and Ram exchanging doubtful glances, Subaru continued,

Subaru: “Ram. We can tell that you aren’t your usual self, so if there’s something wrong, say something. Don’t try to hide stuff and fool us. Even if you do stuff like that, we’ll still help you, even if you don’t like it.”

Ram: “…”

Emilia: “Hehe.”

After he pointed his finger at Ram and affirmed that, Ram made a rare look of shame.

Emilia put her hand on her mouth at her side, and let out a smile unintentionally, unable to contain. That first urge to laugh however was warded off, and Emilia merely relaxed her lips, looking pleased.

Emilia: “I think that side of Subaru is reaaally nice.”

Subaru: “…Eh?! Did you just fall in love again?!”

Ram: “Don’t talk like that with Rem sleeping in front of you, women’s harmful enemy.”

Subaru: “Women’s harmful enemy, not just women’s enemy?!”

Ram snorted her nose with a “Haa”, prompting Subaru’s voice to trail off into the distance.

After that, stretching her slender legs, and she recklessly tried to kick Subaru off of the dragon carriage’s steps.

Subaru: “Oh, h-hey! What are you doing, I’m going to fall!”

Ram: “Putting aside you falling, Barusu should normally be outside, not inside. Mount the prideful ground dragon, and frantically guarantee our dragon carriage’s safety. Do it, quickly.”

Subaru: “What do you mean quickly, listen to what I have to…”

Ram: “—I have listened to what I must. So, go.”

Ram asserted with an even sterner voice, and delivered an even sharper kick.

Having gotten a punt to the thigh, Subaru descended in dejection, and just before he went away from the dragon carriage, looks were exchanged with Emilia. She responded to that look by giving an acknowledging gesture with her chin, which had an “I know” underlying.

Subaru: “Guess that’ll be fine for now. But, anyways you should… Gah.”

Ram: “Go.”

A kick that felt like a surprise attack connected with his solar plexus, and Subaru fell off the dragon. Then, Ram hurriedly shut the carriage’s door, suddenly looked at Emilia as she let out a sigh. Then she spoke,

Ram: “…Emilia-sama, why are you making that look?”

Emilia: “No, it’s nothing. But, I just thought about how you’re kind of cute.”

Ram: “That’s a surprising opinion. How cheeky of Emilia-sama.”

Emilia: “Hmm.”

Due to being teased Ram’s tongue slipped, eliciting a rare sight of her cheeks being stiffened to be seen. Emilia witnessed that change in Ram’s facial expression and smiled, appearing to become more and more happy.

Emilia: “Finally feel like showing that face to me too, the one you always show to Subaru?”

Ram: “…It was a slip of mind. Please forgive my impoliteness.”

Emilia: “I’m not really angry. I’m actually a little happy, it somewhat feels like you’re giving me trust when you do that. I was a little jealous of Subaru.”

Ram kept silent for a bit in response to Emilia’s innocent reply. Immediately after that, with a dumbfounded look while smoothing her hair, Ram—

Ram: “Emilia-sama, you have changed as well. When we first met, you only seemed like someone with resolve that was hard, but fragile, like glass.

Emilia: “Do I look a little stronger now?”

Ram: “And now, I think… You are like sweet glass turned into candy.”

Emilia: “Wow, Ram, you’re harsh.”

Emilia was smacked by Ram’s abusive words, and her voice finally boomed from being unable to bear it.

And in that manner, the girls resumed talking with each other inside the dragon carriage.

2

—After a few hours, the conquer of the Augria Sand Dunes began.

They had become acquainted with the sandy soil after one hour in the dragon carriage; they were approximately ten kilometers east of the town of Mirula. With the dry sand and Miasma-laden wind growing stronger, and the prairie at their feet changing to desert, they had finally entered the Augria Sand Dunes proper.

???: “…”

Their setup was made up of one dragon carriage, and a ground dragon of the Gyras species to pull it. Running off to the side, was Subaru riding Patrasche, trekking along the sandy soil.

The flat-faced ground dragon wasn't fast, but its heavy pacing gave off a feeling of stability. At first, Patrasche had seemed wary of her weird companion, but after a few hours of traveling together, it was as if she'd found a compromise with her partner, and dissatisfaction was not to be found on her highly prideful face.

???: "If I had to describe it, then I'd probably say that the dissatisfaction of this ground dragon is because of Betty, in fact."

It was Beatrice, completely settled in Subaru's arms. While holding the bridle and onto the curled-up girl, Subaru said "No no" as he shook his head.

Subaru: "That's not right. Patrasche isn't such an intolerant dragon."

Beatrice: "…Subaru, it'd be wise of you to be more careful of how you perceive those around you, I suppose."

She let out those words, grabbing onto the edge of her skirt as she sat sideways on the jet-black ground dragon.

Subaru's dragon-riding skills were a lot better than they were before. Up to this point he had been simply spoiled by Patrasche's consideration, but now he was at the level of a dragon-rider apprentice.

He sat on the saddle and held onto the bridle. Beatrice was in front of him, and he made sure to hold onto her from behind; they almost looked like experts at riding together.

Of course, the only ground dragon Subaru would ride was Patrasche, and this wasn't the first time he rode her along with Beatrice. Thus, Beatrice was being too paranoid, no matter how he looked at it. That's what he wanted to say.

Beatrice: "Very prideful ground dragons don't want to let anyone other than their owner ride them, in fact. This ground dragon of Subaru's is extraordinary, one-of-a-kind, I suppose. If I were alone, she definitely wouldn't let me ride her, in fact."

Subaru: "Isn't that just because you're bad at riding ground dragons?"

Beatrice: "If that was the reason, then you getting close with this ground dragon wouldn't make sense, I suppose."

It was just as she'd said.

If Patrasche liked a person based on their dragon riding skills, then Subaru should've failed the first test. Since that had not come to pass, there was a reason as to why this lady approved of Subaru.

And, in truth, Patrasche's actual treatment towards everyone but Subaru was relatively harsh.

Subaru: "Well, not knowing why you're liked really is a bad thing."

Beatrice: "True, in fact. Subaru doesn't have the looks to be liked for no reason, I suppose."

Subaru: "…In other words, you have firm reasons to love me."

Beatrice: "Of course, Betty is… Just what are you trying to make me say?!"

They were glued together, so he couldn't dodge Beatrice's assault, her face beet red. While getting struck lightly by her weak palm, Subaru said "Whoa, whoa" in an attempt to appease Beatrice. Then, Patrasche raised her upper body and shook them, as if displeased with the behavior they were displaying on her back.

Subaru: "Oh, what the?!"

As she had set her posture in a way that was like doing a wheelie on a bike, Subaru reflexively held tight onto Beatrice.

Normally they would not feel any swaying from the dragon or even the wind because of the Divine Protection of Wind Evasion, but certain extreme movements like the one just now would have effect, as well as things like angle changes from sudden turning.

The harassment was based on an understanding of those characteristics.

When Subaru put in his objection and glared at the back of Patrasche's head, the ground dragon looked at Subaru and Beatrice for a second, squinting her eyes as if saying "You'll bite your tongue".

Subaru: "She's kinda like Ram just considering how haughty she is. Seems like they'd get along, surprisingly."

Beatrice: "Or maybe they'd clash with each other, and they wouldn't come to an agreement at all, I suppose."

Subaru and Beatrice exchanged deep thoughts and nodded at each other. Then,

???: "Subaru, Beatrice-sama. It is splendid seeing you guys being friendly with each other, but this would be a good time to put yourselves together in earnest."

A voice speaking out from the side was sent towards the two who acted relaxedly.

At the driver box of the dragon carriage travelling alongside them, there was Julius, in charge of the reins. Rather than the fact that he was not alone, it seemed that the role of coachman was unpleasant and not very fitting for Julius, but he didn't act like he cared about it.

That being said, perhaps he did not have the time to worry about that. Either way, at his side there was,

???: "I don't mind onii-san and Beatrice-chan being friendly with each other, but if I'm ignored too much, I'll pout."

Having stated those words, giving them a look that didn't fit her appearance—Meili, sitting.

Meili was an essential member to deal with the Witchbeasts, and they would have to always use her for conquering the Augria Sand Dunes. Thus, as a lookout for the Witchbeasts living at the Sand Dunes, Meili was at the place where it would d be easiest for her to deal with them—in other words, she was standing by at the driver box at the front of the dragon carriage.

Julius took up the role of staving off her boredom.

Subaru: "You have the Knight next to your side to escort you. He's much more smart, stylish, and elegant than me."

Meili: "I didn't get more than half of what you've said. Plus, I'm fine with Knight-sama. I'm unhappy with Onii-san."

Subaru: "With me?"

While playing with her braided hair, Meili glared at Subaru, her cheeks swollen in a pout.

Meili: "Onii-san made me come along, and so he must be forced to deal with me."

Subaru: "Don't say such unreasonable childish things. As you can see, that place is filled with Beako. Right?"

Beatrice appeared to shrugher shoulders in resentment, and Subaru looked at Meili again.

Pouting was a suitable action for her age, but her mood would have a big influence from now on down the road. Considering that, it would be bold to make light of Meili.

However, saying that really would make things unmanageable.

Subaru: "You're quite right, however, we'll have you fulfill your role first before you can say if it's a right or a duty."

Meili: "My role, hmm."

Subaru: "We'll be entering the most favorite Augria Sand Dunes soon. I don't think the Witchbeasts will suddenly roar when we enter them, but when it does happen, calming them down will be up to you, Meili. You get that, right?"

Meili: “…Yeees. For someone who spoils Beatrice-chan, onii-san sure is a bully.”

He wasn’t being a bully to her, but even if he was taken as one, he would just have to cajole her.

Subaru felt like Beatrice seemed satisfied, looking at her with a side glance, and then raised his hand at Julius. After that, Jullius quietly acknowledged, gesturing with his chin.

Unfortunately for him, he would have to be the little lady’s sycophant. Moreover—

Beatrice: “Subaru.”

Subaru: “Ahh, I see it.”

Beatrice called out to him quietly, while Patrasche gave a faint neigh, as she glared at what laid in front. Those actions brought back his focus, and Subaru squinted.

He saw the tower, its contours so clear that it would be impossible to miss them from Mirula—likewise, surface of sand surrounding that tower was visible.

Their magnificent arrival to the maze of sand surrounding the Pleiades Watchtower, the Augria Sand Dunes.

3

In the Augria Sand Dunes, there was a particularly famous Sand Time, in which the Sand Wind would blow particularly strong.

The Sand Wind that would blow three times a day, morning, afternoon, and night, would carry sand and Miasma from the east towards the west, a disaster that would silently creep on people. This Sand Wind would be especially strong in the midnight hour, and it would continue to blow for a few hours.

As it was pretty much midnight, so at this time when the Sand Wind blew, their movement would be stifled.

Thus, they would conquer the Augria Sand Dunes during the day, little-by-little, with a few hours of break in the morning and afternoon, at the times the Sand Times would blow.

The grains of sand that fully covered the ground were miniscule, and just like the rumors had stated, it was terribly difficult to keep their footing, causing them to trip. Their march was slow, slow as a crawl; an irritating situation all around.

There was something about that situation which disappointed Subaru. That was—

Subaru: "There's the pain of this Sand Wind and the poor footing, but… it isn't as bad as I thought."

Turning his face away from the wind blowing from windward, he pulled up the mouth cloth to secure his breathing. He faintly felt his teeth biting the sand, but this type of baptism was not very different from his time at Mirula.

The flying sand created a view of yellow, and he felt the sand tickling him in his clothes, but that was as far as its effects went. The fury of the dunes was insignificant.

Subaru: "When I first heard about the dunes, I even prepared myself on the assumption that it'd be deathly."

Beatrice: "It's because of the natural environment that there's nothing green in here, in fact. The Miasma kills anything and everything, so it only has this sort of scenery spread out, I suppose. That is why rain even pours on these sand dunes, and the temperature doesn't go extremely out of control, in fact."

Subaru had a strong impression of the desert being a red-hot hell. He'd never stepped foot into a desert back at his other world, but in mediums like games and manga, the deserts all yielded impressions of hot sand.

For that reason, the severity of the Augria Sand Dunes was pleasant, in comparison to what he had initially imagined.

Subaru: "It wasn't hot or cold at the nearest town, so I guess it'd be weird for the sand dunes to be an extremely hot hell. So, we only need to be careful of the wind and the Witchbeasts.”

Beatrice: “As well as getting lost… I suppose.”

One worry had disappeared, and Beatrice stifled Subaru’s feelings of optimism to stiffen up. In response to the point made by the girl in his arms, Subaru looked forward while being careful of the wind.

The Watchtower, its existence ever-present, loomed still in Subaru’s line of sight.

Subaru: “You bring up the question of getting lost, but it seems unnatural to miss that thing.”

Beatrice: “Betty thinks so too, in fact. However, it wouldn’t surprising if something happened, I suppose. I don’t know what type of cheat this Sage is, but the fact that nobody has ever reached them is proof, in fact.”

Subaru: “…”

Of course, Subaru had no intentions of underestimating things.

Realistically speaking, it would be unlikely that they would miss their target considering it was a structure that huge, never mind getting lost. However, any prior challengers would have most likely thought the same thing.

Despite those thoughts in mind, he figured there should have been a reason as to why they had still not reached it.

Anything could happen. Just like Beatrice had pointed out, this was that sort of devilish place.

Subaru: “About that, I guess it’s about time we make the next backup.”

Holding his breath, Subaru looked back at the terrain they had just traversed.

On the sandy soil, the footsteps of Patrasche, on whom Subaru and Beatrice were riding, had been left behind, one-by-one. However, only the very latest ones would remain. And in time, too, they would be washed away, replaced, and hidden by the sand.

Nature itself had concocted such a natural trap.

Never mind the Watchtower at the front, the path they had traveled thus far would be hidden from them in eximious fashion.

However, that would only be true if these people were only able to take ordinary measures.

Subaru: “Seems like the previous one’s gone from sight. Alright, this is a good time.”

Subaru pulled on the bridle, directing Patrasche to veer towards the dragon carriage running parallel to them.

The wheels of the dragon carriage also left traces, as did the ground dragon’s spike-shaped footprints, but those were subjected to the same conditions as Patrasche’s. Thus, they had to devise something as a marks to follow.

Subaru: “Emilia-tan, please!”

Emilia: “—Okaaaay, got it.”

When he knocked on the dragon carriage from the outside, Emilia answered and showed up on the other side of the door.

Emilia’s whole body had been covered with a white robe for the sand, and Subaru, behind her—was gazing and pointing at something in the far distance, a certain “something” that was faintly reflected in his eyes,

Subaru: “I’m sorry for having you work so much, but please, Sensei!”

Emilia: “Well, I’m having Subaru watch from outside. It’s not a big problem… What do you mean by «Sensei»?”

Subaru: “It’s the template when a request is made. Alright, alright, alright, please.”

Emilia: “Okay, I’ve been requested—Hey!”

After that brief light-hearted exchange, she looked to the place Subaru was pointing towards. Emilia raised a listless shouting voice, the look in her eyes too cute to call a glare, and her magical power surged.

Immediately after, an enormous amount of Mana swirled in Emilia’s palm, and the magical power dashed swiftly through the sky, giving off the sense that its power increased as it accelerated. The sound it produced was like the very air had exploded, and it resounded throughout the vicinity.

—And then, after a few seconds, a huge ice tower stood on the path of the sandy plain.

Emilia: “Yeah, that was good.”

Confirming that the task was finished, Emilia smiled, looking somewhat satisfied with herself.

It wasn’t comparable in size to the Pleiades Watchtower, but it was still a very conspicuous silhouette for the Augria Sand Dunes. And so, an ice tower had been erected here and there along the route Subaru and the others had taken inside the Augria Sand Dunes, in successive intervals such that they would not lose sight of the path.

Subaru: “The footprints can’t be marks, but marks can be made with a more conspicuous method. This is the application of magic, eh.”

Emilia: “Even so, Subaru’s craft is very impressive. Nice thinking.”

Subaru: “This method won’t be any good if the sand dunes were hot.”

The ice Emilia created with her magic was fragile to temperature, perhaps because it didn’t go against the laws of nature. Based off that knowledge, were this a genuine desert, then maybe such a forbidden move would not have worked. However, it was a valid plan in these Sand Dunes.

Emilia's standing ice tower was functioning as a landmark without a hitch. Worst-case scenario, if something really did happen that would force them to withdraw, they should be able to follow them and retreat.

Subaru: "This tower… yeah, it looks alright underfoot. I'm still scared of it possibly toppling over, though. Since its foundation seems to be on something fluid."

Emilia: "I think it's been pinned to the ground as hard as possible, so it's all hunky-dory. You're worried?"

Subaru: "Who even says «hunky-dory» these days… Ahh, alright."

Subaru put aside his worry by teasing Emilia, and raised his head. Emilia seemed a wee bit displeased with that response, but for the time being she would just put a sarcastic smile on her face.

After that, he looked over Emilia's shoulder; towards the inside of the dragon carriage behind her. For everyone inside, it should be the same as usual, but there was one person that he would rather not see remaining the same.

Subaru: "Where's Anastasia?"

???: "What is it, Natsuki-kun? Lookin' for me?"

Immediately after his gazed had wandered, Subaru jumped upon being called by a person's voice.

Cutting into his line of sight, Anastasia peeked out from a bit to the side of Emilia. She looked down on a surprised Subaru, her teal eyes squinted ever so slightly.

Anastasia: "No need to get startled that much. Ain't I deliberately stayin' inside?"

Subaru: "I know that you are inside, but it was shocking because I didn't expect you to appear from Emilia's armpit like you're growing out of it."

Emilia: "…Hey, Subaru. I reaaally didn't like the way you said that."

Anastasia: "Unusual for me too, to be annoyed by somethin' like that. What a coincidence."

With both Emilia and Anastasia showing some dislike, Subaru got back on track. There was Beatrice shrugging her shoulders in his arms, but he turned to Anastasia for now.

Subaru: "We'll be relying on your knowledge to conquer the Sand Dunes. Please guide us well, okay?"

Anastasia: "Natsuki-kun sure is a worrywart. I'll be with'cha, so the outcome of this journey's the same for us two… There's no way I'd try and cut corners, ya know? Don't'cha worry."

Beatrice: "…Is it possible for someone to believe a fox so nonchalantly, I suppose?"

Replying to Anastasia's words, Beatrice spoke with a voice so low that it could only be heard by Subaru. He was in complete agreement, but it would be wrong to provoke her by using that basis.

If he was going to say that, then opting to go on this campaign towards the Watchtower would have been a mistake in the first place. As of now, they should be using up all their strength to fulfill their respective roles without complaining.

Subaru: "Right, Anastasia."

Anastasia: "Yes, Natsuki-kun. If somethin' happens, I'll let Julius know, and once we come near the place Echidna spoke about, I'll report that too. Don't worry, yeah?"

Anastasia—Or rather, Eridna, did not seem displeased by Subaru's cynical beckoning. It seemed like there would be no problem moving forward like this, for the moment being.

Emilia: "It seems like the wind has gotten stronger. Subaru, if there's nothing else, then I'm going to close it, but…"

Subaru: "…Ahh, go ahead. Emilia-tan, I'll leave the people inside up to you."

Emilia: "Yeah, leave it to me. Subaru, you be nice to Beatrice, too."

Beatrice: "No need to worry about that, I suppose. I'm satisfied, in fact."

Emilia put her hand on the door, and after an exchange words, she went back inside and left. Beatrice responded to Emilia's last joke with a light remark, the latter's smile disappeared, blocked by the door.

Subaru now went around to the front of the dragon carriage, appearing next to the driver's box.

Julius: "It appears like Emilia-sama's landmarks are working proper. You are as clever as always."

Subaru: "You can call it guile, you know."

Julius: "I shan't. I am jealous of your adaptability, being able to come up with ideas myself and others cannot with such ease. I really cannot craft these sort of evil ways."

Subaru: "Guile sounds cuter than evil ways!"

Julius sat on the driver's box, and he had a faint smile on his face, so faint that it was barely visible.

A white cloth was wrapped around his handsome face, so his expression couldn't be seen. But even then, as they had been talking with each other in this past month, and Subaru could understand how much he was joking based off the tone of his voice.

Subaru: "Meili, how about you? Doing your job?"

Meili: "You're gonna ask me that? Onii-san hasn't run into bad animal-chans even once, and neither has the dragon carriage. That's not proof of me wooorking."

Upon peeking into the driver's box, he saw Meili's arranged in a pout, just as he expected. She was also wearing a cloak around her head because of the Sand Wind, and she answered Subaru's question with a displeased-sounding voice.

In reaction to Meili's answer, Subaru wiped off the sand off his head while regarding the path ahead.

Subaru: "Even if you say that, it's hard to see the results of your hard work. I don't know if the Witchbeasts haven't showed up because of you, or if they just aren't around here…"

Meili: "…Hmm, so that's what you're gonna saaay."

Subaru said a careless thing, being disappointed by the high anticipations he possessed, as so far they had not faced any obstacles other than the sand and the wind. Immediately Meili spoke with a low toned voice, putting her cheeks in between her hands as if thinking of something as she sunk into silence.

Subaru honestly had a bad feeling about that.

Julius: "Subaru, apologize to her. It is clear that you have just said something improper."

Subaru: "Y-You don't have to tell me, I know. Uhh, Meili? I kinda was a bit mean now. Well, not kinda, but completely. Please don't be in a bad mood. I wasn't trying to be mean."

Meili: "…Okaay, it's fineee. It's not like I'm mad or anythiiing. But, I think there's a reason for what onii-san said too."

Subaru: "O-Oh. That's good. Thankfully, you are much more mature than you loo…"

Meili: "—So I'll make it clear why I'm here."

Meili interrupted Subaru's explanation and apology, and uttered some extremely disturbing words.

The unsettling sound caused Subaru and Julius to look at each other, and hurried to form a sentence that would appease her—It was immediately after that.

???: “…”

Patrasche and the dragon carriage’s ground dragon both stepped hard on the ground, halting their movement moving. The ground dragons’ instincts had rapidly sensed something approaching them, alerting their master, the one holding the reins. Then, Subaru and Julius opened their eyes at the same time. There, they saw it.

Subaru & Julius: “…”

In front of their eyes, the sandy surface suddenly began wriggling as if it possessed a will of its own, and something wriggling immediately came crawling out from beneath the sands. A terrifying animal, with a large amount of sand clinging onto its whole body, let out an unbelievably piercing cry es its gigantic mouth.

Neither arms nor legs were present on its body, and the way it bent its long and fat body back and forth was reminiscent of a snake. However, it had slimy-looking skin, its color similar to that of the sand, patterned with carved, equidistant lateral stripes, carrying along a horrible stench. Subaru only noticed its true identity once the head of the thing lowered.

It was no snake—This, was an earthworm.

Its torso was so massive that Subaru could not wrap his arms around it; in fact, it seemed that its head and mouth were large enough to swallow four or five humans whole. The stink surrounding it was similar to a rotten smell, and the saliva, dripping from its oral cavity lined with fine teeth, made noise as it evaporated the sand.

Earthworm: “…”

The eyeless head turned towards them, acting as if it was sniffing a smell.

At this moment, Subaru had completely forgotten about breathing. He also felt Patrasche’s thoughts blanking, being transmitted across the bridle, and Beatrice grabbed strongly onto Subaru’s clothes while still in his arms.

As soon as he thought of its sense of smell, Subaru remembered the smell of the Witch that he carried. If the Witchbeast reacted to that, or something else reacted to it, this group would be—

Meili: “Ahh geez, you stiiink. Hurry up and leave. Get looost.”

Subaru: “…”

In the presence of Subaru and the others who could not avoid letting their fear show, Meili let out an adequate voice.

Those words caused the gigantic earthworm to turn towards Meili, but it immediately listened to that little girl’s orders, and the giant body crawled back into the hole it had dug. A few seconds later, the hole that the earthworm came from had been completely covered with sand, and only silence reigned within the area.

Julius: “…That was a Sand Earthworm, most likely. It is a Witchbeast that prefers to lurk beneath sandy soil, but it was a little bigger than I thought.”

Subaru: “A little? How little?”

Julius: “To my knowledge, I thought they would have been as big as a male adult’s arms.”

Even if the Earthworm that had appeared was of that size, it would still be big enough to pose a grotesque threat. But, that Sand Earthworm was hundreds to thousands times larger than the ones in Julius’s knowledge.

It was said that the Witchbeasts native to the Augria Sand Dunes were more ferocious, but perhaps they should have considered the difference in scale as well. Anyhow,

???: “Wh-What was that loud voice…?”

A small window belonging to the dragon carriage’s opened, and Emilia showed her face from the window that connected the driver box to the inside of the carriage.

Even if she had not witnessed that Sand Earthworm, she would have heard that Witchbeast’s roar. Emilia looked worried, but Subaru was incapable of speaking right away.

Then, Meili took Subaru’s place as he tensed up, and faced Emilia.

Meili: “No need to wooorry. I just wanted to let you guys know how blessed you are because you don’t have to worry about that thiiing.”

Subaru: “Ahh geez, we really can’t thank you enough, Meili-san!”

He loosened up thanks to Meili’s words, and Subaru gave her a generous compliment that came from the bottom of his heart. Emilia seemed astonished at that change; after Meili’s own surprise, she immediately appeared to be satisfied.

Meili: “Reeeally? You sure? Does onii-san see me in a new light now?”

Subaru: “Yeah, I seriously respect you. I sincerely felt just how dangerous this place would be, had you not come along. The Augria Sand Dunes are scary! Scaryyyyyyyy!!”

He now understood one reason as to why the many reckless adventurers had not come back after daring to conquer this place. Indeed, it was certainly a place for reckless people.

It was the absurdity of fooling themselves by believing that the baptism of the sand dunes would be easy. Hooray for peace. Peace is the best.

Beatrice: “You’re flattering her quite a lot, I suppose. Disgusting, in fact.”

Subaru: “Shut up! Weren’t you scared out of your wits too?! Ahhh, scary!”

Beatrice: “B-Betty was only going along with Subaru because you were nervous, I suppose. Don’t get the wrong idea, in fact.”

Subaru: “Don’t act so tough. You pissed yourself a little just like I did, right? I can tell.”

Beatrice: “Piss, I suppose?!”

Their quarrel started like a comedy episode, but nobody could blame them for it at the time.

It seemed like Witchbeasts would approach them if they caused a fuss, but the power of the being who countered that had been adequately proven. Thus, even Julius did not attempt to stop their quarrel.

However, he simply readjusted his consciousness, realizing that the ice they were walking on was thinner than he had imagined.

That was the first day of the conquering of the Sand Dunes, to which they could look back as having been worth it.

4

Suddenly, light ran through the sky, and penetrated the wind.

???: "…"

With a violent sound, the ice tower shattered in half and crumbled, having been hit directly.

The pulverized ice tower immediately returned to Mana, and every little bit of it that fell onto the surface was swallowed by the sand, disappearing from the world without any ruin, without a trace.

The light continued several times more, darting through the sky in succession.

Coincidentally, the number matched the number of times the silver-haired girl had established the ice tower.

Nobody knew what that meant, at this point of time.

However, the conquest of the labyrinth of sand was by no means a simple matter. That much was an established fact.

Chapter 9:
Break Through Sand Time

1

The first day of the Augria Sand Dunes conquest finished immediately after sunset.

Once the dead of night arrived, the longest of the three Sand Times that blew per day would arrive. If they forced their way through that Miasma-laden sand, their bodies would be ruined, and there was the possibility of losing their path.

If they were even unable to see the landmark that was the Pleiades Watchtower, then it would be wise to sit back, spending a peaceful night regaining their strength, restoring their spirit for the following day.

???: “Now that I think of think, will the Witchbeast countermeasures work while you’re sleeping too?”

???: “Of cooourse. Having your butt chewed by animals you brought is such a stupid thought that it’s not even fuunny.”

Aware of the menace the Witchbeasts of the Augria Sand Dunes presented, Subaru was somewhat, or rather, quite unsure of them. Laughing at his timidness, Meili was proud.

She appeared to be in a good mood ever since the Sand Earthworm incident, perhaps because she had proved her worth. Subaru understood that getting her in a good mood had benefits to their lives’ safety, so from here on out, he wished to be serious about dealing with that too.

Anyhow, night had fallen.

Subaru and the others had positioned themselves in the middle of the Sand Dunes, in a sandy plain with a good field of view, and had begun the preparations against the sand, with the dragon carriage at the core. Having said that, they did not need that many preparations.

Putting aside how the responsibility weighed on one person, the method really was simple.

Subaru: “Alright, Emilia-tan. Sorry for always relying on you, but please!”

Emilia: “Okay, make sure to move away a bit—Take this!”

Emilia let out a listless yell and used her magic, just like when she had erected a tower of ice. Then, an wall of frost formed on the east side of the halted dragon carriage as cover, which would act as defense against the Sand Wind, shutting out the sand entirely.

There was no worry about the ice melting, and it would likewise protect them against petty Witchbeasts. It looked and felt cold, but after their eyes were closed, it would work well enough.

Julius: “I cannot help feeling uncomfortable because we are always being spoiled by Emilia-sama’s powers.”

Emilia: “It’s fine. I said it before, didn’t I? Subaru and Julius will be the ones doing their best while we’re on the move. Also, I’ve said this too, but I am in reaaally good condition.”

Subaru: “Seems like you’d usually start to feel chest pain, that sounds dangerous to me.”

Looking at the icy wall, Julius sighed as Emilia flexed her bicep. Gazing at Emilia’s soft, white upper arm by his side the side, Subaru thought that he should pay attention to Emilia’s condition.

In fact, the Miasma-laden air drifting about in the Sand Dunes did have a particular “heaviness” to it.

That heaviness had a vague effect on Subaru’s body, and it seemed to also have an effect on Beatrice and Julius, both taciturn. It could be possible that Anastasia and Ram being quiet inside the dragon carriage was not unrelated.

On other hand, Emilia and Meili seemed to be in good condition, Meili being the same as before.

He did not believe they had common traits, but he should be vigilant for the appearance of any extreme effects. Although, truth was, he wished to get out of the sand dunes as fast as possible.

Julius: “Impatience is forbidden. Although I cannot say I understand why you want to rush over the path.”

Subaru: “…”

Beckoning a silent Subaru, Julius gazed up at the eastern sky blocked by ice. Subaru felt like he had been seen through, so he snorted his nose and turned away from the ice wall. Then, Patrasche came near Subaru, pressing her snout on his shoulder.

Subaru felt her doing it over and over, and he gave a bitter smile.

Subaru: “So, are you going to try and calm me down, too?”

???: “It’s not like I want to, in fact. It’s not like the initiative has been taken, either, I suppose.”

Beatrice pushed his back and turned away, although previously she had been looking up at him meaningfully.

Subaru scratched his head, wondering if his irritation was plain for all to see. Looking over, Subaru found Emilia, looking at him with kind eyes; as their lines of sight crossed, she waved towards him ever so slightly.

Suddenly embarrassed, Subaru clapped his hands.

Subaru: “Alright, a place to sleep has been secured thanks to Emilia-tan, so let’s get ready for tomorrow. The Sand Time will end at dawn, so until then let’s…”

Emilia: “Before that, Ram needs her treatment.”

Subaru: “Ah, true. That’s right. Okay, then I’ll be depending on Emilia-tan and Beako for that.”

He attempted to go through the topics quickly, and was halted by Emilia, trying to follow the daily routine. Emilia and Beatrice nodded at Subaru's anticipations, and the treatment began with the men being put outside.

Also, as for why Subaru and Julius had been put outside once the healing begun—

Ram: "—Hmm~."

One could tell that it had started because of the voice that could be heard faintly, even through the door.

Ram's enthusiastically quivering voice sounded like she was enduring pain. A faint light arose inside the dragon carriage; the treatment was being administered with the use of Mana that combined four attributes.

Mana was being poured into the wound inflicted from having lost her horn, Ram's appearance pitiful. On one hand though, it really did feel like something erotic, somehow.

Therefore, after the treatment had been witnessed the first day, they refused to have the men with them during healing.

Subaru: "I don't get what Roswaal was thinking in wanting you do that repeatedly."

Julius: "In a way, it is definitely an honorable role. Miss Ram is charming and pretty. However, when I think about the obvious matter of who she has eyes for, I honestly cannot be pleased with it."

Subaru: "Roswaal should know that too, so I don't know why would he be doing it still… In that case, why would he still say that about Ram, if she's so far gone?"

Julius: "People's relationships, even more so when speaking of a relationship between a man and a woman, cannot be assessed from the outside. To put it another way, I am pretty sure the first time you and I met as not an enjoyable experience. Or at least, I did not think I would be going alongside you on this life-threatening journey.”

Subaru: “…Well, I guess so.”

Hearing the lovely voice from behind him made Subaru’s face faintly turn red as he scratched his nose.

Julius had a nonchalant face, but despite that it was still a very strong stimulus to any innocent youth. But still, they could not get away from there and get sniffed out by dangerous Witchbeasts. They had no choice. It was necessary.

???: “Ya look quite conflicted, Natsuki-kun.”

Subaru: “Uwaaah?!”

While Subaru was quietly listening, the breath that blew against his ears made him jump. He lost his posture, and tumbled onto the sand, then seeing the figure of Anastasia coming around from the other side of the dragon carriage. Julius, who had been alarmed by Subaru’s panic, lost his composure at the sight of Anastasia, and he looked at the rolling figure.

Julius: “You got a little too surprised. It was as if you were thinking of something evil.”

Subaru: “Huh? It’s not like I was thinking of something evil or anything, you know? Yeah, I’ve got no idea what you’re talking about. Not at all. Not one bit. So, what do you need, Anastasia-san? I’ll listen to anything!”

Anastasia: “Ya really are bad at foolin’ people, aren’t’cha? Well, it’s fine. Natsuki-kun may be interested in what’s goin’ on inside, but I’ve got somethin’ important to talk about.”

Subaru shook off the dark disdain in Julius’s eyes, shot a thumbs-up towards Anastasia. Anastasia smiled lightly at that reaction and trekked over the sand in boots, and,

Anastasia: “Wow, it’s hard to walk. Ya ‘n Julius seem fine, eh.”

Julius: “I have trained, although I would not go as far as to say that it was for this specific occasion."

Subaru: "When you feel unsure of your footsteps, don't walk slow in attempts to check them, leave it up to the firmness of your shoes' soles and take relatively hard steps. That is the Clind Style."

It was the basis of the rough road running style he learned from the all-purpose butler, Clind, back when he was learning parkour.

Anastasia gave an admiring nod at those words, and after that, she lowered the neck of her robe, the lower part of her face now showing. She took a deep breath.

Anastasia: "I don't get this sand, but it seems like it's chokin' me out. I'd like to go somewhere safe from this Sand Wind as soon as possible 'n breathe as much as I want."

Subaru: "Agreed. I'd like to take a bath too. My head's already smeared with sand."

He could now understand the reason as to why people in desert areas would wear turbans on their heads. Countermeasures for sand, heat, and cold. It was a reasonable yet inevitable way of life people living on rigorous land had to follow. Subaru too was moderately wrapped in cloth, but it was not enough to protect him from this type of conditions.

Anastasia: "A bath sounds good, yeah. It'd be nice if there's a bath at that Sage-san's place."

Subaru: "…Of course, I don't know that much. Is it like that?"

Anastasia: "Even if Echidna knows how to get there, it's not like we've ever been in it."

Anastasia pulled down the neck of her robe even further, the scarf that she always wore now in display. A major premise of this whole deal was that Eridna was the guide for their journey.

There was no point in doubting her, but he wished to work out the details.

Subaru: “I can assume that you’re going to tell me important things here on out, right?”

Anastasia: “Of course.”

Julius: “I shall listen gladly.”

Anastasia puffed out her slim chest, and Subaru and Julius got ready to listen. In response, Anastasia looked back at the dragon carriage pompously,

Anastasia: “We’ll be stayin’ the night inside the carriage startin’ today… But ya boys need to sleep at the front seat. Can’t have ya getting’ carried away with the women ‘n children in a small room, after all.”

Subaru: “That’s enough of that!”

Anastasia: “Hey, I just thought I’d loosen the tension… Ah, oh well.”

It didn’t matter at all that they would stay in the same room in the first place. His own lack of courage and the wariness of the other parties were enough for him to understand that.

Anyhow, Subaru screaming his inner thoughts was put aside, and Anastasia went into the main topic.

Anastasia: “After a full day of movin’ towards the Watchtower… How’s it lookin’?”

Subaru: “Even if you ask that… To be honest, the results weren’t anything special.”

Subaru was puzzled by her question, reflecting about the day that had passed.

After arriving at the Augria Sand Dunes around noon, letting the morning’s Sand Time pass by, and after that, Subaru and the others spent nearly half the day moving. The Sand Time that happened during the afternoon was now behind them, and it was now sunset. As for the results that were had up to this point, they would be—

Subaru: “The tower is perfect as a landmark, and we’ve got the mark for the way back that I requested of Emilia-tan. Also, Meili was more effective than expected. Those were the results, I guess?”

Julius: “The preparations we had beforehand and Subaru’s quick thinking were perfect countermeasures against Sand Time. But, the problem is Pleiades Watchtower, and why we cannot see the route up to there… perhaps.”

Subaru: “Can’t see the route?”

Subaru frowned at Julius, him having taken over speaking, but having reached a different conclusion. Julius sighed at Subaru, prefacing his speech with “Have you not realized?”.

Julius: “It is true that we have gotten this far in our journey without any noticeable flaws. I am also in agreement with the opinion that nothing has gone wrong thus far.”

Subaru: “Don’t beat around the bush. It’s a bad habit. Say it more directly.”

Julius: “Then I shall make it concise—Subaru, have you not noticed anything peculiar about the tower?”

Subaru: “…”

Julius asked him a question quietly, and Subaru gasped.

After that, looking at the Watchtower—a mighty majesty that could be seen on the other side of the ice wall, even in the night asserting its presence.

Even after Julius had pointed out something was wrong, Subaru did not notice any abnormality in the Watchtower. Nothing should have been different about the tower at which he had stared at the whole day, compared to how it had been upon first arriving at the Sand Dunes.

—Nothing should have been different, surely.

Subaru: “—?!”

Julius: “It seems that you have noticed. That tower clearly is not getting closer, nor is it getting any farther. We have aimed at that tower, walking towards it this whole time… but the gap has not closed even slightly.”

Just like Julius pointed out, Subaru finally understood that abnormality.

The faraway-looking Pleiades Watchtower remained there, faraway, without change, its size such that it felt like it could not be overlooked. There was no sort of change in its appearance.

Subaru: “No way…”

Julius: “Subaru, I understand your frustration. However, we must be careful…”

Subaru: “So, after all the trouble we’ve been through today, being smeared with sand, and the distance we walked were all a waste?! Conquering this place is such a pain in the ass—!”

Julius: “…Yeah?”

Subaru kicked the sand at his feet, raising his voice, and Julius was at a loss for words. Squatting on the ground in front of a bewildered Julius, Subaru scooped out sand with his palm with his lips pursed in a pout.

Subaru: “Hey hey hey hey, you for real? I’ve suddenly become tired after finding that out. Saying that those efforts were a waste seriously just sucks ass. Wow, this is the worst.”

Anastasia: “Yer mental fortitude’s weaker than I thought.”

Subaru: “What are you looking at?! Don’t you see me suffering this much?! I’m extremely depressed, and I feel extremely awful. You should’ve said something earlier, you know, once you’d noticed it!”

Julius: “I thought to not say anything until I was sure. I did not wish to discourage you.”

Subaru: “This is how you people…”

He threw away the sand he had scooped up, and stood up while clapping his hands. Glaring at Julius from below, Subaru acted indignant.

Subaru: “Can you stop speaking in insinuations? It’s not like I’ll get mad if you talk about something that came to your mind! Rather, we might find a clue from it. Do you guys have a «I’ll just keep this inside of me» sort of mentality? Has that really made the situation better at all? Not once have I thought that I should have kept quiet!”

Julius: “Ah, ahhh, sorry.”

Subaru: “Speak up immediately, even if it’s something trivial. This is something I told Ram as well, a disabled character in this conquest. Do I need to say it to everyone, man?”

With Subaru becoming dumbfounded by the incompleteness of the three Ts, “Told, Tell, Talk about”, Julius also made a reflective look. With a rare assertion of dominance over the Knight Impeccable, Subaru took that something, which he barely considered a good thing, among the many troublesome things, and turned to Anastasia.

Subaru: “So, I guess it’s safe to assume you know what’s up with this phenomenon.”

Anastasia: “I apologize that I didn’t explain anythin’… Or rather, I felt confident ‘bout my suspicions all day. It’d help if ya thought of it like that.”

Subaru: “Start from when you had those suspicions. That’s all. So, what’s going on?”

He stuck his tongue out at Anastasia, who had stated her justifications, and prompted her to continue. When he did, Anastasia preceded with “Please don’t get surprised when ya hear this”, and—

Anastasia: “This sandy plain between the Dunes and the Watchtower, the space’s prolly distorted.”

Subaru: “The space is distorted…?”

Anastasia: “In other words, contrary to what it seems, it ain’t connected to land. We continue walkin’ straight ahead, and no matter how long we walk, we’ll never get there.”

Anastasia nonchalantly clarified the shocking fact, and Subaru could not keep his jaw from dropping in shock. Anastasia, or rather Eridna, should have known it from the beginning, considering how it sounded like the matter had been relayed by Eridna.

Subaru: “So I guess that’s why Reinhard and all the other challengers couldn’t reach it.”

Anastasia: “The destination itself can be seen there. All ya need to do is close the distance… Especially if they’d been frantically attemptin’ to escape the Witchbeasts Den along this path, they’d prolly want to go further.”

Subaru: “…”

For some reason, he thought of the regret of those adventurers that had broken down halfway through their journey, their goal in plain sight, just in range.

This obstacle, which hampered those with the Watchtower as their goal, was an obstacle that even Reinhard had given up on conquering. The distortion of space and the end of the sand sea that actually could not be reached—perhaps that was how it worked.

Subaru: “How do you defeat that?”

Anastasia: “…Ain’t’cha kinda missin’ the point by askin’ ‘bout defeatin’ and not defeatin’ it? This is a natural trap created by the Miasma. There’s no kinda unnatural power goin’ on here.”

Subaru: “A natural trap?! This?!”

On rare occasions, nature would set up traps that seemed to have an intrinsic murderous nature to them.

The frequently-seen mirages at deserts, and the snow-covered roads that bordered the cliffs of areas with heavy snowfall. Thinking about it generally, humans could get killed by things like bottomless swamps or even being pulled in by rising tides.

However, as one would expect, the existence of this Watchtower was—

Subaru: “This is a trap made by nature? That’s an exaggeration, isn’t it?”

Julius: “Well, Pleiades Watchtower was originally built at a place where this phenomenon occurs. If you think about it that way, it is not unnatural. Also, it makes sense.”

Subaru: “It makes sense? In what way?”

Julius: “You cannot forget. Yes, the Sand Dunes lead to the Watchtower, but you must not the tower is not the only location beyond the Sand Dunes. Why do you think the Watchtower is there in the first place?”

Julius chided Subaru’s rude tone, and urged him to think. An answer came to mind immediately after that question. The purpose of the Watchtower they were targeting, was to serve as a seal for the Witch’s Shrine.

Likewise, these Sand Dunes’ unsurpassable trap would be highly effective in deterring the Witch Cult, with their aim to revive the Witch of Envy. He really could not blame anyone for that.

Subaru: “…Hk! Fine. Anyway, forget the details about why and how that tower was built there. I’m concerned about something else. It’s how we’re going to break through that distorted space.”

Anastasia: “Ya know we can’t remove its source, right? This is the land we’re on.”

Subaru: “Daijobu. I’ve understood the terrain and its peculiarities. Next, let’s look for a weakness. Since you volunteered to be a guide, naturally there’s a way out, right? A loophole.”

Anastasia: “I wouldn’t be talkin’ if there weren’t any… Puttin’ it as somethin' like a loophole is sketchy, though."

Anastasia smiled wryly at Subaru, who continued to pressure her, the former displaying a pompous sort of attitude. After that, she nodded at Subaru and Julius, who gazed at her, and spoke,

Anastasia: "During Sand Time, there should be a moment when the space connected to the Watchtower collapses. We'll go through there, and enter the real sand sea. That's the condition of breakin' through, ya see."

2

—The attack on the Sand Dunes that started on the following day had a series of consecutive, difficult situation.

The condition for the path to the Watchtower that Anastasia had disclosed must be shared by everyone on the crew. In other words, most of their traveling would be useless until Sand Time, and meanwhile, the expectation would be too much for them.

However, that anxiety was—

Anastasia: "Even when that key Sand Time comes, whether we can reach the opening'll depend on luck. Thinkin' 'bout it that way, stayin' still doesn't sound like a bad idea."

Meili: "Also, if we alwaaays~ stay at one place, the animals around it might remember our smell. I'll be fine, buuut~ if by any chance you lose me or something, then they'll chase you everywhere."

Those were Anastasia and Meili's opinions of how to survive without problems.

The former's opinion was somewhat unreliable, but the latter's opinion touched on the fact their life was on the line. It was not something he wanted to think about too much, but turning away from danger would be mere cowardice. Daring to be truly courageous, facing fears and nonetheless fighting, was something invaluable.

Subaru: "Right, Emilia-tan?"

Emilia: "—? Yeah, right."

Subaru: "Emilia-sama. You shouldn't take it so seriously. This is the time to make a face for a stupid occasion."

He talked with the face inside the dragon carriage periodically, but his motivation did not diminish, even after hearing that the previous day of travel had turned out to be a waste.

They had quite a lot of flexibility with things like the food and water procured at Mirula. He wanted to believe that there was nothing to be anxious about, since the Miasma's effect was being mitigated by Emilia and Beatrice's Spiritual Arts ability.

Subaru: "Actually, I'm getting stressed out from not knowing how many days we'll have to work at this."

???: "Subaru, spit out the sand in your mouth, don't swallow it, in fact. Even if it's not a lot, it's sand with Miasma, I suppose. If you deal with it improperly, you'll have a painful experience later, in fact."

Beatrice warned Subaru, who had become completely used to the feeling of tasting sand in his mouth and therefore less cautious. In Subaru's arms as was usual whenever they would ride dragons, Beatrice took out a water container from his pocket,

Beatrice: "Look, I'll rinse your mouth, I suppose. You can't bathe, so at least clean your mouth, in fact."

Subaru: "Hey hey… Come to think of it, you're clean even without taking a bath."

Beatrice: "That's because Betty's body is made up of Mana, I suppose. So Betty is always clean, in fact. Betty being pretty anywhere at any time is a given, I suppose."

Subaru: "Yeah, yeah, cute, cute."

Beatrice pouted at Subaru's apathetic response, but he patted her head, and he played with the drills that had been pushed into his robe. They were done in braids, today.

Subaru: “Oh, we’ve discovered a group of Witchbeasts again… They only seem like mere animals when they keep away from us like that.”

Meili: “If you move away from me and come close to them, people like onii-san will get bitten in a flash. It’s strange, but aaall the animals around here stare at onii-san.”

He brought Patrasche near the dragon carriage, while looking at the group of Witchbeasts that were gathering at a place off to the side of their path. Meili, while looking at Subaru with a curious expression, murmured “That’s weird”.

It seemed like the girl did not know about the Witch’s Lingering Scent that surrounded Subaru. Subaru thought that it was of the same nature as the Miasma, but it looked as if like he would never be able to understand its true essence. Anyhow, it appeared that the scent had not faded away from Subaru, nor had its property of luring Witchbeasts disappeared.

Subaru: “Oh, could that be a nostalgic Witchbeast? Ram, take a look!”

Ram: “It’s really discomforting how you talk about that, like it’s a part of Ram’s memories. They’re nothing but painful memories to Ram, as well as to you, Barusu.”

The pack of devildogs that were looking at them from afar were the same kind of disastrous Witchbeasts that had attacked the former Roswaal residence. Ram acted harsh towards Subaru, who got enthusiastic unintentionally.

Subaru: “Don’t say that. If I were to depict what they are to me, you, and Rem, I’d say that they built the bridges between us. If they weren’t there, maybe I wouldn’t even be here right now. When you think about that, we don’t have a bad relationship with the… Wait, it is bad! It’s shit!”

Ram: “Stop killing your own enthusiasm by yourself. Watching it elicits pity, listening to it elicits pity, and just thinking about it elicits misery.”

The stress caused by the pack of Witchbeasts a year prior had been revived. Sighing at an heated-up Subaru, Ram quickly shut the dragon carriage's window, thus concluding their conversation.

Unfortunately, it could not be helped. That incident from a year ago, inside of Ram, had been painted over into a state in which it had been resolved in cooperation with Subaru, with the absence of Rem's existence. In truth, it was unclear how would they be able to take on the Witchbeasts without Rem, but it seemed that the amnesia was something she did not feel uncomfortable with.

If the memory of Rem inside of Ram were revived, then the missing parts would be filled, and topics would mesh well too. He would think about it once the time came, although he felt like he'd only get insulted.

Subaru: "Wooow! Sand Time is dangerous! Sand Time is ridiculous! Sand Wind is dangerous!"

Emilia: "I-I made the ice as clear as I could, but if it's no good, then tell me, okay?"

Subaru: "It's already pretty bad! The Almighty Ice Theory's collapsing!"

The crucial Sand Time had arrived. They rushed into the Sand Wind, piercing it, looking for the distortion of space that would lead them to the tower, but they were being struck by the sand's unimaginably overwhelming fury.

What had been a particularly bad miscalculation, was that the ice wall had been utterly defeated, despite having supported Subaru and the team's venture with an imposing performance thus far.

Subaru: "It's an ice wall, and yet the absurd sand is sticking onto it, so I can't see what's in front of me at all! Or rather, receiving such a strong wind with this wide area of ice is beyond suicidal!"

Emilia: "Eh?! What?! Subaru, did you say something?! I can't hear you at all!"

Subaru: "The wind is too strong, and this is beyond suicidal!"

Emilia: “Eh?! You want to die?! No, you can’t! Don’t lose courage!”

Subaru: “Tell me about… Guwaaaah!! Sand violently went into my eyeeee!”

Emilia: “Eh?! Did you say something?! Say it again! Subaru? Subaru—!”

Subaru: “I’ll say it again, such a spartan act is… Guwaaaaah!!”

Emilia: “Subaru—?!”

The Sand Wind was already a gale, was now already close to being a sandstorm.

Although Subaru and the others were serious challengers, their interaction sounded more like a comedy act.

Even having a thin plate of ice with the sole purpose of protecting themselves against the thin sand blowing against them from head-on was nothing but suicidal. In fact, it would have been better to cover their entire body in cloth and make themselves small, to mitigate the wind striking them.

However, the bottleneck in that strategy was—

Subaru: “Keep going! Hang in there, Gian! We can only rely on your horsepower!”

Gian: “…”

The ground dragon took the the Sand Wind head-on as it charged it down. They had already spent a few days conquering the dunes, and the bond that had been forged between them was expressed in the name it was being called.

To put it briefly, the ground dragon of the Gyras species pulling the dragon carriage was named Gian. Its tenacity held the key to break through the Sand Wind. After all, the dragon carriage the girls were on did not have any way to diminish its size against the wind.

As a result, there was no other choice for Gian but to pull on the dragon carriage with all its strength towards the wind.

Julius: “Doing nothing but forcing ground dragons does not suit my style… But we depend on you now.”

Meili: “Heeey, hang in theeere! I don’t wanna go back to that unending sandy plain again!”

Julius cheered on Gian, him holding onto the bridle, as well as Meili, who sat next to him.

Precisely because they were the ones viewing its tenacity closer than anyone else, they could believe in that underlying strength, sending words its way.

???: “…”

Emilia and the others could not even open the small window in the wind, but that they were praying with worry inside the dragon carriage was a sure bet.

As one countermeasure for the sand, Emilia had been asked to tamper with the dragon carriage with ice. Even though a sand-protective board of ice had been stuck onto the front, it could not handle the fierce onslaught of the wind.

Thus, Subaru brought out his last resort, a form somewhere in-between a wing formation capable of directing the wind, and a sharp shape—A spear that would pierce fiercely into the Sand Wind had been fashioned.

Subaru: “It’s an application of a mini four-wheel drive. Reducing its weight to make it light would be fatal, so I couldn’t do that, but I did what I could. Alright, go, Gungnir—Penetrate!”

Gian: “—MM!”

Gian stepped forward with fierce footsteps in response to Subaru’s shout. The dragon carriage that had become a spear bit and tore through the wind closing in on them with a frontal assault, escaping, moving forward, and forward.

Before long, the dragon carriage crowned with the name of the spear of a God burrowed into the scar of the bitten and torn wind, gouged out the sand's tyranny, and then it breaks through—

Subaru: "…"

The moment they escaped the Sand Wind, what swept over Subaru was extremely sharp silence.

The wind that had made such an intense amount of noise close to their ears, the sand that struck them as if to shave their whole bodies, and the Miasma that excited activity from the Witchbeasts; all vanished as if it were all an illusion.

Subaru: "…"

The Sand Time had certainly had an abrupt ending, but it was even more resonating. The vigor of the wind intermingled with sand gradually weakened, and before long, it slowly dissipated like being pulled in by waves, and nothing but the peculiar smell of the sand was left.

However, only at this instance did that occur. In other words, that was proof that the ending of this Sand Time was a special case.

Subaru: "…"

Feeling thirst in his mouth, Subaru gyrated. Upon doing so, he laid his eyes on Julius and the others, who, much like Subaru himself, were dumbfounded on having escaped the Sand Wind. Of course, them being there meant that Gian and the dragon carriage were likewise.

Subaru: "—Julius."

Julius: "Ahh."

Subaru called out to him, and Julius, all tensed up, gave him an acknowledging gesture with his chin. After that and before any other thoughts, they both raised their hands at each other, clenching their fists, and displayed their mutual admiration for breaking through Sand Time.

To Julius's side, Meili was seen wiping the sand off her body, then thanking Gian. This journey's Most Valuable Player was definitely Gian.

They had to show their gratitude to their hearts' content, their appreciation, and reward it as much as possible—but,

Subaru: "Leave that for later! We broke through! We did it! We d—"

Beatrice: "What the! You're always, always being so loud right in my ears, I suppose—Kh!!"

Amidst Subaru's display of joy, his chin got pushed up by the bottom of Beatrice's palm coming up from below.

The excellent blow caused Subaru's head to spin. Toppling over from Patrasche like that, Subaru fell defenselessly onto the sand. Subaru's head was buried in sand, a large amount of sand entering his mouth, and so, getting up immediately, he lashed out at Beatrice.

Subaru: "Why'd you do that to me out of the blue?! What's up with you, people were trying to be joyful! You scared me and made me swallow a bunch of sand!"

Beatrice: "Getting excited by yourself even while holding onto Betty is annoying, in fact! I don't understand things like downshifts, off-roads, gene shifts, burning souls and all that, I suppose! My ears were on fire this whole time, in fact!"

Beatrice turned to Subaru, and she complained to him vehemently while mounted on Patrasche.

Subaru had various things to say about it, but he certainly could not deny the feeling that he had gotten a bit excited and shouted a bunch of random terms. What the hell was a Gungnir?

Subaru: "Ahem… A-Anyways, we broke through the Sand Time safely. First, let's celebrate that. Come on, banzai!"

Beatrice: "…Banzai, I suppose."

Putting aside Beatrice's sulky attitude, they certainly had broken through the sand obstacle.

Giving a few pats to Patrasche's neck, as she had done her best, he showed his gratitude for the braveness of the beloved dragon that did not show tiredness on her gallant face.

After that, Subaru rushed up to the dragon carriage, and to share his delight—

Meili: "—Onii-san."

Subaru: "Ah? What's wrong? You can be a little happier too…"

Meili: "Shut up."

Meili stopped Subaru, him trotting, her sharp words flying towards him as she turned around and looked his way.

What was included in them, was a clear warning about danger.

—Subaru was not enough of a fool to mistake what that meant.

Subaru: "…"

In response to Subaru's silence, Meili nodded while putting a finger on her mouth, and she slowly, slowly, pointed towards the front with her free hand.

Subaru, Julius, and Beatrice were lured by that movement, and gazed on ahead.

Beyond the Sand Wind they faced during Sand Time, the distorted sand sea up to the Watchtower had been cleared. Thus, the Watchtower's silhouette, looming before them, was evidently clearer and larger in comparison to how it had been up until now.

It was possible to think that now there was a definite distance until their goal. However—

Subaru: "…What's that?"

Colorful flower beds were spread in front of Subaru and the others, covering the sandy soil that led to the Watchtower.

Chapter 10:
As if a Flash

—Jumbled together with the vast land of sand dunes, was a flower meadow with a variety of colors.

It was nighttime, and mysteriously, the light of the stars in the sky of the sand dunes was not visible.

The reason why the look of the sky could not be perceived despite there being no gathering of clouds was that the miasma enshrouding the space above ground covered this vast sea of sand, was the explanation given beforehand.

It was not clear to Subaru, whether the one to give that explanation had been Beatrice, or Emilia or Julius.

But, now, what was clear was, rather than the imperceivable look of the sky, the alarm bell of caution directed from the ground, the ominous bloom of the flower meadow undefeated in front of the darkness of the night.

The vivid, rather venomous flowers were, excessively mismatched in the sea of sand.

Subaru: “The sand dunes’, flower meadow…”

Sensing the unsettling feeling while voicing it as well as he pronounced that word, there, Subaru had already been aware.

Emerging at the back of his mind, was the information gathered in the bar of Mirula. The bartender there, who had lost one of his legs, had spoken of the flower meadows that appear in the sand dunes.

If flower meadows are spotted in the sand dunes, run away at full speed, is what he had said.

—Because those are the turfs, of the ferocious, ugly witchbeasts, courtesan bears.

Subaru: “But, even if you say run away at full speed…”

Pointing out the weakness in those words, the muttering Subaru, while gazing ahead, stepped back.

The flower meadow was the territory of a witchbeast, that information was beneficial. There was also the mention of immediately running from the, henceforth, ferocious and atrocious witchbeast. But, if there was a problem, it was its scale.

"…"

Keeping their silence, Subaru and the others, who were lined up in a row, held their breaths. In front of the row, having surmounted the menace of Sand Time, broken through the distortion of space, what had appeared was the continuous desert leading to the watchtower—those lines of sight, were now filled with the stretching flower meadow.

It was, quite literally, dense enough for there to not be a single spot to step on.

Springing forth all of a sudden in the desert, was the paradise of the flower meadow. There were limits even when it came to shadiness.

It was something that would they would have avoided even without the warning of the bar's bartender.

That is precisely why, if flying through the sky was an option, then they would have had chosen that and avoided this without any hesitation whatsoever.

Subaru: "Avoiding it, is impossible, you know."

Murmuring it such that there was no difference between it and a hoarse sigh, Subaru aimed his voice towards Meili.

Under the present conditions, regarding their countermeasures against witchbeasts, relying on Meili was of an unexpected benefit. What she judged controlled their path, but the complexion of her face, glaring at the flower meadow, was quite pale.

With the formation of cold sweat, blood vanished from her light-complexioned skin. Without the need of any words, she understood the negativity of the emergency, as if having picked it up with her own hands.

"…"

Slowly, Patrasche, with her large build, drew closer with unbelievable silence. On her back was Beatrice, seeing the instruction in her eyes saying "Jump on, in fact", Subaru placed his foot on the saddle, and while doing so, silenced all sound and once again positioned himself on top of the dragon.

Whether it was for continuing ahead, or for returning back, it would not be possible for Subaru's legs, who would get swallowed by the sand.

Even if their judgements were made through the reins, they would have to rely upon the well walking legs of Patrasche for fast movement.

Meili: "…For now, it seems everyone is sleepi~ng."

"…"

Holding his breath, how much time had it been since Meili's judgement had been awaited. As if ten seconds had passed, or to him it felt like it'd been nearly an hour,, Meili spilled that out, as if whispering.

Receiving that, Subaru, with energy draining from his shoulders, brought Patrasche closer to the dragon carriage.

Subaru: "That flower meadow is the turf of the Courtesan Bear… that would be correct, right?"

Julius: "In addition to the received prior information, for now that doesn't seem to be wrong. But… it is just that, the scale is larger than what even I had thought."

Beatrice: "That difference in scale, is addition of something as cute as it being twice or thrice, I suppose."

Letting out a single sigh, Subaru and the rest, facing each other, exchanged their thoughts.

Julius and Beatrice too, at the great reception surpassing their expectations, were in a state of having lost their voices. The ones inside the dragon carriage, Emilia and the rest, their voices of delight after having broken through Sand Time too, had come to a halt, as they were showing their faces through the small window, wondering what had occurred.

Emilia: “Subaru, did something happen? The sound of the sand breeze can’t be heard anymore…”

Subaru: “We did a splendid job clearing Sand Time. And, just when I thought we had cleared the first barrier, we’re now standing, expecting the next, second barrier immediately. As you can see.”

Emilia: “As you can see you say… Ah.”

Seeing the clearly visible flower meadow at a single glance through the small window, Emilia’s throat froze in shock. She had also heard what the bar’s bartender had said. Of course, the information she recollected must also have been the same.

Emilia repeatedly blinked her eyes, and beside her, Anastasia and Ram also showed their faces. The two also gazed at the flower meadow, and grimaced at the cruelty of the trials to reach the tower.

Subaru: “Even after passing through the sand wind and Sand Time, the obstacle this time are the flower meadows, huh. Regarding the territory of these courtesan bears, does Anastasia happen to know something?”

Anastasia: “Guidin’ is my business, expectin’ anythin’ more than that’d be a problem. That bein’ said, this seriously is a bit of a problem. What should be done.”

Holding expectations from the opinion of the unexpressed Eridna, she, while shrugging her shoulders, did not seem to possess a plan to overcome the obstacle. Subaru let out a long breath from his nose, and looked at Meili.

Subaru: “Meili, with your physical constitution, you can draw in the witchbeasts, right? courtesan bears too, can’t you pull them out from the flower meadow?"

Meili: "…That's difficu~lt. If it's ten, twenty, or even if it's hundred, I ca~n, but a number more than that and there'll be some children to whom my instructions won't rea~ch."

Subaru: "There's a limit to the number, huh."

Meili: "There's also a limit on the quality~. Even I, can't tell arou~nd the White Whale or the Great Rabbit. The Courtesan Bear is at that point, it's compatibility with me is ba~d. Very different from the Shadow Lion."

Subaru: "Shadow Lion… Ah, that large one who showed up at the mansion, right."

Putting a limit to their conversation about old memories, Subaru considered Meili's opinion and glared at the flower meadow.

Countless, a vast paradise of flowers—just as expected, even the estimate of the number of witchbeasts could not be determined. But, it was clear that it was easily more than a hundred, which was Meili's limit.

Julius: "In the present situation, it could be said that the choices we have are to either Continue or Return."

Facing Subaru, who had drowned in silence, the driver Julius said that lifting two of his fingers, and tilting his neck.

Seeing Julius' fingers, Subaru inhaled.

Subaru: "The choice to return wasn't there from the beginning, you know. It'll be a waste after clearing Sand Time but, with that, nothing of the problem will get solved. Going ahead is meaningless too."

Julius: "If we get under a different Sand Time, or if we take a different path entirely we may able to challenge the watchtower. Putting a halt to consideration and plugging up its path, isn't that simply drawing a hasty conclusion?"

The Sand Time that occurred thrice in the day, amongst them lay the correct answer, and that was Julius' insistence. What Subaru and the others had escaped out from was the Sand Time of late night. Others were the Sand Time of morning and afternoon but, was it possible that the place that would be reached through would differ as different Sand Times were chosen.

No, gesturing that, Subaru shook his head.

Subaru: "For argument's sake, even if a different path was to be taken, I don't think it can possibly guarantee the safety of the path all the way to the watchtower. Here are the flower meadows but, there's the possibility of there being a different obstacle someplace else. Probably, no enjoyable path has been arranged at all."

Julius: "…Certainly. Slightly, excessive hopeful observation, huh."

Subaru: "On top of that, possibly, the situation of Meili being there and the turf of the courtesan bears. This one is actually the best path, that's also a possibility, you know?"

Julius: "This time, excessive pessimism, huh. As always, it is your forte to denounce and uplift, isn't it."

Subaru: "I don't remember ever aiming for that. All right then, Meili. What about you?"

Harshly telling Julius, who rounded his eyes at how unfavorable the situation was, Subaru turned towards Meili.

Silent, gazing intently at the flower meadow, Meili, at Subaru's words, said "Hm…" with her gaze cast downwards.

Meili: "The number is painful, but if you tell me to do it then I'll try doing i~t. It's not like I have to listen to everything which all of the animal-san's have to sa~y."

Subaru: "You don't need to for everything, you say…?"

Meili: "For passing through the flower meadow, it would be fine if just the minimum number of courtesan bears are quietly gotten rid o~f. If a path is opened up, for the rest I'll have them obediently sleep. If they're not attacked then it can be somehow managed with tha~t."

As if gaining certainty in her thoughts while answering the doubt, strength returned to Meili's voice.

At the very least, she had a stance of respecting Subaru's chance of Continuing. That was something to be genuinely grateful for. Subaru nodded to Meili, and then looked at everyone's faces.

Subaru: "I think we should continue. Regardless of what's chosen, there can be no return without jumping into the risk. It's about there being some solution to the problem rather than just running away from it."

Ram: "Even though you rely on others to attain your own objectives, isn't that quite something to declare with that mouth."

Ram fired bitter words at Subaru, who'd suggested to proceed.

Receiving her "typical" words, Subaru let out an "Oh" and raised his thumb.

Subaru: "Ultimately, it's no mistake that we have to rely on Meili. By any chance, if it ends up being that we have to attack the witchbeasts, then we'll have to rely on Emilia-tan or Julius, or Beako. How wicked."

"…"

Subaru: "Oh, also, Patrasche too. My bad, my bad."

He caressed his beloved dragon's head, who'd raised her neck up as if discontent at having her name absent as one of the members he could rely on.

Against that pathetic declaration of Subaru's, Ram, with a frankly astonished expression, shrugged her shoulders.

Ram: "Having self-awareness will be of no help. At best, in that unlikely scenario, fulfill the role of a decoy."

Subaru: “Hearing that is also pretty nostalgic. You may not remember it though.”

“…”

At the words somewhat pertaining to the past, Ram made an anxious face.

Those were words like those in the forest of the witchbeasts, or on the morning of the day they headed out to the capital for the Royal Selection, which he had been slapped with by Ram. With Rem’s existence disappearing from her memories, and accompanying memories altered, now, where must have the back and forth of that day vanished off to.

Subaru: “Let’s go, to take it back. I don’t want to backtrack for even a second, anymore.”

Emilia: “—Hm, I guess that’s so. I also think it’s just as Subaru says.”

At Subaru’s decision, who hardened his fist, consented Emilia with a gallant expression.

She touched the pendant on her neck, and stole the feelings of the Spirit sleeping within the Great Magic Stone into her fingers. And, her amethyst eyes earnestly focused on the flower meadow.

Emilia: “Beyond this flower meadow, is the key to precious memories. Let’s go without stopping. For sure, I will make sure to protect everyone.”

Anastasia: “That, isn’t it a bit too uncool coming from a girl?”

At Emilia’s majestic declaration, Anastasia said that as she looked towards Subaru.

Keep quiet, he wanted to return that as response but, the truth is, if it turns out just as how Emilia says, he thought that that would be the best, as there would be nothing to worry about left.

The distance till the Pleiades Watchtower, gauged with his eyes, had roughly decreased several kilometers.

Before crossing through Sand Time, when they had recklessly proceeded through the Augria Sand Dunes, the supposedly visible distance to the watchtower, seemingly of ten kilometers, had not reduced by even a single one.

Compared to that, this reduction of distance was overwhelming, and it could be said that their arrival was right before their eyes.

Subaru: “But anything and everything, comes after escaping away from this nest of the courtesan bears.”

Completely filling their field of vision, the flower meadow, on top of the sea of sand enshrined majesty, strongly abhorrent.

The plants having their roots embedded into the ground, such natural ecology was nowhere here. The slightly floating stems or roots were, not growing from the ground, but from, none other than, the bodies of those repulsive brutes.

“…”

Around when they would be escaping the territory of the courtesan bears, what Meili had instructed to Subaru and the others was simple—to be as silent as possible.

According to her remarks, the courtesan bears were currently lying dormant. They would not thoughtlessly wake them up, but in exchange for that, it seems they would not be able to get an idea of the ferocity of the witchbeasts getting up after continuing to lay down.

Meili: “The bad animal-san’s being active is the most brutal thi~ng. The exterminated White Whale, when appearing immediately after the fog used to be the most enraged and seemed to be most troublesome too~.”

That was the digression Meili spoke of regarding the White Whale.

Thinking about it in accordance with that exposition of hers, the exact moment when Subaru and the rest had encountered the White Whale at the Lifaus Highway. In other words, immediately afterwards it had woken up, it had been the worst timing.

Memories of suffering resuscitated, he painted his own praise for himself for having that desire of his fulfilled.

Regardless of that—

Meili: “Being angry when woken up goes for everyone, humans, animals, and bad animal-san’s. That’s why~, stay co~mpletely quiet. If you can do just that, I’ll somehow manage from my side.”

Abiding by the remarks of Meili, who possessed such strong will, thus commenced the march of the row who’d clamped down their breathing.

Their battle formation was a substitute for the occasion of capturing the sand dunes, the style of the dragon carriage proceeding further. Sitting as the driver, conveying the intents of the courtesan bears was Meili, and in accordance with those aims Julius drove the dragon carriage further. Patrasche, on which Subaru had a good grip on, attached and detached to the rear of that dragon carriage and raced in a single line.

“…”

Feeling himself bend, Subaru, holding his breath, clutched onto Beatrice’s petite body. Her body temperature could be felt, it seemed that she had stiffened her body and was feeling nervous.

On the side of the dragon carriage, upon the roof of the dragon carriage was present a figure. A figure who need not be suspected, for the familiar silhouette was that of Emilia.

“…”

Noticing Subaru’s gaze, Emilia aimed her amethyst eyes towards him and raised her hand.

The reason why Emilia was lying in ambush like that upon the roof, was so that she could move instantly in case an issue of some sort rose. Though Subaru would have liked her to quietly stay within the dragon carriage, but with the support of Julius' Spirit Arts gone, the only ally capable of long range attacks was Emilia. Though it wasn't as if Beatrice could not do it if she pushed herself, but with a single large blow, Subaru would exhaust his gas.

It was a part of Subaru's inferiority complex that, in terms of strength, he had to depend upon others, for protecting him as well, if he was present.

If that wasn't so, if he did not have to do that, perhaps even Rem would—.

The weakness of thinking in that direction, was always present within Subaru.

Subaru: "—~hk."

"…"

With the rise of such uncompromising emotions beyond his control, the back of Beatrice's head pushed up his jaw. At Subaru's surprise, Beatrice snorted her nose.

Focus on what is in front of you right now, is what she must have had meant. Looking overhead once again, Emilia, too, had pointed her finger towards Subaru, and he understood that she was urging for similar caution.

"…"

Unable to express either compromise or understanding, he exchanged a deep sigh.

The truth was that he wanted to slap his cheek and alter his emotions, but that could put his life at risk, an action that could prove to be deadly.

And, as Subaru's usual detour of thoughts gave rise to his resolution, the party's forefront arrived at the flower meadow practically at the same time.

Meili: “Move.”

At once, Gyan halted pulling the dragon carriage, and Meili’s faint voice slipped into the creaking sound of the wheels and was thrown towards the flower meadow.

At first, there being no response to Meili’s call, Subaru gritted his molars.

Meili: “Move.”

Once again, Meili called out the order.

Even still, indeed, no change was born in the flower meadow. In the vexing duration, Subaru’s stomach lining started to grumble with something similar to itchiness.

And—

“…”

With that distortion, the ground, as if truly being stripped off, the flower meadow “arose”.

“…”

Without thinking, looking straight at the form of the witchbeast, Subaru’s throat seized up.

The witchbeast called the Courtesan Bear, befitting of its name, possessed a figure like that of a bear.

The height of the Courtesan Bear, was perhaps around two meters to three meters. Short legs, in exchange for that, arms long enough to drag on the ground. Its arms visibly concealed under black fur, and claw-like nails growing at the ends, is what he understood.

From the rear to the armpits of that body, the vivid flowers swaying was the sort of impression it projected but, observing that witchbeast from close proximity, one’s eyes tended to turn towards the front rather than the rear of that body.

Though its physique was concealed by black fur, creeping about that body was not body hair. Closely packed, wrapping the body were the finely jumbled together roots of the flowers. They appeared as if blood vessels that were floating on the skin, the minute roots were covering the body of the witchbeast.

Subaru: "—~hk."

On the body covered with closely packed roots, the parts which the roots did not reach were abnormally parched, and both the flesh and skin had withered. Its facial features, its cranium had reached the limit of dehydration to the point where it was visibly obvious, and its circular protuberant eyeballs were bloodshot, wielding hatred for everything in this world.

That seemed to be, as if it was slurping the life of the flowers whose roots it had pasted upon its own body.

The courtesan bears could not co-exist with the flowers. Clearly, they had taken away the lives of the flowers.

"…"

The witchbeast, which gave off an unbearable feeling of revulsion by merely looking at it, followed Meili's words with sluggish movement.

Slowly pulling out its body from the ground, as the roots got uprooted from the desert from which nothing could be absorbed, a thousand sounds of snapping limitlessly chained.

For opening up space just so that the dragon carriage could pass, the moving courtesan bears reached a hundred in count. And as if knowing no end, their numbers continued to increase.

Julius: "Hugh."

Faintly, Julius' sigh was audible, as the dragon carriage resumed proceeding.

Julius, in that state, with his body hair standing up due to the spectacle in front of his sight, must have failed to put up with it.

Attached to the rear of the dragon carriage, Subaru and the others as well entered the path bloomed open by the courtesan bears.

Subaru: "…Ugh."

At exactly that instant, when Subaru's sense of smell crossed the threshold of the courtesan bears' turf, a violent aroma of flowers could be felt.

It seemed to be different from the stench of the time of confronting the Sand Earthworm, with respective difference in quality from that, the sweet scent jumbled together in the situation did not mean that the sense of violence had changed.

Their nostrils were invaded, their intracerebral gears simply acquired the hallucination of the sweet scent.

"…"

Developing serious dizziness, the repulsive stench awakened a headache.

Something so exasperating, that he would not mind the sand gusts at all compared to this. This toxic aroma coiling up within his whole body must be driven away, is what he thought with utter seriousness.

Such wishes of Subaru were fruitless, and in the absence of any flow of wind, the party proceeded towards the interior of the interior of the flower meadow.

Subaru: "—~hk."

As if having noticed something, Beatrice pulled Subaru's sleeve. Looking at her wondering what had come up, she was incessantly concerned regarding something behind them.

Turning around at that gesture whilst keeping that repulsive premonition in mind, the meaning of Beatrice's reaction could be understood.

The space in the flowers that opened up in accordance with Meili's instructions, looking at the passage of the dragon carriage and Patrasche, from the close proximity to that till the very end, the scenery was steadily returning to how it originally was.

Meili's orders came true, and the dragon carriage being able to pass at this particular point in time according to the instructions had been achieved. Returning to their original positions, and entering into the state of lying dormant, could that be their plans.

Even if they did not intend to return, they were still unable to stop mid-way. Of course, taking a break in the midst of this nest of these witchbeasts, such jokes needed to be refrained from as well.

Subaru: "—?"

The moment immediately after he'd thought that, the dragon carriage's advance came to a pause.

Looking at the front wondering what had happened, the reason behind the dragon carriage's halt was explicit. A lone Courtesan Bear, in front of the dragon carriage, got up and stood still, and turned those hollow eyes towards the two drivers.

"…"

With that one alone making suspicious movements, the movements of the courtesan bears in the vicinity too, started to change. The feet of the courtesan bears, who had, till now, stolidly and obediently made way, stopped, and as if tracing the actions of the one staring at the dragon carriage, their gazes accumulated on the dragon carriage.

—This is bad, was the intuitive realization Subaru had.

Looking back, they had already covered several hundreds of meters since entering the flower meadow. With the pathway behind plugged up, it was clear that they had been surrounded by the courtesan bears from all directions. Their numbers were in the hundreds, or possibly even in the thousands. A violent difference in numbers.

"…"

Thinking that far, his gaze entwined with that of Emilia’s, who was on top of the roof.

Emilia was looking down onto the Courtesan Bear in front, and was puzzled over what kind of judgement she should deal it. If the outbreak of a fight, just as till now, could be avoided, then clearing the frontward of the dragon carriage with Emilia’s magic, and running through was the optimal way.

However, she did not want to mistake the timing and rush things too fast.

Meili: “Shh”

”□□□”

And in front of Subaru and the rest who were puzzled regarding their judgement, the one with utmost composure was Meili.

Putting a finger on her lips, she calmed the indecisive Subaru and the others beforehand. Following afterwards, she pointed the finger she had on her lips towards the front, and scowled at the Courtesan Bear looking at her.

Meili: “Tch tch tch.”

A finger pointing outwards, and a sound, as if flicking her tongue, leaked out of Meili’s lips.

That was a sigh, like what humans made to soothe kittens. If the subject truly was a kitten then it would give a pleasant impression as well, but with the fiendish witchbeast as the subject, there was no mitigation whatsoever.

However, all of Meili’s fingers jolted at her tongue’s sound, and gradually, the Courtesan Bear’s line of sight shifted, from the two drivers, to Meili alone, and then moved to Meili’s fingers.

Meili: “Tch tch tch… tch~.”

At the same pace, obtaining certainty that the Courtesan Bear’s focus was on the finger, Meili slowly swung her hand, which had her fingers pointed towards the right of the dragon carriage. Lured to the movement of that arm, the Courtesan Bear, which had brought the dragon carriage to a standstill, turned its face towards that and moved, taking a single step in that direction.

Subaru: “—Ah.”

At the Courtesan Bear’s conduct, of distancing itself away from the dragon carriage, a reflexive sigh of relief leaked out of Subaru’s throat.

Emilia or Beatrice too, who had stiffened their bodies up, too, loosened their shoulders in relief. When the one who had caused a standstill moved, the other courtesan bears too, tried to return to their own movements of distancing themselves.

At the same pace, the march through the flower meadow resumed—was how it was supposed to be.

“—~hk!!”

At that moment, the thread of tension snapped, and nobody could be condemned for raising their voice.

Suddenly, in the situation of enduring under compulsion of utmost limits of the stalemate, the thing known as the heart could not stand strong. That goes for humans, and for Ground Dragons as well.

Showered upon with the pressure of losing to the Courtesan Bear, Gyan, gave out a short growl, and stamped its feet on the ground, as if enraged.

Subaru: “Oh sh—~hk.”

At Gyan’s roar, which abruptly cut off the silence, the courtesan bears, which were in a state of lying dormant, reacted altogether at once. The one attempting to distance itself away from the dragon carriage turned back, and that reaction infected the environs as well—the witchbeasts rose, and leapt upon the dragon carriage with their bare fangs.

Immediately before—

Emilia: “—El Huma!!”

The mana materialized rapidly, and the spearhead of the formed ice lance penetrated through the witchbeast’s cranium.

The sharp vanguard of ice pierced through its large mouth, infringing upon its oral cavity and broke through its nape. Its brain churned, the Courtesan Bear, without raising its voice, collapsed backwards as it faced annihilation. Caught up in that vigor, several courtesan bears, without pause, toppled sideways.

Subaru: “Run—!!”

Shouted Subaru, instantaneously after witnessing the attack by Emilia, who was on top of the dragon carriage.

Concording to that call, Julius operated the reins and the dragon carriage started running fiercely at once. Of course, Patrasche, too, followed that, jumping away from the side of the witchbeasts standing stock still, and broke off in a savage sprint.

“—~hk!”

Subaru: “They’recoming-they’recoming-they’re-comingthey’re-coming-they’recoming-they’recoming-they’recoming—ing!!”

Delayed by a single beat, the cutthroat, fierce voice tore apart the night of the Augria Sand Dunes.

The vast flower meadow was shredded apart at once, with fangs and unsightly appearances naked, the flock sloth of courtesan bears advanced on, aiming for the dragon carriage fiercely plunging its way through.

Beatrice: “Subaru! Firmly grip on or you will get thrown off, in fact!”

The hallucination bathing in strength, was the pressure of the thirst for blood and appetite of the innumerable courtesan bears.

With thick arms endowed with claws turned overhead, their merciless attack struck Subaru as well, who was riding the dragon. A direct hit and his body would get torn off easily, with strength that could assuredly force his internal organs to protrude outwards.

However, just when it was on the brink of striking, a bluish-white glimmer cut in between, and pierced through the witchbeasts.

Emilia: “Hiy! Yah! Alright ~hk! You… these, Huma~!”

As always, with the Mana forming a whirlpool and her voice coming from her heart, giving the impression that the bluish-white light was performing a boisterous dance in the dark sky, that was the transformation of countless sharp spearheads pointing above the ground into blades of ice.

That was, immediately after the stagnation of a single moment, firing as if having acquired the propulsive force, tearing the craniums, the arms, the torsos, the legs of the courtesan bears swarming upon the dragon carriage into shreds, giving rise to spouts of blood.

Subaru: “O~o~o~o~h! As expected of Emilia-tan! I’ve fallen for you again!!”

Emilia: “This is not the time for saying such things, is it! Run!”

Subaru: “Yes!”

Having his life saved by Emilia’s follow-up, Subaru further accelerated Patrasche.

And with the sudden exchange, Emilia was coping with the fight with such composure that it was surprising. In retrospect, even if Emilia had shirked from fighting, it was not as if fighting intimidated her. The tendency to avoid fighting within her was, the indecision that had been erased once that battle had broken out.

Ram: “Barusu, run till you die. If you do not wish to die!”

Subaru: “Yeah, of course—eh, Ram?!”

The tough fight being put up by Emilia, the bluish-white light mowed down the frontward of the dragon carriage altogether, and the group of courtesan bears, who had taken a roundabout path, were frozen all at once.

Within Gyan’s rush and breaking through the ice sculpture, sitting on the driver’s seat gripping to the reins, was suddenly now Ram, having moved from the passenger compartment. At Ram, who was skillfully handling the reins, driving the earth dragon which was in an agitated state, Subaru peeled open his eyes and let his gaze wander around.

Subaru: “What about Julius?!”

Ram: “Even if there are no means for a long range attack, it seemed it would be unhelpful if he were to be the driver. That’s why.”

At a glance, Ram looked towards the rear at Subaru’s call. Lured to that line of sight and looking backwards, Subaru thoughtlessly felt dumbfounded.

Biting the sand, beside the dragon carriage with its wheels roaring, clinging onto one of those ornaments, waving about the grasped knight sword, was the form of Julius, clearing away the approaching witchbeasts.

Julius: “Burdening Emilia-sama with responsibilities and such, cannot be done either, you see.”

Subaru: “Was that directed at me!”

Julius: “That would be—”

”□□□”

Putting a halt to his words there, Julius had his knight sword meet with the claws of the approaching witchbeasts. The decapitating slash weaved through the gap of those claws, and deeply gorged into the arms of the courtesan bears. At the same pace, the dancing tip of the sword pierced through the throats of the witchbeasts, who let out screams, and as if a flash, it granted death by destroying their brainstem.

That dance, with minimal destruction, was truly debonair.

Julius: “Wrong.”

Successively crushing the witchbeasts, Julius voiced what remained of his reply to Subaru while dusting away his sword. Subaru made a bitter face at that gesture, tasting reassurance and a sense of defeat.

Simply, having put Emilia in charge of the long range, clearing away the close range was down to Julius. If that structure were to continue, the concern regarding the dragon carriage could be saved for later.

Rather, the problem was, instead of other affairs, but in this course.

Subaru: “Beako, can you go for it?”

Beatrice: “Subaru too, be careful that you don’t run out of gas, I, suppose—!”

Above Patrasche, raising his body, Subaru held the reins with one hand, and the armed Beatrice with the other, and made her small body stand on top of the dragon.

And steadily clasping each other’s hands, something throbbed in the interior of Subaru’s guts. That something, as if seeming sediment, wielded heat, and slowly streamed from Subaru’s body into Beatrice’s.

Beatrice: “Minya!”

The crystals of violet materialized with the chant, and aimed for the witchbeasts blocking the path ahead of the Ground Dragon’s nose. Accurate aiming, momentary advancement, the outcome visible immediately afterwards.

Raising a sound as that of shattering glass, the magical attack directly struck the witchbeasts, and the crystals fragmented. However, the following moment, the bodies of the witchbeasts fragmented similarly as well.

Subaru: “Alright, good going, Beako!”

Beatrice: “But, reckless firing cannot be done, in fact! Cautiously saving… Minya!”

Subaru: “What about the cautiously saving?!”

Beatrice’s battle strength, depended upon the mana left within Subaru.

In order to oppose the overwhelmingly advancing threat, even Beatrice was unable to compromise much. Tasting the seeming sense of loss, as if his soul was being curtailed with every single attack of magic, Subaru, talkative and composed, abated Beatrice’s nervousness.

Of course, such consideration was clearly visible to Beatrice.

Meili: “A~h, enough enough! Why did it turn out like thi~s! This, could have been taken awa~y!”

And, the one who had been keeping their silence till now, the final ordnance stood up and trod.

A driver, having been sat beside Ram, Meili, with her eyes tearing up, surveyed the swarm of courtesan bears crowding around their surroundings while making a red face. And, she pointed a finger towards the witchbeasts who would not obey her.

Meili: “I’ll give a scolding to the bad, bad animal-san’s! Come, Sand Earthworm!”

Subaru: “—No way?!”

Immediately after Meili pouted and declared like a child, the desert that had been turned up thanks to the rise of courtesan bears, and with the underneath of that sand being stirred up subsequently, a big frame rushed out.

Swallowed within the vigor of the gigantic beast pushing its whole body out from the underground, the countless courtesan bears dragged within were launched up into the sky. Falling on the sand from a high altitude, the witchbeasts had their bones broken, and the unfortunate courtesan bears directly above that humongous mouth, got chewed up.

Thrusting out while tearing apart the desert, the one laying devastation upon the repulsive flower meadow was that Sand Earthworm.

Wafting the stench, raising a strange voice slashing through twilight, the Sand Earthworm determined the courtesan bears clinging onto the dragon carriage as its prey, and leaping with that big frame, minced and destroyed them at once.

Meili: “Go~, Sand Earthworm! Crush everyone, everyo~ne!”

Subaru: “Are you serious, hey! Areyouseriousareyouseriousareyouserious, heyheyhey!”

The weight, capable of creating rumbles in the ground, writhed through the sand sea, and the wails of the courtesan bears being crushed by the pressure of the humongous frame echoed. courtesan bears too, did not possess a petite build whatsoever, but they could not possibly compete with the figures of Sand Earthworms, whose overall length could be even above ten meters.

The overwhelming masses turned into the outcome of collisions, and the courtesan bears got successively turned into corpses.

At the circumstance which was a decisive battle between monsters at this point, Subaru had no words appropriate for it.

Emilia and Beatrice’s magic, Julius’ swordsmanship, Meili’s unusual talent narrowly cleared the way, and the dragon carriage and Patrasche rapidly proceeded through the flower meadow.

Meili: “A~h! The Sand Earthworm i~s!”

Meili’s shriek was heard.

Observing it, the Sand Earthworm, possessed by a great number of courtesan bears who had their claws gouged into that humongous frame, was shedding large quantities of bodily fluids from its entire body, and collapsed on the ground.

The outer skin of the slimy and soaking wet Sand Earthworm was not something as sturdy as that of snakes or insects. The skin sustaining the soft body easily fell prey to the claws, and a wail of agonizing death reverberated through the sand sea.

Meili: “Next! Nextne~xt! Keep coming fa~st!”

Once a single giant collapsed, Meili clasped her hands with a pallid face. And, lured to that, once again the sand was uplifted, and a different Sand Earthworm made its appearance.

This time there were six at the same time, however, compared to the first one, they were twice as small, and if they were to get enclosed by the swarm of courtesan bears, they would get hunted down in the blink of an eye.

Subaru: “At this pace… ~hk.”

They would get out-pushed in the amount of violence. With a sense of terrible hopelessness, Subaru desperately looked at his environs in search of something that could help them break out of this deadlock. And, he noticed.

The watchtower that had been so distant, was close enough to be said that it was right before their eyes.

Subaru: “Just a little bit left! If we can follow up to the watchtower at this pace—”

”□□□”

It was not as if the witchbeasts would withdraw with this, but it appeared likely that there may lie some fearful power there.

At that moment, it was not as if he had thought something special.

However, if they were to follow up to the watchtower, he felt there may be the strength to break free of the deadlock of this situation.

The spirit of hope was like clinging onto straws. And in reality, that was no mistake.

Subaru: “At this rate—”

”□□□”

However, that strength was not something so convenient.

It was the iron hammer which rained incessantly without bias upon all insolent comrades approaching the Pleiades Watchtower.

“—?”

Pushing open his eyes desperately, supporting Beatrice while clinging to Patrasche, Subaru scowled at the watchtower visible in front of him.

Sweat dripping along, the moment he dimly narrowed his eyes, Subaru felt a faint sense of discomfort.

The core of the tower, something was visible there, as if shining.

Subaru: “What’s…”

That, he was unable to resume onto the final word.

“…”

—The luster bolted through the sky, and its aim unchangingly landed a direct hit on Subaru’s cranium.

At that moment, everything above the neck of Natsuki Subaru was blown off by the attack and evaporated with the same unconsciousness.

"…"

There present was nobody who could observe and raise their voice, at the tragic scene of a single moment.

For some reason, those who would have had observed it, and those who would have had screamed at it, had been thoroughly pulled up by the root and branch.

The Earth Ground Dragon which had lost its head, giving rise to a report, collapsed.

Caught up within the vigor of the dragon carriage toppling sideways, the human bodies who had indeed lost their craniums were pulverized, shattered under the pressure, turned into chunks of meat.

Only the pond of blood lay upon the sand, and the parched sand gulped down the blood spilt from the bodies.

Before long, gradually, slowly, the fine particles of sand dragged anything and everything rotting on the sand sea down to their belly, and concealed them.

The flowers of blood, as if the only visage of their journey, bequeathed the vivid colors.

However, even those flowers of deep red, disappeared within the evermore swallowing sand.

—Here, the party greeted annihilation.

Chapter 11:
The Audible Tearful Voice

1

—What had been visible was the luster, nothing but that.

He remembered, he had tilted his neck upwards.

Also the moment initially afterwards, one section of the tower in front, white luster, and him narrowing his eyes at that dazzle.

However, what lay in his memories was only till that point. He did not remember anything thereafter.

Neither ache, nor impact, nor terror, he did not feel a single thing.

For Natsuki Subaru, these were all indispensable retinues in the advent of Death.

Neither did he have the ache to make him wail in tears, nor the impact that would scatter his body into a thousand fragments, nor the terror of losing everything.

Otherwise that Death, may have had been a much more kind-hearted Death than what Subaru was normally acquainted with.

Above all, Subaru, who had died and gotten his brain evaporated, did not have any free time whatsoever to think about it, nor could he merely think back to it and absorb himself into it.

As if in the blink of an eye, the moment immediately after he thought his field of vision had been caged within darkness, the lost Life of Natsuki Subaru was resuscitated, regurgitated, and once again, into reality, was abandoned.

—Was abandoned.

2

???: “—Tch tch tch.”

Subaru: “—~hk.”

For a single moment, feeling the weight of gloom upon his five senses, as if clogging up his breath, Subaru opened his eyes.

Discerning the clamorous sound of the whole body of the dragon carriage, his contracting muscles screamed out in pain. The reins he had clenched so tightly that his nails could eat away into his palm, and the warm temperature insisting their existence, Beatrice.

Subaru: “…Ah?”

Within his faint field of vision, he looked down at the back of Beatrice’s head from close proximity.

The violent sweet aroma sliding into his nostrils, was again, different from the one when he had hugged the young girl. Beatrice’s scent was like that of freshly prepared sweet confectioneries, but what wafted in the air now was, as if adhesive toxicity, self-assertive sweetness.

He had memories of this sweetness. It was natural. It was what, just recently, he had continued to smell ad nauseam.

Rather, even if it was only for a limited number of minutes, what was special was that it had been interrupted.

???: “Tch tch tch tch.”

Upon Subaru’s dusky consciousness, reached a rhythmic sound, as if the clicking of a tongue.

In front of his eyes, was Beatrice with her body stiffened up, and Patrasche who was holding her breath in, watching over what lay ahead of its nose, the dragon carriage carrying Emilia and Rem, and standing ahead of that dragon carriage was a repulsive witchbeast.

With fine roots stretching across its entire body, the truculent witchbeast starved of blood—it was a Courtesan Bear.

For a single moment, unable to express it as a déjà vu, the fresh sense of reality returned to Subaru.

That feeling was not to be doubted. It was Return by Death.

Natsuki Subaru had just now, experiencing Death, returned to this moment in time.

Subaru: "—~hk."

—But, of all things, returning to this moment?!

Rather than the moment of transpiration of Death, he cursed at how unfavorable the timing he had Returned by Death to was.

Inviting the interest of the witchbeast by the sound of clicking her tongue, the one trying to remove it from the front of the dragon carriage silently, was Meili. That scheme was only barely successful, however, and it fell through in the end.

The Ground Dragon pulling the dragon carriage—Gyan, was unable to bear the pressure of the witchbeast, was the reason for it.

"…"

While being aware of that, Subaru instantaneously hesitated in making a judgment.

The state of the vital Gyan was invisible from the rear. But, Julius, who had clenched the reins, would not encourage the unusualness of the Ground Dragon. There simply lay nothing special there for him to turn his eyes towards.

Each one in the dragon carriage was praying for the success of Meili's contact with the courtesan bears.

However, unfortunately, that was—

Meili: "Tch tch tch… tch~."

Meili's voice wielded a faint sense of stress, and her finger pointed towards the right of the dragon carriage. Lured to that movement, the Courtesan Bear slowly stepped its feet ahead in that direction.

An ambience of solace originated within the dragon carriage, and for Beatrice as well. However, Gyan was unable to stand up to the slicing of the thread of tension.

Subaru: “Juli…”

“—~hk!!”

Without being able to make the correct judgement, his call was obstructed by Gyan’s roar.

As if going through the recent progression once again, Gyan stomped the ground while letting out a roar, and at that wail and rumbling, the courtesan bears’ consciousness was awoken at once.

Further exposing their bloodshot eyes, the courtesan bears leapt with their drool dripping down. Bluish-white radiance perforated through those craniums, the flow had been completely the same until the blast.

Emilia: “El Huma!!”

Emilia, standing on top of the dragon carriage, turned over both her hands, as if fluttering in the wind, and created a maelstrom of ice blades in the sky, with movement like that of an elegant dance. The revolving blades of ice successively were fired, with their aim set above ground, as if the encircling notes of a musical saw, the sloth of courtesan bears was swallowed within the lethal weapons of ice, as they raised their death wails with their limbs being slashed away.

Subaru: “R-Runrunrunrunrunrun—~hk!!”

Pulling the reins and speeding up Patrasche, the dragon carriage, too, moved when Subaru raised his voice.

He glanced sideways at the driver, Ram, who had suddenly appeared, having exchanged the position of driver with Julius, and at Julius, wielding his knight sword, who launched sword slashes upon the approaching courtesan bears, along with a barrage of kicks, that was what he was able to understand.

—Completely, the same.

Having gone with the flow, Subaru strongly, strongly gritted his molars.

His consciousness being unable to catch up, due to the sudden Return by Death would not make for an excuse.

Putting off the impact of having passed away, Subaru's heart covered his remorse.

It could be said that ever since he became aware of Return by Death, up until now, this had been the first time for Subaru that he had wasted Return by Death.

Missing out on the information received through Return by Death, the result was that he was simply heading for another death. However, this was the first time he was tracing the very same situation, despite Return by Death, without even any establishment of a trick of some sort. Subaru's own puzzlement, unrelated to his intentions while thinking that, the rail of destiny was yet the same.

Beatrice: "—Subaru! There is no free time for you to be spacing out, in fact!"

Subaru: "—~hk!"

Lying face down in regret, tightly gripping to the reins was Subaru, and Beatrice struck her back on his chest. Looking ahead at the light impact and voice, he was able to see the truculent witchbeasts advancing speedily.

At the same time, grasping the small palm reaching out, making Beatrice stand on top of the dragon, thus commenced the counterattack.

Beatrice: "Minya! Minya! One more time, Minya, I suppose!"

Through the palm, the aimless Mana within Subaru's body, was absorbed and resolved into power for Beatrice. The materialized crystals of violet pierced into the bodies of the witchbeasts obstructing their path, and as the crystals shattered those bodies, Patrasche proceeded while stepping firmly onto the scattered fragments.

Meili: “Held in rese~rve, Sand Earthworm!!”

Hearing Meili’s shout, who had grown desperate, the sand at the corner of his vision spouted up.

The desert covered by courtesan bears, making its appearance from further below that, the Sand Earthworm tossed several numbers of the witchbeasts within its huge jaws, and putting together its humongous frame enough to make one look upwards, proceeded to crush its enemies.

The second great decisive battle of monsters, but Subaru was aware of how unfavorable this was.

Ram: “—Barusu! Run till you die! If you do not want to die!”

At Subaru, who was grilling in formless restlessness, a seemingly reprimanding voice was launched.

Controlling the reins at the driver’s position, driving the agitated Gyan, was Ram. She was driving the dragon carriage fully in control with her handling of the reins no inferior than that of Rem but, at this pace, this was no good.

Subaru: “It will be no good if you keep going straight ahead at this rate! Ram, change direction!”

Ram: “——~hk! What are you trying to say? The watchtower is right in front, the surroundings are all territories of the witchbeasts!”

Subaru: “That is plausible but still, that won’t be any good!”

Patrasche lowered her head, and pierced right through the torso of the Courtesan Bear in front. While having the writhing witchbeast right in front of her nose, the jet black Ground Dragon rushed ahead madly while using the body of the witchbeast as a shield. The continuous slashes being hammered in tore apart the body of the witchbeast, and its dancing fallen petals and fresh blood soaked the sand sea.

Ram: “Barusu, what did you notice! Say it clearly!”

Subaru: “There wouldn’t be any problems if I could explain clearly! At any rate, it’s a change of course!”

At Ram’s words, which had a tone of irritation, all Subaru could do as well was to yell violently back. He himself realized it was a terribly absurd response, but he had no measures other than that.

After all, the current Subaru was unaware of the cause of his death.

His Return by Death was unquestionable, and yet, he could not remember the reason for his death.

Noticing it, regarding the point of Return by Death, this time it was close to how it felt when he had met Death for the first time in the Roswaal mansion.

From the point of confirming the cause of death, and eliminating that problem.

Subaru: “The time for that, is nowhere here!!”

Having been caught up by the witchbeasts, he had fallen prey to those slashes. Just as how the bar’s bartender had warned, had he become the cruel bait of having his intestines slurped on. Otherwise, inadvertently falling from Patrasche, he may have unfortunately fractured his neck. It was a thought really, truly difficult but, he may have broken down due to Beatrice utilizing his mana excessively, that was not impossible either.

Subaru: “Whichever it may be, the memories haven’t cleanly, suddenly stopped till now.”

Even if his guts were cleaved open, even if he was put down in ice, even if his head was crushed by a morningstar, even if his whole body was devoured greedily by rabbits, even if he was eaten away by entangling with an absurd Authority, Subaru did Return by Death.

And regardless of what the cause of death may be, eliminating and defeating what had occurred right before his own Death which was stalemating him, it had been used as a method for that.

That fragile string of fate, was nowhere visible this time.

And the time to search for that fine string, was not bestowed upon Subaru and the others.

—This was simply, the worst entrapment of Return by Death.

In the scenario where he possibly passed away by the same method, it would be a completely fumbling restart.

Before that happened—

Subaru: “Move from here! Whatever you do, don’t get close to the tower!”

Ram: “Again, why so…”

Subaru: “The tower will shine! Probably, that light is dangerous!”

Ram: “Hu~h—?!”

In the situation where they had been nothing but cornered, even Ram did not have the time to varnish the blades of her words with poison. While clashing with the voice possessing a frank tone of repudiation, Subaru pulled the reins and conveyed that to Patrasche.

To not go straight ahead, but divert their purpose at any rate.

Subaru: “The tower may be visible, right in front but…!”

Right in the middle of the advancement of the courtesan bears in great numbers in the sand sea, the watchtower right in front of their eyes was clearly getting closer. However, what awaited them if they truly got close to it was only the scorch of before.

For that to not happen, what Subaru had to choose was—

Subaru: “Run backwards! It would be better to pass through Sand Time one more time! Let’s go back to that earlier sand dune!”

Ram: “What nonsense have you been…”

Emilia: “Ram! Do as Subaru says!”

At the determination where it could not be helped but think he had lost his mind, Ram raised a voice of repudiation, which Emilia detained. While she purged the witchbeasts with countless ice shards, she nodded at Subaru.

Emilia: “Because there’s no way Subaru would say something weird without giving thought to it!”

Ram: “Barusu ordinarily lives by wetting his pants with thoughtless words and nonsense.”

Emilia: “Because there’s no way Subaru would say something weird without giving thought to it in a dangerous situation!”

Subaru: “Thank you for going out of your way and correcting it!!”

Whether he should lament being treated as a young wolf in sheep’s clothing, or be delighted that he was a man who could be relied upon in times of a pinch.

Keeping both introspection and conceit for later, Patrasche, moving according to Subaru’s intentions, thrust her feet on the sandy soil and suddenly turned round. Her tail cutting through the air mowed down the abdomen of the witchbeast, and kicking down one of the courtesan bears with her leg, she ran backwards.

Ram: “—~hk! The two of you on the top and side! Make sure you don’t fall off!!”

Seeing their sudden turning around, Ram, too, had Gyan turn around by skillfully handling the reins. Naturally, the dragon carriage, having to eat the centrifugal force at that moment, inclined greatly and turned sideways but—

Julius: “Emilia-sama! The foothold!”

Emilia: “Eh? Ah, is that so! Yes!”

Thrusting his sword fiercely into the body of the vehicle and supporting his body, Julius brought aid to Emilia’s attention to the inclining dragon carriage. Emilia rounded her eyes at those words, and magical power headed instantaneously towards directly underneath the dragon carriage. As if assisting the wheel that had tilted due to the inclination, a slope of ice was born, and the dragon carriage, as if painting a semi-circle, rushed and evaded toppling sideways.

Furthermore, at the same pace, without killing off the vigor, commenced the backward dash which followed Patrasche.

—Immediately afterward.

Subaru: “Wha… ~hk?!”

The moment following the commencement of the backward dash, echoed a metallic shrill as if slashing one’s eardrums.

Thoughtlessly shrugging his shoulders was Subaru. From the rear, a sudden gale was born.

Subaru: “The one right now was… eh, heyheyheyhey!”

Beatrice: “What, I suppose… huh?!”

Sensing the enigma arise behind, Subaru and Beatrice, turning back at the same time, expressed astonishment.

On top of the dragon carriage racing immediately behind them, Emilia and Julius, too, widened their eyes.

Meili: “Sand Earthworm, -chan is… ~hk.”

Leaning forward her body on the driver’s seat, with her throat trembling in astonishment, was Meili.

In front of her eyes, in that shape, a visage behind the dragon carriage, as if concealing it, with the large build of the Sand Earthworm being thrown up. With the frame of a span over ten meters, with thickness of body such that two men may not be able to rotate it with their arms. Protruding its head above the ground, the form lording over its prey seemed as if it was the ruler of the sand sea.

The body of that Sand Earthworm, receiving the direct hit of that something, was blown off into fragments.

That slimy body skin suffered a thousand pierces, and the thick body of great length was splendidly divided into two. The body that had lost its head toppled sideways, and the head, having lost its support, slowly, slowly, headed towards them, trickling—.

Subaru: “Get aside, dodge i~i~i~t—!!”

The fallen head of the Sand Earthworm had excess mass which could crush the dragon carriage under its pressure.

With the death agony of the witchbeasts crushed under the pressure of the body that had, just now, fallen behind, Subaru and Ram subsequently transmitted instructions to the ground dragons, overbearingly averted their routes and escaped the course of the Sand Earthworm’s direct hit.

“—~hk.”

Raising a shrill tearful voice, the Sand Earthworm’s head fell onto the sand sea with great vigor.

The sand whirled up, the bones of the courtesan bears, injured while escaping, crumbled into fragments and fell and their limbs, having been caught up in the impact, were blown off. At the same pace, the head of the Sand Earthworm bounced, while entangling with the inevitable future of the witchbeasts, tumbled, and finally suffered countless slashes, quickly turning into fragments of flesh.

Subaru: “Danger, danger, ous, ous!”

Beatrice: “Subaru, this was a mistake, in fact!”

He’d felt relieved for evading the crisis of the moment but, instantaneously, Beatrice rejected that relief.

Looking at the young girl at his chest wondering what had happened, she cleared away the fallen, fluttering petals with a troubled expression, and surveyed the rear,

Beatrice: “From the one just now, the dragon carriage on the other side has gone astray, I suppose! There is only Betty and you!”

Subaru: “What did you say?!”

Pursuing her gaze in panic, Subaru confirmed the absence of the figure of the dragon carriage in the surroundings.

Only the distant radiance of bluish-white mana and roars of witchbeasts, furthermore, discovering a place slightly exposed to the sandy gale, he was able to understand from his view through the immense distance, the hard fight being put up by Emilia and their new servant, Meili.

However, even if they tried to meet up with the other side, the space between them was overflowing with a countless number of courtesan bears. And for Subaru and the rest, with diminished number of moves, there were no indications that the fierce attack of the witchbeasts had been weakened.

Subaru: “Simply, half the war potential! The number of enemies are double!”

Beatrice: “Compared to earlier, it has increased to four times, I suppose!”

Brandishing the claws, at the face of the courtesan bears attacking, the cusp of the whip let out a roar.

The striking impact, fortunately, crushed the eyes of the witchbeast and breaking through the one trembling in violent pain, Patrasche dashed once again. However, that course of direction had a different direction than that of the dragon carriage of Emilia and the others.

Subaru: “Patrasche! Not this way…”

Beatrice: “It is this Ground Dragon’s own judgement to be left alive, in fact. Rather than Subaru or Betty, leaving it to its instincts would be better, I suppose!”

Interrupting Subaru’s outcry, Beatrice kicked and dispersed away the witchbeasts standing in their way with magic. Patrasche marked the points where the tight besiegement and broke through them, risking her own life for protecting the two on its back.

Subaru: “Shit! This again… this shape again! What am I doing!”

Swinging the whip, he struck the faces of the witchbeasts trying to get closer. However, with this, he would not be able to stop the power of the witchbeasts, having an expression of having lost reason.

Inflicting fatal wounds with the saber, he sharpened their dynamism with magic. —The power Subaru chose, even with any of those, it would not be even remotely attainable. All craftiness, would get crushed under the pressure of overwhelming power.

Doing what he could do, augmenting whatever he had the ability to do, it had become slightly easier, is what he had thought, and yet.

The mere superficial cleverness of Natsuki Subaru, was fate only going to exhale a laughing sigh at it and trample upon and crush it.

Subaru: “I had somehow managed better at the time of that shitty bastard Regulus…!”

Beatrice: “There is no time for such deep thinking, in fact! Are there any ways to…”

Subaru: “Beako, Murak on Patrasche! Lighten her weight, then we can cross over the swarm!”

Beatrice: “—! Murak!”

Accepting Subaru’s directions, Beatrice used Murak on Patrasche—a magic that abates the effect of gravity, and the speed at which they ran further accelerated. Stepping and racing ahead, the distance doubled, and the leaping Patrasche used the witchbeasts as a place to stand on, and tried to withdraw from the writhing flower meadow.

But—

Subaru: “The li—?!”

In close proximity to his eyes appeared a white purge, and the moment he turned his voice inside out, That dashed through the sky.

The white purge above ground ran through, and the sand sea was blown off by the terrific force. Facing the swift bolt of the purge, the bodies of the witchbeasts were torn apart, spouting out blood, as they leapt, leapt, leapt.

And that aftermath swooped down upon Patrasche as well, agitated by the wind pressure of That which was closing on the large build of the ground dragon, and got easily flipped.

Subaru: “Beatrice! Hold tight!!”

Beatrice: “Subaru too, make sure you’re hugging firmly, I suppose!!”

Patrasche: “—~hk!”

Patrasche neighed, and Subaru hugged and clung to Beatrice’s body.

Spinning and revolving in the air, the large build of Patrasche pranced overhead of the courtesan bears. As if pursuing that Patrasche, the corona continuously downpoured incessantly.

The sand was burst open, the witchbeasts who got dragged into it and had to receive it were burst open, and the appearing and quickly disappearing Patrasche raised an echo of distress.

Subaru: “O~a~a~a~a~a~h—?!”

In the midst of the attack, the Divine Protection of Wind Evasion failed, and Subaru tasted that impact altogether.

Grasping the reins and Beatrice, he had firmly interposed both his feet in Patrasche’s saddle but, rubbed by the force, with his body being struck hard in parts here and there, he barely managed to grasp to his consciousness.

However, regardless of even that state, the pursuit of the claws of the courtesan bears under his eyes continued to shoot.

Swallowed in the terrific attack, he floundered without being thrown off. Now, if he were to fall, no way would he be saved. What barely connected his life, was precisely because he had not given up.

Subaru: “But, at this rate—”

”□□□”

Beatrice: “Not good, in fact… ~hk!”

Subaru: “—Patrasche?!”

With the remarkably strong impact, Patrasche’s roar of anguish pulled back her tall tail.

Looking at it, at the side of Patrasche, who was flipping around lightly through the effect of Murak, had been exposed to the claws of the courtesan bears and had been slashed. With the scars of the claws etched into the jet black scales, painful to even look at, from the mouth of the deep gash flowing and spilling was fresh blood.

Subaru: “—~hk, kh, ah?!”

Tumbling down with the same pace due to that force, Patrasche suddenly fell on top of the desert. At the same time, Subaru and the others were thrown onto the sandy soil as well, and were left behind on the feeding ground of the courtesan bears crowding their surroundings.

Shaking his head, his body rose. While continuing to hold Beatrice’s hand. She, too, dusted off the hem of her dress and stood up, and quickly observed the surroundings with no negligence in her eyes. However, their advantage was undeniable.

Subaru: “You bastards! Don’t you dare lay a single finger on Patrasche!”

Beatrice: “Minya!”

Wounded, Patrasche groaned in agony, as magic pierced through the witchbeasts flooding towards it. Subaru pulled Beatrice’s hand and rushed over to Patrasche, and kneeling down, touched the wound.

The claws had not reached her intestines but, if she pushed herself, her guts might brim out. She could not be allowed to push herself. He also needed time to heal it.

Subaru: “Beatrice! Shamak! Deceive the perceptibility of the witchbeasts around!”

Beatrice: “Now?! Even if that’s done, it’ll do nothing but buy time, in fact! On top of that…”

Subaru: “That time is needed for now! Hurry!”

Bending their stance with bloodshot eyes, the witchbeasts awaited for a gap to swoop in.

Coping with them would be impossible if they assailed from all directions. The witchbeasts eventually became impertinent, and what would be their cue depended on their patience. That could perhaps, not be expected.

Beatrice: “——~hk! El Shamak!”

Beatrice joined both of her hands together, and something entirely fell out of Subaru’s interior.

It rolled towards the whirlpool within the hand of the girl beside, becoming quiet power it swept through the sand sea, and with Subaru and the rest as the center, tens of meters in its radius, were wrapped up in black mist.

With the foundation of Shadow Magic, this was the invocation of Shamak.

Producing discord in perception, the expanse of Shamak, brought the courtesan bears' conduct to a standstill. Conception vanished beyond understanding, and even the instinct to chase after prey gets forgotten.

Of course, it did not show effect on Subaru and the others, who had executed it. However, it did not last long.

Beatrice: "If the ones beyond the scope of efficacy get in, it would eventually be laid to waste, I suppose. Before that, escape along with that Ground Dragon!"

Subaru: "I know! The effect of Murak is still left, right? If that's so then I'll carry Patrasche on my shoulders, at any rate, continuously fire Shamak and joining up with the dragon carriage on the other side is what we should—"

”□□□”

Withdrawing from the gambling room, judging to prioritize that, he extended his hands to Patrasche.

Normally its large frame would weigh several hundred kilos, but in the interval it was adhering to Beatrice's Murak, that body, like a feather—would be an exaggeration, it had become light. Not enough to be able to shoulder it and run.

Her yellow eyes were intently looking at Subaru. The emotions passing by in those eyes were complex, eloquence such that nobody could ever imagine being a Ground Dragon's expression.

Those eyes, were telling them. —Please leave.

Beatrice: "—Subaru!"

Immediately after his eyes were robbed by the glint in Patrasche's eyes, Beatrice raised a sharp voice.

She, rushing over, aimed for Subaru's palm, the surging magical power took form of a shield, and right next to Subaru arrived a magical wall of violet—and it, averted the fired white luster.

Subaru: “Gho~ah?!”

Reverberated the sharp sound as if an exchange of blows of steel, and Subaru’s body, receiving the impact, flew backwards. Tumbling over and falling with limbs stretched out on top of the sand, the violently coughing Subaru noticed after trying to lift his body up.

Blood was dripping out of his right side, which had suffered the impact, and that it had his right leg thickly soaking.

Subaru: “What did I, receive…?”

Grasping the side overflowing with blood, exhaled Subaru reflexively with one of knees knelt down.

At that moment, the impact which had ransacked his internal organs gives rise to vomiting, and gastric juices and blood ceaselessly gushed forth out of the edge of his mouth.

Air exited out of his fissured abdomen, and a goofy sound like that of fart leaked out along with the foaming blood.

Subaru: “Ah, hf…”

Beatrice: “—baru! Subaru!”

As he exhaled hoarsely, his field of vision simultaneously inclined right beside him.

Toppling sideways, he understood he had lost the ability to move his body. He had understood, but nothing more than that could he continue. The wound on his side heated up, and there lay the pain as if his body was melting away.

Desperately, he heard the voice calling for his self.

Beatrice: “Subaru! Subaru, don’t I suppose! Dying is… don’t, don’t die… don’t leave Betty, alone… ~hk! Sto~p… ~hk.”

His shoulder was being shook. At the audible tearful voice, he wanted to stretch his hand out, but he could not move.

His brain tissues were burning, he became unable to remember the young girl in front of his eyes.

An adorable face, but it was crying, she shouldn't make a crying face, is what he thought.

"…"

On the other side of that, a large, large lizard lay collapsed.

Black, it was a lizard with a beautiful appearance. In that body, a white long and narrow something of an unknown source, unknown origin was lunging through, with no movement whatsoever, it was clearly dead.

Perhaps, his own self had received the same thing, is what he thought.

???: "Don't leave Betty behi~nd, plea… ~hk!"

Sobbing, the young girl desperately hugged Subaru's body.

With that petite frame, Subaru's body, who had lost his strength, would be too heavy.

Tears streamed down her cheeks. He wanted to at least wipe away those tears.

He searched for a part that was still mobile in his body, but he was unable to find anything. That is why, he hauled something mobile from someplace else, not in his body.

Subaru: "—~hk."

???: "Subaru?"

Invisible to the eyes, the Hand only his self could see, wiped the tears on her cheeks.

Black fingers caressed her teardrops, and the girl looked at him, making an expression as if she had noticed something. The strength to smile and reassure her, even that, he did not possess.

???: “Suba—”

”□□□”

For a single moment, the young girl tried to say something.

However that was, interrupted by the white purge that came flying behind her from a distance.

”□□□”

The second attack, lunged through Subaru’s chest.

Slowly turning his gaze towards that, it had perforated through the back of the young girl, furthermore, piercing through Subaru’s chest, it came out from behind.

???: “Ah.”

Leaving behind a dusky sigh, the form of the young girl, hugging Subaru, disappeared.

As if she did not belong to this realm, the form of the young girl was rendered invisible.

Losing support, Subaru collapsed on the spot. He could not move. He did not have the reason to move.

Subaru: “Kh, oh.”

His weakly moving fingers scratched the sand, that was all.

Losing its caster, the black fog which was interposing the environs and space, was dispersed by the breeze.

Divulging from the magic that deceived perception, all what remained was only the corpse of a Ground Dragon and a young boy on the verge of death. The flock sloth of witchbeasts slurped on their tongues, and advanced closer to that prey.

“…”

His breath stopped, the focus of his eyes blurred.

Excessive blood loss, was not how it felt. Something, which felt fatal, poured upon him.

He was rendered unable to understand, anything.

In close proximity to him, the courtesan bears, with their claws sharpened right overhead, he could hear their roars.

Those claws had swung down, and his cranium had been crushed.

Or instead, now, on the edge of his field of vision, which was on the verge of vanishing, That, which had faintly shined, was the one to blame.

Despite not knowing which one of the two was the reason, Natsuki Subaru’s life came to an end.

Chapter 12:
Baptism of the Watchtower

1

In an instant, the throbbing and burning pains dissipated, and Natsuki Subaru returned.

Subaru: "…"

He wanted to praise himself for not screaming at the scene before him immediately.

Upon his second Return by Death, Subaru returned to the flower meadow, beset on all sides by Witchbeast; closing his mouth with his hands, his thinking became serious.

???: "Tchtchtch."

In a place dominated by the violence of the flowery scent, what could be heard was the sound of Meili clicking her tongue.

By gently moving her fingers and letting out this sound from her lips, she was stealing the attention of the Courtesan Bear standing in front of the dragon carriage. A gamble that robbed the breath of everyone witnessing it.

He had been brought back yet again to the scene he had experienced just a few minutes ago, making it the second time.

—Are you kidding me?

Subaru's brain kicked into high gear while trying to get the picture of the events that happened to him.

He needed to switch his focus immediately. He had to forget that just a moment ago, countless Witchbeasts were chasing after them with an outcome of bloodshed and so, before that happened, he had to deal with the problem at hand.

The problem, the problem that was in front of him right before his eyes. What would happen next?

He could hear something that sounded much like someone calling a kitten. The actual situation was totally different from that cute imagery, but that thought was hindered by the smell of flowers.

Smelly, sweet, persistent, annoying, itchy, painful, hot, which one was the correct word to describe it?

Subaru: “—?”

The more he thought about it, the more it stressed his brain, but no concrete solutions came to mind.

His brain could not keep up with the discrepancy between the current situation and the situation that he had been experiencing up until now. Subaru desperately tried to adapt to the present, then feeling a light push against his chest.

???: “…”

Looking down, it was Beatrice’s small body leaning on his chest.

As Subaru completely embraced her against his chest, she looked up slightly to show that he should be gripping the reins instead of her. Perhaps she had caught what he had dropped during his immediate shock after Returning by Death.

—He remembered the last Death, he remembered Beatrice’s crying face and tears.

Subaru: “—Hk.”

Yes, that was it. That really was it.

This made it the third time Subaru had reached this situation.

Twice, he had died here. He had no clue how he had died the first time, but the second time, he could picture that death to some extent. But what he had suffered at the moment of death was not clear.

Feeling like his internal organs were melted after simmering in a pot—that feeling.

—No, that should not be the priority. Now, the priority should be,

Meili: “Tchtchtch… tchhh.”

Just as Subaru’s thoughts caught up to his second Death, Meili successfully drew the attention of the Courtesan Bear. Following the clicking of her tongue and movement of her fingers, the Witchbeast slowly diverted its gaze from the dragon carriage and was guided to its right side.

There would be no problem if the Courtesan Bear just left in this manner. However, Subaru was aware that it would not be the case.

Subaru: “…”

Right next to the Courtesan Bear who was moving away, stood a ground dragon—Gian’s breathing was going wild.

The pressure of facing an Witchbeast from so up close, and the scent of flowers that continued its violent spread—two kinds of pressure tormented the calmness of the ground dragon, which would make that tense thread snap.

If the ground dragon made a noise, the swarm of the agitated Witchbeasts would attack suddenly and simultaneously. If so, it would result in nothing but a repetition of the previous two Deaths.

Subaru: “…”

However, except for Subaru, no one could notice Gian’s agitation.

Even Julius, who held the reins, also had his attention diverted from the ground dragon unconsciously, concentrating on the threat of the monsters before them. Therefore, Subaru was the only one who could take measures.

But how to deal with it?

He was unable to speak. It was impossible to quickly approach and touch it.

There was a big risk in beckoning Julius and making him calm it down. Before that, if he could not make a call right now, he would not be able to make it in time. What should he do—?

Subaru: "…"

Then, in the last seconds, Subaru closed his eyes.

If nothing came to his mind in this moment, he would go full "all or nothing" and call upon Julius. He recalled the two previous Deaths, the onslaught of the Witchbeasts and the light of the Watchtower coming alive again inside his mind.

At the moment of the second Death, there was the fact that a crying Beatrice had clung on to him, pleading "Don't leave me alone", which drove a deep thorn into Subaru's chest—And then he realized.

Subaru: "Beako, I love you."

Beatrice: "—Hk?!"

He hugged her small body from the back and whispered those words in her ear. Beatrice was surprised at the sudden expression of love, but the hand over her mouth did not allow her to shout.

Instead, Subaru extended his "hand" towards Gian, to the front and to the side.

The "hand" which had gently caressed and wiped Beatrice's tears just before his Death.

—Invisible Providence.

Though, as his mouth was too busy confessing his love with a whisper, the name of that technique was chanted only within his heart, unfortunately.

Just then, in the center of Subaru's body—a different sensation from when the link with Beatrice drained his Mana permeated from him, something dark being summoned, arousing a silent cry.

Asserting its gratitude at being summoned aloud, that which accomplished the lazy Natsuki Subaru’s goals on his behalf, arrived the Unseen Hand that was not of this world.

Subaru: “…”

With Subaru’s chest as its pivot point, the black hand that had been created slowly manifested itself in the world. Of course, its existence could not be seen by anyone except for Subaru. As he was embracing Beatrice, the Unseen Hand just went through her, and it seemed like it did not make any unintended contact.

While admiring that fact, he could feel that something in him was being drained away each second. Whether it was his soul or sanity, Subaru did not know. However, he could not afford to take too much time to avoid reaching out to Julius.

The black magic stretched to Gian’s neck, who seemed like it was about to roar at any moment. The palm slowly stroked its thick neck coated by bulky scales.

The large ground dragon trembled from being touched by someone, but somehow, its instincts probably felt that there was no hostility in the touch of the palm. And so, the ground dragon’s rough breath calmed down, its body relaxing.

Julius: “—Huh?”

Then, also noticing Gian’s reaction, Julius pulled the reins and soothed the ground dragon in earnest. As expected from Julius, he skillfully handled the ground dragon, noticing its agitation, with what could have otherwise been devastating.

Confirming that, Subaru immediately cut off the connection with the Unseen Hand. With the black palm deprived of freedom, it dissipated in an instant, fading away into the parched wind of the sand sea, as if nothing had happened.

Subaru: “Ha, fuuu…”

After dodging that bullet, Subaru took a long breath of relief.

At the same time, he felt like a dark black cloud was stuck in his chest, and he wanted to retch. Of course, things would not be so easy. That sense of loss was the price to pay for using the Invisible Providence, and it remained engraved in the soul.

Thus, Subaru thought about the feeling of loss being gouged in his chest.

Invisible Providence—the cost of employing the Unseen Hand, the feeling of loss and breathlessness it caused, were certainly easier to deal with than before.

The first time Subaru used the Invisible Providence had been when fighting Garfiel back at Sanctuary. At that time, Subaru had unleashed his power in a feverish manner, and was assaulted by a sense of loss and intoxication that caused a feeling like half his body was gone, causing his consciousness to wobble.

Perhaps it was disgust for the opponent who had utilized that very same power before Subaru, and it was no excuse that the incident happened after Garfiel had beaten him to a pulp in the first place.

It was a strange ability—rather, Authority, that endlessly intrigued Subaru with the dangers of using it, as well as the circumstances that made it available to him. Therefore, he had never thought to actively use this force until now.

Subaru's Invisible Providence none of the power or flexibility of the Unseen Hand originally wielded by that madman. At best, wiping away tears or stroking the head was all he could muster.

To pay with the whittling down of his soul was a cost too prohibitive. With that in mind, he thought the only means was to meet it halfway.

Subaru: "It's not like I've gotten used to it."

Shaken with a feeling of loss and disgust, Subaru felt more anxiety than relief.

What Subaru believed, was that it was always good to hold more cards in one's hands, but that did not mean that possessing multiple pairless jokers in Old Maid would do him any good.

Of course, it would serve as a powerful hand in games other than Old Maid—

Subaru: "Uh, uh, uh."

Beatrice: "…What have you been doing for a while now, I suppose?"

Subaru: "Oh? What…"

As Subaru let out a small shriek amidst his worries, a grumpy voice suddenly appeared. Upon opening his eyes to see what was happening, he found his eyes meeting with Beatrice's own, staring at him.

And that Beatrice looked quite unusual.

Subaru: "Beako, what happened to your head and dress?"

Beatrice: "—It's the result of Subaru being glued to Betty's hair and clothes all the time, in fact. Why do I have to suffer such a humiliation, I suppose!"

Subaru: "Huh, me?"

In front of Subaru, who was tilting his head cluelessly, a furious Beatrice was attempting to hide the anger in her voice.

Her splendid drills were jumbled, and both the delicate dress and the white cloak to protect the dress from Sand Wind, were arranged eccentrically and running at the forefront of fashion. It was a state-of-the-art pattern that no one had ever thought of.

Beatrice: "—Your lack of self-awareness is irritating, in fact! You were very worried so I overlooked it, but then it went on and on and on and on and on… And on top of that, do you… even remember saying those words of love, I suppose?"

Subaru: “No, I remember that. I really mean it when I say I love you, Beako.”

Beatrice: “Hmph!”

To those candid words, a red-faced Beatrice completely covered her head with her cloak. He really wished to admire that unfamiliar cute appearance, but right now he could not play with Beatrice.

As a result of Subaru’s unspeakable efforts, Gian would not make a fuss and would attempt to resume the march of the dragon carriage by relying on Meili’s ability. However, as Subaru went through the gulf opened between the courtesan bears, he brought Patrasche close to the coachman’s spot.

Subaru: “Julius, Meili. Let’s make a temporary retreat—Things are bad.”

It was because of the two Deaths, that he proposed a rework in their strategy.

2

Meili: “I’m disappointed in you, onii-san. It was only a bit tense, I didn’t want to run away so soooon.”

Ram: “After all, Barusu is still Barusu. I thought that after becoming Emilia-sama’s Knight, he would be a little better. But I guess a person’s character doesn’t change that easily. Pulled out too soon.”

Subaru: “There’s no harm in just re-enforcing a safety measure!”

After managing to turn back from the flower garden and returning to the meeting place which they had set up after breaking through Sand Time, Subaru was being stabbed with strict criticism for making the decision to withdraw.

Meili, who had successfully tamed the courtesan bears and opened the way towards the tower, and then Ram, who had been stuck by the window in the dragon carriage, prepared for any emergency situation.

Subaru, who had stopped the march of the dragon carriage and requested a face-to-face meeting on the sand, was shrinking as he was cornered about stopping their progress based on just his own opinion.

Emilia: "But, I don't think that Subaru's judgment was wrong. Even if we got reaaally far through the flower gardens, I think that it's still the same situation as a little while ago. If we did that, you wouldn't have been able to get out like we did now."

Meili: "Onee-san doubts my ability? You believe onii-san more than me?"

Emilia: "We've come this far. I believe in both of you, but my opinion is that I especially want to believe what Subaru says. Sorry."

Subaru: "EMM…"

It was Emilia-tan Maji Megami, that who fought against Meili's childish rebuttals while putting her heart into it. As if in prayer, Subaru brought his hands together, and beside him, Beatrice fixed her disorderly clothes and hair.

Beatrice: "So what do you intend to do after all, in fact. If the Witchbeast girl's Divine Protection is not to be trusted, it's too reckless to pass through this flower garden, I suppose. If Bubby were here, it wouldn't have been difficult to annihilate a whole herd of Witchbeasts, but that's not the case, in fact."

Emilia: "If only Puck were here, oh well. I guess I'll try my best?"

Subaru: "I really want that to be the last resort. And even if you completely annihilate the courtesan bears here, I feel that other Witchbeasts will fill the gaps and it'll become an infinite loop. What do you say, Meili?"

With the flow being directed towards her, wearing a pout on her face, Meili averted her face. The girl crouched down, putting her chin over her knees, displaying the attitude of a child,

Meili: "Whaaaat is it?"

Subaru: “It’s weird that the flower gardens would be a territory for only courtesan bears. To put it bluntly, if the courtesan bears weren’t around, it’d be a home for other Witchbeasts, no?”

Meili: “…It may be right, or it may be not right.”

Subaru: “Which is it?”

Meili: “Yeah, what onii-san said is right. But what are you gonna do?”

While affirming Subaru’s point of view, Meili questioned him back. Receiving her dissatisfied look, Subaru frowned, and Julius shrugged his shoulders.

Julius: “I understand Miss Meili’s point. Subaru’s worries are justified, but there is nothing to be gained just by fretting over unexpected situations. If we could predict what would happen and deal with it accordingly, we would not dub it «unexpected».”

Subaru: “Even so, just leaving it all in the hands of a Divine Protection and rushing in without thinking, is a different thing. Or maybe I should say, that proposal would be very unlike you. That’s more like Garfiel’s role.”

Julius: “Naturally, I would never suggest such recklessness. We should decide what to do after a constructive discussion. Whether we proceed or return, that is.”

Just like before entering the flower meadow, Julius said this, raising his two fingers.

As Subaru snorted at the gesture, everyone began thinking about the situation.

Ram: “What if Barusu acted as a decoy to lure out the Witchbeasts? Then while they chase after him, we find a gap for us to break through.”

Subaru: “United we stay!”

Ram: “Ram and the others will be safe, and any nefarious insects can be kept away from Rem. It is a great idea."

Subaru: "I'll be devoured!"

Emilia: "Still, I'll work reaaally hard to fight for everyone and such…"

Subaru: "Emilia-tan comes to such unexpectedly meat-headed conclusions at these times."

Emilia: "Meat-hee… Huh, what are you saying suddenly? I'm humiliated."

Subaru: "It's unusual to me, this isn't an unconditional compliment to Emilia-tan, okay?"

Julius: "Leave it to Miss Meili's Divine Protection, and we will advance through the flower garden until we can no more. Once we have reached the limit, we shall launch a preemptive attack and rush to the Watchtower. It is a powerful gamble."

Subaru: "I can't explain it, but it'll fail. I can't explain it, but I'm sure."

Julius: "Hmm. You say this as if you possess an absolutely certain basis."

Subaru: "Ah, I don't know. It's hard to explain."

It was tough to dismiss the progression strategy without touching on the forbidden subject of Return by Death. And, during the strategy meeting that seemed somewhat lacking in progress, Subaru noticed something, and tried his luck.

Because he had to give first priority to Gian's shock, then afterward the retreat from the flower garden, he had forgotten to sort out the cause of those two Deaths which had actually triggered his return in the first place.

The first time around it had occurred too suddenly, and the second time around, it was a mess, so it was not very clear to him—but the cause of both of Subaru's deaths was related to the fact that the tower in front had been glowing.

Subaru: “That tower glows, is there anyone else seen that?”

Everyone: “The Watchtower glows…?”

At Subaru’s question, everyone tilted their heads with surprised faces.

Subaru groaned at the poor response and that no one saw it. It was somewhat natural. In honesty, Subaru had witnessed that light at more-or-less the same time of his Death. If that light really possessed an intent to kill, then all those who laid their eyes upon it would not live to tell the tale.

An attack that would materialize certain death, that was what he should regard it as.

Anastasia: “Natsuki-kun, ya saw the tower glowin’?”

Subaru: “Huh? Ahh, I don’t think I’m mistaken about it, I think it might’ve shined.”

Anastasia: “When was that?”

Subaru: “…When I was in the flower garden, I believe?”

He replied to Anastasia’s inquiry in the form of another question.

However, because the situation in the flower meadow meant that he could not speak out, it did not seem suspicious that he had kept quiet about the light at the tower. Since Subaru had seen the tower’s light both times Return by Death was activated, it was possible that the taboo would be considered as violated.

For a second, he felt sorry that he was able to report the truth only in in irregular bits—

Subaru: “If the tower lights up, doesn’t that mean the Sage-in-the-Tower-san was watching us?”

Anastasia: “Not necessarily, it’s nighttime too, it wouldn’t be strange to use a light.”

Emilia: “I see. If the Sage has noticed us, it may be a good idea to let them know that we don’t mean any harm.”

Except, since Subaru’s argument had been blurry and ambiguous, Emilia’s thoughts went in a completely different direction. Of course, it was a journey to seek friendly contact.

If the cause of the light was indeed the Sage, it was only natural that such an opinion would arise.

But to Subaru, who was aware that the light was anything but friendly, this would be the same as running towards a cliff.

Subaru: “Wait, let’s try to sort out our information for now. And then let’s decide whether or not to get in touch with the Sage.”

Emilia: “Sort out our information?”

Subaru: “Yeah, organize. Because, you know, it’s all there. That light’s not necessarily a sign of life from the Sage. It’s more, uh… There’s possibility of it being a dangerous thing like a searchlight, isn’t there?”

Emilia: “Seershlite…”

Anastasia: “In other words, Natsuki-kun’s suspectin’ that the light he saw’s like a defense mechanism set up by the Sage?”

Subaru: “Exactly!”

While Emilia had a question mark hovering over her head because of the unknown Western characters used, Anastasia, or rather, Eridna, understood the true meaning of Subaru’s words. And hearing that and pondering over it, was Julius. The Knight murmured, “Is that so?” under his breath, and,

Julius: “I do not know whether the Sage has been alive for hundreds of years, or if it is merely exaggeration. Is it possible that the Sage has left behind his legacy, still working as a device to protect the world?”

Subaru: “Oh, oh… I didn’t think so far ahead, but it’s possible.”

Julius: “If that is the case, it would assume for convenience that everyone approaching is one who schemes to resurrect the Witch of Envy, even the Kingdom’s envoys. It has been a long-standing mystery as to why the Sage, who was supposed to be friendly towards the Kingdom, would display such violent conduct as told in reports.”

Seemingly relieved, Julius spoke, spurring Subaru’s admiration with a “So there’s also this way of thinking?”.

Indeed, it was plenty common to find defense systems having been prepared and left behind by great men in the past that, even after the death of their master, would still remain in place, driving away intruders. In a world where magical devices were rife, it was not so strange for such a system to exist.

Subaru: “If that’s the case, I want you to give me a break because it means this trip will be a waste.”

Ram: “With the Sage dead, it is merely a matter of collecting any documents left by the Sage. It’s still too early to leave the world in despair, Barusu.”

Subaru: “I’m not gonna let nee-sama’s bullying manner get to my head.”

If Julius’s speculations were correct, the whole foundation of the journey would be undermined. But even against such a possibility, Ram’s determination would not waver nor change. As one would expect.

Anastasia: “In any case, keepin’ watch for hundreds of years without rest… it may be possible, altho’ it ain’t realistic. Besides, I don’t think there’s such a need to be disappointed ‘bout whether Sage Shaula’s dead or alive.”

Emilia: “Really? Why?”

Anastasia: “It’s not particularly surprisin’ that they’d be alive even now, if they’re from a long-lived race. My Echidna’s birth itself was hundreds of years ago.”

Pulling out the white scarf from inside her robe, Anastasia smiled. In response to that, Emilia stare absent-mindedly, and immediately touched her pendant, thinking of Puck.

Emilia: “Oh, my Puck also lives a long time. I’m not losing to that Echidna.”

Subaru: “Why are you competing with each other, Emilia-tan? Well, my Beako is quite the loli-granny too. Right?”

Beatrice: “Do you think Betty will just laugh and answer that, I suppose? Disgusting, in fact.”

As Beatrice sneered with anger, Subaru shrugged. With the conversation having diverted from the main subject, Ram clapped her hands.

Ram: “The Sage being dead or alive is irrelevant to the discussion. Leaving that aside, the problem is the true identity of the light that Barusu saw. Whether that is dangerous, or just Barusu’s delusion, we have to reach a conclusion.”

Subaru: “It’s about time our relationship develops to the point you don’t doubt whether what I report is true or false, you know?”

Ram: “It is not about deciding whether it is a lie or not, Ram will concede on this matter.”

If they did not reach a consensus, it was likely that there would not be any progress. In any case, the discussion ended up returning to the subject of the true identity of the light.

Subaru: “I… think it’s dangerous. At the very least, it’s not friendly.”

Julius: “And the basis is, just intuition?”

Subaru: “…Well, that’s right.”

Julius: “Right—that’s troublesome.”

The light of the Watchtower—Subaru was convinced that it was the cause of both of his Deaths, but to convey that fact was a difficult task. So, he thought it would be impossible to use “intuition” as his reason, but surprisingly, Ram took that reply seriously.

And not only Ram, but Emilia and Julius too.

Subaru: “Eh? Just based on my intuition? You don’t have any more doubts about it?”

Emilia: “If this were only a hunch, I’d think so, but it’s Subaru’s intuition, right? In that case, it makes more sense to think about it than to doubt it suddenly.”

Julius: “Do not be so self-deprecating. You have been through this kind of hopeless situation already, have you not? There is a certain kind of intuition that only works for such a person. To put it in other words, it is somewhat alike a rule of thumb. It is by no means something to make light of.”

Ram: “Like when field mice change their territory before heavy rain. Barusu’s intuition cannot be fooled.”

Subaru: “It’s just stupid enough… Is that what you’re saying?”

Like a reflex reaction to the poisonous remarks thrown his way, Subaru’s shoulders relaxed a tad.

Not being able to reveal the source of his information, even to those close to him, was an absurd reality. Subaru had come across the same situation many times, but each time he was saved by the concern and trust of the others around, in the same way, over and over again.

Rem in the Royal Capital, Otto and Ram in Sanctuary, Emilia and Beatrice in the city of Priestella. They all believed in Subaru, in what he was.

Subaru: “There’s no way to catch their attention in a friendly way. If you even make a loud voice, Bear-san will come to welcome us before the Sage does.”

Julius: “That is something I wish to avoid. Then, the realistic means should be sending Emilia-sama’s magic… Or so it seems.”

While looking towards the Watchtower, Julius stretched his right hand and closed one of his eyes.

It was a gesture akin to a painter attempting to get a sense of distance. Then staying like that, silently thinking for a moment,

Julius: “Roughly, from here to the Watchtower is around ten kilometers—it is not a realistic range for Emilia-sama’s magic, if produced from the front of the flower garden.”

Subaru: “By the way, how far can you cast your magic Emilia-tan?”

Emilia: “How far? Well, I haven’t tried to measure it before, so I don’t know. But I don’t think it can reach the tower from here. It’ll disappear before it hits.”

The silhouette of the Watchtower at their current location was clearly closer than the silhouette visible before the Sand Time. In fact, on their trip through the field of flowers, they had come very close.

Even so, the plan to aim at the tower from the edge of the flower garden was not practical.

Subaru: “If passage were granted by simply informing them of one’s existence, Reinhard would’ve been able to get through. Being that guy, it’s like… couldn’t he make a magical attack that could cover a distance of about ten kilometers?”

Julius: “There is no way of knowing that, except asking him, but it is likely that Reinhard did not get through Sand Time when challenging this trial. We have only reached this far because Anastasia-sama… No, because Echidna knew the way.”

Subaru: “Got a point there… Ahh, shit. Don’t you know anything more?”

As the proposal was rejected, Subaru pointed to Eridna with a melancholic voice. Then, playing her part as Anastasia, Eridna appeared skillfully handling the muffler concealing her state,

Echidna: “I do not like you putting it like that. Just being able to claim the existence of a path to be found after Sand Time is an achievement that had yet to be accomplished. Should you not give me more credit?”

Subaru: “We’re the first to get here, is that it? Claiming to have the way there in memory, but you’re actually a newspaper man on delivery duty with only a faint recollection. You’re not doing your job.”

Echidna: “Hmm, got a point there.”

Despite Subaru’s theory being rude, Eridna did not attempt to refute it. The scarf kept silent, and that pondering attitude also passed onto Anastasia. Then, suddenly raising her face, Anastasia,

Anastasia: “That’s right. But now, looks like it’d be better to sum up the things we know at the moment.”

Subaru: “The things we know—So.”

Anastasia: “Natsuki-kun’s light of the Tower, as well as its supposed danger, the Witchbeasts’ flower garden present in front of the Tower, the three Sand Times, ‘n… Is there somethin’ else?”

The information that Anastasia listed had all been established so far.

It was important to build a path and pave the way to a conclusion. Subaru folded his arms and recalled the journey thus far and the dangers he had witnessed, for a while.

Subaru: “Now, this is the place that we came to after choosing to cross the Sand Time of the night. Then there’s the fact that it’s too much of a burden on the ground dragons to pass through that flower field. Also, I’m pretty sure Meili brought a Witchbeast alongside us without telling anyone.”

Meili: “Ehh?!”

Subaru spoke while counting on his fingers, and Meili's shoulders hitched in a panic. Everyone's eyes turned to the little girl, having seen her blatant reaction.

In response, Meili hurriedly shook her head and,

Meili: "Wha, wait, wait. Yes, onii-san is right, but… how does onii-san know that?"

Subaru: "Guesswork. It was just a trick question."

Julius: "Still, it seems that Subaru's imagination was right—What will you do?"

Julius, in a quiet voice, questioned what should be done regarding Meili's betrayal. Hearing that attitude, Meili's face turned pale, but Subaru did not wish to make matters worse.

Stopping Julius with his hand and fixing his eyes on Meili,

Subaru: "Don't worry. I'm not talking about scolding her. I understand it's just your insurance. Still, it was just a suspicious factor."

Meili: "D-Do you want me to let it go? Then, you won't be angry?"

Subaru: "There's no need to release it. If you think you need one, please keep it. If we're being surrounded or chased by a group of courtesan bears, it'd be a great help."

Meili: "…"

Thinking he must be joking, Meili widened her eyes and just nodded. Just to be sure, Subaru stared back at Julius, who had yet to loosen his vigilant eyes,

Subaru: "That's what children do. Let's give her a pass."

Julius: "If that is the appropriate handling of a child growing up, then I shall do my utmost to do likewise. However, the girl's power is too strong to simply trust in her openly. Even more so in the land of Augria, which can be said to be the garden of Witchbeasts."

Subaru: “Even so. We’re all sharing the same dragon carriage, so please get along.”

With that statement of Subaru’s, Julius hesitated a bit and then ceased reaching for his sword. Then, instead of the silent Julius, Emilia raised her hand.

Emilia: “So, Subaru. Let’s continue the talk from earlier.”

Subaru: “Yes, yes. Let’s move on.”

Emilia: “When it comes to passing through the flower garden… What do you plan to do? Do you want to try the same thing with another Sand Time and see if it goes to a different place?”

Subaru: “That’s one way, but… There’s something I’d like to try briefly.”

Emilia: “Something you’d like to try?”

Having no clue as to what Subaru was thinking, Emilia tilted her head in confusion. Copying that from Emilia, Subaru turned his eyes toward the edge of the flower meadow—the sea of flowers that filled the area up to the Watchtower.

Of course, it was not possible to see its end—

Subaru: “If the flower garden comes to an end somewhere, we won’t have to worry about being targeted from all sides at least. It’s worth a try checking whether there is an edge like that or not, right?”

3

—And so, their plan had all the participants verifying the edge of the flower garden.

Julius: “If moving in separate groups, getting lost would be devastating. Besides, it would not be sensible to advance in the immediate vicinity of monsters without Miss Meili’s assistance.”

Julius’s point gained unanimous approval. Subaru also agreed on this, and decided to give priority to safety rather than convenience alone.

Subaru: “Well, I’d like to start departing soon, but.”

Everyone prepared to depart, getting on their respective dragon carriage or ground dragon.

With the rule to always keep the Watchtower’s silhouette on their right side, and with the direction they were heading towards was to the left, the party would make sure they were heading north.

However, whether the rules of east, west, north, and south still worked in the Sand Dunes, was a different affair altogether.

Subaru: “Thinking calmly about it, this whole place’s also a strange case of space-time distortion. If by going through Sand Time you arrive here, it’s somewhat similar to Door Crossing…”

Beatrice: “I don’t know what Subaru is trying to say, in fact. It’s true that distorting space and making physical distance vague is one application of Door Crossing, I suppose. Betty set up Subaru into it once too, in fact.”

Subaru: “You did, to me? When?”

Beatrice: “…I’ll never forget it, it was on our first encounter, I suppose.”

Subaru: “First encounter… Oh! In Roswaal’s mansion, when I completed that infinite loop corridor in one try! I’m sorry about that. Even though it was so hard for you to prepare it, I’m sorry for tramping all over your hard work… Sorry?”

Beatrice: “You seriously apologizing for it is seriously frustrating, in fact! Forget it, I suppose!”

Subaru: “You reminded me…”

Beatrice: “Hmph! That’s it, in fact!”

Riding with him, Beatrice was getting somewhat angry, so Subaru had no choice but to take on the difficult task of handling the peculiar girl. For the time being, he held her in his arms and soothed her, commanding Patrasche to walk towards the dragon carriage. And then,

Subaru: “Are you ready there?”

Julius: “Without a problem. Now all we need is for Emilia-sama to perform her task.”

Emilia: “That’s right.”

Nodding to Julius, who had finished his preparations on the carriage’s coach, Subaru looked up at the roof. Much like in their march into the flower garden, Emilia’s position was still fixed on the roof of the dragon carriage.

Subaru raised his hand to Emilia, who seemed enthusiastic while standing high, and asked her to create a landmark as she had before.

Subaru: “Emilia-tan, please here. For the time being, this is our base camp. Be as quiet as possible… like, so you don’t disturb the Witchbeasts.”

Emilia: “Okay, understood. If I wake up a Witchbeast with this, all the trouble we went to being all quiet back then would be meaningless, right. So, quietly, quietly, quieeetly.”

Subaru slowly moved his hand gesturing to go slowly, and Emilia mimicked it while, before their eyes, a tower of ice emerged from the sand.

It seemed like they were right in their judgement that it would proceed quietly; in fact, the ice tower was built slowly and gently, so the usual tense sound in the air went unheard. A few parts had come out looking a bit weak, but it had a fine finish, and seemed to be able to fulfill its role safely.

Emilia: “Is it okay?”

Subaru: “Alright, no problems. As expected, Emilia-tan!”

Giving the anxious Emilia a big “O” and “K”, Subaru peeked in the direction of the flower beds.

There were concerns regarding the Witchbeasts, namely if they would be able to sense Mana activity, but fortunately, there was no sign of anything other than the sweet scent of nectar flowing from the flower gardens.

Actually, it seemed quite dull.

Subaru: “Even now I wonder, why are they pretending to be a flower garden…? If they want to camouflage themselves, don’t you think a desert is a strange place to do it?”

Beatrice: “Witchbeasts aren’t expected to have that much intelligence, I suppose. They’re simple, can’t do anything except what is carved into their instincts, and they think of nothing else, in fact. Animals are just like this, I suppose.”

Subaru: “I see. Very interesting—”

Beatrice, held near his bosom, gave a bitter evaluation. Nodding at those words, Subaru diverted his gaze to the flower garden and aimed to give the order to their departure—and he noticed.

At the edge of his field of vision that contained the flower garden, a change took place, somewhere different from the flower garden.

The Watchtower glowed.

Subaru: “—Emilia!!”

Emilia: “—?!”

Immediately, Subaru raised his voice and called out to Emilia on the roof. Hearing the urgency in his voice, Emilia stiffened. But, the effect of the light exceeded that.

Subaru: “—Hk?!”

Making a violent sharp sound, the ice tower took a direct hit from something, and smashed it to pieces.

The large, slender ice tower, its height ten meters, was nothing but fragile. However, as if destroying a sandcastle, the attack broke the ice with ease, and reduced it to Mana.

—Again, he had not been able to see it. But, he understood.

Subaru: “I knew that light was an attack—”

Beatrice: “Subaru! Next one is coming!”

While his body was bathed by fragments of shattered ice, Subaru turned his neck to Beatrice’s call. Immediately after that, the Watchtower shone again, as per his intuition.

The light’s next blow was aimed at Subaru.

—The light would approach at a speed that did not even allow them to blink, and it would target his vital points with its single blow.

Its devastating power was already known to Subaru, who had died from it.

Therefore, the moment his brain detected that it has been targeted by the light, Death had already been determined.

Subaru: “…”

The light attacked, aiming straight for Subaru’s forehead.

It was Death itself, killing its prey without a sound, only leaving behind a skewing wind. Natsuki Subaru was once again about to be killed in cold blood, with no assistance possible.

Subaru: “—E · M · M!”

Beatrice: “I suppose!”

—In this case, Natsuki Subaru was not the only one being aimed at.

A pleasant sound echoed, and the attack that should have hit Subaru, missed. The cause was simple. Subaru’s strength surpassed that of the attack.

E · M · M was one of the three original spells Subaru had developed with Beatrice.

This particular one was Absolute Defense Magic.

During the activation of E · M · M, Subaru would not receive any interference from the outside world, being rendered unable to move. It was the result of applying all of Beatrice's Yin magic skill and knowledge into manipulating time and space in a limited area around Subaru.

Subaru: "It's a bit weird realizing that the effect is similar to that asshole's—Guah?!"

The Sin Archbishop of Greed, Regulus, could stop the effect of time on his body by transferring his heart.

E · M · M could be said to be a downsized version of that ability. However, there were no harmful side effects like one's heart stopping, so a person would become invincible as long as their Mana was not exhausted.

In this situation, though, it was nothing more than buying some time.

Subaru: "But, ugh?! Just buying time?! I've got important things to do??!!"

Beatrice: "Hey! Subaru, what are you screaming for, in fact?! Are you okay, I suppose??"

Behind Subaru, Beatrice's worried voice yelled as she used his body as a shield. It was like this because even though they were protected, sound and shock were still being transmitted.

After E · M · M activation, the light of the Watchtower seemed to wonder why Subaru was not dying even after being hit again and again, so it kept bombarding him with consecutive attacks.

Subaru: "Guh?! Gah?! Ugh?!"

Its rate of fire, and the accuracy of its aim, were both extraordinary.

Although the pain and the force of the blow was one that Subaru's body did not suffer, unfortunately, it was human reflex to react with a yell upon being hit by something.

Emilia: "Subaru—! Geez… Ehh!"

Watching Subaru being showered by a concentrated attack, Emilia attempted to support him from atop the roof.

Looking to protect Subaru from the Watchtower's attack, a thick and enormous ice barrier was erected from the sandy ground. Perhaps, the toughest defensive wall Emilia could create in an instant.

It was well-intentioned, a shield from the attacks targeted at Subaru, but—

Emilia: "No way?!"

Julius: "Even the ice walls do not stand a chance!"

Emilia let out a shriek and Julius a startled cry; as they could see, the ice wall was crushed in one shot.

That unbelievable power—was not the only reason. The ice wall was struck, but somehow weakened the light enough to avoid having it hit Subaru. Much of it rebounded and struck the sand, which kicked up a white smoke.

Looking at it closely, the marks of the destruction of Emilia's ice wall showed that it had been melted, rather than pierced.

Emilia: "Heat? Did the heat, melt the ice?"

Julius: "Something fell to the ground… a needle?"

Looking at the effects of the attack, Emilia and Julius simultaneously reached different conclusions.

In the meantime, the assault resumed. Subaru was struck by a staggering number of attacks, and even though he was in an invincible state, it was exceeding their limit.

Beatrice: “Subaru! There’s a problem, in fact!”

Subaru: “I’m listeni—Ah! But I can’t—Ugh!”

Beatrice: “If things keep going the way they are, we’ll be running out of Mana very soon, I suppose!”

Subaru: “Already?!”

Beatrice: “It’s almost over, in fact!”

At Beatrice’s cry, Subaru bit his molars while still under fire.

Of course, what Beatrice meant to say was not “Since Mana is running out, you should supply more, I suppose”, but “Since Mana is running out, we should counterattack, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Can you do it?”

Beatrice: “What a foolish question, I suppose!”

Beatrice did not answer his question by saying she could not. Hearing the response of his trusted partner, Subaru loosened his jaw, relieving his molars, and steeled himself.

Subaru: “The third one’s incomplete… Let’s go with the second one!”

Beatrice: “I’m going to deactivate E · M · M right after it hits!”

There was no time.

Subaru looked at Emilia, Emilia looked at him and nodded. There was no time to discuss concrete measures. But he believed it was conveyed.

Subaru: “—Guah?!”

The light set off, and again Subaru suffered a direct hit. Because E · M · M had been activated, the attack would not reach him—it would be canceled.

Each of the original spells was a trump card that could only be used once a day. With the release of E · M · M, Subaru would lose its protective function against that light.

And they would have to fight back before the next one arrived—

Subaru: “The light—”

As if it could read Subaru’s actions, the next strike of light was even faster.

Thus far, the speed, power and frequency were obviously meant to finish off Subaru. Naturally, with Subaru’s paper-thin defense, only one direct hit would be enough to send to the other side. And so—

Emilia: “Stop—Hk!”

A vortex of magical power was deployed in multiple manners in front of Subaru, creating walls of ice standing on the sand ground. This time, the defense was not limited to only one wall; instead, six sheets of ice walls had been conjured at the same time.

The light struck straight into those six lines of defense. It went through the first one without a hitch, the second one with ease, the third one like it was nothing.

However, there was a slight resistance on the fourth sheet, and the fifth one could endure it for only a bit. By the sixth and last one, the speed of light was clearly dulled—but could still go through it.

The light penetrated through the sixth ice wall, and was about to pierce through the forehead of the defenseless Subaru.

—Just before it hit, a Knight’s sword drew a semicircle, catching the light that had lost its speed and cutting it down.

Julius: “Unfortunately, there would be a number of women who would grieve if he is hurt—”

Rushing from the dragon carriage to this place and striking the light with a slash of his sword without minding the danger, was Julius.

Emilia’s defense had weakened it, and Julius had stopped it. Even though he was slightly jealous of that combined strike, Subaru’s preparation was complete.

Subaru: “Let’s go! The second! Absolute Invalidation Magic, E · M · T!”

Lifting the hood that protected him from the sand, Subaru opened his mouth wide and chanted.

Then, hiding behind Subaru’s back, Beatrice drained Mana from Subaru and multiplied it with her own magical power to cast new magic.

Subaru: “…”

In the next moment, a light expanded around Subaru and Beatrice, forming a spherical field of about ten meters, also encompassing the dragon carriage.

The result was the equivalent of having wrapped themselves in a transparent, invisible sphere of light.

However, the effect was tremendous.

Julius: “This is…”

In front of the astonished Julius, the Watchtower once again radiated light. Noticing it at the corner of his eyes and immediately grabbing hold of his sword, the next second, he opened his eyes wide.

The light went straight ahead, aiming directly for Subaru, but the moment it entered the field, it simply lost all its momentum. The overwhelming speed that seemingly surpassed even bullets disappeared, and the only thing remaining after it had lost its velocity and power was a strange white object, both long and slender.

It was easily brought down by a swing of Julius’s sword, falling on the sand and scattering away.

Subaru: “A needle, huh?”

Julius: “Something like that. No, more than that, Subaru, this magic…”

Subaru: “Wait, wait, wait! There are heaps of things I want to talk about, but for now we have to withdraw! Get in the dragon carriage right away! Let’s get out of here! We can’t take too long!”

Julius: “—! Understood! Let’s hurry!”

With the call of urgency, Julius jumped into the dragon carriage, taking back his questions. He took the reins immediately, and the dragon carriage turned its front towards the Sand Time.

It would be a suicidal act to go towards the Watchtower now. This was the right decision, there was no choice but to believe it.

Subaru: “Let’s go! Don’t get too far from me! Stay within the light!”

Emilia: “Wah, Subaru, wow! Even though there’s so many lights being fired…”

Clinging on to the roof of the running dragon carriage, Emilia watched Subaru with astonishment.

It seemed like even though it had no effect, the light continued to target Subaru. But no matter how many attacks it launched, the light would simply lose its power as soon as it entered the E · M · T field, and fall into the sand as was. The invalidation is absolute.

Julius: “At any rate, it is a terrific power. Is this yours and Beatrice-sama’s trump card of some sort?”

Subaru: “One of the trump cards! I’m not going to spoil it! For now, our priority should probably be getting away from the Watchtower!! No, definitely!”

Julius: “I believe it is an application of Yin magic, invalidating the effects of Mana within the range? If that is the case, it is the natural enemy of mages… No, you are a formidable opponent for anyone who uses Mana to aid their skills.”

Subaru: “I would say, it only seems to give a relative advantage, it doesn't make me stronger. I'll still lose in a fair fight against a strong guy. This is the ability that I developed thinking of when I'll give Ros-chi a black eye."

It seemed Julius had genuinely praised him, so he felt a little better. Of course, escaping from the attack of the Watchtower also brought him relief, but in any case, it was nothing more than letting his guard down.

However, it was probably impossible to predict what letting his guard down would bring right now, even for Subaru, so no one could be blamed.

Emilia: "Subaru! Are we going back to the dunes in front of the flower garden like this?"

Subaru: "For just a short time, but yeah! We need to polish and refine our countermeasures anyhow—"

While voicing such voice, on their retreat to the swirling sandy breeze of Sand Time—On the moment the E · M · T field touched it, the World broke.

Subaru: "Huh—?"

Beatrice: "Oh no, I suppose!"

Until then, Beatrice had been clinging to his body with relief at getting through the attacks.

Right in front of her eyes, the view of the nightly sand dunes was torn apart, causing her voice to tremble.

Beatrice: "The distortion of space is invalidated by E · M · T, in fact!"

Subaru: "Eh?"

Beatrice: "It's like you said, I suppose! The distortion here is similar to Betty's Door Crossing in that house. In other words, the distorted space will return to its original state!"

Subaru: “What does that mean—?”

Subaru’s question did not reach its end, only the feeling of Beatrice clinging to him remained.

Just like that, the World was torn and unraveled like paper, coming apart, and the crack in space swallowed up Patrasche with Subaru and Beatrice, and the dragon carriage with Emilia and the others.

Subaru: “Not good… Emilia?!”

Emilia: “Subaru—”

Thrown into the darkness, Subaru cried out the effect of gravity lost its hold on him.

He could not tell top from bottom from left from right. He did not know where the dragon carriage was. But he could hear Emilia’s voice echoing in response to Subaru’s cry.

Subaru: “This is—”

Bad, before he could say it, he was thrown out into the other side of the broken space.

4

???: “…”

The boundary between the flower field and the sand sea was crumpled and broken, and it was seen that a small group had been swallowed in it.

???: “…”

From far, very far away, witnessing that, a shadow wriggled inside the tower.

It walked away from the window, stepped onto the cobblestones, and went down a spiral staircase.

Its steps were slow, but gradually became faster and more impatient.

Shadow: “—Found him.”

And, as if it had not spoken in many years, let out a musky murmur.

Except, no one who heard it would be mistaken, that it sounded absolutely delighted.

Shadow: “Found him.”

That much was certain.

Chapter 13:
Ridicule of the Sands

1

—Space distorted, the world broke, and they fell straight into the rift in reality that resulted.

As if it was made of fragile thin paper, the world was easily torn apart.

Swallowed by the distorted space, Subaru's eardrums heard no sound, a stark contrast to the magnificent visuals around him.

He only heard a voice screaming, as if someone were calling him.

Even that voice faded away as well, and before long, he could not hear it.

The feeling of someone holding his chest also disappeared, and the fingers pulling onto him detached, drifting away from him.

With no one around, abandoned in this empty place, it seemed like he had become completely alone.

While being tormented by such loneliness and sadness, Subaru's consciousness began slowly emerging.

And then—

2

???: "—How long are you going to sleep? Get up, lazy Barusu."

Subaru: "Ahhk?"

Feeling something sharp poking at his side, Subaru got up screaming in pain at the shock.

Having jumped up reflexively, the sand clinging onto his body fell to the ground. Coughing, he spat out dirt which had gotten into his mouth.

Subaru: “Ahk! Thu! Pthu! Huh! What? What happened??”

Rubbing his eyes, he checked his surroundings as he rose to his feet. With shaky knees and a poor foothold, he got up comically. Beneath his feet, a sea of fine grains of sand yet remained.

As his consciousness returned, Subaru could determine that this was an extension of the Augria Sand Dunes. However, the view around him was not clear. Because it was dark, far too dark.

Amidst a darkness where gazing at his own hands was not possible, Subaru’s eyes caught the presence of a small artificial light.

???: “You can sleep so well in such an emergency, it is amazing. No words.”

A stern voice hit him, and the owner of the light snorted.

That which emitted the light was a type of magic stone, processed Lagmite ore had been fashioned into a tool like a lantern. Looking at the face illuminated by the light, Subaru raised his eyebrows.

Subaru: “—Ram, is that you?”

Ram: “Who else can you see? Rem? I did not expect such a lame answer.”

Subaru: “…You and Rem look alike, but it oozes from that inside that you’re not her.”

In response to Ram, who seemed harsher than usual, Subaru gives a bitter reply. Receiving the lantern from her, he looked around the area, illuminating it.

Subaru: “This place, where is it? What happened?”

Ram: “Ram also wants to know the whereabouts of this place. As for what happened, it is three times worse than what Barusu can imagine.”

Subaru: “Does that mean you expect me to be an optimist? Do you look down on pessimists?”

Ram: “In this case, I wonder which is better.”

That reply was probably accompanied by a shrug.

Even with her right next to him, it was hard to tell Ram’s appearance in the darkness, as the space illuminated by the light was awfully large. It seemed that they were in some sort of hollow space.

There was a slightly tall ceiling overhead, joined with walls that indicated the extent of its depth.

Subaru: “Can’t feel any air flow, can’t see the sky. You mean we were sent somewhere…?”

Ram: “If Beatrice-sama’s words before we were separated are true, the space distortion is the cause.”

Subaru: “Separated… That’s right, separated! Where are the others?!”

While listening to Ram’s disinterested and emotionless demeanor, his understanding caught up with reality.

Subaru moved the light from right to left, seeking figures other than Ram’s in their surroundings. However, as he searched the illuminated space, the light was not reflected by the silhouettes he so desperately wanted to see.

Ram: “As you can see, we were separated. Barusu’s magic nullified the Watchtower’s deception… The result is not clear, but maybe instead of going into the right path, we were trapped in a distorted space-time where we will wander forever.”

Subaru: “What are you saying?! Why are you so calm? This combination of us two… it’s totally random?!”

With Ram’s calm explanation, Subaru’s face turned pale and so he raised his voice.

Beatrice's cries, space breaking apart right before his eyes; he was instantly reminded of it. The rift had swallowed the entire party consisting of Subaru and the others, and dragged them into another space.

At that time, Subaru and Ram were both travelling along, but they should have been in different groups. Subaru was riding Patrasche, and Ram was in the dragon carriage.

Ram: "It seems that this separation did not take into account who was in contact with who, to determine who accompanies who. At the moment we entered the rift, Ram should have been hugging Rem… But it turned out like this."

Subaru: "I was also supposed to be clinging to Beako. And yet I can't find her… I can't see her… No way, there's only Ram here with me? What kind of grouping is this."

If the condition of that separation was not contact, then was there any other reason?

Their group was composed of eight people. There was no particular common feature that only Subaru and Ram shared. Again, was the grouping completely random?

Subaru: "No, I'll postpone guessing the conditions for now! More than that, we have to hurry and join up with everyone… No! There's something even more important! Rem!"

Ram: "…"

Subaru: "You and I are two, so it's still good. If any of the others who were separated are with someone else, there's still hope. But if there's someone who's alone, and if that's Rem… That's awful."

Emilia and Julius, the only two people responsible for making up the fighting power in this party, were of no concern. Meili and Beatrice could also manage to get by alone with their respective abilities. As for Anastasia or rather Eridna, probably there was her trump card that had been used to fight back against Lust.

Although less honorable than other ones, Subaru and Ram's combination was still manageable.

—But, Rem was a different story.

Unlike the others, Rem was unable to perform any independent actions by herself.

Even if someone was alongside her, protecting the perpetually sleeping girl would turn any kind of undertaking into a next-to-impossible task. And the worst of all, if Rem were to be completely isolated from the others, then Death would be the only thing awaiting her in this lonely sand sea.

Subaru: "It's important for us to meet up with everyone else, but the top priority is securing Rem! I can't leave her in such a lonely place. That's the one thing that's absolutely… Absolutely not good. It absolutely cannot…!"

Ram: "…Barusu."

Subaru: "Because I said I'd bring you here… I thought that you might be able to wake up if you meet the Sage, so I did that. It's useless. Absolutely, shit, just Rem…!"

Ram: "Barusu, calm down. Even I will lose it now…"

Subaru: "Why are you telling me to calm down? Are not you worried because Rem is missing from your memories?!"

Ram: "—Hk! There is no such thing!"

Imagining the worst possibility, Subaru started mumbling desperately about the future, and enumerating his regrets. Hearing Subaru speak, Ram could not stand it and exploded.

She grabbed the confused Subaru by his collar and pressed him hard against the sand wall behind him.

Ram: "Do you think you are the only one who cares about Rem? Do not push it too far, Barusu. Even without my true feelings, Ram is still Rem's older sister. Do not make a fool of me."

Subaru: "…"

Ram: "…I can still slightly feel my connection with her, so at least for now she is safe. That much is certain, so settle down for the time being."

It was not as if that face expressed any emotion. However, seeing the unbearable unease and distress in her eyes as she tried to appear calm, Subaru loosened the tension in his shoulders. Seeing that, Ram also moved her hands. Released from being pushed on the wall, Subaru looked down in shame.

Subaru: "…My bad. I'm sorry. Really, I was the worst idiot right now."

Ram: "That's just as usual. If Barusu starts reflecting on his life, it'll take a whole day. Stop wasting our time."

Subaru: "…Uh, my bad."

Experiencing Ram's sharp tongue and emotional testimony, Subaru finally let out a single apology. Then he slapped his cheeks with all his strength, regaining his fighting spirit.

Although Ram had assured him that Rem was safe, the fear of her being alone could not be dispelled. Their situation would not change if they did not reunite with the others soon.

Subaru: "Anyway, let's rush this reunion. Ram, can't you use your connection with Rem to work out her location?"

Ram: "It's difficult. That girl is asleep, so the only thing transmitted is her heartbeat. There is another means, Clairvoyance, but… that's not too reliable."

Subaru: "Why?"

Ram: "These Sand Dunes, it's full of Witchbeasts, and there are almost no ordinary animals or plants around. Clairvoyance is not able to borrow their sights if their wavelength does not match with Ram's. It does not synchronize with the Witchbeasts. At this time, Ram is only able to borrow the eyes from Barusu's ground dragon."

Subaru: “Patrasche? No, that should be enough. I want to check if Patrasche and Gian are with someone. It’d be helpful if they were with everyone from the dragon carriage.”

Ram: “…That would not be very useful.”

Subaru felt frustrated at Ram’s disinterested attitude, tilting his head in thought. Now was the time to collect as much information as they could to get reunited again.

And yet, he was unable to understand why Ram was hesitating here.

However, before he could touch on what she had truly meant, the answer appeared in front of them both.

Subaru: “—?”

What had suddenly passed by in the corner of his eyes, was a light. A light different from the lantern he was holding.

Immediately shivers ran through Subaru’s body, as he had had a bad experience with light moving through the edge of his sight, but the light that appeared was shaken by a gentle movement, totally different from that.

The light gradually came closer, and slowly the figure became clearer,

???: “Ram-san and Natsuki-kun, it seems that yer discussion’s over?”

Subaru: “—Anastasia and Patrasche?”

Hearing the familiar Kararagi dialect, Subaru’s head slightly lifted in surprise. In front of him, holding a lantern apart from the one held by Subaru, and riding Patrasche’s back, was Anastasia.

In response to Anastasia’s question, Ram bowed while lifting the hem of her robe on the spot.

Ram: “Thank you for your consideration, Anastasia-sama. May I ask, how are the surroundings?”

Anastasia: “I just checked all the way back, but I couldn’t find anyone else. Only the three of us are out here… ‘n this sort-of-girl.”

Ram: “Is that so?”

Anastasia: “Gotta keep yer spirits up. Might not be much comfort, tho’.”

Ram: “Thank you for your concern. Oh, I see… I shall do so.”

To Anastasia on top of the dragon, Ram responded politely. From the course of the conversation, Subaru vaguely understood that Anastasia had been searching around.

But that was the extent of his satisfaction, for the lack of explanation left him displeased.

Subaru: “Hey, Ram. Weren’t you and I the only ones here? What does this mean, can you explain?”

Ram: “I do not remember telling you that Ram and Barusu were alone. Barusu was the one who made that rash judgment of his own accord. Unsightly.”

Subaru: “It’d be much more endearing if you said you were so worried about Rem you failed to mention it, nee-sama.”

Ram: “Haa—”

Hearing Subaru, Ram snorted her nose with her usual tone.

Feeling relieved with that attitude, Subaru then walked towards Anastasia.

Subaru: “Regardless of any deception, it’s good news that Anastasia is safe. I’m relieved.”

Anastasia: “Aren’t’cha confusin’ this deception of yers with a misunderstandin’? I’d be relieved to learn that I’m not alone. Besides, Natsuki-kun’s ground dragon, Patrasche-chan, was very helpful, a very good girl."

Stepping on the saddle, Anastasia carefully attempted to get off Patrasche. And Patrasche immediately crouched down to help her descent.

As expected, she was a proper ground dragon. A handsome ground dragon. A female, however.

Subaru: "No one else is hiding, right? It's genuinely just the four of us?"

Anastasia: "Includin' Patrasche-chan, there's no doubt that it's the four of us. Emilia-san and Julius'd have no reason not to come forth… but, I don't know about Meili-chan."

Subaru: "She might've taken advantage of the commotion to run away, huh… You don't have to say it."

Picturing the girl with braided hair in his mind, Subaru thought about Meili's options.

Just before being separated, Meili's secret insurance in having a Witchbeast accompanying them had been exposed by Subaru. Subaru, who had Returned by Death, actually knew that Meili's Witchbeast served to protect the dragon carriage, both from the Watchtower and flocks of attacking courtesan bears.

However, since that was an event that had not occurred in this loop, essentially, the only one who knew Meili's reason for having the Sand Earthworm follow them was the girl herself.

In this particular situation, having Meili escape the group and try to leave the Sand Dunes alone would not be strange.

Subaru: "But, she won't do that… that's what I want to believe."

Anastasia: "Expectations? Or should it be trust?"

Subaru: "Make what you will of it. Leaving that aside, how are the surroundings?"

Setting aside his stance on Meili, Subaru asked Anastasia to be briefed on her inspection. She put her hands in the sleeves of the robe and tilted her head, saying, "'Bout that, huh."

Anastasia: "Judgin' from what I saw, we're certainly in the Sand Dunes, but… Mayhaps this place could be underground."

Subaru: "Underground? How could there be an underground in the Sand Dunes?"

Anastasia: "Under the sand of the dunes. A cave… More of a cavity, so to speak, but the temperature's obviously lower than above ground, and the air's also feelin' kinda heavy."

Subaru nodded as the girl swung her robe in an appealing gesture, joining the front parts to keep out the cold.

Certainly, the atmosphere here felt far colder than in the earlier setting. Considering the space had a tall ceiling with the sky left unseen, it was a suitable guess.

Subaru: "Underneath the dunes. I've got a bad feeling about this. I pray that this isn't a Sand Earthworm's lair."

Anastasia: "Uh… That's…"

It was a plausible scenario.

In fact, they had witnessed the existence of Sand Earthworms inhabiting the ground, and given the enormity of the individual used by Meili, this cavity was just large enough for it to be possible. Considering the ecology of the eyeless Sand Earthworms, this dark space devoid of any light would be a perfect match for them.

Subaru: "I mean, this team seriously lacks combat power… Me, Ram and Anastasia, is this a special front of non-combatants?!"

Ram: "Emilia-sama's own Knight, proudly describing himself as a non-combatant… How hopeless."

Subaru: "I'm just stating the reality. Without Beatrice, I can't be so conceited as to rely on my whip skills alone."

In terms of everyone's self-defense measures, this really was a group that lacked fighting power. Ram had restraints of her own, and Subaru lacked Beatrice, to name a few.

Ram: "By the way, what about Beatrice-sama? Do you feel any connection relating to your Contract?"

Subaru: "Unfortunately, my and Beako's heart are strongly tied, but not in a realistic sense. No, Beatrice told me before that she could feel me, but I can't."

Ram: "Useless."

Subaru: "Shut up."

As Ram sighed and looked away, Subaru discreetly zoomed his face closer to Anastasia. As he murmured towards her calm profile,

Subaru: "So, can you fight? What do you say?"

"Anastasia": "—If it comes to it, of course I will fight no matter what. But it will shorten Ana's life. I would prefer avoiding it as much as possible. I will be relying on you guys."

Subaru: "Those expectations probably won't be met. I don't know if that's a good thing or bad."

For a moment, Subaru snorted at Anastasia, who appeared as Echidna.

Then, looking at Patrasche, who quietly waited for instructions, Subaru stroked the tip of her nose with his palm. The jet-black dragon kept silent and, leaning forward, nuzzled Subaru with her hard scales.

Subaru: "It hurts, it hurts, but… it's a relief. Emilia and Beatrice aren't here… but I'm relieved to have you. Except, it still doesn't make a complete group reunion."

Ram: "—Barusu."

As he was sharing his anxieties with Patrasche, as Ram was beckoning him, he looked back at her. Then, Ram crossed her arms while facing Subaru and jerked her chin towards Anastasia.

Ram: “We cannot stand here forever. Let’s move to meet up with the others. Fortunately, thanks to Anastasia, we have light. We will be moving onwards.”

Subaru: “Ohh… I didn’t know that the light was brought by Anastasia.”

Anastasia: “Just before the dragon carriage was swallowed, I could only grab the emergency bag that was prepared by Natsuki-kun. Thanks to you, I was able to bring in the light, a knife, and some emergency food.”

Anastasia pointed at Patrasche, where a small emergency bag was hanging on the saddle. It was the equipment that Subaru had prepared for the dragon carriage as a literal emergency kit.

Even if an opportunity did not occur in which its use was necessary, he felt relieved that he had thought of it.

Subaru: “You shouldn’t make fun of the wit I have in hand, after all. From now on, let’s not forget to check the emergency door at any place we stay in for the first time.”

Ram: “Jokes aside, it is Barusu’s credit. So, a light will be given to you as a reward, so go ahead and lead the way.”

Subaru: “Huuuh~… This is a reward?”

Passing him the lantern, both Ram and Anastasia got on Patrasche’s back. This scene, regardless of how anyone saw it, put Subaru in the position of a servant.

Anastasia: “As a matter of fact, three people’d easily fit… There’d be plenty of room if Ram-san and I cramp in, wouldn’t it?”

Ram: “Please stop there, Anastasia-sama. You can imagine Barusu would happily try to touch our bodies were he to be so close to them as to be able to touch them.”

Subaru: “Off you go imagining stuff without a reason to, but if you want to be like that, I’ll imagine a lot more than that! Don’t mess with me! I’ll give you a taste of puberty!”

Raising his middle finger, he argued back, prompting a wry smile from Anastasia. Ram reacted as usual, as Subaru continued walking into the cave with a lantern in his hand.

Subaru and Ram’s light skirmish made it seem like they had forgotten the circumstances—but it surely was a way to hide the anxiety in each respective heart, and brought just a bit of relief to their minds.

Perhaps they had both realized it, but they kept quiet.

3

Although walking was a struggle, Subaru and the others were advancing through the large cave in the sand.

As expected, Patrasche was used to it, and there would not be any problem with her movement even if two heavy stones were to be put upon her back. Subaru had learned the technique for walking in the desert these past few days, and was able to proceed without much difficulty. Albeit there was the feeling of sand entering his boots.

Subaru: “The wind… I can kinda feel it, and also can’t.”

Ram: “I feel it. But given how thin this wind is, it’s still a long way from being connected to above ground.”

Along the way, wetting his finger on his tongue, Subaru tried to examine the airflow, but it was not quite clear. On the other hand, with the wind-sensitive Ram feeling it out, she concluded that the exit was still far ahead.

The way to this exit was what he wanted to give priority to, looking to meet up with his companions. Unfortunately, though, there was no indication that the signs of wind would be very reliable.

Ram: “Emilia-sama and Julius-sama should not get lost due to the guidance of the Micro Spirits. And that is why I doubt that there is a malicious intent in the selection of this grouping.”

Subaru: “Well, it’s quite useful to be guided by a Micro Spirit. Damn, in my case, Beako’s so strong that she keeps the Micro Spirits away. She’s far beyond their capacity.”

To be clear, this was something beyond Emilia and Julius’s exceptional fighting power.

When setting out to look for a lost member, the search may not go as smoothly if they are left to do whatever they feel. They could only try not to overlook anything around them as much as possible while proceeding.

Anastasia: “Before Natsuki-kun woke up, Ram-san… seemed considerably shaken. She could not find Rem-san, but seems to be hiding it behind her attitude now.”

Subaru: “…Is that so.”

Secretly, Anastasia shared this anecdote, which made his fight with Ram after waking up feeling more and more awkward.

Subaru had spent the past year alongside Ram, after she had the memories of her sister completely erased. Any connection those two previously had must have left behind some remains after being wiped. If no one else, Subaru at least had to believe so.

“Anastasia”: “Well, it is not fun seeing you huddled up all gloomy and miserable like that, so why not look ahead if you are so down about it? If you do not, you might miss something important.”

Subaru: “…Don’t throw me off like that. You, stop giving me those nice words. You’re taking after your creator, enticing people like that.”

“Anastasia”: “Sooner or later, I wish you would start thinking of me separately from my creator. Girls will not like you if you are so insistent. This is something I have picked up with time.”

Subaru: “I don’t know any other approach. I’ll keep it in a corner of my mind.”

The tongue-in-cheek talkative exchange seemed to distract from the impatience and anxiety of not making any progress.

In the midst of that conversation, the party advanced through the large cave. Nothing really changed about the sand path and the sand walls—while walking along that path, there were a few things to think about. That was,

Subaru: “Even though I said to be wary that this might be a Witchbeast nest… We have yet to run into a Witchbeast.”

Ram: “That is what Ram is concerned about.”

Kicking the sand under his feet, Subaru grumbled at Ram as she expressed a similar opinion.

They continued into the large cave, and soon an hour had already passed. With no one and nothing around, their anxiety, impatience and bad premonitions continued to grow.

Of course, not having enemies show up was a welcome situation, but the extensive silence could not be of any help in wiping out the bad feelings regarding this place—It was much like being detached from the whole world.

Subaru: “No way, we couldn’t have been swallowed by a hyperspace that does not connect to anywhere, right?”

Anastasia: “Well then, would’cha tell me where the wind we’re relying on’s comin’ from? Do ya think it’s the heavy breathing of an unusually big and ferocious Witchbeast who owns this cave?”

Subaru: “That’s not even funny, it’s rather scary.”

In fact, it would not be surprising if that happened. They had already seen it with their own eyes that even the world could be broken apart. Whatever this rift was connected to, it would not be worth a surprise.

Ram: “Regardless of the maliciousness of this selection, it is hard to believe that whoever set it up had considered it could be broken. We were not aiming for such a thing with the negation spell, it was just a coincidence."

Subaru: "What do you mean, precisely?"

Ram: "It is useless to imagine the worst scenario that this road, as it is, is connected to a Witchbeast's stomach—Look, observe."

The lack of progress was leading to pessimistic theories, which Ram rationally rejected. Then, at the end of the explanation, she urged Subaru to look ahead, him having stopped.

Following her indication, Subaru held out the lantern to look forward. Then, the illuminated passage of the cavity became narrow, in front of their eyes—

Subaru: "It's a fork."

Anastasia: "Right or left, we gotta make a choice. What do we do?"

Subaru: "From what I know, Kurapika said to choose right when the time called for it."

Anastasia: "Who's that?"

Looking at it in practical terms, he remembered hearing that people tended to unconsciously choose to proceed left when they got lost. Perhaps it had to do with dominance, such as the dominant hand, dominant leg, and other complicated factors like those; that was said to be one way of thinking about it.

For that reason, Subaru wanted to follow the theory of an intellectual character he once knew and chose the right path which he thought was correct, but—

Ram: "So, Barusu, which way do you want to go?"

Subaru: "…Honestly speaking, left."

Ram: "What happened to Kurapika?"

Anastasia: “Who’s that?”

Subaru replied, Ram asked question after question, and Anastasia just poked fun.

If the words were taken at face value, then the exchange could be interpreted as such.

—But in reality, the three people who exchanged words had a stiff expression and worrisome looks on their faces. On top of that, even Patrasche, unable to speak, was staring at the right path with stern eyes.

The cause was the overwhelming negativity they were feeling from the right path. Abstractly speaking, they felt a detestable premonition. If more words were to be used, what they felt was more like dread.

Their instincts were ringing the alarm bell. Selecting the right path, would be deadly.

Subaru: “The right… I think it’s dangerous. I have a feeling it’s not going to be pleasant.”

Ram: “Surprisingly, I agree with Barusu. What you think Anastasia-sama?”

Anastasia: “If done the Kararagi way, majority wins, by the support of two votes… Besides, I’m honestly lackin’ the courage to choose the right side.”

As no sleeves would swing, Anastasia made the gesture of swinging both hands as the answer for everyone.

Subaru was not the only one. Ram and Anastasia both felt a strange sensation from the right path; Patrasche did as well. Therefore, the right road could not be chosen.

Subaru: “Then, left it is… that also feels like choosing a terrible option though.”

Ram: “So, turning back? There is nothing to gain in such a manner.”

Subaru: “There’s nothing to lose, that’s what you’re saying, I might just be overly negative.”

As Subaru failed to make a decision, Ram and Anastasia seemed ready to jump in.

Reluctantly shrugging his shoulders, Subaru stepped forth, walking in front of Patrasche. Straight towards the road on the left.

Despite his hesitation, by proceeding in that direction, the path on the right would deviate greatly from the large cavity. He found that the pressure that he felt through the walls of sand kept disappearing further and further, and the stiffness in his shoulders was naturally released.

Ram: “—What an unpleasant place.”

She felt the same thing, and as he heard Ram murmuring, Subaru agreed in silence.

At this crossroads, the right path caused overwhelming negative thoughts. They chose the left road out of something like instinct to avoid the other, but there was one more reason.

—Inside his chest, Subaru felt the presence of something shouting in joy towards the right path.

It would be dreadful to obey what it declared.

It was also undeniably a major factor as to why Subaru did not opt for that road.

4

Team Non-Combatant traipsed through the cave, and a few more hours passed after that fork.

Subaru: “…”

Anastasia: “…”

Ram: “…”

As they slowly advanced their search in the great cavern, the number of words spoken between the three dropped drastically.

With their fatigue, and not to mention the darkness, any sense of time was fuzzy, but what was truly wearing down their spirit along the walk was silence.

In fact, Subaru felt like several hours had passed, but he did not know if that was true. There was the possibility that they had utilized the time better than they thought, or even that they had completely squandered it.

What they knew for sure, was that there was no progress, no more than that.

Subaru: "…At that split, I wonder if we should have gone right."

Ram: "After that much silence, you can only think to complain? Stop it. It's shameful."

Murmuring, he moved his dry lips to complain, and Ram bitterly delivered a stab.

However, her poison also lacked ambition. Not being able to find anything, it caused her to also be slightly dominated by anxiety.

Although the foothold along that path of sand was shoddy, there was some confidence that they had already walked for a few kilometers. So with no end to the cave in sight, it could not be helped that they would be swept over by a bad feeling. It was natural that one would doubt that the wrong choice had been made.

Even more, if they reached a dead end, they would give up and turn back.

Subaru: "The barrage of lights above ground… What do you think it was?"

Subaru changed the direction of the topic, for fear that the negative conversation would continue as it was.

The topic that turned up was the light of the Watchtower that had triggered this situation in the first place—the defense mechanism of the dunes, which was believed to have been prepared by the Sage.

Ram: “It was a needle.”

Subaru: “A needle?”

To that question, Ram responded curtly. She spilled a sigh at Subaru’s follow-up question and gently stroked her pink hair,

Ram: “I do not know its principle in detail, but long and narrow needles enchanted with magic were being fired. The needles carried high heat, probably the effect of firing magic. But the needle itself seemed to be of special manufacture. As it was repelled and fell on the sand, it disintegrated and disappeared.”

Subaru: “…You got such a good glance at it, during all that uproar.”

Ram: “A quick glance would tell you that much.”

Without a doubt, it seemed Ram’s observation power was not as ordinary as she claimed it to be. In fact, with Subaru just staring at her, Anastasia shook her head in amazement.

In Ram’s case, she was aware of her own talents, but was still speaking sarcastically. Despite that, it was quite the analysis.

Subaru: “What do you think was the purpose?”

Ram: “Kill those approaching the Watchtower… it is a mystery why it relentlessly aimed at Barusu. It’s standard practice to take down the weaker enemies first, so that might be it.”

Subaru: “Crap, I can’t deny it!”

It would be only natural to arrive at the same conclusion when taking a bird’s-eye look at it. Nonetheless, thanks to that, there had been no casualties among those of the party.

The conclusion to be reached here, was that it was good to have a weak Subaru donning invincible magic. But in that case—

Subaru: “It means, a friendly encounter with the Sage would be difficult.”

Anastasia: “I think it’s premature to say so. Lookin’ at it from their point of view, they didn’t know who we were nor what we wanted, right? There’s a chance for a discussion to occur, it’s what I think.”

Ram: “At worst, our business is with the Sage’s knowledge, and not their personality. If they do not speak, you can just tie them up and make them taste an adequate level of pain until they do.”

Subaru: “Nee-sama, was that your villainous side talking?!”

Ram: “If there is something you want, take measures. This is not mere child’s play.”

Ram remained strangely calm in the face of Subaru’s astonishment. Just hearing those statements, he felt he was being reminded of how innocent and shallow his own resolutions were.

Regardless of whether it was actually put into practice, there was no doubt that Ram was prepared for it. That was naught but proof that she was serious about Rem.

Subaru: “…”

To touch Ram’s resolve, Subaru would be required to make some decisions regarding his own resolutions.

He had not thought of getting his hands dirty for Rem. Rem was not to be blamed for that either.

What he had to do was to be prepared to reap the results.

When confronted with the existence of the Sage, no matter what kind of opponent that is, he must be absolutely determined—He must be resolved to that degree.

Patrasche: “…”

Subaru: “Patrasche?”

At the same time Subaru bit his lips with those thoughts, Patrasche held her breath.

The ground dragon was glaring at the path with squinted eyes and neighed a little. Having noticed that stare, Subaru also stopped his feet and returned to soothe the ground dragon. He stroked the back of her neck and called out, “What’s wrong?”.

Subaru: “Did you see something? What…”

Ram: “—The reason would be this.”

On Patrasche’s behalf spoke Ram, interrupting Subaru. Anastasia frowned and looked at the passage, imitating Patrasche.

Of course, nothing could be seen anything within the extent of that darkness, but a different feeling was being stimulated rather than sight—Seeping into their nasal orifices was a smell of something burning.

Anastasia: “…Don’t’cha think it smells like fire?”

Ram: “I cannot think of anything else. But I do not think something like a kitchen could possibly be here.”

Subaru: “If this is fire… The reason for this smell is civilized people, right?”

Ram & Anastasia: “…”

At Subaru’s clinging question, neither Ram nor Anastasia could just easily nod.

He could also understand the girls’ judgment. But the smell that was drifting was clearly a scent of something supposedly burning. Ram said it was something like cooking; the aroma wafting through the air was similar enough.

A bonfire, or a stew for a meal. If that was the case,

Subaru: “Do you think there’s a possibility of that being Emilia and the others?”

Anastasia: “Assumin’ they were sent to the same place, there’s enough possibility. Nevertheless, whether it’s rational or unwise to use fire in such situation, I’d leave that judgement up to the others.”

Subaru: “…”

Even if discussed here, the answer regarding who aid ahead of the road would not arrive.

The idea of beckoning and checking the intents of the other party came to mind, but—

Anastasia: “Even if they’re at the end of the path it doesn’t mean they’re friendly.”

Supposing it was not Emilia and the others, could it be the Sage? It was hard to believe that the Sage who should be in the Watchtower would come down, but it was not unlikely.

In that case, if the Sage continued to be hostile, a corresponding assault was also to be expected.

Subaru: “…Hide the light and move forward? What I mean is, if they’re using fire then there’s light on their side. We, at least, should hide.”

Anastasia: “It’s strange to keep speculatin’ about it. We also gotta check what’s the cause, so I think it’s a reasonable idea.”

Anastasia nodded to Subaru’s proposal, and after that, Ram also quietly agreed with it.

When the lights of the two lanterns were turned off, the party went back to the path where the smell of fire was drifting from, relying only on Subaru’s light.

Ram: “Barusu.”

Subaru: “What?”

Ram: “If anything happens to you, we will leave you here and run away. Try not to hold a grudge.”

Subaru: “If you do that I’ll curse you.”

Ram’s words were those of encouragement, perhaps because she knew he would be fearful.

In the light held by Subaru, Ram slightly loosened her lips, and Subaru went straight through the passage. Feeling Patrasche’s breath behind him, the scent of the fire gradually grew more intense,

Subaru: “—! It’s the light.”

Beyond the passage, he found a slightly shimmering red light.

Subaru immediately darkened his own light and instructed the three behind him to be silent. Then he squatted down and stepped on the sand stealthily to confirm the existence of the light.

One step, two steps—as he moved forward, he could see that the light was on the other side of a corner. The passage was slightly bent to the left, and the fire was just beyond there.

Subaru: “…”

Quietly reaching the bend, he took a peek of the other side ever so slightly while leaning against the wall. At that moment, a wind carrying a slight heat tickled Subaru’s forehead and he unintentionally closed his eyes.

—Immediately after, Subaru’s footing dug into the soil unexpectedly, the sand slid, and his body rolled down.

Subaru: “Wha—?!”

Incapable of withstanding that surprise, Subaru forgot to hold on and rolled down the slope. The fine particles of sand were hard to grab on to, and so he slid all the way down to the bottom.

Plunging head-first into a pile of sand after rolling down a steep incline of about ten meters of height, Subaru again spat out sand and raised his body.

Subaru: "Ugh! Thu! Again sand… No, that then…"

Subaru shook his head and looked around. With the shock, he had dropped his lantern. As it was nearby, he started searching for it, stretching his hand, and he touched something hard.

For an instant, he thought he had found the lantern, but it felt different compared to the hardness what he had held. The surface was crisp and pleasant to touch, like a wooden stick. Despite its thickness and length, he judged it light when lifting it up.

Subaru: "What is it…?"

In that pitch-black darkness, even getting closer to it and straining his eyes would not relay to him its identity.

Smelling it timidly, the smell of charcoal was felt—

Subaru: "…"

The very next moment after he thought that, a light appeared behind him suddenly.

The wisps that appeared in the background were red, shimmering and primitive, and they were called flames. Then, as the flames began to light up the world, Subaru saw the true identity of the thing he had grabbed.

—Probably, it was a creature's foot.

Something that had once been an animal, burned until it turned into charred remains.

And around the place where Subaru was sitting, the remnants of former creatures that had become lumps of charcoal were scattered; Subaru had slipped right into the middle of countless, burned, dead bodies.

Subaru: "Ohh! Ah! AHH?!"

Throwing away the charred waste in his hand, Subaru aimed to retreat. However, a terrible flame existed at his rear, and his neck was burned by the heat wave, and this time, he fell down just on his face. And finally, he turned back and looked at it directly.

???: "—KSHEEEEEEGHHH!"

Subaru was thrown out of reality, facing a tremendous roar from his front.

Why were all the Witchbeasts' roars so disgusting as to irritate human beings to the limit of their disgust?

With such a high-pitched roar, it was like countless babies were crying all at once.

It was a blasphemous creature that Subaru had never seen, it burned red in a place full of burned bodies—it truly was a Witchbeast, but the color of its fur was different from what he had seen in the past.

As far as Subaru knew, all the Witchbeasts were distorted and ugly, but they were often in a form such that they bore a resemblance to an existing creature somehow.

That applied all the same for the White Whale or the Great Rabbit. For all cases, there was a basic foundation of an animal.

However, this time, he did not wish to apply the same concept to the Witchbeast that existed in front of him.

Witchbeast: "—KSHEEEEEEGHHH!"

The Witchbeast, once again, cried out. At first glance, some similarities could be found with a horse.

Thin, but strong legs of a quadruped, that existed to charge over the earth. It was the same as a horse, in that it possessed a trunk supported by its four legs and a long tail swaying from its rear.

However, there was a human torso in the part where the horse's neck should normally be, leading to the head. Compounding on the four legs, the human torso possessed two further arms. And there was no head above the neck of the human torso. As from the neck to the top, a Horn protruded.

It was the mark of a Witchbeast, a mark that branded it as something decisively different from other animals.

In place of its head, a horn grew. It possessed a head not. But if that were the case, where was the mouth from which its cry was raised? From the chest till the belly of the human torso, was a vertical gash, and inside the oral cavity, were fully-grown fangs aligned horizontally, asserting their existence.

Subaru: “…A monster.”

Even calling it a Witchbeast was somewhat absurd; rather it was a blasphemy of life.

To Subaru’s knowledge, it was close to a creature of fantasy called Centaur, half-man and half-horse, but that was a distorted figure, as if its production had been abandoned half-way.

From the back side of the human torso of the Centaur grew a mane of flame torso searing the sand cave with incredible power, red light urging forth.

Considering the strength of that blaze, who had created all the charred carcasses that lay around the place became clear. Using fire meant civilized people or whatever; it had been a mistake to embrace such expectations.

Subaru: “…”

The arms of the human part of the Centaur were that of a human, with five fingers.

The legs of the horse part of the Centaur were that of a horse, with hoofs having been formed.

The figure was about six or seven meters long, just about the right size to pass through the cavern—that was to say, the master of the cavern was this being in front of him—

Subaru: “…It was, a trap.”

Holding his breath, Subaru despaired.

There was nothing he could do. He quickly turned his hand to the back of his waist and grabbed the handle of the whip, but he did not believe he could do anything with it.

And to that breathless Subaru, the Centaur tilted his eyeless head. From its mouth was hurled a bellow, inciting fear.

Witchbeast: "—KSHEEEEEEGHHH!"

At that moment, Subaru moved to create a gap.

He turned around on the sand, roughly kicked one of the charcoaled debris onto the Centaur. Having been cooked to a crisp on the inside, the corpses had no power to them, even if they connected. But still, it was good to be in control. Clinging to the steep slope, he attempted to return to the upper passage. He would go back the road he came, but he did not mind it. The problem was, how far this Centaur was going to give chase was unknown. Given that it burnt its prey in this manner, it was dubious whether it had an appetite. Of course, this was not necessarily a good thing, as he had heard that Witchbeasts possessed an instinct to hurt and murder human beings. Still, if there was a possibility that the situation to look up for a little bit, it would—

Subaru: "Kafuu—"

While thinking so much about it, Subaru noticed that his body was not trembling.

Trying and creating a diversion by kicking a piece of charred debris, and climbing the steep sand slope and turning back, and reaching out to his whip, Subaru could do none of this.

—Because before he could get to it, the breath of the Witchbeast burned Subaru.

Subaru: "—Ah."

As soon as the conception reached that his whole body was being burnt, Subaru screamed in pain and suffering. However, perhaps because his throat was being burnt, his lungs were having their oxygen burnt, not a bit of his voice could be raised.

Where the burned skin formed bubbles, they swelled and burst instantly. The fluids that had flown inside the body, which he had never seen before, instantly evaporated, his blood actually boiling.

Subaru: "…"

Never mind rolling over on the ground in this suffering.

The muscles and fat had been burnt, melted and charcoaled. The pain disappeared to a place far away, and Subaru experienced an illusion of being drowned in flames.

Burned. Yes, burned. He had read somewhere about burns in-depth.

He had learned that there were several stages of burns, and that once the third stage was reached, the scars would remain, and a skin graft would be necessary. He also had learned that if thirty percent of a person's body were burnt, breathing would be made difficult, leading to death.

Subaru: "…"

Body hair burnt till the follicle, eardrum and brain matter alike melted and flowed out the earlobe. Lips and gums evaporated, exposing the teeth, and the tongue was gulped by the suffering of the heat wave. It did not matter. He had already drowned. These burns, could they be healed? Even though he was not confident regarding his face, if it got burnt, would they like him less? Emilia, Beatrice, Rem.

???: "—rusu!"

Burning, his field of vision was burning. Everything was burning, turning red, and going white. Blood was eradicated by the tremendous heat, the eyelids melted away, the fluids of the eyeballs evaporated, it turned white and cloudy, and nothing could be seen.

He had just heard something. He had heard someone calling. He had heard babies crying. Someone came down beside him. Idiot.

Why had they? They had said they would run away. Why had they come down here? But he did not know what going down meant. Moreover, what was left or right?

A horse, a human. Different. Hot. It melted, it burned, sleepiness.

Melted and disappeared—

5

???: “—How long are you going to sleep? Get up, lazy Barusu.”

Subaru: “Guah uh?!”

Subaru was pulled back to reality with a sharp poke, his limbs unable to move, and his scorched thoughts crumbled away.

Suddenly raising his body, Subaru wiped cold sweat from his sand-laden forehead.

Subaru: “Eh, oh… eh?”

Looking around. Dark, he was unable to see anything. There was something that evoked fear just a few seconds ago.

Subaru: “Hii?”

Ram: “…I am stunned. How can you be frightened from mere darkness? You are not a child.”

Subaru: “—Ah.”

Cowering, this small Subaru’s eyes widened at the sound of that voice.

Her face illuminated by the lantern she herself carried, from Ram spilled a slight exhale. Then, she quietly knelt down on the spot, and stroked Subaru’s cheeks with her hand.

Ram: “What a pitiful face.”

Subaru: “…Has my face melted?”

Ram: “—Except in front of Emilia-sama, I have never seen such a pitiful sight.”

The heat of the palm touching the cheek was so warm, but it was not even close, compared to what Subaru had just experienced.

Thanks to that feeling, thanks to the sensation of flames and the warmth of another, Subaru understood.

Again, he had Returned by Death. And here was another save point, different from that of the two Deaths he had met in the Sand Dunes.

So it had been said, that to conquer the labyrinth of sand one had to put their very lives at stake.

—He felt like the cold sand flowing on the sand sea was silently ridiculing the scorched Subaru, watching.

Chapter 14:
Faith Built atop the Sand

1

The warmth coming off from Ram's palm contrasted with the scorn of the cold sand. Both of those were the realities which Natsuki Subaru was faced with now; that was the present that he should accept.

Subaru "…Ram."

Ram: "What?"

Subaru: "Your fingers sure do feel nice and smooth…It's as—bbubeeeeh!"

Ram: "This Barusu sure pushes his luck, doesn't he?"

Subaru: "Will you ever stop using people's nicknames as curses?!"

Subaru voiced out his complaints with tears in his eyes after having had his cheeks slapped in recompense for his careless remark. However, Ram, who held a lantern in her hand, did not reply to him. Instead, she hurriedly moved off, keeping her distance away from him.

It was something cold from her, even though up until now, she had shown him a kindness which was seldom seen. —Though, if things stayed like this, since Subaru would be unable to even have an awkward conversation about it. Part of his true intention had been to go back to how they usually interacted.

Subaru: "Right here, we're…"

Ram: "It's pitch black absolutely everywhere. You remember the crevices opening up in the sand sea, and our dragon carriages being swallowed up by them, I presume? I don't want to have to explain more than that."

Subaru: “Nono, I’m fine with hearing just that. I get it.”

Ram: “…Okay”

Subaru received an outline of the current situation from Ram as he took a deep breath. He understood that he had Returned by Death and that his Returned by Death point had been changed already.

—Subaru had met death three times in these sand dunes with this.

Twice he had been killed above-ground by the flashes of light, which had likely been fired from the Watchtower. However, this time, this third time was far different to the other two. He had died from being attacked by a monster at the underground.

He could barely keep his body from shaking as he recalled the manner of his death that he’d experienced just a minute ago.

Subaru: “I never thought I’d die like that…”

The manner in which Subaru had died now was what you would call a fiery death. His whole body had been scorched by crimson flames, and he had been burnt to death still without understanding everything that was going on. It was hard to forget that his whole body had been licked by red-hot tongues, and that every part of him had melted rather than burnt.

He knew from knowledge that the human body was a lump of fat. However, was it really something that melted away so easily and runnily like that? That his burnt remains were tragic, was something which he would indeed agree with.

Ram: “Barusu, have you calmed down yet? If you’ve settled down, we need to talk.”

Subaru: “Ah, aah. Yeah, I’m okay…Is it just me and you here?”

Ram: “If that was the case, Barusu, I would be ditching you and running away for my own safety. Since I haven’t…well you understand what that means, don’t you?”

Subaru: “Did you just show a Part Two to the kindness you seldom show?”

Ram: “You sure do say a lot of disrespectful things towards the bundle of love and compassion which is me, don’t you? —She came back whilst you were spouting out nonsense.”

Looking to his left at the lantern—and then looking at where it was pointing from Ram’s right, he saw the glow of a lamplight approaching from deeper within the cave. The lantern was swaying back and forth at around head-height; and just as he expected, the source of light was held by Anastasia who was riding Patrasche.

Anastasia: “Ram-san, Natsuki-kun, ‘t seems yer conversation’s finished, right?”

Subaru: “…Anastasia, Patrasche, is that you?”

Anastasia, who was riding on Patrasche, spoke out the same greeting as she had before as she flashed him a grim. And, to those words, Ram pinched the hem of her skirt like before and bowed.

Ram: “Thank you for your thoughtfulness, Anastasia-sama. May I ask, what do the surroundings look like?”

Anastasia: “I jus’ went ta look a lil’ further inside, but I couldn’ find any of the other young’ens. It’s jus’ the three of us who were hurled down aroun’ here… ‘n this young’en lookin’ one.”

Ram: “I see.”

Anastasia: “Ya gotta keep yer chin up, though mayhaps that in itself ain’t gonna be of any use ta us.”

Ram: “Thank you for your concern. Indeed, I understand… I’ll make sure to do so.”

Anastasia voiced her apprehensions from dragonback. To which, Ram replied in the likeness of how she would usually speak, different to how she spoke to Subaru. Anastasia’s face was clearly visible this time since Ram was the one holding the lantern.

Everything Anastasia had said was exactly the same as last time.

The fact that Ram was upset at being separated from Rem was clearly shown from her face in profile, in which the slight exhaustion therein could be seen.

Subaru: “So for now, the only ones that were able to join up is just us four? …Pretty damn awful that we have no fighting strength.”

Anastasia: “We ain’t as scattered as we thought, eh, Natsuki-kun? What special good luck charm did ya even get Ram-san to cast us?”

Ram: “Unfortunately, nothing would happen even if it has to decide between just me and Barusu. Only Barusu would end up dead when he would be found the next day.”

Subaru: “What do you mean? Do you mean like the werewolf in a game of werewolf? Scary.”

Their comments were not meant as a show of bravado, but rather, Anastasia and Ram exchanged words in such as way as to calm Subaru, who had just woken up. Though his grasp of the situation was quick since it was the second time around, they were still in a place where it paid dividends in getting a move on immediately, even now.

Subaru: “Ram, just to make sure, you don’t know where Rem is using your synesthesia, right?”

Ram: “That’s correct, it’s no use. Since I feel the link, I have no doubt that at least she’s alive… But, I don’t know any more than that. All we can do is pray that she’s not alone.”

Subaru: “Given that my everyday deeds are tied to fortune and misfortune, Rem’s deeds will just be good ones, make no mistake in that… I absolutely believe in her safety.”

If this theory was right, it was entirely because of his own deeds that he was going through an absurd amount of suffering and death. He wanted to go and close his eyes to that.

Subaru “On top of that…”

Subaru absolutely couldn’t let Ram and Anastasia know; that was his greatest anxiety. It seemed like everyone he wanted to save had been scattered away from him thanks to his Return by Death point having been updated. It was just like when he couldn't use his Return by Death to get Rem's name back.

What if tragedy had struck his companions due to his Return by Death updating now?

Subaru: "I absolutely won't allow that…!"

For those who weren't here. Emilia, Beatrice, Julius, Meili. And Rem. He prayed that nothing disastrous had happened to them. Natsuki Subaru prayed that they weren't hurt, even if they weren't in his reach.

Ram: "Barusu. —Aren't you connected with Beatrice-sama?"

Subaru: "I've tried, but it's no good. As long as there's a path between us, Beako herself should be able to sense me… But even if I try to call her, the connection is pretty weak."

Anastasia: "Might be due to the miasma. Even spirits can't keep their breath held long, even my Echidna's grumblin' every so often…It was jus' Emilia-san who was fine ta it."

Subaru: "I guess it was the same for you as well, eh, Beako?"

Beatrice, stout-hearted as she was, probably wouldn't let out any complaints even if she was in a bad state. Were that to happen, Subaru would have absolutely noticed it. Beatrice being in a bad state would influence everyone else's safety as well. When they safely reunited, he'd have to tell her off.

Subaru: "That's why, for that too, we need to rejoin with the other guys. —Let's go deeper into the cave!"

It was likely that they'd come across the monster which had burned him once again if they went towards its depths.

But, even so, there was no other way but to go forward.

So to reunite with his precious companions as well, there was no other way but to go forward.

2

Anastasia: “Yer the only one walkin’ Natsuki-kun, ain’t yer footin’ gettin’ worse?”

Subaru: “I’m fine. Do take care though since Patrasche won’t welcome anyone with open arms except me. Every time, it seems like she’s about to bite off one of Beako’s drill curls.”

Anastasia: “Ahahaha, what a great joke. Patrasche-chan is a good girl, she wouldn’ do that. Ain’t that right?”

Patrasche: “…”

Patrasche gave a quick grunt at Subaru, who was leading them with his lantern whilst they made their way deeper into the cave. Her grunt was the sort she made when she had no complaints.

Patrasche was still a hard-worker, even in spite of her carrying other people who weren’t Subaru, since she knew it was an emergency. As expected, she was a woman worthy of being part of the Emilia Camp.

Having placed Ram and Anastasia on Patrasche, Subaru was the only who traversed the maze of sand on foot. They followed the same way as last time, with the four of them moving forward towards the depths of the cave. They may have left dozens of minutes earlier than last time, but since he didn’t know when that monster would appear down here, it’d all be down to nothing more than a margin of error.

Subaru: “Its lair is way over there…Maybe it’s its feeding ground, or its playground…”

What couldn’t be called “Feed” was the sheer amount of burnt corpses which had littered that area. The charred corpse which Subaru had accidentally grabbed had probably been an animal’s—From its shape it seemed like he’d grabbed the hind-leg of a four-legged creature, but there weren’t any indications that it had been eaten. The amount of charred corpses over there had been countless.

He could even have appreciated its cuisine as being Simply Gourmet Witchbeast if it was using fire to just prepare its meal. However, it merely burnt its prey and left their corpses behind untouched. That monster possessed a cruel nature that delighted itself in burning its prey to death; it made sense that it had a way to capture it and a place to burn it.

It was a grotesque figure, munitioned with abnormal amounts of heat. Subaru also feared the Witchbeast itself which existed with a wrong form as a living creature, at the same time as he recalled the moment he had burned to death.

Anastasia: "…From what I can see, we should still be in the san' dunes aroun' here, but maybe underneath it. What'dya think, Natsuki-kun?"

Subaru: "…"

Anastasia: "Natsuki-kun?"

Subaru: "Eh? Ah? Aah, that's right. I think so too."

Ram: "Did you actually hear what she said? You're being rude if you think that response adequate."

Ram swiftly exposed Subaru's mindless agreement. However, Subaru hastily shook his hands and head in denial.

Subaru: "No way, I heard everything properly. And what's more is that I'm sticking with my stance of absolute agreement."

Ram: "Really, when you take off your bra when you go to bed, your breasts don't sag an inch, is that what you're saying? You're affirming it? Disgusting."

Subaru: "Isn't the way you're bringing that up to me disgusting?! Or rather, it's not like what she's saying, don't you agree with me?!"

Subaru, in a state of disbelief, turned towards Anastasia for help. She gave him a wry smile, and then spoke out saying, “You shouldn’ worry”

Anastasia: “Ram-san was messin’ about jus’ now. I don’ think it’s proper to speak like this in this terrible situation.”

Subaru: “Y-Yeah? Yeah, that’s right. I was in a hurry. And in the first place, neither Ram or Anastasia’s breasts would sag, nor do they have enough to even notice…”

Anastasia: “Whoopsy, sorry Natsuki-kun. My hand slipped.”

Subaru: “Why the past tense, and why so hot?!”

Her lantern was pressed to the nape of his neck, and the heat coming off from its Magical Ore burnt his neck. With the sensation of his fiery death resuscitated within him, he shuddered and rolled down onto the cold sand, shouting and screaming as he relieved himself from the pain. And as he did so, still collapsed with the back of his body lying on top of the sand, he glared at the two of them on dragon-back.

Subaru: “I-Isn’t that cruel doing that all of a sudden? I would have liked at least a chance to explain.”

Anastasia: “You can’t go criticizin’ people’s physical characteristics ‘n then showing contempt for ‘em. You absolutely can’t do that unless yer masochistic. If this was Kararagi, yer’d lose all yer reputation ‘n become broke. Don’t ya agree, Ram-san?”

Ram: “I don’t mind. Besides, Rem’s are bigger, so we keep the balance between us. It’s no issue for me.”

If he went and spoke out on their beautiful sisterly love which complemented each other, he’d once again provoke their ire. Thus, he kept quiet. Subaru grimaced, his nape tingled in slight pain. He stood up and coughed, brushing away sand.

Subaru: “Anyways, let’s get down to business. We’re underground here, that’s what you said right?”

Anastasia: “What, y’actually heard me? That’s right, I think so. The reason why is ‘cause the air is heavier than above ground, ‘n the temperature is lower. Don’t ya agree?”

Ram: “Underneath the sand dunes… We’ll have to pray that this isn’t a Sandworms’ burrow.”

Subaru: “…It could also be worse than that.”

Anastasia pulled her robe in tighter, appealing to the chill, a gesture which Ram followed suit in. Subaru subtly weaved in the reality of the situation, while he agreed with their opinions.

Of course, even if there were Sandworms here, it would be a herculean task to beat them back with the meagre fighting strength they had available amongst them. Even so, Sandworms were still better as they somewhat had a strategy to deal with them.

That Witchbeast—which for now he’d call a Centaur for convenience, was something which Subaru had no idea of how to deal with in battle. He had come across it and been immediately burnt on the spot.

He was sure he’d meet the same manner of death, if he bumped into it like last time.

Subaru: “Practically, it’s likely we’ll come across Witchbeasts other than the Sandworms. Even though they’re Witchbeasts which roam these sand dunes, I think it’s a good idea if we came up with a plan for them for later.”

Ram: “Yes… Nonetheless, I can only say that I just know what I heard Meili speaking about on the way here. And other than that, perhaps how a typical Witchbeast lives.”

Anastasia: “The Witchbeasts of the Augria Sand Dunes are far more aggressive due ta the effects of the miasma, and there are also Witchbeasts that shouldn’ be livin’ here in the first place. Even so, knowin’ is better than not knowin’.”

When Subaru put out his suggestion, Ram and Anastasia both nodded in agreement. As a result, they talked about the Witchbeasts whilst they continued their search forward into the depths of the cave.

Ram: “Sandworms stand out due to their stench and ugliness, but in contrast to their aggressive nature, their bodies aren’t that strong. Even if their bodies are large, my magic can kill them easily…If anything, your whip may actually be useful, Barusu.”

Subaru: “Seriously? My whip would damage them?”

Anastasia: “It’s said they tend ta be cowardly and if they feel pain it’d seem like they’d back away. It’d depen’ on the type of pain they’d feel, but at least the chance ain’t zero, wouldn’t ya think?”

Ram: “I don’t want to come across a Banassi, if possible.”

Subaru: “Is that a vicious witchbeast despite it having the name of a rodent?”

Anastasia: “Nah, it ain’t got any fighting strength. Buut, it fights dirty. It puffs itself up until its body goes Kapow, blowin’ up anyone near it. An’ with that, its blood ‘n guts will shower its enemy. “

Subaru: “…Then, is its blood poisonous or something?”

Ram: “It’s not like that. It’s just pestering…But, once one of them does that and their stench pours out, other Banassi flock over and do the same thing. You end up becoming smeared in blood.”

Subaru: “Scary!”

As expected, there were a lot of Witchbeasts which were unfamiliar to him, and there were many things which made him want to frown when listening to their composition. After they finished their discussion on those Witchbeasts, Subaru felt like the time had come, and chose the topic.

Subaru: “So, the next one is about a Witchbeast I saw in the distance back at the sand dunes… Do you know about a Witchbeast which has a human body attached to the body of a horse that spouts flames from its back?”

Ram & Anastasia "…"

Subaru told them about the Centaur, keeping in tune with the discussion which they'd had so far regarding the mode of life of Witchbeasts. It was a distinct Witchbeast. Even if this Witchbeast was one of the more aggressive varieties which were native to these sand dunes, if there was an origin to it, he should be able to make a breakthrough on it. It'd be ideal if there were weak points to it which were easy to understand, such as being weak to water due to its fire—.

Anastasia: "…Sorry, but I ain't got a clue. What about ya, Ram-san?"

Ram: "I'm sorry as well, but this Witchbeast invites only revulsion even in just listening to this. "

Subaru: "You both don't know, huh…"

However, he only got those answers from both of them. It seemed that neither of them had any knowledge of the Centaur or a different kind of them with those abnormal characteristics.

But, that was the Witchbeast they'd likely first come across. He didn't want to give up on finding a breakthrough with only the answers he'd received now.

Subaru: "You really don't know? Like, part of Patrasche's head becoming a human body, and two arms sticking out from there. And a mouth stretching vertically across part of its body. And finally, a horn growing from its neck of its human body instead of a head…"

Anastasia: "Eeeh… What the hell. That's soo gross…"

Ram: "Honestly, that's so off-putting."

The more details he put into his explanation, the more he put off the women. Seeing even Patrasche's face looking disgusted after she received Subaru's semblance of an explanation, Subaru dropped his shoulders in defeat. It genuinely seemed like they all had no clue about it.

Ram: “If you happened to catch a glimpse of a Witchbeast like that in the first place, you needed to report it back then. Why did you let such a seemingly dangerous Witchbeast go by?”

Subaru: “No, that’s not… It’s because it was nighttime. Maybe it was because Meili’s Divine Protection was active, so I just saw it in the distance not approaching us from all the way over there. It was like, when you were being treated by Emilia-tan inside of the dragon carriage.”

Ram: “Disgusting.”

Subaru: “So that’s all you’re gonna be saying?”

Subaru was discouraged by the lack of a response as he fumbled around for a suitable excuse. With it ending up like this, they had no means capable of striking first against the Centaur. All he could do was search for a plan to avoid meeting the real thing whilst he spelled out its danger in anticipation.

Subaru: “For now I’ll call it a Centaur, but… I reckon it’s a really dangerous thing. A mane grew from the back of its human body, and it was burning like fire. It had quite a tenacious look to it… I don’t know how since it didn’t have a face, but that’s the feeling it gave off, so it’s likely that if we don’t take care, it’ll come and chase us.”

Ram: “Then why did you ignore it? Do you have a death wish?”

Subaru: “I think there were misleading words in the explanation right now as well.”

He couldn’t deny that his explanation had become fairly absurd in wanting to let them know of the danger. However, by telling them this as a precaution, the girls would likely be able to keep themselves on guard for danger in regards to an encounter with an actual Centaur.

That’s all he had managed. He hadn’t managed to tell them about when he had really met the Centaur, and they had no counter-measures against it. Subaru thought about a more fundamental approach as well. That was—

Anastasia: “Natsuki-kun, Ram-san. —Can ya stop the chatter for just a mo’?”

Anastasia said that, and motioned for Patrasche to stop. The clever Earth Dragon had stopped before she had been told to, but she drooped her head as if she understood what Anastasia meant. And then, Anastasia held out her lantern in front of her and said,

Anastasia: “There’s a fork ‘n the road”

—Before his eyes was the first part of his plan to avoid meeting the Centaur.

3

As before, a dread hung in the air at the fork, enough to make one grimace. And, that dread came clearly flowing in from the right path.

Anastasia: “Left or right, which way do ya want ta go?”

Subaru: “If we follow Kurapika’s theory, going to the right is the correct option.”

Anastasia: “Who’s that?”

As before, Subaru’s knowledge was nothing but foreign in this other world. Subaru had already experienced it with his body, so his words weren’t unsubstantiated.

Subaru: “In times like these, people tend to unconsciously want to pick the left side. Though various factors are at play like one’s dominant hand or eye, ethology has shown actual evidence of that, especially when there are no additional conditions attached.”

Ram: “Ethology… What a smart word came out of your mouth… However, are you ignoring this horrible presentiment which you can feel coming from the right path? Isn’t this a condition?”

Whether it would be correct or not to take the right path—this time, they had to take it. Having deemed so, Subaru would have to try and persuade the others with logic, however he felt a strong feeling of aversion to the horrible sensation that was drifting in from the right path.

If they could, both Ram and Anastasia, didn't want to take the right path; he could see that from the look in their eyes. Persuading them and making them take the right path was what Subaru had to do. He wouldn't let them go towards their death so easily after getting the chance from Returning by Death.

Subaru: "It's true that a blatantly horrible atmosphere is coming from the right. But, I think it's just a little too blatant. It's as if it's saying, don't come here, right?"

Ram: "…"

Subaru: "It's exactly like the mechanism which breaks through that Sand Time and the flower garden of Witchbeasts before the Watchtower. They're far too intricate to be something that cropped up naturally. Didn't you think so?"

Anastasia: "'n other words, Natsuki-kun, ya want to say that the San' Time, the Flower Garden and this cave as well are things of artifice?"

In contrast to Ram who had sunk into silence, Anastasia followed what Subaru had been trying to say. Subaru cracked his fingers at hearing her response and voiced his agreement with a "That's right."

Subaru: "They've set a bunch of traps since they want to keep us away. Why haven't we come across a single Witchbeast here in nearly an hour if this wasn't something artificial? We all seem to agree that this is part of the Augria Sand Dunes. And though Meili's not here, we haven't encountered any Witchbeast lairs. That's unnatural."

Ram: "So, here we're in a place where someone's hand… No, where the Sage's hand came into play."

Subaru: “With that, we know that the Sage’s personality isn’t very pleasant.”

Ram: “…”

Although it was an opinion which was half coated in truth, Subaru admired that even if he spoke himself, it didn’t mean that he hadn’t been able to sound persuasive. In fact, when he looked back on the journey through the Augria Sand Dunes up until now, there had been many things set which could certainly be called traps that were there to impede their journey towards the Watchtower—It could even be called a Trial. And, it was a fact as well that they hadn’t come across any Witchbeasts yet in this cave.

Of course, Subaru’s thoughts were incorrect in the end as he knew that they would come across the Centaur at the end, however—No, perhaps that Centaur was the last guard. There was a chance that its presence was a mechanism that denoted a last show of strength to those who came to enter the Watchtower.

In that case, he just had no way to express the malice in their choice of guardian; however.

Ram: “…There’s certainly logic even in Barusu’s point.”

Subaru: “—! Seriously?”

Anastasia: “Why are ya actin’ so surprised? ‘s it strange?”

Subaru instinctively reacted with surprise at Ram’s words, who had sunk into pensive silence. And after that, Anastasia, who had seen that response, gave a wry smile and lifted up the pom-poms on her hat with both of her hands.

Anastasia: “To tell ya the truth, I really don’t want ta go to the right. But, now that ya said that our opinions have been induced ta form up ‘n pick the left… I don’t want ta go with it anymore.”

Subaru: “That’s an opinion that doesn’t seem like you, who lived by your do-or-die intuition. You sure have been swept away.”

Anastasia: “Are ya jus’ sayin’ even I’ll do it if yer opinion becomes approved?”

The wry smile on her face grew deeper, which as a matter of fact, probably indicated that Eridna was unable to imitate the vital point that had been Anastasia’s Do-or-die Intuition. This was a last resort for her too. She should have had a difficult time deciding whether or not to get on board with Subaru’s point.

Subaru: “So, what about you Ram?”

Ram: “It’s as I said. I can understand Barusu’s point too, considering how things went in the Sand Dunes up until here. We can just agree that apart from the Sage’s wicked disposition, there’s also the harsh environments that those who can’t reach the Watchtower are subject to one after the other… That’s why it’s obvious that someone has meddled.”

Subaru: “Mhm, I sure don’t agree with calling them natural things…”

Ram: “So, although I don’t fully agree with your point, Barusu, it doesn’t mean that I don’t agree with some parts of it. With that said, there’s no hesitation in checking the right path.”

Subaru: “…What do you mean?”

Anastasia: “It’s annoyin’ for her ta do what Natsuki-kun says, but she’s goin’ to go along with it, is what she’s sayin’.”

Anastasia politely interpreted what Ram had meant to say. In fact, it seemed like it was the correct interpretation considering that Ram didn’t correct any of it. In short, it meant that both Ram and Anastasia had accepted Subaru’s cajolery.

Subaru: “—Alright! Excellent, muchas gracias. I won’t make either of you regret it.”

Ram: “I will take at least some share of the responsibility in my choice. Don’t you go trying to carry my share of the burden on your back as you please. Focus your useless resourcefulness only on Rem.”

Anastasia: “Ah, if you make me regret it, I’m gonna let ya take the responsibility for it. If that happens, we’ll hafta consult with the abacus for how much it’s gonna be, don’t ya think?”

Subaru: “Both of you are so damn scathing!”

His delight was short lived, and his speech in which he had taken responsibility for the choice was quickly assailed by the both of them. Although he didn’t know how serious Eridna’s trace of Anastasia was, Eridna was putting in great efforts so that things wouldn’t end up in regret. Only that feeling was genuine.

Subaru: “Plus, it’s not like the obstacles end with just their persuasion.”

Indeed, that was right. In the end, all Subaru had got was the right to make a challenge. The challenge against the real hurdles started from here on out.

—The fork in the road awaited their decision as it exuded an overwhelming negative atmosphere out.

They were going to take the right path where the air lay thick and visible, ever worsening. If this was a trial which the Sage had prepared, he wondered what they were thinking by opting to make this path its start.

Subaru: “If he’s waiting for us beyond this point, then let’s give him as much of a surprise as possible. —I’m gonna slap his face and make him apologize over and over, and after that, I’m gonna make him find Emilia and the others.”

Determining that, Subaru turned towards the right path and brandished his lantern there, having declared that. And then, Ram gave a soft sigh, behind Subaru’s back,

Ram: “I agree with you, but there’s still a chance that Emilia-sama, along with everyone else, will make it to the Watchtower before us.”

Subaru: “Honestly, wasn’t this a good spot to show off…?”

Subaru, whose spirit was being strained even before the challenge began, voiced out his disgruntlement.

4

After those exchanges, the three of them and their earth dragon—the group of four went into the right path. He still had a bad feeling, even now. That feeling seemed to make even the sand underneath his feet feel different. Whilst tasting this discomfort, Subaru wiped the cold sweat that trickled down his forehead and grinned at Patrasche.

Subaru: “Come to think of it, I was wrong to decide which way to take without hearing your opinion.”

Patrasche: “…”

Subaru: “Huh? Where you’re going is the road I will take? And whatever road it is, no matter how harsh, you’ll believe in me since I always weather through? Heyhey, you’re way too handsome, I’m falling in love!”

Ram: “He’s being nonsensical, but he doesn’t seem to be doing it by mistake, so he’s being sinful, don’t you think? What good do you see in him?”

Ram muttered that out as if she were shocked when she saw Subaru rambling on about Patrasche’s feelings as if he was her, whilst she remained taciturn. Though Patrasche would usually immediately rebuff such talk, right now she had remained composed as if he hadn’t said anything wrong. Or, she had thought it foolish to waste strength doing that, so she was saving it for until they reached a safer place. One of the two. Likely the latter.

Subaru: “Even if so, can you go easy on me, if possible?”

Patrasche: “—)”

Subaru: “Was that a voice of denial just now?”

Despite having chosen silence until now, she abruptly let off an impatient bark of denial at what he’d said. But then, having the mettle to first of all escape safely from here before berating him was quite the good thing. Because that meant Patrasche believed that they could get out of here safely.

"…"

They kept on walking without any change, with Subaru at the head, and Patrasche at the back. The lantern's light illuminated the way several meters ahead; making sure to tread carefully, their exploration continued.

Their pace, however, had definitely slowed down compared to their way here. It was even slower than when they'd taken the left road before he had Returned by Death. The reason why was simple.

Subaru: "My body… is so heavy…"

It wasn't that his weight had increased, or that an invisible Yōkai had climbed onto his back. And, in practice, it definitely wasn't any sort of issue that affected his actual corporeal self.

That both his body was heavy and his feet unmoving was entirely a mental problem.

Sure enough, the right path was brimming with a negative sensation that had caused his feet to seize up. He hoped this was one of the Sage's detestable trials, and that if they came out of the forked road, they'd find a safe spot awaiting them ahead—Of these hopes, he didn't hold a single one. But unfortunately, even those hopes were fleeting and quickly turned. Rather, his negative thoughts, which felt like a curse, grew ever stronger.

Subaru: "…"

Gulping down some saliva, still keeping his silence, Subaru took a step forward so to move his leaden feet from the sand. His feet were frozen in place; he wouldn't move. Even if in his heart, Subaru knew just how weak and fragile he was, he shouldn't have felt like cowering in this passageway of sand, where nothing had happened yet. Indeed, he felt no fear at heart, and even his head felt clear.

Just, his limbs didn't try to move in line with that purpose. His flesh and body, only, were acting against his reason and the course of his soul. His body instinctually rejected it, and tried to stop him from moving forward.

It cost Subaru twice as much time, strength and willpower to move forward. And even he couldn't help but feel tired.

Subaru: "Fool. Can I really whine this much?"

Violently shaking his head, Subaru tried to forget the feeling of tiredness that ladened his body. Choosing the right path had been no one but Subaru's decision. Even though it had been, he couldn't permit himself to try and whine, or such, before the two behind him did.

Subaru: "Well, this walk sure may be a little difficult, but it's no big deal. Surprisingly, our goal may be getting closer…"

Ram: "Barusu"

Subaru: "Oh, what's up?"

Ram: "Shut up."

Subaru: "Ah, Oh…"

His attempt at trying to drive away his whining with a show of bravado was shot down by Ram's curt toxicity. Their pace had fallen drastically, and their fear of the surroundings had also only increased. It seemed like probably even Ram was being taxed mentally. That her words were more toxic and curter than usual was proof of that.

Subaru: "Heey, I get what you're feeling, but I think I suck at walking in silence."

Ram: "Are you walking to enjoy yourself? Remember why we're doing this."

Subaru: "Well, no, but like…"

Ram: "Be silent and walk."

An unapproachable, obstinate attitude. Of course, though Ram's opinion was correct, Subaru had a point as well.

Right now, the weight of his body was pulling into sync with the weight on his mind. In other words, it had become a vicious circle where the heavier his mood got, the heavier his body became. He'd wanted to take their minds off it a bit so that things wouldn't end up like that.

Keeping on guard was important, as well as wanting to show some consideration, but he wanted them to show that they'd understood that and taken it on board. Or rather, Ram especially should take it on board. She always showed consideration. Still, she might be really struggling.

Subaru: "Do you reckon we should move faster?"

Ram: "…"

Subaru: "Ram?"

Subaru called out trying to determine how urgent the conditions had got, but Ram didn't bother to reply to his words at all. The light from the two lanterns, one of which was illuminating the path ahead of Subaru, and the other which was illuminating their surroundings from Patrasche's neck, didn't allow the particulars of Ram's expression to be seen.

With her hood pulled over her head, Ram cast her eyes down to look at Anastasia's back. Her face wasn't visible.

Subaru: "Ram?"

Anastasia: "Natsuki-kun, is that quite enough?"

Subaru: "Ah?"

Stopping in his tracks, Subaru turned his head around to try and look at her expression. But Ram, stubborn as she was, didn't let him see her face, and on top of that Anastasia had defended her. Seeing Subaru's lips bend in frustration, Anastasia scratched her cheek, with a troubled expression adorning her face.

Anastasia: “I hadn’ mentioned it but, Ram-san was considerably flustered after she woke up in the undergroun’. Her composure seemed ta have come back because of how plucky she is, but I guess it still looks like she hasn’ fully regained it.”

Subaru: “—tch! You’re saying too much…!”

Anastasia: “Look, will ya leave this ta me?”

While Anastasia had put some consideration to Ram’s feelings, her words lacked in it. Having just had her hidden innermost thoughts divulged, Ram gritting her teeth could be heard all around them, but Anastasia took no notice of it. She raised one of her small hands and pointed it in front of her so that Subaru could see it.

Anastasia: “We shouldn’ talk right now. When yer nerves are frayed ta the limit, no matta’ who says what, nothin’ good will come out of it. Isn’ that right?”

Subaru: “…”

Anastasia: “Isn’ that right?”

Though it annoyed him, Anastasia = Eridna had a point. He had put too much priority in trying to move forward and getting out of the cave safely. Subaru this time definitely hadn’t been able to consider Ram’s feelings much. The price for doing that had come to bite him back here, and mayhaps had ended up expressed in Ram’s attitude. Now that he thought about, it was overly hasty of him to assume that there was a problem there because of Ram.

Subaru: “…You’re right. You’re definitely right. It was my bad.”

Ram: “Reflect on it.”

Subaru: “—tch! Hey, you!”

Anastasia: “Stop that, no fightin’. C’mon, Natsuki-kun, keep movin’ forward, keep movin’ forward.”

Subaru’s nerves had become frayed on seeing Ram’s attitude, which gave no signs of letting up. However, Anastasia had gotten in between them and somehow stopped him there. She then pointed at Subaru motioning him to move forward. She nudged the lantern that was fastened around Patrasche's neck with her feet, rocking it about.

Seeing the silhouettes of the passageway of sand flickering across his sight, Subaru clicked his tongue.

Although he couldn't stomach her attitude, there would be no point in them falling into strife here. Fortunately, he could excuse it as the unpleasant atmosphere influencing the highs and lows in their mood. While he could lay the blame on something, there was no need to worsen their relations with such an unnecessary thing. They could talk about their current foul attitudes when they made it safely out from here.

Subaru: "…Let's get going."

Once again, the search spearheaded by Subaru resumed. However, their pace was still slow, and didn't get any faster. In the end, his so called attempt at picking up their spirits and removing the loads from their body had failed. Since nothing had changed for the better, the chances of the situation improving had naturally become zilch.

Even so, when it came to change, there had been some. And it wasn't a change with Subaru and the others, but rather a change with the maze of sand itself.

Subaru: "No matter how you look at it, the path has become narrower."

They had probably spent nearly an hour steadily advancing through the right path. The pathway of sand was narrowing from the left, right, top and bottom. The height and width of the path was reaching a size that would make it impossible for large Witchbeasts to pass through. There was just enough space for Patrasche to squeeze through.

However, it was at a size where it wasn't wide enough to accommodate the Dragon Carriage which Gyan pulled. Likely, it was impossible for Sandworms and Centaurs to pass through too.

At least in other words, when it came to the worst situation, i.e. a Centaur lying in wait ahead on the path—that situation seemed to have been avoided. Compared to that, no matter what was awaiting ahead, at least they seemed to have avoided going towards that terrible direction.

Subaru: "But, it looks like we'll have to be more cautious since the path's become narrower. We'll probably end up unable to move without any warning; you guys will need to be on your guard too."

Ram: "…tsk"

Subaru: "—Hey"

Subaru, who had said that thinking about what would happen soon, raised one of his eyebrows at the sudden sound. Turning his head back, he looked at the two on dragonback who were illuminated by their lantern. No one responded to his shout. However, he knew that Anastasia, who was sitting at the front on top of Patrasche, had covered her face with the palm of her hands.

That seemed natural for Anastasia who wanted in one way or another to move forward and keep things rolling along smoothly. Anyway, what Ram had done now was that she had tsk'ed at Subaru's words.

Subaru: "What have you really been planning from the start?"

Ram: "Nothing."

Subaru: "It ain't nothing! I asked you what have you been planning!"

Raising his voice at the limit of his patience, Subaru kicked at the wall of sand beside him. Part of the surface of the fragile wall came loose, but Subaru didn't care at all about the sand which sprinkled down on him. All that Subaru saw right now was the insolent Ram.

Subaru: “All I can hear is you butting in over and over again when people are walking in silence. It seems like this isn’t the first time you clicked your tongue at me, isn’t that right? Hey, OY, what are you planning!”

Ram: “Nothing in particular. I have nothing at all to say to you, Barusu.”

Subaru: “Nothing at all, and yet aren’t you clicking your tongue at me year after year going tchtchtchtchtchtch? Aren’t you doing that? There’s got to be a reason for you to be saying that you aren’t doing that, even though you are, hasn’t there?!”

Subaru’s fervor continued to grow stronger than before, in contrast to the cold Ram’s attitude. It seemed natural. Everything which Ram had shown was cold and one-sided in contrast to the exertions which Subaru had made up until now. Subaru did not know why he was being looked down upon and rebuked.

Subaru: “If there’s something you want to say, then say it! Go and say it since I’ll listen!”

Ram: “—That’s why I have nothing to say.”

Subaru: “LIAR! ARE YOU STUPID? IF YOU FEEL LIKE HIDING STUFF THEN HIDE IT ALL! NOW THAT YOU’VE SLIPPED UP, FLAUNT IT ALL OFF… YOU SAY THERE’S NOTHING? THAT’S A FUCKING IDIOT’S EXPRESSION, HUH, DUMBASS!”

Ram: “…”

Ram’s mood changed at seeing Subaru hurling insults at her, spittle flying from his mouth. Sat behind Anastasia, she leaned her body out and glared at Subaru. He was unsatisfied with where she sat as well. Hiding behind others, looking down at him from above.

Was she planning to rise above them all by borrowing something’s strength?

Ram: “It seems like you’ve really gotten yourself all worked about moving forward, haven’t you, Barusu?”

Subaru: “THAT’S TO BE EXPECTED THOUGH ISN’T IT! WHAT DO YOU THINK WE CAME HERE FOR? WE CAME TO MEET THE SAGE, DIDN’T WE?! ALL THE HARDSHIPS WE FACED FOR THIS, AND ALL THE PROGRESS WE MADE, WHAT’S SO FUNNY ABOUT IT?!”

Ram: “You’re wrong. —We didn’t come here to meet the sage.”

Subaru: “Aaaah?”

Ram: “We came here to return Rem back to how she was.”

Ram clearly asserted this, all the while glaring at Subaru. Overwhelmed by the sharpness and pressure that emanated from her eyes, Subaru (who had been seething)’s conviction weakened a little.

Saving Rem = Meeting the Sage, wasn’t it like that?

Subaru: “IT’S THE SAME THING, ISN’T IT?! MEET THE SAGE AND THEN SAVE REM! IT’S CONNECTED!”

Ram: “IT ISN’T. SAVING REM COMES FIRST, AND MEETING THE SAGE COMES AFTER THAT. YOU’VE GOT YOUR PRIORITIES WRONG…Yes, you’ve got them all wrong.”

Ram’s voice trembled as she spoke the last of those words. The fury she had voiced was a wrath that burnt like an unquenchable raging fire that brought together everything the emotionless girl had felt up until now. In the underground area of these cold sand dunes, Ram continued to speak, her words still full to the brim with the fever of wrath.

Ram: “I came here for Rem, I came here to remember my little sister. And yet, what are we doing now? Rem isn’t even here… so stop messing about idly in this place.”

Subaru: “No one’s messing about…! Because things ended up like this; now that things ended up like this, there’s nothing else we can do at the time it did. Am I wrong?”

Ram: “Yes, maybe so. But, before we make sure of that, Barusu, have you ever worried about Rem even once?"

Subaru: "…Ah?"

Ram: "Ever since you woke up below ground, Barusu, have you ever worried about Rem? Or about Emilia-sama? Or about Beatrice-sama? Have you ever at all worried about those who are missing?"

Ram showered those questions at him, but he kept silent, speaking not a single word in return. Certainly this time around, unlike the last, Subaru hadn't tried to check how everyone else was doing, after he had woken up from Returning by Death.

However, this absolutely wasn't because he wasn't worried about them, but rather because he knew that Ram and Anastasia didn't know anything about them. It was Subaru's consideration. It was care. And despite that,

Ram: "No, you never did, did you. You never did, Barusu. You don't care at all about Rem, Barusu, because your head is full of Emilia-sama and Beatrice-sama. Well, so be it, you're just that kind of man. But, I feel bad for Rem."

Subaru: "…Shut up."

Ram: "Didn't Rem believe in you, Barusu? Ah, though I don't know since that too is a convenient story which I've just heard from you, Barusu. Maybe you were just saying whatever popped into your head. You only say what's convenient in front of women. I feel bad for Emilia-sama and Beatrice-sama as well, deceived by such a man!"

Subaru: "SHUT THE HELL UP!"

Ram: "No, I will not. How many times must I repeat myself. — Barusu, you don't care about Rem at all. Even if she isn't found, you would just feel glad."

Subaru: "—DON'T YOU MESS ABOUT WITH ME!!"

His field of view was died in crimson, and his nerves had flared up hearing her vent those thoughtless remarks. His anger at the arrogant woman, who had vented out those selfish words whilst looking down upon him from her perch, exploded.

He would grab her and drag her down—Though the time it would take to do that wasn't quick enough.

Subaru: "INVISIBLE PROVIDENCE—!!"

Ram: "—KH, AH?!"

Subaru dropped that darkish sensation which swirled through his brain down to his chest, and let it loose. The black palm which had come into being cried out in joy and smoothly stretched itself out. It crept up to the rear of the Earth Dragon's back, where it threw down the pink-haired girl who had denounced him.

Letting off a shriek, Ram wildly tumbled onto the sand. Confusion racked Ram's face, indicating she had no idea what had happened after she had been hit by the demonic hand which wasn't visible to the naked eye. Subaru rushed over next to where Ram was lying down atop of the sand. And then,

Subaru: "Don't you mess about with me."

Saying that he didn't think at all about Rem, saying things like that, was no joke. Consumed by anger, everything had become like whichever way he looked at it from, following his overheated thoughts.

Ram: "—urkh"

—Subaru leaned down over the supine Ram and began to strangle her slender neck.

Creak, Creak.

Creak, Creak, Creak.

Chapter 15:
Scattered to the Sand

1

Subaru’s fingers wrapped around the slender, white neck. As Subaru tightened his hold using all of his strength and felt their neck bones creaking underneath his palms, he felt like something was quite out of place—like it was a girl’s slender neck.

Ram: “…a, ukh”

Ram was being straddled, and her neck was being strangled by someone with all their might. A groan escaped from her lips. Her noble features were warped in agony, and drool could be seen dribbling down from the corner of her rosy lips. Her red tongue danced from side to side searching for freedom inside of her mouth. She thrashed her arms and legs about, desperately resisting him.

Ram: “…”

Subaru couldn’t possibly put up a fight against Ram if she put up a serious resistance. She had managed to strike Garfiel down for a bit back at the Sanctuary by herself, and even if she hadn’t, she was a woman that should be well acquainted with the art of self-defense. It would be reasonable to assume that she should possess multiple ways to restrain him and deal with a situation of this ilk where she was seized from above by a man like this.

However, that would boil down to whether she could at least get one of her limbs free or not.

Subaru: “—Invisible Providence”

Ram: “…gh”

Subaru set free the dark emotions within his chest as he strangled her neck with a Creak-creak. The dark, invisible sediment took shape and helped keep Ram’s arms and legs firmly pinned down now. With her limbs pinned down, Ram was unable to struggle about effectively. Her breath would soon stop so long as he continued to put his strength into strangling her neck.

Ram, too, would have regretted her reckless remarks from earlier if she stopped breathing. Subaru would be able to make her pay with her life for having wounded his heart with her misdirected callous remarks, and for her ungrounded thoughtless remarks which had been spurned by her selfishness, and for having spoken light of Rem, for thinking he never cared for her.

Subaru: “It’s you who’s at fault. It’s you, you, you!”

Ram was detestable. Ram was detestable. Ram was detestable.

All of those little things that piled up poured out one after the other. He put his hatred into the fingers which were strangling her neck; his nails dug into her pale skin, and blood trickled down.

Ram: “Hhh…hk”

Ram turned her eyes full of hate at Subaru who was breathing heavily and relishing the touch of hot blood at the end of his fingernails.

What was with that inflexibility in her light pink irises that gazed at him while the light of her life was about to be snuffed out? It’s as if they were complaining saying: “I won’t truly die by having my life taken.”

He decided that he would gouge out her eyes after he strangled her to death.

Subaru: “Gonna rip you apart piece by piece, bitch…You, when I think of you looking at me with that face which is a spitting image of Rem’s, it makes me wanna hurl.”

Ram: “……”

Subaru: “Ohh? What is it, I can’t hear you. If you got something to say, then say it clearly—"

Ram: "…la"

Ram wheezed something out that overlapped with the last syllable of Subaru's abusive tirade. For a split second, Subaru narrowed his eyes to the echo of that sound. Then the sand beneath Subaru, who was pushing Ram down, exploded and both of their bodies were blown away.

Subaru: "WH…A?!"

Ram: "Ghha…!"

Subaru was showered in sand by the sudden blast which got inside of his mouth and eyes. He toppled down towards the back to the taste of sand and pain. Ram too had been caught up in the explosion, and her small body had taken the brunt of it as she tumbled away from him.

Bearing cuts from the explosion, the blood Ram spilled had spattered across the sand. However, Ram had escaped from Subaru's clutch. That was the fact of the matter.

Subaru: "Ram! You used fucking magic…!"

Ram: "I had enough time… To take a gasped breath. That's all I need… to be able to, chant…gh"

Ram picked herself up from her knees, her breathing was in a feeble state. She had barely managed to chant out her Fula wind magic whilst her neck was being strangled. Unable to afford to miss, and unable to aim accurately, she had instead aimed underneath her. As a result, she had dragged both herself and Subaru into the blast and escaped from danger—.

Subaru: "Tch—!"

Ram: "…"

As soon as he came to that realization, Subaru turned his hand to the back of his waist and pulled out his whip. At the same time, Ram pulled out a short wand from her bosom, letting her fighting spirit well out showing that she was prepared for battle.

Ram as a magician had the capacity to deliver one strong blow, but even Subaru wouldn't be bested when it came to the speed which he could attack at. The swift nature of the whip was one that was favored even by the big guns of this world.

He should crack his whip straight at her unperturbed looking face so to make it one that he'd never have to see again.

Subaru: "Even if you start crying and apologizing, it's far too late!"

Ram: "That's my line. There's no value in letting an uncaring sex freak like you Barusu meet Rem. Turn to pieces and wither upon the sand."

Subaru: "Whatever you say!"

Subaru's resolve in dealing with Ram, who had softly let her murderous intentions flare up, stiffened as well. Making use of the light of the lantern which had dropped down between them, both Ram and Subaru continued to glare at each other, moving around each other in a circle as they slowly tried to get within striking distance.

And just as the lid was about to be blown off on them slaughtering each other—Just a few seconds before that happened.

???: "—Alrigh', that's enough!"

Subaru & Ram: "—?!"

The sound of violent applause echoed throughout, and both Subaru and Ram's faces jerked up on hearing its withered timbre. The one who had interrupted them, Anastasia, was looking down on them from dragonback.

She glared at the two who had been on the verge of trying to kill each other in turn, still sat alone on top of Patrasche.

Anastasia: "That's enough. I don't think it's acceptable that yer both glaring at each other with such angry looks on yer faces despite us all bein' on the same side. There oughta be limits no matter where ya are."

Subaru: "Limits? AAH, OF COURSE THERE'S LIMITS. AND THE ONE WHO STEPPED OVER THEM AND SAID SOMETHING THAT SHE NEVER SHOULD'VE IS THAT GIRL THERE, ISN'T IT?! THAT'S WHY I'M MAKING HER PAY FOR IT!"

Anastasia: "Ugh, since I ain't getting through to you, what about you, Ram-san?"

Anastasia looked on in shock at Subaru as he jabbed his finger at Ram, and spoke with spittle flying out of his mouth. She had turned her flow of talk towards Ram, but the response she received from the pink haired girl wasn't all that different from Subaru's.

Ram still warily kept the tip of her wand pointed at Subaru, keeping herself on guard for battle.

Ram: "What a foolish question. It's Barusu's attitude that's intolerable… I'm rather at the limits of my patience. If all he cares about is himself, then why don't we go and drop him in the pitch black darkness alone just like he wants."

Subaru: "I HAVE NO WORDS FOR THIS BULLSHIT, FUCK OFF!"

Anastasia: "No good from her too, huh? Jeez, why. 'T seems like I've got too much on my shoulders…"

Seeing Ram's attitude, whose anger remained unrelenting, Subaru's anger also showed no signs of disappearing. Anastasia shrugged her shoulders with a gesture that indicated she'd given up on the two of them, who continued to exchange sharp looks of murderous intent.

Looking at her from the corner of his eye, Subaru began to feel irritated at Anastasia as well.

In the first place, why was Anastasia alone making a face that looked just like she was an outsider?

He wondered who the hell it had been that was behind everything that had happened. He wondered who the hell it was that had first told him to travel to the Augria Sand Dunes and aim for the Sage's Watchtower.

Who the hell did they think they were leaving everything to others despite unmistakably having the strongest incentive for setting out to the Watchtower?

And on top of that, they were sitting alone, even now, looking down from the top of his Patrasche—

Subaru: "HEY, YOU. WHAT THE HELL ARE YOU PREACHING TO ME FROM UP ABOVE. GET DOWN. "

Anastasia: "…Huh, it's come to that?"

Subaru: "Get on the same level as me before you run your mouth with your arrogance. I'll hear what you have to say after that. I ain't gonna let you run your mouth at me unless you can do that!"

He swung his whip down, scattering sand up with a woosh. His whip caused skin to split open if it hit its target; even by looking at it, his whip was a weapon designed to inflict cruel wounds. It probably wouldn't matter if he hurt her host body regardless of whether Eridna was inside of it.

As a matter of fact, Anastasia complied with Subaru's orders and slowly climbed down from Patrasche's back. Right after she landed gingerly onto the sand, she cocked her head and asked: "Now what?"

Anastasia: “There, I got down too, but… Natsuki-kun, what is it that ya want ta do?”

Subaru: “That should be obvious. I’ll let that idiot take back what she said before and if she doesn’t want to, then there’ll be just one thing left to do.”

If Ram changed her attitude and apologized from the depths of her heart, taking back everything she had said up until now, then Subaru would consider taking into account the extenuating circumstances.

However, Ram’s reaction, who’d heard what he’d said, was something that was easy enough to understand.

Anastasia: “Well, that’s what Natsuki-kun’s sayin’, but, what do ya think of it, Ram-san?”

Ram: “That’s out of the question. You’re leaping to conclusions, for I have nothing that should be taken back. I’m having a hard time understanding what on earth I’d be saying differently.”

Ram snorted, declaring that with an attitude that looked like she was making a fool out of them from the depths of her heart.

That was her answer. Thus, with that, she had forever lost her chance to be forgiven.

Subaru: “You heard her. Back off. I’m gonna make it so that there’s only one face which is the same as Rem’s in this world.”

Ram: “…”

Subaru: “AAH, HEY? You got nothing to say?”

Ram: “I’m talking to myself here, but idiocy is a contagious thing when speaking with idiots. That’s why I am not say anything.”

A vein bulged across his forehead, Subaru’s remaining patience got closer and closer to its limit. In that state, Subaru gathered his strength and tried to get to where Ram was (straight ahead of him) so he could tear her limb from limb. Anastasia rushed out spreading out her hands in front of Subaru.

Anastasia: “Whoawhoawhoa! Hey, calm down! You’re jumping to conclusions again.”

Subaru: “Get out of my way! Do you want me to pummel the life out of you first?!”

Anastasia: “Ya left this to me. Remember? Hey, Ram-san, just a sec’…”

Holding Subaru back, who was trying to step forward, Anastasia turned towards Ram. The taciturn Ram glared at Subaru, before reluctantly moving her gaze slightly towards Anastasia.

However, it didn’t seem likely that she would change her opinion. In fact, the look in her eyes betrayed that she had no intention to do so. It seemed like she had stepped towards Anastasia just out of obligation.

Anastasia: “Look, Ram-san. I get that ‘cause the air’s bad ‘n such, various feelings end up gettin’ frayed, but…”

Ram: “Such talk doesn’t matter right now, don’t you think? More than that, go say it to that idio—”

”□□□”

Anastasia: “—Alrigh’. It doesn’ matter, jeez”

Giving off a fidgety impression, Ram tried to end her conversation with Anastasia as well. For the first time, she had moved her face away from Subaru and looked dead on at Anastasia.

The reason was because she’d felt a sudden impact. The impact which had pierced into her body, more precisely, the left part of her chest was—Was due to the thick knife which Anastasia held in her hand.

Ram: “Ah, gh…?”

Anastasia: “I had ta eyeball a decision of which of ya would be useful. Can ya forgive me?”

She twisted her knife and pulled it out from the wound. Ram looked down at the fatal wound that had been birthed on the left side of her chest as blood tricked out from the corner of her lips. Then, she looked up at Anastasia, who had raised her hand up with a smile on her face, and collapsed in front of her.

Ram feebly fell down onto the sand. The blood that gushed out of her continued to be soaked up by the parched sand.

Subaru: “H-Hah?”

Subaru looked at the scene with his own eyes, at a loss at what had occurred. His palm which he held his whip with trembled and his molars creaked in anger.

Subaru: “WHY DID YOU…!”

Anastasia: “Since ya were goin’ about it slowly Natsuki-kun, didn’t it seem like ya’d have ended up killin’ each other if Ram-san’s vigilance couldn’ be loosened? What would I do if both of ya got injured, or both of ya died? I can’t escape from this place all alone, y’know?”

Anastasia cocked her head at the angered Subaru, her face showing no ill will. Her words made logical sense, but what could he, who was crushed by logic, do about this fury of his? His urge that he should have attacked Ram was still uncontrollable, and his rage was still bottled up.

Anastasia: “Or… Are ya feelin’ like takin’ out yer annoyance on me?”

Subaru: “…”

Anastasia: “Don’t ya think it’s stupid to get seized up by yer current rage and lose sight of the goal? I think that’s enough of gettin’ rid of companions for the time bein’.”

Anastasia’s words continued to quench his fury as if she was slowly pouring water on them. It was certainly as she said; continuing to get rid of the thinking minds which had come this far was foolish. Moreover, Anastasia = Eridna was their guide for their journey to the Pleiades Watchtower. It was dubious whether her knowledge had come in use, but casting her aside would be regrettable.

She was different from Ram. The latter's words only made him sick to the stomach and had no use to him. Anastasia was a piece that would be bothersome to lose; yes, that's how it was.

Subaru: "…Alright, I'll get on board with your persuasion for now."

Anastasia: "Mhm, that's great with me. No, thank goodness. What a relief"

Making a show of patting her chest in relief, Anastasia smiled from ear to ear. And then, she stepped through the sand, giving off a perilous impression, and came towards Subaru, proffering her hand out.

Perhaps she wanted them to shake hands?

Anastasia: "A reconciliation; a handshake, ta show that from here on out, we'll treat each other well, won't we?"

Subaru: "…"

Subaru faltered for a moment in thought as he looked at the hand she had offered out to him, her face showed no traces of maliciousness. Anastasia's true feelings—Or rather, right now it was Eridna's true feelings. He didn't truly know what she was scheming. He was neither comfortable or optimistic enough to think that everything she'd spoken was the truth.

To start with, Anastasia had killed Ram with the knife that she'd kept concealed, whilst she expressed the same smile as she was showing now. Indeed, with a knife that she had kept concealed.

The thick knife she was holding looked like it could cut all the way to the bone depending how it was handled. Since it had been put in their survival kit along with their lanterns, the kind of utility of an item that was presumed to be for survival was pretty high. However, she had kept it concealed all this time, and had used it in self-defense at her time of need. —No, it may not have been self defense.

Anastasia: “Natsuki-kun?”

Subaru: “…”

Anastasia: “Ya ain’t takin’ my hand?”

The hand she had offered out, her right one, was empty. However, her left hand was still holding the knife, even now. The range at which he’d be able to shake her hand was also the range at which the knife would be able to reach him. At least one of his hands would be occupied if he took her hand. He didn’t even need to consider which out of his whip and her knife would be more effective at this distance. Taking her hand: “wasn’t that in itself a trap?

—Shouldn’t he kill her before he was killed?

Anastasia: “Natsuki-kun?”

Subaru: “Don’t worry, it’s nothing.”

Subaru gave a weak smile and reached out for Anastasia’s right hand. The moment in which she lowered her guard completely would be his chance, after they took each other’s hand.

—Invisible Providence.

He once again invoked his Unseen Hand, and the black hand slowly fixed its sights onto Anastasia’s slender neck. He wouldn’t make the same mistake as he had with Ram. Next, he would make the black palm mercilessly crush her throat. He would teach a lesson to the woman who had kept belittling him ever since she had managed to secure the upper hand with her knife.

Although, even if he wanted to show her, this palm wasn’t visible —.

Subaru: “…”

Then, Subaru slowly took her outstretched hand with his own whilst he put the fingers of his black hand around Anastasia's neck. The touch of slender fingers; Anastasia's smile's grew deeper. And at the same time, Subaru's lips broke into a sad smile too.

Anastasia: "Well then…"

Right here. Thus, he believed.

He would use the strength of his demonic hand before Anastasia could finish speaking and raise her knife. He would grasp her slender neck with his black fingers, and crush her neckbones in an instant—.

—Just before that happened however, a blade of wind came streaming in and cut Anastasia's body in two from behind.

2

He felt like he'd hallucinated that a wind had blown, straight after that.

A spray of red gushed out right in front of his eyes, a daft voice let out an "Eh?" and Anastasia's body was cut in two across the middle.

A heapload of blood was strewn out onto the white sand. Steaming shit and warm guts mingled in with the cold air, leaving behind a putrid smell to hang over the inside of the cave.

Pink small and large intestines, along with many other internal organs that still showed faint traces of activity rolled onto the sand. The sand itself had turned into a showcase of organs, in which the items on display were the raw ingredients that made up a young girl.

Subaru: "—Ah?"

Seeing the spectacle in front of him, Subaru cast his gaze down to his own hand. What he saw there was Anastasia's upper body swinging about; she was still firmly grasping Subaru's right hand with hers. She opened her eyes and speechlessly looked up at Subaru.

Behind her, the lower part of her body which had been cut at the waist, was flopping about. Her legs were convulsing like a marionette, and pee was pouring out everywhere as her muscles had relaxed.

Subaru: “A-AHHHHHHHHHH—?!”

Subaru let out a scream at Anastasia’s horrific condition. He immediately tried to shake her arm away, however she was holding on with inordinate strength. Unable to shake her off, Subaru just swung the now half in weight Anastasia about. More blood spewed out of her as she was swung about, and the intestine that still connected the upper half of her body with her lower jolted about, scattering body fluids everywhere and emitting a foul odor.

Subaru: “Hah, LET GO! LET GOOOOOOO!”

Anastasia: “NOOOOO! I DON’T WANT TO DIE…!”

Subaru: “YOU’RE ALREADY DEAD! CAN’T YOU GRASP THAT YOU’RE BEYOND SAVING?!”

Her vivid laments were far more clear than imagined, leading Subaru to scream in return. The upper and lower half of her body had now separated and so much blood and guts had flooded out. It was wrong for her not to have died immediately. It was also wrong for her to still keep grasping his hand. It was all so ridiculous.

Subaru: “LETGOLETGOLETGOLETGOLETGO”□□□”

Anastasia: “NO, NOOO! I WON’T, I ABSOLUTELY WOOON’T…hk”

Subaru: “EVEN IF YOU SAY THAT NOW, I CAN’T DO ANYTH—… GHAA?!”

The upper half of Anastasia clung to his arm, and pain shot through Subaru’s shoulder as he tried to throw her off. Anastasia was still holding the knife in her left hand, and had thrust it into Subaru’s body in an attempt to hold on to him.

The sharp blade easily pierced through Subaru's left shoulder, and cracked his collarbone beneath it. Bleeding and scorching pain caused Subaru to scream.

Subaru: "GHAAAAAAAAA—?! FUCKING IDIOT, HURRY UP AND DIEEE!!"

Anastasia: "NOOOO…hk"

Subaru fiercely grabbed Anastasia by the face and forcefully tore off her body. With great difficulty, he held the girl who had shouted something out whilst in tears, and threw her away.

From the start, Anastasia's body had been quite petite. And now that she had become half, and with all the blood she had lost, she felt as light as a feather.

Subaru: "Haaah, haaah, haaaaa…!"

Without taking any notice of that, Subaru put his hand on his wounded right shoulder. His sight flickered in pain, and his heartbeat accelerated like it was going to explode. However, it wasn't a life-threatening wound.

Subaru sluggishly reached into his thoughts whilst besieged by an unchanged sickening tension.

The blow that had killed Anastasia before was—.

???: "—Barusu."

Subaru: "Gh-a"

A shadow swayed up in front of Subaru, who had fallen onto his backside and was gasping in pain.

A slender girl with blood covering half of her body came into view from the dim light of the lantern which was half-buried in sand—Ram.

Since she had been stabbed in the chest by Anastasia's knife, he'd taken her for dead. Yet, the girl still breathed. And keeping ahold of her tenacity, she had killed Anastasia with her magic.

Subaru: "…This fucking idiot. If you're gonna die, then fucking die on your own."

Subaru declared that with annoyance in his voice as he looked up at the staggering Ram. It wasn't as if Ram wasn't covered in wounds. Anastasia's attack had been fatal for sure. The bleeding from the wound in her chest hadn't stopped, and even now, blood was endlessly soiling her skirt all the way down to its hem. It looked like she'd soon die due to blood loss.

However, before that happened, she could take Subaru with her.

Subaru: "Sh…it…"

Subaru looked around his surroundings, trying to find his arme de guerre, his whip. However, even if he located it, his right arm which he used to wield it was injured from the shoulder. He couldn't wield it with his left arm like he did with his right.

Then, he had just one choice left.

Subaru: "INVISIBLE PROVIDENCE…?!"

His trump card, which he'd already relied on many times in this short period of time. Once again, Subaru's brain throbbed in burning pain the moment he tried to unleash the strength of his invisible black palm. An agony like his skull was being bored through by a drill exploded within him.

Subaru: "GHA! AAH?! GHHHUGH?!"

Puke trickled out from the corner of Subaru's mouth due to the agony that visited him in waves.

In exchange for trying to use his trump card past its limits, his consciousness was broken up by the hellish banquet that had woken up inside his skull, starting from his cranial nerves. The pain of his right shoulder and such wasn't even comparable to this.

Whittling at his brain and skull, the sense of loss froze Subaru's will like it was gnawing at his soul.

Speaking nothing of the resistance he offered with his crappy whip, Subaru, who was writhing in agony, was prime prey. The dying Ram moved her body fueled only by hatred and slowly made her way towards Subaru, raising her bloodstained wand.

Ram: “Fuuu”

Subaru: “AAAAAH! GHAAAA! OOOOAAAAAAH?!”

Subaru rolled over to where Anastasia lay in her pool of blood, still holding his head. Looking down at him, Ram’s lips stirred, and she began to chant her spell. And then—

Ram: “la—”

”□□□”

Subaru: “…”

She completed her chant, and the blade of wind which she created hewed Subaru down. But before that came to be, the sound of something hard being chewed echoed out across the cold cave of sand.

That horrible grating sound continued, and it changed into the sound of flesh and water being chewed.

Subaru: “AH…Ah”

That he would die, that he would be hewn down; Subaru had been convinced of that. However, the Death that should have come to him didn’t come at all. Finally, Subaru (who had been breathing heavily and rolling around)’s headache and feeling of loss slowly started to subside.

Subaru: “AH, HAH, ah, AH?”

He covered his face with his left hand and briskly shook his head which was drenched in cold sweat. Though a dull ache remained, the sharp blade-like agony had faded. Taking deep breaths, he lifted himself up using the strength of his entire soul. Subaru wiped his moistened cheeks whilst he foolishly took the time to raise only his upper body.

He noticed that his palm was covered in bright red, the source of which came from his own eyes—It seemed like he had shed tears of blood.

A lot of blood dripped from his nose as well; the lower half of his face was probably in a horrific state. There was likely no doubt that the drilling pain which pierced directly to his brain was in recompense for his Unseen Hand. It was a familiar story. The feedback from having used his special superpower had come.

Subaru: “What happ…”

Briskly wiping his face with his sleeve, Subaru looked around his surroundings. He had no idea how much time he’d spent in agony. Nevertheless, he had hardly even thought it possible that he had it in himself to spend his time like that.

Something had happened, and with that he had been—.

Subaru: “Patrasche?”

Patrasche: “…”

Subaru’s jet black Earth Dragon nestled up beside him as he sat in blank amazement. Crouched down on the sand, she heard Subaru’s call and shook her long tail, indicating that she was in good health.

Subaru: “So you were uninjured? Hmm, let me think…”

Just now, he recalled what had happened before. He recalled the scene in which Anastasia had been cut in two by Ram, and the latter aiming down at him. Subaru should have been ripped to shreds by Ram’s doing.

Subaru: “And yet, why… Did Ram…?”

Perhaps she had used up all her strength and collapsed?

Though it was a really convenient development, Ram had been bearing fatal wounds. It wouldn't be farfetched to think that she'd collapsed.

Subaru: "Is that lucky, or unlucky….."

He didn't want to say that he was lucky since she had been no less than almost dead. However, if he thought about it, he still couldn't say he was unlucky since he ought to have been dead if things had gone south.

In any case, now wasn't the time to go on about these things. Given that everyone who had gotten in his way was gone, he had to get out of this place as soon as he could and make his way to the Watchtower.

Subaru: "Patrasche…Sorry, let me hop on."

Patrasche: "…"

Subaru: "Patrasche?"

Subaru called out to her and touched her back, but the Earth Dragon didn't obey his instructions. On the contrary, Patrasche, who had crouched down, still didn't make any move to show her face to him.

She was sitting next to him on the sand, looking rather at peace, merely breathing heavily over and over.

Subaru: "Hey, Patrasche. Are you listening? HEY."

His irritation slowly started to increase. It was a spiral of negative emotions which built up at supersonic speed, similar to those which he had felt against Ram and Anastasia. He felt like he wanted to teach the unresponsive Earth Dragon her place.

Subaru: "HEY, PATRASCHE, YOU, LOOK OVER HERE! HEY! "

Patrasche: "…"

Subaru: "BASTARD, LISTEN TO WHAT I'VE BEEN SAYING FROM THE START…”

Patrasche lifted her head up at Subaru, who had raised his voice and furiously slapped her back. He realized that she was trying to come face to face with him to try and express her words, breathing heavily out of her nose.

Patrasche’s mouth looked far from normal and was dyed in red.

Subaru: “…”

That crimson color was one that he had become used to seeing already in this short period of time. That color coated parts of Subaru’s body as well, and still streamed down from his right shoulder even now. The foul smell which drifted around the area lay thick in it, along with that of piss and shit; there was no mistaking it.

However, he hadn’t wanted to notice something, he shouldn’t have noticed it.

Subaru: “…”

Pink Hair innumerably entwined itself between the fangs that lined Patrasche’s mouth, who had now turned his way.

Subaru: “Eep”

On the other side of the crouched Patrasche’s large body, Ram, whom he had lost sight of, fell down to the ground. Though the body of the girl fell, he couldn’t tell whether she was lying face up or face down. Checking that would be easy to tell if he looked at her head, but it was precisely because of that which he couldn’t. He couldn’t assess that because everything above her neck was chewed and its original shape was lost.

Ram’s skull had been crushed by vicious fangs and her brain juice had spilled out leaving her dead. Just like Anastasia who’d had her guts spilled out before dying, Ram had had the contents of her skull spilled out.

And, the one who’d done that, Patrasche, was staring intently at Subaru now.

Her yellow eyes which resembled that of a reptile were sharply and cruelly tinged with madness.

Subaru: “—Sto”

The last thing he saw was her maw opening up millimeters from his eyes.

All that Natsuki Subaru heard was the sound of his own body being chewed up all the way until just before he slipped out of consciousness. Even after his head was crushed and his ears stopped working, the sound continued.

He almost ended up laughing, wondering where he was hearing the sound from. However, he had no mouth to laugh with, no life that he could merely laugh at, and nothing which he could laugh at.

He was chewed up by his companion, and died.

Chapter 16:
Chewed Remains

1

—The sound of something breaking, only the consciousness continued to hear endlessly.

Bones were being chewed, gray matter being flattened, eyeballs cracking, the liquid therein contained overflowing.

The cranium, the bones of the head were being crushed. The important part on the inside was thoroughly overwhelmed by the pressure of sharp fangs, and it was clear that it was all turning into a pulpy mess.

Gray matter and spinal fluid flowed out together, mingling with an unknown yellow liquid pooling on the forehead, where blood vessels with the appearance of a thin mesh were torn apart, causing red blood to gush forth.

With all of that joining together, consciousness and memory transformed into flesh-colored vomit.

Pain, there was pain. Trouble breathing, too.

The pain in his head creaked like it was splitting his head apart—and thinking so, his consciousness bitterly smiled.

That splitting was not what this was all about.

There was nothing left to split, and everything important was already smashed. Besides, even with the part that registered pain having been squashed, so what was left to say, even?

The organ that accumulated memories and was used for thinking, the brain, had been destroyed; the parts necessary for maintaining life in the first place, had been completely ravaged. What would occur after that happened?

Once such a thing took place, humans would experience Death. So, naturally, him too—

???: "—rusu. Barusu. Get yourself together."

Grabbed by the scruff of its neck, the intensely muddled consciousness was forcefully brought into light.

The first thing he felt upon returning was someone's voice close to his ears, scolding him with a stern face. The voice was not only accompanied by the trembling of sound, but also by a slight feeling on his face as if it had been slapped.

???: "Barusu, if you do not get up, I will burn off your eyelids."

Subaru: "—Hk."

With his sleeping mind hearing that terrifying statement, his consciousness rapidly rose to the surface.

As the voice called and dragged it out of that dark world, his consciousness passed through a suffocating environment that appeared like the surface of water. And so, opening his eyelids before they were scorched by flame,

???: "—Barusu, are you awake?"

Subaru: "…"

Immediately he encountered Ram's face in front of him, her light-crimson eyes narrowed.

He could hear her breathing, her face was so close that he could touch her lips if he raised his mouth a bit. Of course, such colorful situation could not exist. The reason Ram was leaning down so close was because the surroundings were so dark that they could not see each other's faces unless they looked at one another from close-range; that was all there was to it.

Upon becoming aware of Ram in front of him, his sense of touch began registering the feeling under his buttocks immediately, among others. Fine particles of sand rolled out from atop his body.

Subaru had been lying spread-eagled on the sand sea.

With a breath, air leaked out of Subaru's mouth, and Ram seemed to stare deep into his eyes for a short moment, and then slowly with the other hand she shined a lantern upon his body. From the girl's hand, an orange light cut through the darkness, and Subaru understood that he was still trapped in the labyrinth of sand—No, he understood he had Returned by Death.

Subaru: "I'm…"

Looking around the darkness, Subaru gradually remembered what happened.

The shock at the moment of death was always vivid, and there was nothing to indicate he had gotten used to shaking off the memories at all. Immersed in the trembling field of his memories, he struggled to remember the meaning of his certain death, and Subaru's last moments grazed past his fingertips as he remembered it.

Subaru: "…"

Recollecting the awful situation, the image of Ram's expression of hatred illuminated by the lantern appeared yet again in his mind with a tremendous impact.

And then, the murder spree that had originated from the insults and abuse he had hurled at her, a killing rampage with no meaning nor significance, and the horrendous conclusion of it all.

Subaru: "Ubu… Hk."

Ram: "Barusu?"

As Ram displayed a confused expression, Subaru involuntarily put his hand over his mouth.

Remembering the reality of Ram's death that had occurred just a couple of minutes ago, and the desire to scream—was not it. In fact, facing Ram and remembering her gruesome last moments, caused a vomiting urge.

Subaru: “Ugh, eh… Geh.”

Subaru’s deaths had already exceeded the number that could be counted by the fingers on both hands.

And in this world with Return by Death, it could be said that the experience of losing a close friend like Emilia or Beatrice was nearly the same as his own death.

However, Subaru himself had never got used to death. For his own, or the death of someone else, was one and the same. The fear of being dead himself, or thinking that someone close to him might die, shredded his heart.

—Indeed, in the last loop, the tragedy of Ram’s brutal death was a shock he had experienced for the first time.

He had seen her figure having had its stomach cut open, its neck severed, her whole body mercilessly wounded, and then dead.

Each death was full of anguish and grief, and Subaru was unable of putting people’s deaths on a scale and compare them. It did not feel right.

However, it was the first time he had had his head crushed, chewed up and ruined in that manner.

He had also witnessed Ram’s beautiful face being crushed by fangs without mercy.

That was also a tragedy enacted by Patrasche, one of the beings Subaru most trusted.

Subaru: “…Oh, geh. Geh, gah.”

Desperately attempting not to remember it was no different from remembering.

The more he tried to forget Ram’s miserable end, the clearer the pink hair and the remnants of her head in the mouth of the ground dragon were carved into Subaru’s head.

As a result, it was not possible to get over the urge to vomit, so Subaru turned toward the sand.

However, his throat and stomach had yet to recover from the impact of having Returned by Death, and so they just cramped, not obeying Subaru's will.

Subaru: "Geh, eh…"

Ram: "…Is this just because you woke up suddenly? Miserable."

Tackling the ground, desperately attempting to vomit the contents of his stomach, but nothing exited. That his throat was dry and that not even a drop of saliva had come out was vexing.

He could not gaze at Ram's expression looking at him with a lantern in one hand, but the surprised tone in her voice was easily conveyed to the panting Subaru.

Naturally, the coldness reminded him of the events just before that death.

The violent passion that led to the murderous intent was rising for no reason, as did the abuse that had triggered the emotional outburst—the impulse that had driven him to do so urged inside his chest, it was dreadful. However,

Ram: "—Do not bite down."

Subaru: "—Hk."

With that sentence of preamble, Ram sat down beside Subaru and lifted his chin.

The kneeling Subaru was surprised for a moment, and Ram opened Subaru's mouth with no worry as to his reaction, with the same uninterested look as always—then thrust her own white fingers into the back of Subaru's throat.

Subaru: "…?! Oh, ehk."

Ram: "That Barusu is this severely inept was already known, but this is at the level of a baby.”

Having someone else’s fingers entering his throat, Subaru felt like his esophagus was being rudely violated.

But then, his stomach and throat, which had resisted vomiting until then, accepted that surprise. This time, both began pushing out gastric juice and saliva at once in a desperate action.

With tearful eyes, Subaru got rid of his urge to retch by letting out his stomach’s content on the sand. Only gastric juice and drool had been vomited, but it was still much better than it had been before.

Subaru: “Eh, geh… Haa, buh… Sorry, I’m fine… Hk.”

Ram: “So? I’m happy that you’re pleased.”

Subaru: “You…”

Subaru wiping his mouth with a sleeve, Ram shrugged her shoulders and replied with childish language.

Despite her attitude, it was true that he had made an impression that was roughly at the level of a baby. There was no room to refuse that, and Ram's palm was still gently stroking Subaru's back.

It was hard to understand, her scathing thoughtfulness.

Subaru: "The hand, it's all right. More than that, this place…"

Ram: "You remember that the barrier got broken and the sandy sea cracked in front of us? The dragon carriage was swallowed up, and as a result we got thrown in here."

Ignoring Ram's consideration, Subaru spoke while looking at his surroundings. In response to her remark, Subaru was hesitant as to whether he should be relieved or anxious that the Return by Death point had remained the same.

However, in either case, action must be taken quickly.

According to that judgment, he tried to continue speaking—

Ram: "Ever since you woke up below ground, Barusu, have you ever worried about Rem? Or about Emilia-sama? Or about Beatrice-sama? Have you ever at all worried about those who are missing?"

Subaru: "—Uh."

What resuscitated in his mind were those bladelike words of Rem, both terribly sharp and heart-rending.

The discord that had invited the previous end—the situation where allies killed one another, was obviously abnormal.

He must come back to his senses, but recalling the situation, it was hard to imagine that he had been in a normal state of mind. In the first place, the trigger was abnormal. It was absurd that something such as negative emotions had been amplified and evolved into the exchange of insults and then into mortal combat.

Ram: "Barusu?"

Ram tilted her head at Subaru's visage, as his words would not come out.

The last time they had talked, discord sowed by an aberrant situation had followed suit. So of course, there was no meaning in being concerned about the words Ram had spoken in such a state— But it was inaccurate to say that everything that had been said was a lie.

The fact was that the dissatisfaction and indignation Subaru had felt towards Ram had not been fake, but true. Even though they had been augmented to a point that they would not have in normal circumstances. But it was not that everything had been untruthful.

Then, it was also true that Ram had held some inexpressible discomfort over the fact that Subaru's attitude seemed like he had no concern regarding about Emilia and the others. If consideration were given to that feeling, Subaru should be worried about Emilia here in any shape.

Actually, he was worried, so it was not a lie to act that way.

However, he just knew that he could not do anything about the target of his worry.

Subaru: "…"

At this time, yes, at this time, did Subaru realize that he was at a loss for words for that.

He knew it was necessary to avoid conflict, but still hesitated to deceive Ram by lying. Worrying about his peers and deceiving others by being calculative—disgusting, it was.

Naturally, that hesitation had to be swallowed down. It was not worth getting someone displeased for that reason.

Subaru: "That… everyone…"

Ram: "—It is useless to blame yourself so much. There is no point in pursuing who is responsible. There should be something else to give priority to, rather than wasting time like that."

However, before Subaru could speak his words of worry, Ram reached her own conclusion on Subaru's feelings. That being said, she had misread the serious expression in Subaru's face.

That was something rare, for Ram's insight. She would say and do things as if she could see through people's hearts; her error here was evidence that she was impatient deep down inside.

Ram: "Besides, we have already wasted time with Barusu's vomiting."

Of course, Ram would never display such stormy behavior of her own heart.

Because of Ram's attitude, which could not be described as headstrong but rather as a bluff, Subaru was at a loss for words. After that, Ram moved first without saying anything.

While she wiped the finger which had been jabbed into Subaru's mouth, she turned the lantern towards the back of the labyrinth.

Ram: "We cannot stay here, Ram must be with Rem and… we have to join up with Emilia-sama and the others."

Subaru: "I know… Who else is here?"

Ram: "Besides Ram and Barusu… it seems like they have just returned."

With Ram glossing over that confirmation, she turned back, and he followed her words and gaze.

Coming from the other side of the maze with a swaying flickering light, were Anastasia and Patrasche. Subaru's eyes shook slightly, as he gazed at the jet-black dragon that melted into the dark.

That dignified and ferocious beautiful face, illuminated by the flickering orange light.

A row of fangs that could be mistaken for blades were present within that closed mouth, which had crushed the girl's head, which had even crushed Subaru himself all of a sudden—

That would not occur in normal circumstances.

Subaru: “Am I an idiot…? No, I am definitely an idiot.”

Clenching his teeth, Subaru tried to stifle his fear.

In that abnormal friction, the murderous intention that had been directed could not be genuine. The experience of being killed by Patrasche was carved into Subaru’s heart, as a scar that could not be healed.

Still, Subaru had supposedly been faced with existences that had murdered him time and time again.

Subaru: “Yeah, even Rem and Ram, at first…”

Even Ram, who had just now displayed her affection.

Even Rem, who had supported and forgiven Subaru with her devotion.

His relationships with them had been the worst at first, there had been times his life had been targeted, there had been times he had been deprived of it.

Compared to that, the events from just before, which had not been intentional, were adorable.

Subaru: “That’s right. That’s very right… It has to be, right?”

He embraced his shoulders and grabbed his skin as if feeling cold.

In the basement of the sand sea, in this place dominated by sand and darkness, it was certainly cold. However, the reason as to why he felt those chills was different from the ambient air.

Anastasia: “—Natsuki-kun, ya seem to have woken up.”

Ram: “—With some assistance. So, how is the vicinity?”

In front, Ram and Anastasia were talking.

They should be fine-tuning a strategy for conquering this labyrinth of sand based on the information they had just obtained. Originally, Subaru had blended in there, with many things he had to communicate.

But now, the priority was to calm his mind and to stop the quaking of his knees.

With Return by Death, the events and impacts immediately before death should have been left behind. But even if he tried to quench it, the fear emerged, and the passion of that moment revived.

Subaru kept resisting, endlessly so, as to disperse those feelings.

Subaru: "…"

With Subaru in such a state, the jet-black ground dragon seemed lonely as it watched him attentively.

2

—The heart of Subaru, who had supposedly Returned by Death just now, had yet to be restored wholly.

Apart from that particular aspect, the four-person exploration of the sand maze proceeded in almost identical fashion as before.

In search of their allies, the group headed by Subaru slowly moved in the cold darkness. With the lantern lighting up the corridor, the journey was slow and frustrating, keeping an eyes for any shadows lying along the road.

Subaru: "…"

Truth be told, Subaru wished to skip this checking process.

Subaru had gone through this way twice already. There was no way Emilia and the rest were strolling in the area that he could see. However, there was no point in appealing to the two people behind him. There was no defense to the argument that it was something that had been overlooked.

As a result, the frustrating march did not pick up its pace, Subaru's impatience only rose as time went by.

Anastasia: “Everyone else’s prolly okay… In our case, we’re just barely in luck to have Patrasche-chan here.”

Subaru & Ram: “…”

Anastasia: “If ya think ‘bout it, it’d be hell to have no ride in the sand sea. As expected, the only thing to be worried ‘bout’s the lack of strength…”

Subaru & Ram: “…”

Anastasia: “If push comes to shove, I won’t hesitate to use my trump card, but if I don’t use it sparingly, I’m afraid we’ll end up havin’ our backs to the wall. So can I rely on the two of ya?”

Subaru & Ram: “…”

Anastasia: “…Hey, are ya listenin’ to me, Natsuki-kun, Ram-san? For a while now I’ve been talkin’ to ya all by myself.”

As their search journey resumed, Anastasia chatted continuously, but she seemed to become cross with them. Subaru stopped and looked back at her, who had complained about getting the silent treatment.

Then brightening Anastasia’s face with the lamp, he took a deep breath, and spoke,

Subaru: “How can you go on and on without running out of things to say…? For now, we are sort of desperate to find the other guys. We don’t have time to chatter uselessly.”

Anastasia: “There’s no waste nor anythin’. I’m talkin’ ‘bout things related to our future plans. ‘Sides, it’s usually Natsuki-kun’s role to continue chattin’. Without that, the two girls… No, us four’s anxieties’ll be goin’ up.”

Subaru: “Four, huh?”

As Subaru pouted his lips, Anastasia’s mouth went on and on.

The “two girls” here referred to Ram and Anastasia, but with it being rephrased to “four people”, it would result in adding Eridna and Patrasche. Strictly because Anastasia was Eridna, that should be rephrased as “three people”—but it was not something to correct in the first place.

Subaru: “…”

Subaru thought, narrowing his black eyes at Anastasia, who was puffing her cheeks.

The real Anastasia was dormant, and now, Eridna was donning her appearance. Even so, her behavior had become so familiar, it seemed as if she had blended in.

It was unfortunate that, independently of which one of them was in control, it was still impossible to see through her facial expressions, words, and behavior to see her true intentions.

—In the disagreement that had culminated in them killing each other last time around, though he was conscious about Ram and Patrasche because of how horrifying that ending had been, Anastasia’s attitude also brought forth a sense of discomfort.

Ram’s enmity and Patrasche’s attack were easy to understand; the two had apparently gone crazy.

However, at first sight, it was hard to judge whether Anastasia had fallen into insanity, and whether what had laid within her heart had been indiscernible until the very end.

Of course, due to their difference in strength, Anastasia had been slain by Ram, but her cunning was dangerous. She had concealed a knife in an emergency bag, and had looked for a weak spot by feigning mediation. If he were not wary, he could be caught and murdered in his sleep at any time.

Subaru: “…Whatever it takes.”

—He wondered, had they always been hostile to him?

Subaru: “—Kuh.”

Facing ahead, Subaru struck his cheeks in a way that was invisible to Ram and Anastasia.

His mouth was cut with that unrestrained blow, and he felt a sharp pain as the tip of his tongue became acquainted with the taste of blood. He would hurt himself to correct the cloudiness of his consciousness.

Ram and Anastasia, they were not acting abnormally.

It was Subaru, who was not able to let go of the abnormality now.

Subaru: “Great, understanding that I’m being weird all by myself, I’m shuddering.”

Had he gone insane, or was everyone else insane?

There had been a time when Subaru had become so conceited as to believe that everything except him was wrong.

Ultimately, of course, it had all been a mistake. Subaru himself, a lost cause as he was, had tasted the foolish experience of arrogantly assuming that he was in the right, and in the process, he denied all that surrounded him.

He had known all along that he had been in the wrong, and in the end, he was able to indicate that and admit it. It was an accurate, vivid memory.

However, the current Subaru acknowledged his own abnormality in normalcy. On top of that, it was terrible that he was not managing to tame his abnormality. Just awful.

At this point, Subaru remembered.

This desolate sensation in his heart, where the loneliness would drive one into craving madness.

This was the horizon that the madman, Petelgeuse Romanée-Conti, had reached. Being aware of his own madness, recognizing his abnormality with normalcy, this was what that madman had gazed upon.

Ram: “Barusu, what’s wrong?”

While he was feeling disgusting empathy, Ram’s voice fell upon the trembling Subaru’s back. Subaru swallowed the blood mixed with saliva and looked back at those two, acting like nothing happened.

Subaru: “Nothing, just sand in my shoes making me feel uncomfortable.”

Ram: “…Ram’s heart doesn’t care even a bit about you in particular being silent, Barusu, but Anastasia-sama’s words do also have a point.”

Subaru: “What do you mean?”

Ram: “Even if you are the one shutting up, holding back something will not ease a woman’s anxiety. If you wish to do so, then hide it better.”

Subaru: “…”

To those words, Subaru once again bent his lips.

The meaning of Ram’s words was obvious, difficult to be mistaken about. Then he also noticed that Ram’s words were translations of Anastasia’s hard-to-understand words.

It seemed as if he was being seen through, and his heart rather began to scatter.

Subaru: “It’s vague, I don’t think I can explain by saying it.”

Ram: “It is too late for incomprehensible statements like those from you, isn’t it, Barusu? If there is a matter of concern, it is normal that arrangements are made regarding it.”

Anastasia: “Ram-san’s really an unforgivin’ opponent for Natsuki-kun.”

Tutting at Subaru’s words, Ram’s usual sharp tongue struck back. With bitterness and sharpness close to being poisonous, Anastasia gave a bitter smile.

To Anastasia's calm composure, Ram shrugged her shoulders,

Ram: "Please be relieved, Barusu is pretty happy, because he is a deviant who enjoys suffering."

Subaru: "The fuck are you talking about? Why on earth are you judging on what I am? Don't turn me into a punching bag so freely, okay? You know what? You can only hit someone if you're prepared to be hit yourself, yeah?"

Ram: "Hmph."

Snorting her nose, Ram's attitude was almost that of her usual self.

Unlike Subaru's mood, that she had already been able to return to her self-indulgent self was envious and hateful. He felt disgusted just for thinking so.

However, even though they were having the usual chit-chats, the shade of the shadows of discord would be dimmed like this. During his daily life with those girls, that had undoubtedly been the light that Subaru had created.

Subaru: "If I somehow explain something that's difficult to explain… I'm just a little paranoid now."

Ram & Anastasia: "…"

After putting into words, it sounded more futile than he had imagined. It was no wonder that Ram and Anastasia both had bent their lips in response to that.

Patrasche: "…"

Looking at her, even Patrasche seemed to be somewhat taken aback.

For Patrasche, who was clever and able to discern the reason behind things, it was possible that she regarded Subaru as good-for-nothing now. Rather, if she gave up on Subaru and replaced him with a proper owner, it would be way better for her.

Actually, he felt like even Ram and Anastasia were better at handling Patrasche. If she believed him to be a hindrance, it was only natural that she would open her fangs wide towards Subaru—

Subaru: “Stop, stop…”

Anastasia: “I understand it’s more serious than first thought, given how stupid it sounds.”

Anastasia commented on Subaru’s self-deprecation as he stared at Patrasche. Upon their realization that the reason was ridiculous, relief and anxiety simultaneously increased.

In other words, one of their options was to eliminate Subaru. Before that happened, still—

Subaru: “I, really am a pain in the ass.”

Anastasia: “Perhaps it’d be easier if we tied him up and carried him for real, no?”

His face turning red then pale as his face contorted into several different expressions on its own, Anastasia threw in the towel regarding Subaru. Ram curled her eyebrow at Anastasia’s observation, thinking out loud, “However”,

Ram: “Even if we do tie up Barusu’s hands and legs, it would not solve the situation at its core.”

Subaru: “Don’t use such strong words. You might make an enemy out of me.”

Ram: “It is not that much of a big threat, but Ram does not wish to turn herself into an enemy of Emilia-sama and Beatrice-sama… I would not be able to face Rem again.”

As Ram was ruminating, Subaru struggled not to harbor any hostility towards her. While fighting such emotions, there was in fact something he was wondering about.

In reality, there was nothing to think about in this situation.

However, now that they had embarked on a journey to reach Pleiades Watchtower, having Returned by Death twice now in that maze of sand, a question had to be asked.

—When it came to the matter of Rem, Ram reacted awfully sensitively.

Subaru: "…"

Of course, for Subaru, it was a good sign that Ram cared about Rem.

For Rem, who had been erased from everyone's memory other than Subaru, only Subaru held a two-way bond with her. Although, it certainly caused a special feeling in Subaru, but it had no meaning in a practical sense.

As for Rem's circumstances of isolation, Ram was trying to get closer to her family as much as possible.

Of course, no memory of Rem remained in her. That sad fact, he had come to learn over the past year. On the other hand, however, there was no doubt that Ram accepted the existence of another girl like herself, Rem, more seriously than "the truth Subaru had informed her of".

And apparently those feelings were so much "beyond Subaru's imagination", that perhaps the actual feelings were being brought back to Ram.

That could be seen from the explosion of discontent in the previous loop within the labyrinth—which had triggered the outburst for Subaru's lack of consideration.

She did not remember. Yet, Ram's feelings were comparable to what he could remember.

The feeling was deeper than what Subaru had believed it to be.

—But in reality, was that all it was?

Ram: "…Disgusting."

Subaru: “No, it’s not disgusting. Not looking at you with those eyes. You’re being paranoid!”

Ram: “Have you gotten yourself up on a pedestal? There is no use.”

Subaru: “If I’m on a pedestal, aren’t you putting yourself on a kamidana and looking down on others?”

Ergo, it was safe to say that the relationships had not deviated from their routine of light-hearted conversations.

Even though the mood could change instantaneously, and those warm feelings could turn into cold-hearted hostility.

For the time being, they could not help but not hate the other.

Anastasia: “Be careful ‘bout Natsuki-kun’s behavior. I wonder what’s the cause?”

Ram: “Did you also notice that, Anastasia-sama?”

Anastasia: “Well, seems that Natsuki-kun’s obviously affected to some extent. I think.”

Subaru was being invaded by the paranoia of suspecting anything and everything, Ram and Anastasia looked at each other as if they had an inkling of what was going on with him. Rather, only Subaru knew the real reason.

With the perception and insight the two had, they were becoming even more wary. Alas, it was clear that Subaru’s every move was being carefully observed to an annoying extent as they were conversing.

Subaru: “Annoying… I’m an idiot.”

Anastasia: “Did’cha say somethin’?”

Subaru: “Just the extent of my stupidity. So, what do you think?”

As he wrapped his head about his own sensibilities, Ram and Anastasia’s heads puzzled over it. Then, in response to Subaru’s question, they both turned towards the front.

By looking ahead according to that movement, it was plain to see what was meant by that.

—A fork had appeared in front of their eyes.

Anastasia: “I’ve felt a disgustin’ wind flowin’ in for a while now… Now I realize why.”

Ram: “This bad wind invokes discord. As Meili described it, Barusu’s body odor seems to summon Witchbeasts. And by nature, their affinity is bad… No, I wonder if it’s good.”

Subaru: “Do you know what this disgusting feeling is?”

Ram: “Multiplying Barusu’s present condition with Barusu’s body odor would yield the same.”

Subaru: “Don’t say «body odor» so many times.”

In the past two loops, they had unanimously agreed on the “bad feeling” subject. Then, Subaru’s current physical condition and present circumstances were intertwined. Thus, a different opinion was born.

Ram and Anastasia looked at each other and nodded together,

Ram & Anastasia: “Miasma.”

Subaru: “The Witch’s, huh. Then, going ahead would mean…”

Anastasia: “Tho’ I ain’t sure, it’s a well-known fact that the Witch’s Shrine lies beyond the Sand Dunes. Oh, and since the distortion of the sand sea’s been solved, and it’s now connected by some accident…”

Ram: “It turned out to be an unexpected shortcut, something like that. And because of that.”

It had been determined that the cause of their souls becoming corrupted, and the discord that was stirred up, concluding in having them killing each other, was the Miasma.

On top of that, Anastasia pointed at that way with an ironic smile, speaking of the possibility of a terrifying existence.

A two-way fork, with Miasma drifting from the right, and the Centaur's lair on the left.

Of course, he intended to smoothly explain the threats lurking in the left road after this—But for the time being, which way should they go?

Anastasia: "So, which way do ya think is the right answer?"

At Anastasia's question, Subaru and Ram exchanged glances.

But, without the slightest deviation in their voices' synchronicity, they spoke.

Subaru & Ram: "—Left."

That was how it went down.

Chapter 17:
The King of the Desert

1

The Non-Combatant Team unanimously opted to take the left path in the fork.

It was evident that if they progressed down the right path, they'd end up being swallowed up by the miasma, resulting in discord arising that would develop into them killing each other. That's why there was no mistake in that choosing the left path was the most natural thing.

That, and for Subaru, the questions were providing him answers too. Though, since the left path wasn't exactly a safe bet either, the one who was setting him those questions was of ill nature.

If he labelled the right path as an emotional snare, then he'd have to label what awaited them on the left path as a physical snare. That grotesque Witchbeast clad in flames—He would prefer to avoid meeting the Centaur, if possible.

Even if he engaged in battle with it, his odds of success were slim, that much was obvious. Their difference in strength wasn't the only issue. The reason being that when the time came to encounter the Witchbeast in his current emotional state, he didn't hold any belief in himself about whether he could fight alongside Ram and Anastasia.

Subaru: "To tell you the truth, there was a time back at the sand dunes where I saw a damn weird Witchbeast in the distance. It had a human body sprouting up from the neck of a body that looked like Patrasche's, and it had a huge mouth gaping from abdomen to chest there. And finally, a huge horn sprouted up from its human body, where the head should be…"

Anastasia: "Eeeh… What the hell. That's soo gross…"

Ram: “Honestly, that’s so off-putting.”

They followed the same flow of Witchbeast-related talk as last time in which he naturally included his explanation about the Centaur’s particularities. The reactions from the two female members of the group in response to his description—Three, including Patrasche, were once again unpleasant.

It’s not as if Subaru wanted to give this explanation because he wanted to. Nevertheless, he had to consider that there was a 70% chance that they wouldn’t be able to avoid an encounter with that thing now that they were going down the left path.

Subaru: “I’d expected all of you to be charmed by it, but in any case, it definitely seems like a dangerous creature. For the time being, I’ll go ahead and call it a Centaur, but it ain’t just that its appearance looks disgusting, the mane on the back of its body burns up into flame… It seemed crazy strong. To say the least, it doesn’t seem like we’d be able to beat it.”

Ram: “Why did you ignore a Witchbeast like that after spotting it? Do you have a death wish?”

Subaru: “Aaah?”

He had explained it whilst keeping his emotions from billowing out as much as he could, however anger had welled up in him the moment Ram had replied in her usual frivolous manner. Despite him having expressly warned her, who did she think she was?

She always arrogantly looked down on others, thinking that, he felt his anger morphing into hatred. Subaru took a deep breath. He did everything he could to keep his violent emotions in check, to settle himself down.

Subaru: “Damn this…! This place is the worst.”

Ram: “It sure is demanding, isn’t it? Even I have to pay attention to the words I choose.”

Subaru: “If you’re going to choose them now, then you know, perhaps, they ain’t gonna make anything better”

Both Ram's voice and expression were tinged with sympathy for Subaru who was overwhelmed by his emotions. However, as her sympathetic attitude kept irritating him, he had to say that what she'd done too had ended up producing the opposite effect.

Anastasia: "It's easy ta talk about the effects of the miasma, but that's all that's scary about it, don'tcha think? In reality, me 'n Ram-san ain't affected."

Subaru: "What do you mean by that? If you're thinking flowery thoughts like only we will be okay, then you'd better stop. If we scratch off the surface, me and you are the same."

Anastasia: "What haaarsh words. I didn' mean that even I've got that much self-confidence. One's capacity for judgemen' and determination, and so on, are different issues ta the strength of one's mind and body… Hooowever, goin' about it like yer completely paralyzed by the scariness of the miasma is pretty bad, don'tcha think?"

Anastasia offered her candid advice to him, phrased with an air of superiority. Though her words were rational, Subaru grew irritated that she hadn't gotten the point. Standing at the head of the group, Subaru had pressed his prior point to her as he marched on through the passageway of sand.

On hearing that, Anastasia cleared her throat with a small Hem-hem, and said,

Anastasia: "What I have to say is related to the miasma…Though since it's not like even I know too well about it, can ya forgive me if what I say is gonna be rough?"

Subaru: "I imagine the only ones who really know all the details about it are the Witch Cult, right?"

Anastasia: "Indeed, but in the world, there's also the kinda people who like ta poke into things which people despise. For example, there's the weirdos who go aroun' studyin' stuff like miasma, eh? Though, what I know about it is somethin' which barely resembles the truth from a rumor of a rumor of a rumor."

Was what Anastasia had brought up surmised to be a Witch Researcher?

It had a strange ring to it, but it would be pretty silly to presume they didn't exist, if he thought about it.

This world likely had people like researchers too. And of course, all such individuals who possessed this thirst for knowledge would rationally avoid searching for taboos and keep in line with the flow of the world—No, there was no way they'd have such an upright, pious nature.

There would be incarnations of curiosity who wouldn't fit in with the mold, whatever world or era it may be.

Anastasia: "Though before I dive straight inta what I know from that rumor, we hafta ask first of all, what is Miasma ?"

Ram: "It's… the contaminated mana which the Witch and Witchbeasts let off, right? I've also heard that Witch Cultists let off the same thing like that."

Anastasia: "Ram-san's answer is the prevailin' view. The miasma's somethin' which the Witch gives off, so even the Witchbeasts which were created by the Witch emit it in a similar fashion… However, have ya heard of this?"

Ram: "…"

Anastasia: "Have ya heard that Witch Cultists 'n Witchbeasts in fact really detest each other."

Anastasia = Eridna spoke without pause. Knowing what the creator was like, they were fond of flaunting off their own knowledge, perhaps. It looked like Anastasia's gilded plate had been torn off and underneath it, the white fox's true nature had showed through.

Ram's eyes widened at Anastasia's words, in stark contrast to Subaru, who had harbored that impression. Both Witchbeasts and Witch Cultists were creatures that she thought were lead to the Witch of Envy. Perhaps she was surprised to learn that in the truth they didn't get along.

Ram: “I can barely bring myself to believe that… But, is this for real?”

Anastasia: “Unfortunately, I don’t know for sure since I ain’t acquainted with either any Witch Cultists or Witchbeasts. That’s why I introduced it as somethin’ from a rumor. But, don’t ya think it’d be interestin’ if this was a true story?”

Subaru: “Interesting…?”

Subaru responded, having gotten the impression that she shouldn’t have described it that way to begin with. Anastasia replied to him with a curt nod, saying “Mhm”

Anastasia: “Everyone in the world thinks that the Witch ’n the Witch Cultists ‘n the Witchbeasts are good friends, right? ‘N yet, it ain’t known that in fact, the two of ‘em under the Witch are hostile with each other. This misunderstandin’ has gone on overlooked for 400 years… No one knows the actual truth. “

Ram: “Surely that’s…”

Anastasia: “I apologize for bringin’ this rumor forward too, but it seems like there’s many misconceptions about the miasma too. For example, the relation between the Witchbeasts and the miasma is the exact opposite than what is known, in that the Witchbeasts loathe it. ‘N it’s said that they hate the Witch in their true feelin’s as well.”

Ram: “—No way could it be like that”

Ram kept piling Anastasia with her doubts, drawn in by her story. Behind the two of them immersed in this exchange, Subaru grasped that Anastasia = Eridna’s words were substantiated by a rather undeniable factor.

The relations between Witches and Witchbeasts were in fact poor, and Witchbeasts do hate the Witch.

That possibility made complete sense to him, considering how much he’d made use of the Witch’s Lingering Scent until now. If it wasn’t like that, then why would it have made the Witchbeasts seethe so much, making them frantically pursue him, who was covered in the Witch's Scent.

He had used his lingering scent against the first Witchbeast Invasion after he had been summoned to this parallel world. And he'd even used it against the White Whale. It was impossible to disregard the relatedness between the Witch's Lingering Scent and the miasma if he gathered all the evidence he'd seen up until now.

—The Witch's Lingering Scent that surrounded him seemed to be miasma itself.

Subaru: "There's no way that all of these Witchbeasts would have Petelgeuse-like yandere attributes. He wouldn't be able to allow the Witch's scent from these creatures, other than from the Witch. It'd be like having another woman's scent."

It was disgusting to think about, if that was the case, but the aforementioned possibility was suitable in regards to a logical explanation. In other words, the Witchbeasts hated the Witch's miasma and strongly looked on at it in hostility.

And to start with, most people shouldn't know that the theory which stated that The Witch of Envy created the Witchbeasts was actually incorrect.

The one who created the Witchbeasts wasn't The Witch of Envy but rather The Witch of Gluttony.

Since that hadn't been circulated around, it seemed like nobody noticed the relations between the Witchbeasts and the miasma as well. Anastasia's source of knowledge—Rather, he didn't know whether there really was a researcher who studied the Witch but if they did exist, they sure did make a good point.

Subaru: "…What a complete farce, huh?"

Subaru sighed at his own lack of concern, having thought about it to this extent. It was more natural to think that she'd just spewed out the knowledge that Anastasia = Eridna had known from the start, rather than doubting whether said researcher existed or not.

When Subaru's train of thought moved to that, a different form of anger gradually started to take root in him.

Why did Subaru have to hide the circumstances around Anastasia being Eridna like this? There was his consideration towards Julius and the Iron Fang. In particular, Julius in his current state had completely slipped out from the memories of the world.

Julius tried to act his same old self as much as he could, but even in him, there was a part that was careless about it. Taking that into consideration, Subaru had decided that he should avoid any extra mental burdens.

He should avoid them, but why was it that he had to bear the burden instead?

Subaru: "…"

Everybody was selfish.

Why was it just him who had to do everything to cover those guys' asses?

It was irritating. It was annoying. He might as well just spill the beans about everything, shouldn't he? He might as well tell them about Anastasia's spirit, his Return by Death, everything—.

Ram: "…Barusu. Stop sticking your head in the sand all of a sudden, it's strange."

Subaru: "It's just my natural defensive reaction to stop our relations from getting any worse. Phaaah."

Since Subaru's anger was reaching its boiling point, he had stuck his face into the wall of sand before he hurled abuse at them. The wall of sand was unexpectedly brittle, and it appeared like he'd be able to dig through it with his hands.

In return for finding that out, Subaru spat out sand from his mouth. There was something to think about in Ram's cold expression, but since he was responsible for his own actions, he kept any retaliation to himself.

Anastasia: “Could Natsuki-kun’s eccentric behavior also be from the miasma’s influence… perhaps?”

Ram: “Nope, Barusu’s behavior is as usual.”

Subaru: “It ain’t as usual! It’s just an aftershock from the miasma’s influence!”

Anastasia: “Well, regardin’ the authenticity of things there, if we get back to what we were talkin’ about whilst ya were cryin’ out… The Witchbeasts in truth hate the Witch. If we presume that, then there’s gotta be an explanation for the Witch Cultists ‘n the Witchbeasts bein’ hostile with each other, no?”

Anastasia, who deliberately found a lull in their conversation to shift the topic back to the main point, ponderously inclined her head. However, Subaru’s like-minded opinion didn’t reach her words. Instead, Ram nodded, and said,

Ram: “Whether they’re hostile with each other or not, I’ve never heard… of the two of them acting together. To begin with, there’s also that rumors of the Witch Cult don’t spread.”

Subaru: “I see…Then it’s really the type of secret organization where those guys keep it hidden and move about in secret. I wonder why they don’t leave any impressions at all, though.”

Ram: “Barusu and Emilia-sama come across those guys far too often.”

All the Witch Cultists which Subaru knew strongly craved the limelight, and were absorbed in an inflated sense of their own self-worth. He couldn’t even say that Petelgeuse’s movements had been kept surreptitious, and what’s more, the other Sin Archbishops had went all the way up to making a broadcast after having hijacked one of the Great Cities.

How could those guys claim that they were an evil organization that operated in the shadows?

Subaru: “Ah, but wait up. What about the White Whale? That thing was cooperating with the Witch Cult…Though now it’s a bit suspicious whether it was or not, there was still that time.”

Anastasia: “Hmm? Even though I know that the Witchbeasts definitely do hate the Witch Cult, I’m not too sure whether the Witch Cult hate the Witchbeasts…Though, either way, even if it’s not like that, I ain’t gonna fuss over it.”

Subaru: “That’s what I’d told you.….”

Providing a suitable rebuttal to Subaru’s objection, Anastasia threw down her personal opinion straight away. That she didn’t cling to it was perhaps indeed proof that she’d heard it from the rumors of another’s opinion.

However, she’d thoroughly used it as the basis of her conversation. In the end, Anastasia closed one of her eyes, and said:

Anastasia: “In the end, we can just put it as that we don’ understand the connection between the miasma well. There’s also the way Ram-san looks at it, in which it’s like contaminated mana…But, well, doesn’ it seem like there’s no one aroun’ who can explain what goes on for the mana to get contaminated like that?”

Ram: “…”

Anastasia: “Mana is mana, regardless of whose body it goes through. Even if its nature changes in magic or when ya craft with it, it ain’t possible for anyone to add a lil’ extra to the mana itself.”

Subaru: “That’s…”

Anastasia: “Why is it that the mana can jus’ get contaminated with the Witch of Envy? And also, why da heck do Witch Cultists acclimatize to that contaminated mana?”

Quite unusually, Ram kept her mouth shut as Anastasia launched this barrage of questions. It was rather strange that she didn’t raise any words of objection and kept silent. At the same time, Subaru was experiencing a sense of déjà vu along with his feeling of revulsion.

The way she had presented it made both her point and conclusion vague. Everything about her attitude felt like she was speaking in riddles. That she seemed to overlap with Echidna left him quite the sour taste.

Anastasia: “Alright, alright, alright, it seems like we’ve spent too much time idly gossipin’, don’tcha think?”

Anastasia suddenly spoke out without any consideration for Ram’s silence or Subaru’s cathexis. The tone she’d been speaking in up until now suddenly changed, leaving them behind with the abrupt change of subject. Leaving the two of them in her wake, Anastasia shone her lantern at the front part of the passageway. Subaru also stopped in his tracks, imitating her. And as he held his lantern up, he noticed what was up.

Subaru: “…”

In front of them, the passageway gradually turned to the left, and a faint breeze blew towards them. The wall of sand still hadn’t changed in any respect, but he vividly remembered that Smell of Burning that mingled with the breeze, along with that sudden bend in the path.

Ram: “It smells like something burnt, like grilled meat, doesn’t it?”

Ram let out her candid impressions about the breeze which carried a tinge of hot-air to it. The smell of over-cooked, charred flesh streamed in from the depths of the passageway. Maybe it was possible that this aroma was proof that there was someone cooking, and that they’d be able to meet a friend party up ahead —However well-intentioned his thoughts were, they were tantamount to ignorance.

Ram: “Emilia-sama and the others carelessly set up a fire and are taking a break… I think something along those lines?”

Subaru: “I do agree that Emilia would be the one that’d seemingly set up a fire without any care, but with me mentioning the Centaur, I can’t at all imagine it being that. You too have to believe that this isn’t your head filling up with overly optimistic thoughts, right?!”

Ram: “I’m looking forward to how you’re going to come up with excuses for all these reckless remarks after the influence of the miasma is gone.”

Every time he replied in a snappier manner than was necessary to Ram’s questions, he’d get toxicity scathingly thrown back from her too. Letting out a snort to that, Subaru reassured himself that the one he needed to turn his hostility to was not her.

There was no doubt about that, considering they’d already made it here. There would be a large cave up ahead, and right there, the blasphemous Witchbeast clad in flame would be awaiting them.

The time they’d spent getting here seemed to be a little quicker compared to last time. Nevertheless, considering that they were going to encounter it, perhaps that place was the Witchbeast’s burrow. He held no fleeting traces of hope that it would’ve moved from there. If possible, they would have to—

Subaru: “We’ve got no choice but to kill it to get past, huh?”

Ram: “I think it’d be productive of us to come up with a plan that can be put into motion with our current fighting strength.”

Anastasia: “We ain’t got any fightin’ strength even if I use my trump card…and even then, I want ta keep that gruellin’ thing as a last resort if possible, since I can’t undo its effects.”

Both Anastasia and Ram opposed Subaru’s course of action. Though Subaru was annoyed that he’d been denied, even he had no intention of pushing his own opinion on them. In fact, it would be absurd. He hadn’t dubbed their group as the Non-Combatant Team for nothing. All the choices which entailed confronting the Witchbeast would probably end up being reckless.

Subaru: “On the other hand, there’s no way we can go back and take the right path.”

Ram: “After looking at all the different faces you’ve made up till now, Barusu, I can see that you wouldn’t have the guts to go down the right path, isn’t that right?”

Anastasia: “But, by sayin’ that it means we’re cornered. It wouldn’ work ta do such a laudable thing as ta go back to where we started from ‘n wait for the others to come look for us… Right?”

Ignoring Ram’s flippant reply, Anastasia’s reply hit the nail on the head. If he still feared the Witchbeast enough to turn back, then he should have resorted to spinning those words from the beginning and stopping back there. Since he hadn’t, his conclusion had left him with just the option of passing by the Witchbeast.

Thus, that didn’t mean they couldn’t find a way to accomplish that.

Subaru: “First things first, we need to gather information on our opponent. If everything goes to plan, we have a chance.”

Subaru spoke out, reaching a conclusion before the other two, who were puzzling over a plan, did.

2

—Subaru hardly knew anything about the Centaur Witchbeast’s mode of life.

That was due to the fact that he’d come across it for only a few dozen seconds before being burnt alive. All that remained pitifully carved into his soul from that experience was that its grotesque-looking figure made him feel sick to the core, and that it had tremendous firepower. If he briefly thought about it, his manner of death had been such that it felt unavoidable to perceive it as anything other than having been a death in vain.

However, it’d be bothersome if he got worked up about it over that. When it came to unexpected Deaths Natsuki Subaru was a veteran. By now, he’d cultivated enough experience to not treat the phenomenon of Death as just Death.

Subaru: “First of all, we need to pay attention to the Centaur’s appearance.”

Its repulsive appearance was something which you couldn’t forget once seen. Though he’d seen it only for a few seconds, its grotesque appearance was seared vividly into his mind. That would give him a helping hand in his reflection.

It had a human body on top of a horse body, with its head transformed into a horn. In addition to that, it had a gaping maw across its body. It looked shoddy, like something half-assed a child would have made out of clay whilst playing. However, there was something he'd taken notice of when he racked his brain without averting his eyes from his memories.

Subaru: "It definitely didn't have eyes."

In essence, it didn't have a head in the place where you'd usually find one. Thus, he was certain that there hadn't been any organs on that Witchbeast's body that provided it with a sense of vision.

Or, since there was no light down in the cave systems underneath the sand dunes without being in possession of a lantern, perhaps the negative effects of moving about down there had caused it to de-evolve.

Subaru: "Something like a mole? It adapted to living underground and lost its eyesight."

Or, he wasn't sure whether it had an eyesight to begin with; but at least that Witchbeast probably didn't rely on it and went on about its business without it. Back then, the Witchbeast didn't seem to have noticed him due to the lantern light. It had noticed him from the noises and indications he'd let off from his own carelessness.

Namely, from either a sense of smell or hearing which the Witchbeast would have developed instead of eyes.

Subaru: "If I'm recalling correctly, I once heard that moles have a good sense of hearing to make up for their rather poor noses."

It wasn't something he'd heard from Anastasia earlier, but rather surely some odd knowledge he'd picked up somewhere. However, Subaru's guess ended up far more useful than what he clung to in his groundless thoughts. The Centaur's forte was in its sense of hearing; having come to that conclusion, Subaru sprung into action.

Thus…

Subaru: "…"

Without uttering a single word, Subaru swung his arm up and down as quietly as he could. From the moment he'd stepped onto the sand, he'd taken care so that his footsteps wouldn't make any sound from crunching against the sand.

The thing he'd thrown from the extremity of his arm was one of the flasks of water that they'd put in their survival kit. Without any particular aim, the flask flew straight forward to the end of the large cave—Drawing the attention of the fiery Witchbeast in the middle of the cave to where it had landed.

Centaur: "—ヲヲ!!"

As soon as the flask of water landed on the sand with a quiet clunk, the reaction of the Centaur, who heard it, was dramatic. Shaking its blazing mane, the Witchbeast leapt up with its horse body and galloped forward to the source of the sound. It ferociously rammed its body there with no trace of hesitation.

Centaur: "—ヲヲ!!"

Sand billowed up, and flickering sparks flew about around the cave. Thrashing about violently, the Centaur skidded around. It gnashed the fangs inside its huge gaping maw together and continued to let out a shrill yowl which sounded like the cries of countless babies crying.

It stamped on the flask of water, crushing it flat, and set it aflame over and over again. Once the Centaur reduced its original shape to nothing, it let off more flames which were brimming from its mane onto the sand. And when everything other than the parched sand had been burned to a crisp, the Witchbeast stopped in its tracks with a hint of satisfaction.

It did seem to look satisfied. Whilst looking at its handiwork from the corner of his eye, Subaru shook the string he had attached to his waist and motioned them forward. The sound of them carefully stepping on the sand was drowned out by the shrill cries of the Witchbeast that permeated all across the cave. Taking absolute care with each step, they crept on forward one step at a time—

"…"

Subaru tugged at his string, indicating a halt to their march, stopping his advancing Earth Dragon in its tracks. To his surprise, the Earth Dragon, who shouldn't have been able to understand human speech, had faithfully followed his instructions. It had slowly trodden along the sand with a prudent gait that was not befitting of its large build.

—Subaru and the others were conducting a march along the precipice of death in the cave that was coated in darkness.

Come to think of it, the width of the cave was probably around the size of a school gym, or thereabouts. They were in an area where the charred corpses of the creatures that had been incinerated by the Witchbeast had fallen just about everywhere.

Subaru and the others were trying to move across and get past the Witchbeast by trying to silence their footsteps and breathing.

"…"

The area wasn't such that only quietude like that of the grave would descend upon. The Centaur's ridiculously large maw was panting wildly over and over again. The sound felt like the awkward sort you'd get from air coming out of a balloon.

It wasn't just its appearance, but also its behavior that was repulsive—Nevertheless, he was thankful that it was behaving so plainly right now. Thanks to that, he'd managed to come up with a plan that wouldn't involve fighting.

"…"

Once again, Subaru took out another flask of water and threw it behind the Centaur. The simple-minded Witchbeast reacted to that sound and once again fiercely assailed the empty flask.

Flames and the cries of babies permeated the cave, and the flask of water burst open thanks to the Centaur's immense heat. With a parched sound, the flask turned to black charcoal.

Regardless of that kerfuffle, Subaru and the others moved forward and managed to shorten their distance to the passageway during that time.

—This simple diversion was the conclusion Subaru had reached from observing the Centaur's mode of life.

Having deemed that it didn't have an eyesight, Subaru determined that the Centaur relied on its sense of hearing. Leaving Ram and Anastasia behind him, he'd attracted the Witchbeast's attention by using the same method of throwing stuff. He'd repeated this demonstration a few times until he won over their confidence.

The Centaur was a Witchbeast that sought its prey using its sense of hearing. And on top of that, it was a simple-minded creature that could be tricked a bunch of times with the same method.

So long as he'd been able to ascertain that, the rest came easy. He'd made Ram gather the items for the diversion as well as made her read where the exit was using the wind, for after they made their escape past the Witchbeast. After that, he'd scrupulously told Patrasche about their covert plan, and the need to keep a strong heart so not to succumb to stress or anxiety, and to just put her game face on.

"…"

In actuality, Subaru's tactics were working really well to the point that it felt anti-climatic. The distance between the cave and the passageway had already been half-cleared, and the time they'd spent stressing wasn't all that much. Since it had no capacity for intuition, the Witchbeast would probably be clearable by repeating the same thing over and over.

"…"

Of course, they had dropped the lantern-light, and the only thing they could see was the Centaur's blazing mane that was crackling in the distance.

The lantern-light likely wouldn't have affected the sightless witchbeast, but still, they'd made the bourgeois decision of narrowing down anything which could trigger its senses as much as they could.

"…"

Feeling the string being pulled, Subaru's attention, which had wandered off in thought, was brought back to the present. He was holding two strings as he put the diversion into effect. One of them was fastened to Patrasche, whilst the other was held by Ram who was riding on her.

The instructions he'd set to Patrasche were "Stop" and "Go". However, its connection between him and Ram hadn't been particularly well stipulated. It was just there to get each other's attention.

Even so, their connection using the string that merely conveyed their presence, without being able to look face to face or exchange words, was something that settled Subaru down a rather surprising amount.

Having this for now made it so that Subaru wouldn't bear any ill feelings towards Anastasia or Ram. He was in a state of mind where it felt easier for him to not look at someone else's face.

On the other hand, it didn't mean that there wasn't any anxiety in his heart, which had grown at ease to such solitude. Subaru had convinced himself that it was partially due to the miasma's influence—However, many parts of the story which Anastasia had told them earlier regarding "What Miasma is" had become cloudy.

Would he be cured from its effects when they left this place? In truth, that also felt doubtful now.

Supposing he wasn't cured from it, would he end up being unable to get rid of these unpleasant feelings even when he met Emilia and Beatrice…

Subaru: "—?!"

The string was suddenly pulled with strength, causing Subaru to unintentionally pitch back. The string that had been pulled was the one that was fastened to Patrasche. The Earth Dragon had made a snap decision to stop him by force.

And right as he lifted his face up, he immediately saw why—

Subaru: "—ukh"

A clump of fire hurled past a step ahead of Subaru. The clump of fire was approximately the same size of a football, but it hurtled past spraying waves of heat to its surroundings. It crashed against a wall of sand a few meters away, letting out a violent booming noise, followed by an explosion.

A hot wind gusted out that scorched Subaru's cold body; he barely managed to stop himself from screaming.

It would definitely have landed a direct hit if Patrasche hadn't stopped him. He didn't know whether it had enough power to kill him, but he was sure that it had enough firepower to injure him. Subaru gritted his teeth realizing that he'd barely escaped with his life as a shiver ran down his spine.

Why had the fireball been thrown at him?

Subaru: "…"

Subaru reflexively turned to look behind him. The Centaur should have been deceived by his diversion, and should have been messing around with the water flask on the other side of the cave. However, the Witchbeast now had turned its horned head to where they were, snarling.

Just like it knew that Subaru and the others were standing there.

Subaru: "…"

No way could that be it, Subaru shook his head.

Subaru unfastened a water flask from his waist and took hold of it so he could set up the diversion again. The string which connected him with Ram was constantly being tugged, calling him, but he took no note of it. His highest priority now was to lure the Witchbeast's attention away from them.

He swung up the flask of water into an arc and threw it far to the left of the Centaur, where it dropped onto the sand. And just as he'd expected, the Witchbeast's attention turned to that spot and the clumsy beast was attracted to the obvious diversion.

Once again, flames gushed out and the lament of crying babies echoed out. And whilst the shrill echo reverberated across the cave, Subaru urged Patrasche onwards towards the exit.

They just had to keep repeating this predetermined routine over and over again. With just that, they ought to be able to break past, however—

Subaru: "—hk!"

Once again, the fireball thrown by the Centaur hurtled past next to where Subaru was walking. It had gotten even closer than last time, with the shot being so accurate as to graze his skin.

Subaru's breath was instantly taken away from him by the fireball's explosion, and he was buffeted by the wave of heat.

Subaru: "…"

Bathed in the illumination of the newborn orange light source ahead of him, Subaru locked eyes with the Witchbeast in the distance. Their eyes didn't actually meet, through, so saying they locked eyes wasn't quite right.

However, the Witchbeast's attention was clearly focused this way. The Witchbeast had no way to track them except by sound, so why was it able to find them in the middle of its own cry—

Subaru: "Its own… cry…"

Ram: "Barusu, the echo…"

As the question and answer came together in Subaru's mind, Ram, who was still pulling the string, finally called to him and made a sound. At the moment they both came to the same conclusion, the Centaur kicked the sand.

Its hooves kicked the surface of the sand, and the Witchbeast, which was so large they had to look upwards at it, flew lightly through the chilly air. The heat of its blazing mane increased as it moved, and all at once was streaking towards Subaru's group.

The human torso attached to the horse's body raised its arms, and pulled away pieces of its own flaming mane. While held in its hands, those pieces changed into balls of fire, and after the blink of an eye, became explosive flaming bullets.

Subaru: "…! Runrunrunrun!!"

At this point, avoiding a fight with the Centaur was no longer possible.

Discarding the plan to move with as little noise as possible, Subaru slapped Patrasche's haunches, ordering her to run immediately to the corridor.

Subaru's group was currently in the exact center of the cave, far from both the corridor they entered from, and the one they were moving towards; a position so advantageous for the Centaur that it seemed likely this had been the Witchbeast's plan.

Subaru: "Was it playing about with us…?!"

Ram: "…!"

Subaru's mind froze in amazement, but the Witchbeast didn't let up. Hurling the fireballs as it created them, the Centaur blew clouds of sand into the air around its fleeing targets, as if playing with them.

The Witchbeast had expected that they would run straight for the corridor. Having said that, even if they tried running a zigzag course to confuse it, its hearing captured every sound, and wouldn't fall for such a trick.

Subaru: "Woah! Wah!"

Grazing their lowered heads, the fireballs were thrown one after another.

Out of sight, the Witchbeast ran circles around them as they fled, not letting up with its explosive barrage, hurling bursts of sand into the air.

Subaru: “Gah—?!”

The heatwave of an explosion at his feet lifted Subaru easily into the air, and sent him flying.

He quickly protected his head with both arms, but the rush of hot air burned the inside of his nose and throat. Breathing was painful, and with the inside of his nose scorched, he temporarily lost his sense of smell.

He rolled on the ground from the agony in the center of his face, then raised his teary-eyed face.

The mouth in the Centaur’s torso was open wide, and the toothy maw was emitting an ear-splitting noise, almost looking like it was laughing. No, it was actually laughing.

Laughing at the weak human plaything, that couldn’t even win a battle of wits with a Witchbeast.

Subaru: “Damnit, argh…!”

Hatred boiled in him, and gave Subaru the strength to stand.

Compared to suspicions and mistrust, what a wonderfully healthy feeling it was to hate the vermin that opposed him. As he was swallowed up in a blackness of distilled fury, Subaru snorted at the Witchbeast that looked so pleased with itself.

Acting like it had won was laughable.

How could a lowly miasma-hating Witchbeast think it could ever hope to beat Natsuki Subaru?

Subaru: “…”

Putting a hand to his waist, he took out his whip.

Letting his hand remember the feel of the handle, he lightly flicked the sand with the end of the whip; the Centaur immediately stopped its roaring laughter, and intently turned its ears towards the crack of the whip.

Most likely, it was the first time it had ever heard that sound.

However, that wasn't Subaru's real plan. The whip was nothing more than a diversion.

Subaru: "—Invisible Providence"

In response to the Witchbeast's violence, a roiling, seething black emotion formed in Subaru's heart.

Given direction, it turned into strength to tear the Centaur limb from limb. Using it this way made him look like a one-trick pony, but he didn't care. It was a trick that would work on anyone.

Subaru: "…"

Swinging the whip above his head, he let the Witchbeast listen to the sound of it splitting the air.

Taking care not to alert the Centaur, which was paying close attention to the first sound, the invisible magic hand advanced like it was slipping through the darkness, infiltrating the Witchbeast's shadow, aiming for the horn atop its human torso.

Between the human body and the horse body, he couldn't tell which one had vital organs. With its head being a horn, if there was a brain stuffed inside it or not was a mystery. Despite that, there had to be a vital organ of some kind inside. With that decided, he would crush the horn in the palm of his invisible hand.

If the loss of the horn happened to make the Witchbeast obedient, he'd simply have it kill itself. That would be much more pleasant…

Subaru: "…?! Gu… agh… Gah?!"

With that thought, it happened just as he was about to carry out his plan.

Focusing on the Centaur, his Unseen Hand reaching for its head, Subaru’s own head was filled with a burst of unimaginable pain. Feeling as though something had stripped away his scalp and was drilling directly into his skull, his eyes rolled back and yellow foam frothed from his lips as he fell to his knees.

Subaru: “Gah…ah?! Guh…Agh!!”

Bringing both hands to his head as he knelt, he struck himself on the side of the head to try and fight off the pain. Rubbing his head, holding his head, nothing else helped with the pain. To fight the pain, he tried to inflict a sharper, stronger pain. He struck himself again, and again, but no matter how hard he hit himself, he couldn’t overcome the pain.

He rolled on the sand while his head felt like a hell full of thorns piercing his brain, and nearly fainting from pain, he ended up swallowing sand without understanding why.

Subaru: “It hurts! Augh! It hurts it hurts it hurts! It hurts!”

He shouted like he was spitting blood.

With a mouth full of sand, chewing it with his back teeth, Subaru thrashed on the ground, fighting against the mysterious pain to keep it from blocking his throat. He couldn’t fight it, he was losing.

Of course, Invisible Providence had vanished instantly.

With that dispersed, he had no way of affecting the Centaur. The Witchbeast, as though disappointed with his lack of resistance, prepared to turn him into a smoking corpse.

A huge ball of flame drove away the chill in the air as the explosive heat warmed the world around them.

Just like that, Natsuki Subaru would be changed into charcoal…

Patrasche: “—ッ!”

At the last moment, the jet-black Earth Dragon charged in fiercely, tearing away the Witchbeast's arm.

Patrasche: "…"

With a body color that blended into the darkness, the Earth Dragon had soundlessly approached the Witchbeast, and landed a biting attack. Losing its balance along with its arm, the Witchbeast dropped the fireball it had raised above its own head.

In other words, the heat of the fireball the Witchbeast had created exploded at its own feet, and the point-blank blast wave blew it into the air.

As it was thrown away by the explosion, blood dripped from the Centaur's wounded arm, and it fell over on its back. Without sparing it a glance, Patrasche sprinted over the sand, and, holding Subaru's clothing with her teeth as he thrashed in pain, she immediately began a sprinting retreat.

Held by Patrasche's teeth near his waist, swinging left and right as he dangled, tormented by poor circulation and the continuing headache, Subaru looked behind him.

Behind Patrasche, the Centaur unsteadily rose to its feet.

The wound on its human torso foamed, and the left arm that had been bitten off grew back in an instant. Its monstrous regeneration ability was at work on its other injuries as well. The wounds all over its body, inflicted by the explosion moments ago, closed one after another. The Centaur returned to full health in a matter of seconds.

With that done, there was nothing left to slow it down.

Screaming viciously at Patrasche, who had struck it by surprise, the Centaur sped up to pursue the madly fleeing Earth Dragon, and its mane blazed brighter as it leapt.

Patrasche's running ability was impressive in even the worst terrain, but the Centaur's was in its own habitat, and its acceleration was a step ahead. Along with their difference in size, Patrasche was weighed down by Subaru, and the Witchbeast was soon running side by side with her.

A burning fireball appeared in the Witchbeast's hand, but this one was stretched tall. Looking closer, the fireball changed in the Witchbeast's hand to a long-handled weapon, and in the blink of an eye, it had become a spear, covered from end to end in flame.

Centaur: "—ヲヲ!!"

Raising the flaming spear, the Centaur drove the tip towards Patrasche. The black Earth Dragon ducked as the spear approached, almost diving into the sand to avoid the attack and using that as an opening to speed up further.

However, just when it looked like they could get away, the Witchbeast's hoof drove straight into the Earth Dragon's torso from the side. The force of the attack passed through her hard skin, and she cried out as the impact smashed into her guts. Even then, she refused to drop Subaru, still dangling from her teeth. The heat he could feel near his waist was from the blood Patrasche was coughing up from her internal injuries.

That was the only sign she was badly injured.

However, she still wouldn't let Subaru go, and Subaru had no way to care for his loyal dragon's wounds. All he had was the seemingly eternal torture of the unending pain in his head.

Ram: "…EL FULA!!"

Anastasia: "JIWALD…!"

A second strike from the flaming spear was aimed at Patrasche, who was clearly slowing down.

However, before it reached the Earth Dragon's body, it was interrupted from two different directions.

From one side came an invisible blade of wind, from the other was a convergence of white-hot rays of heat.

Both of the incantations came from familiar voices, but that was all Subaru could say for sure.

Both spells landed direct hits on the Witchbeast, blowing holes through its body and cutting through the human torso at an angle… those wounds, too, closed instantly.

Ram: “Barusu…! Oh, fine, if you’re dead, you should say so!”

Anastasia: “That’s a nasty one, that Witchbeast…I won’t be able ta do much ta that thing.”

Even though it sounded normal, one of the girls’ voices carried a trace of desperation. On the other hand, despite being in a desperate situation, one of the girls’ voices lacked any sense of stress.

Feeling his loyal dragon’s breath and blood on his skin, Subaru was on the verge of falling unconscious. If he was going to go through this much pain and torment, maybe dying wasn’t so…

Ram: “Don’t you dare die, Barusu! Rem would cry!”

Subaru: “…oh”

That voice, shouted right in his ear, cut through the pain and reached his brain. What the voice awakened was a hatred no less than the one he held for the Witchbeast.

They had forgotten.

Not a single one of them remembered that girl.

…Don’t talk about Rem and I like you know anything about it.

Subaru: “…INVISIBLE PROVIDENCEEEE!”

Releasing his feelings of anger towards the Witchbeast passing through the edge of his tear-stained vision, Subaru struck at it with a pitch-black magical hand in an outburst of rage.

Partway there, another raging pain tore at his skull—before he was swallowed by it and lost consciousness, Subaru’s Unseen Hand hit the Witchbeast’s spear head-on, breaking it as a token act of defiance.

…That was all the resistance he could muster.

Centaur: “—ｯｯ”

The reward for his angry counterattack was another burst of furious pain.

The Centaur planted its front legs in the sandy ground and pivoted on them, turning itself around forcefully, and then its rear legs lashed out like a catapult.

Its solid rock-like hooves kicked sand into the air as they sped towards Subaru’s group—himself, Patrasche, and Ram and Anastasia who were likely nearby as well, intending to tear through them all at once.

In an explosion of leg strength sufficient to bring down part of the cave, everyone was sent flying different directions by the wave of sand. Subaru was even torn away from Patrasche’s jaw, rolling helplessly on top of the sand, and thrown by the aftermath of the impact against a destroyed, burned body.

Subaru: “Ah, uh…”

A headache that couldn’t be described, and a body trampled by the Centaur’s kick.

Assaulted by continuous pain from the inside and out, Subaru could no longer hold on to his consciousness. Somehow, as he rolled loosely on the sand, he could feel the approaching darkness of death.

Destruction, annihilation, futile death, death in battle.

Heartless words like that roamed the back of his mind, but…

Subaru: “…”

In a situation where his lungs had forgotten to even breathe, Subaru saw someone standing in front of him.

It was a small, delicate shadow. In a world with too little light, he couldn't see it clearly. Even then, it was a familiar shape that he knew immediately. It was Ram. She was wobbling as she stood.

She had both arms outstretched, to protect Subaru.

Stop it. It's stupid, impossible, useless…

He tried to say it, but his throat would no longer listen to him, as though it was filled with sand. —No, it actually was filled with sand. Because of the sand he'd stupidly swallowed trying to fight the pain in his head, Subaru could no longer even speak clearly.

Subaru: "…wh…y?"

With all his strength, Subaru managed a weak cry. Despite all the pent-up dissatisfaction and anger he had felt towards Ram and his other friends, that surely they must have known about.

Ram: "—Rem would… cry."

Ram made only that quiet response to Subaru's words.

For the little sister she couldn't remember, for the person most dear to that unremembered sister, Ram stood.

What pushed her to go that far, Subaru couldn't understand.

He couldn't understand that, but there was one thing he did understand. At this rate, Ram was going to die. Subaru would die too. There was no way to avoid it.

Subaru: "…"

The Centaur bellowed, swinging both its arms and creating a blazing sword in each of them. They didn't really look like swords, though, so perhaps it had meant to make hammers or axes.

Regardless, they were both weapons wrapped in flame. It stood on the verge of using them to cut Ram's much smaller frame into pieces, and roast Subaru as well.

Subaru: "…come, come on. There's gotta be…something."

Staring death in the face, Subaru reached down through the depths of his pain.

Fighting against the relentless pain was like diving deep into himself. Looking outside himself – to Ram, Patrasche, or Anastasia —was unrealistic.

Even if it would be derided as a dream or delusion, Subaru looked inside himself for something, anything. This unrealistic approach was the most realistic hope he had left.

Diving inside, reaching into the murky depths of his body, pulling aside the writhing black thoughts, Subaru looked inside himself for anything that could help. Not the Unseen Hand he had overused. Something different, something, something new, some way to pull through this mess.

His last-ditch search yielded…

Subaru: "—ah"

Nothing, and Subaru watched as the Witchbeast in front of him raised its swords. The flames crossed above the Witchbeast's head, and after a moment's pause, descended towards Ram.

Burning the very air, the oncoming slashes would heartlessly cut a burning path through the girl's slender body, burn her away, leave nothing of the path she had walked, the memories she had held, or anything at all except black charcoal…

At that scene, Subaru cried out against his own powerlessness.

"…"

The next moment, white light unleashed with tremendous speed blew away the Witchbeast's upper body.

The body of the Witchbeast which had wielded those swords of flame vanished from the world thanks to that tremendous light. The light didn't bring forth such simplicities like crushing or severing its body, but rather it was the literal meaning of annihilation.

"…"

The Centaur was a monster that had a human body on the head part of a horse's body. And the light had blown away, the part which was construed as its human body from chest up. Of course, that included the arms on its shoulders, the horn which was in place of a human head, and the fanged maw that gaped across its chest.

Blood soundlessly gushed out from the Witchbeast's wounds from the impact—And immediately after, its wounds started to foam, readying itself to use the same hyper-recovery technique it had used thus far.

Its squirming flesh swelled up, and its obliterated human body re-formed anew. The human body regenerated right away and explosive balls of fire quickly surged into life on both of its arms.

Centaur: "—ℨℨ!!"

The Centaur roared, and the alluring voice of countless babies filled the chilly air. Turning its body around, the Witchbeast paid no heed to Ram or Subaru, and instead leapt straight up towards the dangerous enemy that had blown away its upper body.

The witchbeast summoned a heap load of fireballs on its arms and cast them one after the other as it rushed forward. Consumed by its heated frenzy, the Witchbeast prepared to unleash its own battle cry. However—

Centaur: "—ℨℨ?!"

The fireballs brought into existence by the Witchbeast were all intercepted from in front of it one by one. The things responsible for that were the flashes of white light that pierced the fireballs head on with tremendous accuracy. The speed of the flashes of light were out of the ordinary, and its strength was clearly superior to that of the fireballs.

The lumps of flame were struck by the light dead on, pulled in by the power of it, and clashed against the body of the Witchbeast itself. Immediately after Subaru had thought the Centaur had ended up like a hedgehog with quills of white light, the flames exploded all around the Witchbeast's body.

The Centaur's arms were obliterated to nothing, its maw was torn to shreds, its horse body was burnt and finally it had collapsed. It thrashed about on top of the sand, letting off a shrill cry in sheer anger.

However, the Witchbeast's wounds squirmed over, and it refused to die. It was as if it was telling them to grow stronger, to change their approach, and that they should evolve their manner of bestowing death, since they couldn't achieve it by blowing away parts of it into nothing.

"…"

The Witchbeast's appearance transformed as it regenerated its lost parts.

The human part of its body changed, now its arms had increased from two to four, and sharp, long fangs jutted out from its maw. Its lower horse-half also had more legs, numbering eight in total. Doing a simple calculation, they had doubled in quantity.

As well as that, its charred skin had hardened, now shining with a black luster to it. At a glimpse, it maybe looked like a being that was clad in armor.

And it held an axe, a hammer, a spear, and a sword of flame in each of its newly added arms. The Witchbeast had managed to evolve itself in an unbelievably short period of time, all to alter itself so it could face the being casting the white rays of light.

"…"

Raising its four forelegs, the Centaur thunderously let out a roar. It clacked its raised hooves together with a piercing clang and began to spur forwards.

Its huge figure was similar to that of an armored train decked in steel. Its weight and acceleration would easily turn any opponent to mincemeat, causing them to meet a vicious end.

The being that had put the Witchbeast to shame would end up being completely annihilated if it was treated to a fiery finishing blow.

Centaur: “—ℷℷ!!”

Kicking sand up into the air A white light pierced it and trailing up A white light pierced it a plume of fiery heat, the Witchbeast fiercely A white light pierced it broke through. A white light pierced it The heat of its flames A white light pierced it had flared up A white light pierced it hotter than ever before, it was like A white light pierced it the hellfire A white light pierced it of the abyss. Its grotesque and atypical figure A white light pierced it made it so that you couldn’t avoid A white light pierced it breaking into shudders when A white light pierced it you caught a mere glimpse of it, A white light pierced it regardless who you were; A white light pierced it that was what the King of the Sand Sea was. A white light pierced it A white light pierced it A white light pierced it A white light pierced it A white light pierced it A white light pierced i A white light pierced i A white light pierced i A white light pierced A white light pierced A white light pierced A white light pierc A white light pierc A white light pierc A white light pi A white light pi A white light pi A white light A white light A white light White light —

—

—

—

—

Subaru: "…"

There was nothing left behind anymore right after the crazy amount of light had streamed out. The Witchbeast, which had wielded such menace, had been completely obliterated by the light all the way up to the smithereens of its flesh. The Witchbeast had completely been blown away somewhere far out of this world.

The only thing that was left on the sand was the countless number of light rays which had been fired at the Witchbeast to erase its existence—The source of that came just from those white, elongated stingers. Those too instantly turned to powder as if they'd effloresced away.

Subaru: "…"

Subaru had even forgotten his headache as he gazed aghast at the spectacle with his own eyes. He realized that a feverish, slender body had happened to leap in between his arms. It was Ram. He didn't remember what had happened, but it seemed like he'd been embracing her body in their final moments.

Though it should've been a meaningless gesture, it looked like Ram wasn't conscious.

Subaru: "…"

Subaru could hear the sound of someone stepping on the sand. That someone was ever so slowly approaching Subaru and the others; they were definitely approaching them.

The inside of the cave was still enveloped in darkness along with a frigid silence.

The only source of light came from the scattered fiery scraps that had been spewed out by the Witchbeast earlier. There was one such fiery scrap right next to Subaru that allowed him to look around a few meters.

Someone’s foot entered the very edge of his field of vision.

Subaru: “…”

Lifting his face up, Subaru looked up to where the owner of those feet—And perhaps the one behind that light was. Gradually lifting up his field of vision, what he saw reflected in his bleary eyes was… a human being.

Subaru: “…”

It was… a woman. A woman with a rather queer air to her.

Her legs were audaciously bare all the way up to her thighs, and the only thing that covered her crotch was the hem of her shorts that were just barely cut down for that task. Above that, her waist and belly button were exposed. A piece of cloth was wound above her slender waist like a muneate to keep her breasts concealed.

However, she wore something akin to a cloak from her shoulders which barely protected the greater part of her body (exposed from her pale shoulders) from the wind.

Her hair was a brown that was closer to black to the point that it seemed to blend in with the darkness around them. Her long hair was tied into a ponytail that collected all of it together.

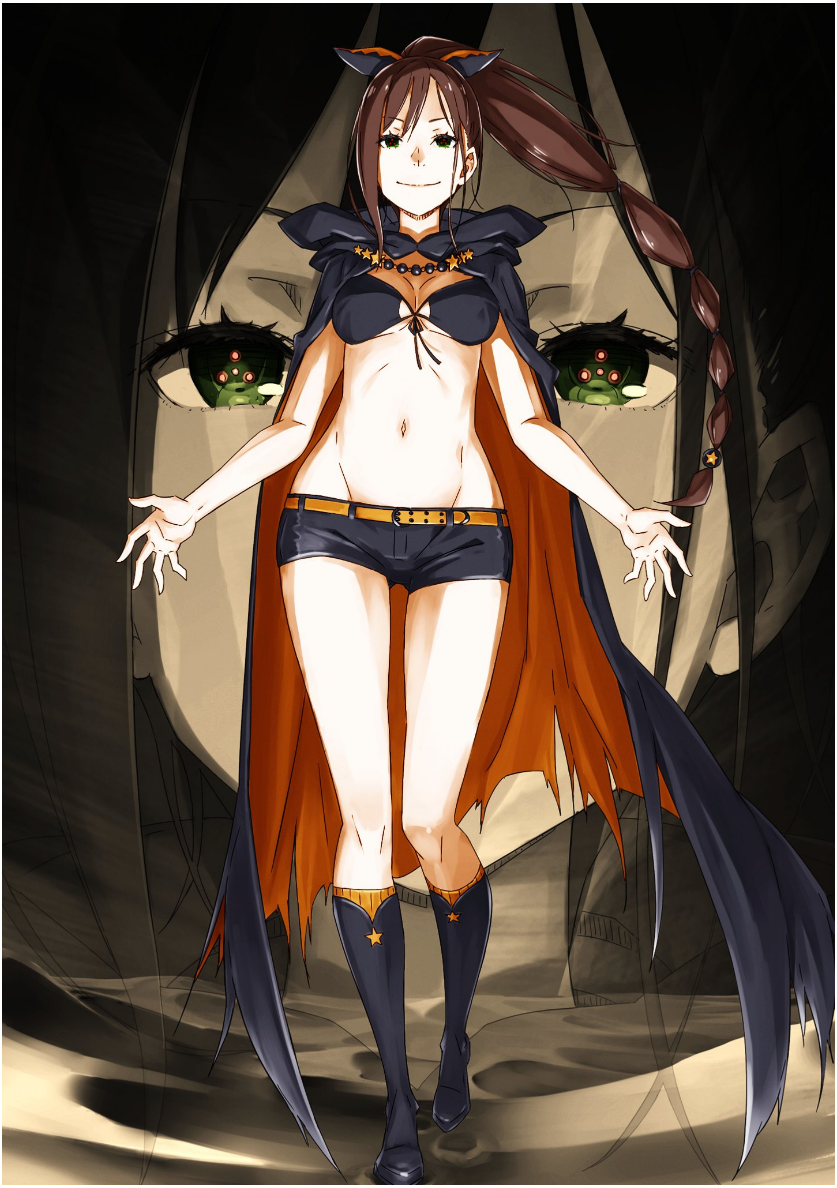
She gazed at Subaru and the others with moist eyes which were chock-full of thick emotion. Her thin lips curved up, breaking into a rather bestial smile.

???: “—I found you.”

At least I can understand what she’s saying, Subaru thought to himself. And just as he thought that, his consciousness reached its limit.

Tasting the feeling of sand, Subaru let go of his consciousness still without uttering a single word. At least, it didn’t seem like he’d have to let go of the girl wrapped inside his arms; he held her tight.

He only had enough willpower left to persevere to that point.



Chapter 18:
The Keeper of the Sand Tower

—Amid the dregs of murky darkness, there was consciousness.

It had been a long time since Natsuki Subaru visited this place. Like the several previous times, it was a dark world where sky and earth had no end, and only darkness resided. It felt like he had been forcibly summoned to this place just like when he Returned by Death.

If he were to think about it, this too was a truly mysterious place. At any rate, it wasn't like Subaru could pull out his memories of this place, and bring them to the outside. Despite it not being his first time visiting this place, he would forget entering it after leaving.

A transient feeling, just like as if he was a mere bubble floating by in a dream.

Within this pale darkness, in the narrow gaps of his faint recollections, the consciousness known as Natsuki Subaru on the outside floundered through the air, and slowly swam amidst the jet black darkness.

With only his consciousness, he rose to the surface; of course when it came to his body he had gotten used to the feeling of not having his limbs, his eyes, his ears, his mouth. As well as that, the fact that he didn't know what was top, bottom left or right, and the anxiety towards not being able to see anything, including the depths below. All of that didn't matter to his consciousness, which was dominated by just one thing.

There was an unbearable, unending passion at the core of his consciousness, or perhaps within the formation of his consciousness itself—no, more so, it was dear love, adoration, deep unconditional love.

When he comes here, he can be with the source of this love. His consciousness had learnt just this thing, and he was delighted that he could visit this place once again. Before he began to even relish that long awaited encounter, the feeling pounded in his rightfully nonexistent chest was one of such joy that he wanted to open his rightfully nonexistent lips to sing.

However, the passion of his consciousness was—

Mysterious Voice 1: “He seems to have arrived in… HIGH SPIRITS.”

Mysterious Voice 2: “It’s really nothing to joke about. Acting all smug due to just a bit of luck. Have some restraint, even shamelessness can go so far, how unbearable. Do take a long, objective look at yourself; maybe then, you will see just how far your impudence has gone.”

Suddenly, he heard them; he was disturbed by voices which by all rights he should not be able to hear.

???: “…”

His consciousness turned to look behind. If neither face nor body exist in this directionless world, then what’s the significance in the act of looking behind, was there any? It was not to find a meaning in this, rather it was an act for the sake of giving meaning to it. You needed a body to look behind. If he consciously thought so, and acted, then the jet black darkness has no choice but to give that to the nothingness that was Natsuki Subaru.

Thus, the consciousness which looks back became Natsuki Subaru, now bestowed with vision so he could look around his surroundings, and a body which he could turn back around with. Yet, that alone was still insufficient, and his body was far off from being complete. This Subaru was an imperfect recreation; the real Natsuki Subaru couldn’t be reproduced at all.

Would it be better if he had hands, or legs, or perhaps a nose and mouth? —No, making and manifesting a human being out of nothing was not that easy.

Natsuki Subaru didn’t know nearly enough about himself to recreate himself. It wasn’t easy for Natsuki Subaru to complete himself using only his own memories and knowledge.

Therefore, it was impossible currently to make Natsuki Subaru more than this. However, in that lacking state, the incomplete Natsuki Subaru wasn’t even able to recognize this. And that was why the incomplete Natsuki Subaru who'd only gave his transient body some transient eyes, whilst existing in a state in which he can't even place a foot down onto the ground, spun around to look at his surroundings, and noticed something.

There was something other than the "consciousness" of Natsuki Subaru coming to the fore within the depths of the darkness.

Mysterious Voice 1: "Disgusting and shameful, nothing more than the result of self… CONCEIT. Yes, how very sinful, how dirty you are! Just so so so so worthy of… DISDAIN!"

Mysterious Voice 2: "Subpar, way off from a human, we could say we have the ultimate imperfection here, doesn't it feel like that? What were they even thinking, that a guy like this would kick the satisfied me to the curb? Shouldn't it have been obvious from the beginning if you knew your place? Who are you to stand in my way, a nuisance! A hindrance! Pretty much everything! So lacking! Not enough! Liiike, if you think like a logical, human being…! Even with you being a subhuman, liike the likes of human cattle."

His "Consciousness" rose to the fore in the darkness, where jeers rained down upon the very much imperfect Natsuki Subaru. On one side was insanity, and on the other was annoyance, both respectively venting out their hatred towards Natsuki Subaru.

However, unfortunately for Natsuki Subaru, being a mere speck of consciousness, he could not comprehend that hatred.

The heart, the brain of this Natsuki Subaru were not prepared at all to comprehend it. If he were to try and gain an understanding of those words which the "consciousnesses" uttered, then just like he materialized some flesh, and just like he created a sense of sight, he had to create organs to allow him to understand them.

???: "…"

—But, somehow, those organs felt unnecessary.

At least, in order to grasp what those two "consciousnesses" were saying, the meaning behind trying to produce such a thing was weak, above all, he didn't feel the urge to do so. It was not easy to drag out the material from the immaterial. At the very least, if Natsuki Subaru's consciousness didn't truly wish for it, then he could neither create nor acquire it.

So as things were right now, he couldn't help but to postpone bringing forth a mind to understand them, as well as words to reply to the "consciousness" of those two. No, actually, there was no ulterior motive behind it.

Mysterious Voice 1: "What insolence! What contempt! What disdain! Here I am, preaching with such diligence, and yet you don't even bother to consider… CONTEMPLATING IT. How very… how very, aah, aah, aaah…! Slothful. You are truly… slothful!"

Mysterious Voice 2: "How far will you go in making a fool out of others until you're satisfied, damned human cattle…! Listen well, just who do you think I am? I am the most satisfied man in the world, one who worries about nothing and only wishes to pursue his simple joys and live a fulfilling life, undisturbed and free of greed, and yet you would interfere with that? This is a violation of my rights. An act of wickedness. One such as you, who would crush the dreams of others so easily, must be stopped…!"

Feeling that he wasn't making any progress, he turned his back to the "consciousnesses" of the two. It was convenient, having this body, to indicate that he has no intention of talking to them. Behind the scenes, he felt that their abusive words would still echo, but he didn't mind because if he showed that he cared, it would be plain enough to them.

His sense of vision worked without even needing to turn back. Right now, what he would probably need was not "A sense of vision", but "eyeballs". Should the chance present itself, he would remember to make them.

However, right now, he had no time to deal with such trifles.

???: "…"

Because, right in front of Natsuki Subaru's consciousness, the shadow whom he aimed for was showing herself.

???: "…"

In the jet black darkness, where nothing should have been visible, the silhouette clad in deeper black than the midst of the darkness he was in was far more vivid.

Sometimes, she would freeze Natsuki Subaru's heart, with those arms with such graceful fingers would dangle loosely. Though slender, those limbs possessed such tenderness, garbed in a dark dress. As usual, her features are unclear, as everything above her neck was covered by a thick mist. But, Natsuki Subaru understood deep within his soul that there was "someone" there that inspired such deep emotions of love.

Her appearance was far more clear than the previous encounter, and he was far closer to her, distance-wise. In his previous encounter with her, only her arms and body could be seen, a silhouette, but now she was wearing a dress, and he could see up until her bare feet peeking out from underneath the hem of her long dress. Nearly all of her body was perfectly reproduced; what wasn't visible to Natsuki Subaru was just her face hidden by the darkness.

How irritating. But for now, that was okay. Stronger than before, he felt her presence ever nearer. However, Natsuki Subaru, though clearer she may be, was not yet prepared to go out and meet her.

Right now, he should simply rejoice that he was so close to her. One day, he would definitely reach out and touch her fingers, embrace her slender waist, and make love with her.

???: "—I love you."

Faced with this confession, Natsuki Subaru gave his newly manufactured chin a nod in response. Through that mere action, the shadow's delight could be felt; accompanying it, an apologetic feeling sprang up.

Next time, a "Mouth" and "Tongue" would be necessary so that he could express his words of love from there. While feeling these profound emotions, Natsuki Subaru's consciousness started to leave this shadow garden, and—

4

Though Subaru knew he was good at getting up from sleep, on the flipside, he also knew that he found it hard to get asleep.

For Subaru, waking up from sleep felt as if he were raising his face above the water's surface. No matter who may be submerged underwater, if their face breaks up to the water's surface, they will not forget how to breathe. For Subaru, that breathing signifies the waking of his consciousness, it's fairly natural that he can "breathe" when waking up.

Emilia: "Ooh, you get up so well, I'm jealous. I… am reaaaaaaally bad at getting up."

This had been Emilia's comment from when they had this conversation before. Incidentally, when it came to Emilia getting up, there was no exaggeration or humility when she said these words, it really was that bad. Just as you would imagine, Emilia did have very low blood pressure, it took her about an hour to wake up and get herself out of bed.

When she wakes up in her bed in the mornings, in her drowsiness she waits for to get back to her senses and then finally gets out of the Futon, washes her face and fixes her hair—that's her style. And on the other hand, unlike Subaru, she slept as well as a child. A stark contrast.

Emilia: "When I was in the forest, and I only had Puck beside me, since Puck didn't come out much at night… I could only do stuff like sleeping…"

This had been Emilia's comment from when they had this conversation before. And regarding the details of how Subaru had replied to this, he would leave those turned over. But now that she has someone to keep her company late at night, she should forget about how the past was.

In any case, Subaru was honestly quite envious of her quality of sleep. No matter what, when Subaru gets into bed and closes his eyes in the middle of the night, he can't stop thinking about all kinds of stuff. In particular, what he thinks about includes all the things he could have done differently, and all the regrets he has. Whether it was about what happened during that day, and sometimes as well what happened days long before, regret torments Subaru without any heed for either time nor means. When fighting with stuff like that, he can't fall asleep at all. That's the source behind his poor quality of sleep.

—So, even the events which happened beneath the sand sea became a newly planted seed of regret as far as it concerned Subaru. It's practically assured that this would become something that would greatly disturb Subaru's sleeping quality from now on.

Subaru: "…where… am I?"

At the moment he woke up, Subaru understood that his waking had differed to the usual one from Return by Death. First of all, there was light in the surroundings. Quite unlike the underground area beneath the sand sea that he had awoken in submerged by darkness, the fact that he can look around his surroundings serves as evidence of things having changed. In addition to that, the chilliness had also faded, and his body was embraced by a feeling quite different to that of lying on top of the sand. The soft feeling against his back was perhaps that of a bed. Below his head there was also something like a pillow there, in other words, Subaru was —

Subaru: "I'm lying down in a bed…"

If he were to check and say it out loud, resting on top of his body was a white cotton blanket. The feeling of a bed with a pillow was not a feeling he wasn't familiar with if he were to really check. Rather, he was really familiar with it, he immediately realized that it was the bedding that came from the dragon carriage. Thus here, he was inside the dragon carriage that they had used in their attempt to seize the Pleiades Watchtower.

Subaru: "What's this doing here…?!"

Subaru sat himself up, understanding that he had been laid down within the dragon carriage that was supposed to have veered off course. In that moment, he noticed that someone was clutching his right hand. If he were to turn to face his right hand side—there was a young lady kneeling on the floor right next to the bed, her body sprawled out across the bed, sleeping. It was the silver-haired Emilia who was clutching Subaru's hand, with somewhat of a look of relief on her face.

Softly breathing, with warmth radiating from the palm of her hand. Subaru let out an exhausted, hoarse breath seeing that she was definitely here.

Subaru: "Ah, ahhhhh…Emilia, that's you right? Safe and sound…"

Emilia's form, nestled beside him, left Subaru puzzled, with it not having sunk in yet. Since his right hand was being held, he stretched out his left hand and placed it against her cheeks. Her pale cheeks were hot, as if she was developing a fever; her skin was absurdly soft and smooth. Just by touching them, it felt like love and affection are about to burst out of them, touching them as much as he dared, just to make sure.

Subaru: "Oooh, there's no doubt, it's Emilia… Cute, delicate, warm."

???: "—You wouldn't be happening to be doing something inappropriate, in fact. Emilia was terribly worried for you, I suppose. She didn't sleep for two days, in fact."

Subaru: "Huuuuuuh?!"

When stroking Emilia's cheeks, having his fill of her soft breathing, Subaru had reflexively flinched at the voice that had abruptly interrupted him. And in a panic he tried to turn his head around; standing by the door which connected this living space with the bed he found the little girl leaning on it, with a look of disgust on her face.

Subaru: "Bea—"

Beatrice: “Shhhhh, I suppose. I dislike this unreasonable Subaru, in fact.”

Subaru: “…”

Instinctively, he had almost raised his voice, delighted in seeing her again, but he had been interrupted by Beatrice just before. Subaru placed his hand over his mouth, and quietly looked down below at the still sleeping Emilia. Whilst letting him chew on his words, her stiff expression loosened, leading her to look somewhat more happy.

Subaru: “That sure was a close one…Beako. Come over here. Let me hug you.”

Beatrice: “What a foolish thing to say…well, it can’t be helped, I suppose.”

If he can’t show his happiness at this reunion using words, then he has no choice but to show his happiness at this reunion using actions. With Subaru beckoning her, Beatrice sighed and drew closer to him. The little girl was indifferently playing with her drill curls, and when she came beside him, Subaru hugged her with his free left arm, firmly embracing her against his chest.

Subaru: “Thank goodness… seriously, thank goodness. I was really really worried.”

Beatrice: “…That’s Betty’s words, in fact. We couldn’t find Subaru or the older sister anywhere, and we were all frightened to the core, I suppose. We feared you weren’t alive, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Is that so. Were you worried to death about me?”

Beatrice: “Not entirely like that… I suppose. That’s right, I was worried, I suppose. Really, really… really… “

While embracing Beatrice’s light body, the little girl cast her gaze down and her words faltered mid-sentence. He continued to stroke Beatrice’s hair who nuzzled her head against his chest and cherished her reunion with him in silence for a moment. And after a little bit of time, the silence was broken; Beatrice moved her face up away from Subaru's chest, with a feeling of relief traced across her features and hopped off of the bed with a boing.

Beatrice: "Anyway, other than to the sleepyhead Emilia, we've got to tell everyone that you've woken up, in fact. We were all worried, thinking it was your last, I suppose."

Subaru: "Everyone… Oh yeah, is everyone safe? Even those who got separated from me, and those who were with me?"

Beatrice: "You can rest assured, in fact. Everyone is safe and sound, I suppose."

Subaru: "I see… I seee!"

Subaru's unease faded as he heard Beatrice's guarantee. He had heard that everyone was safe, her unexpected answer had set his heart at ease. But, straight afterwards, Subaru jerked his head up, an unpleasant feeling of deja vu resounding from that guarantee.

Subaru: "Wait, Beako. I'm sorry for how short-lived my happiness is. But, is everyone really all right?"

Beatrice: "Gnh, it's upsetting being doubted by Subaru, in fact. There would be no sense in Betty deceiving Subaru like this, I suppose. I am not joking, in fact."

Subaru: "I get that you're in a huff, but this isn't the reason why I am doubting you. Even if you weren't looking to deceive me, that doesn't mean that I haven't been fooled, …didn't we just experience that rather painfully in Priestella?"

Beatrice: "…"

Hearing this, Beatrice seemed to notice the source of Subaru's concern. Even in the battle against the Witch Cult in Priestella, after their battle Subaru had received an identical report. He had been told that everyone was safe, in fact, that been a correct presumption to make, but—

Subaru: "Let's confirm it. There's me, Emilia and Beatrice. In addition there's Rem, Ram and Patrasche. Anastasia, Meili, Gyan, and finally… Julius. This is everyone.”

Beatrice: “…”

Subaru: “You’re saying that everyone… that everyone is here?”

Beatrice: “Don’t worry, I suppose. That’s everyone, in fact. There’s no one that I’ve forgotten, and that Subaru only hasn’t, I suppose.”

Subaru: “I see… I see. Then I guess I can really be delighted by it…”

Having confirmed that everything that was necessary, Subaru carefully thinks about whether there are any more pitfalls remaining. He determined that he hadn’t overlooked anything, and finally he found strength in those words which had said that everyone was safe.

Subaru: “Thank goodness. Oh, thank goodness…!”

Beatrice: “Good grief, you sure like to over-exaggerate, in fact. In the first place, when we found out that you, the most likely to attract danger, was okay, we guessed that everyone else was too, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Idiot! That’s not always true y’know! Even if I know that’s so, anxiety is still anxiety, and worry is still worry. You were crying after finding out I was safe, no?”

Beatrice: “I wasn’t crying or anything, in fact. Just because Betty was pressing her face against your chest, it doesn’t mean you should look at it like that, I suppose. You can’t prove it, in fact.”

With a hmph, Beatrice puffed out her delicate chest, however her words seemed to be brimming with emotion to the contrary. On top of that, there were traces left on the bed that someone other than him had slept there at a space of the lower part of the bed which took up about half of its size—Subaru pointed at it and said:

Subaru: “There’s evidence right here that someone crawled in next to me and fell asleep, but even with seeing this dead giveaway are you still going to say that you weren’t worried? “

Beatrice: “That wasn’t Betty, I suppose! This is completely a false accusation, in fact. I have no idea what you’re talking about, I suppose.”

Subaru: “No one but you would act like this! Don’t feel embarrassed.”

Beatrice: “You’re wrong, in fact! Ahh, jeez, we’re gonna wake up Emilia, I suppose.”

Beatrice forced a change of subject as they exchanged such frivolous conversations in their usual manner While giving a wry smile at her flushed face, Subaru let out a long, truly long, deep sigh.

Everyone was safe, he was relieved for now to hear those words. When they were at the sand dunes, they had been pursued by a herd of Witchbeasts and they had split up, Subaru had repeatedly Returned by Death in the underground area of the sand sea. He had no clue how Emilia and the others were doing and what would have happened if he couldn’t have undone it—

Subaru: “…now that you mention it, it’s like feeling suspicious about everything will only raise bogies, is that what it is?”

Beatrice: “—?”

Looking dumbfounded, Beatrice cocked her head at Subaru who had placed his left hand on his head. For Beatrice, the meaning of that behavior felt cryptic, but to Subaru there was a meaning to it. No, there was no meaning to this behavior itself, but it could be said that the subjectiveness of it all was the greatest factor.

Subaru: “Beako… you’re the same as always, Beako. Emilia as well is as cute as always.”

Beatrice: “What are you even saying…”

Although she fixed him with a deadpan gaze, Subaru felt no extraordinary sense of discomfort or irritation at her words. Toward the sleeping Emilia as well, he felt nothing but trusting love to the two of them. Not a trace of the inexplicable hatred that had tormented him underground was left.

Subaru: “Guess I’m alright now, since I’m far away from the miasma. Though it makes me sick to even leave such a strange thing, of unknown cause and treatment, as is…”

Beatrice: “Subaru, if you still aren’t feeling well or you feel anxious about your health, it would be better for you to lie down, I suppose. There’s no need for you to get up all in a hurry for now, in fact. In one way or another, just Betty and everyone else will manage to undertake the trials, I suppose.”

Subaru: “…huh?”

Placing her hand against his forehead, Beatrice had showed concern at Subaru, his eyes downcast. Amidst the concern in those words, was something that he hadn’t heard before. Subaru interrupted her without thinking.

Subaru: “What did you just say now?”

Beatrice: “So you can rest, I suppose. It’s not like you’re taking the day off with no good reason, Betty won’t get mad at you when it’s about you not feeling well, in fact.”

Subaru: “Though I remember saying such terrific stuff in this feverish talk, it wasn’t that part I was referring to y’know? After that… you said something about a trial?”

Beatrice: “Ahhh, yeah, I did say that I suppose.”

At having heard Subaru hounding her, Beatrice slipped out a “Damnit” in response. It’s not like she had really wanted to hide it from Subaru, rather, it more so came from her concern from worrying about wanting Subaru to rest for a bit. However, it wasn’t enough to make him have peace of mind, having heard that much, since Subaru was not much of an obedient person, and Beatrice knew that well enough.

Subaru: “Beako”

Beatrice: “I know. I will give you a proper explanation, I suppose.

Really, I thought that it'd be better to talk about it after you settled down… despite that, my mouth slipped."

Subaru: "It's one of your cute points that you can't hide stuff like this. —In the first place, I've looked the other way on stuff that I ought to have asked you from the start."

He flashed a faint bittersweet smile at Beatrice who had admitted defeat, though the smile quickly disappeared from his face. Subaru more or less lowered his voice and opened his mouth, and naturally questioned her with:

Subaru: "Where are we? And don't go butting in saying something silly like inside the dragon carriage."

Beatrice: "Subaru, I think it's no long stretch of the imagination for you too, I suppose"

Beatrice gave a weary sigh, putting her arms together. And so, with a click of her heels, she looked up to the other side of the room—the little girl looked up to the ceiling.

Beatrice: "—Pleiades Watchtower."

Subaru: "…"

Beatrice: "The watchtower at the end of those sand dunes, we are in it, I suppose."

And that was what she said.

2

He carefully let go of Emilia's hand; she was lying down on the bed, fast asleep since she had stayed up for two days. Subaru slipped out of the dragon carriage after giving her forehead a quick stroke.

Within the dragon carriage which they'd spent over a month in, it seemed like there were no changes to it from before it had veered off course. Without so much of a scratch on its body, it looked just as if it was new.

Beatrice: “Unlike those who were with Subaru, the ones who were with Betty, swallowed up by the Sand Wind chasm were safe, I suppose. We were hurled away to a different place from that flower garden… everyone with us turned pale when we realized that Subaru and some of the rest had been separated from us, in fact.”

Subaru: “You as well?”

Beatrice: “Emilia and Julius too, I suppose. Betty isn’t the only one, in fact.”

With a hmph, Beatrice pouted and turned her eyes away from him; she opened the door that led to the outside of the dragon carriage. The sensation of the wind outside felt rather like the one present in the sand dunes, the darkness outside was close to that of the one in the underground area of the sand sea. However, unlike back at the sand dunes, there’s no sand mixed in with the wind, and the darkness was less profound when compared to the underground area. The cause of this came from some magical lamps which had been installed all the way around the area, as well as some densely packed luminous moss which lined the walls around them. The moss near him certainly reminded him of the kind he had seen inside Sanctuary’s graveyard. It grows quite superfluously wherever he may go, it’s certainly quite a handy piece of vegetation to have around.

Subaru: “This place is…”

Beatrice: “The sixth floor of the Pleiades Watchtower… well, the lowermost floor, I suppose. From looking at the tower from the sand sea, it looks like the sixth floor seems to be partially buried beneath the tower, in fact. The fifth floor is above the sand… although you might say it’s hard to tell, I suppose.”

Looking over the circular area, Subaru widened his eyes at hearing Beatrice’s explanation. The reason why he can’t really get the gist of her explanation was probably because Subaru was completely unfamiliar with the interior and the structure of the Pleiades Watchtower.

As far as he can see, the inside of the Pleiades Watchtower was fairly vast and spacious. In the place Beatrice had mentioned as being called the sixth floor, the floor was on one side made of stone, and right in the middle of it rested the dragon carriage. The circular area that spreads itself around from where the dragon carriage stood was probably about 200 or 300 meters in radius. If the tower was built exactly in the shape of a circle, rather than something more crude like an ellipsis, then he can hardly believe it, mouth agape, at the enormity of the handiwork it would have taken to construct it.

Subaru: "…Thinking about the pointless work done back in the olden days, doesn't this remind you of stuff like the pyramids? It's such a massive waste for just one person's tomb. Hmm, wait, no, I've heard some stuff about how they were kinda used as public enterprise, and the unemployed being super grateful for them…"

Beatrice: "I really don't get what you're muttering about again, in fact."

Subaru: "I'm talking about tombstones. Even burying people alive was once popular, thinking they were taking preventative measures about what would happen to them after death, that's how they thought back in olden times, the idea is similar"

Beatrice: "…Stories about what happens after death aren't good omens, I suppose. Ridiculous, in fact."

Hearing Subaru's thoughtless remarks, Beatrice turned her eyes away from Subaru, as if in a sulk. Stroking his cheek, Subaru realized that he had said something he shouldn't have, and so he started petting Beatrice's hair. Suddenly, he wrapped back around to the front of the dragon carriage, as if having remembered something.

Subaru: "Ohh, Gyan! You're also safe and sound! Gyan, you aren't dead!"

Beatrice: "Why are you saying such inane things all of a sudden, I suppose?!"

Subaru: "Huh, no, I just felt like I needed to do it. But, I am really glad that he's safe heh."

At the front of the dragon carriage, reined to the carriage itself, was the reliable earth dragon, Gyan. Of the Gyrus species which are adapted for the desert, resilience was their strong suit. Gyan had splendidly managed to survive the difficult circumstances, showing a particularly shameless obstinance to those words.

Subaru: "That said, disregarding the others, you're the first one confirmed alive! "

Gyan: "…"

Subaru: "Oyoy, don't make such a long face. I said I'm glad. Hey, I will give you a larger share of food later, so cut me some slack."

Gyan: "…"

Subaru: "What is it? Look, I'm a money-on-hand kind of guy."

Beatrice: "It'd be high time for you to calm your little act down any time now, in fact. He's tired, so we're heading off, I suppose."

The look on Beatrice's face was one indicating she didn't want to have anything to do with this, as Subaru had his little joke alongside Gyan. In response to Beatrice's reaction, Subaru with a twist of his neck said "My bad, my bad."

Subaru: "Come now, I didn't mean to embarrass you, but there's something I wanted to check. "

Beatrice: "What is it?"

Subaru: "Well… even though Gyan's here, Patrasche is still nowhere to be seen."

His fellow earth dragon, Patrasche, it would be normal for her to be reined here to the carriage if she was safe. However, even when he checked the other side of the dragon carriage her jet-black beautiful figure could not be seen anywhere. Subaru was uneasy at the fact that her figure, which should be there, wasn't, but, Beatrice: “Don’t jump quickly to conclusions, I suppose. That earth dragon… Patrasche, as we couldn’t keep her on the sixth floor, she’s on the fourth floor, in fact.”

Subaru: “Fourth floor? Is that above? Why?”

Beatrice: “She’s getting treatment for her wounds, I suppose. The younger of those sisters… Rem’s figure shouldn’t be there in the dragon carriage either, in fact. Everyone in a poor state was brought up to the fourth floor, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Getting treatment… will… Rem be cured?!”

Subaru jumped at Beatrice’s unexpected words. A faint look of surprise flitted across Beatrice’s face as she saw how forcefully Subaru had reacted, but she kept him at bay by pinching his nose as he drew near to her.

Beatrice: “Ca… calm down, in fact! Don’t be so impatient, I suppose!”

Subaru: “As if this is the time to be calm! Will… Rem be cured? Also, you said Patrasche is getting treatment as well, what sort of state is she in?”

Beatrice: “Let me start from the beginning! I can’t just say everything all at once, in fact. Just, we put her in place that is better than just laying her down, I suppose! The earth dragon is like so, too, in fact!”

Subaru: “…Ohh, I see”

Subaru, having tried to press for answers, hung his head down despondently, seeing the energy sap out of him, even Beatrice gave him a sad look. But, the little girl clenched her small fist, and said:

Beatrice: “Look, this isn’t a situation where you should feel down, I suppose. Surely, there has to be a way to manage it, in fact. In order to check that, everyone will challenge the trials of the watchtower now, I suppose.”

Subaru: “…”

In order to cheer up the downcast Subaru, Beatrice clumsily attempts to urge him into rousing his spirit. Seeing her attempt, Subaru was taken aback, and he jerked his chin up with a: “That’s right.”

Subaru: “My bad, I’m really sorry in retrospect. I’m sorry about worrying you.”

Beatrice: “If this worry is from Subaru, then for you I’ll allow it, in fact. But at least let me worry in a place where Betty can keep an eye on you, that’d be a great help, I suppose”

Subaru: “I’ll consider it.”

Subaru ruffled Beatrice’s hair and expressed his gratitude at hearing her sympathetic words. Beatrice’s hairdo was completely unyielding, and even his attempts at ruffling and disturbing it in this manner were in vain, such was its strength. In any case, under the encouragement of Beatrice, Subaru turned his eyes towards the top of the tower.

Subaru: “This is the sixth floor… at any rate, we can just go up, right?”

Beatrice: “Perhaps, Julius and the others are in the middle of the trial right now. So, beforehand, it’s best if we meet with the Sage face-to-face and ask them for some more details, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Sage…? Huh, now that you mention it…”

In the middle of Beatrice’s words, Subaru caught hold onto the word, Sage. In spite of in the first place having come to this watchtower to meet with the Sage, Beatrice hadn’t mentioned anything to do with the Sage up until now.

Subaru: “Beako, I guess you already met the Sage? What sort of guy was he? Did you talk to him and complain about the white light beams which zinged towards us?”

Beatrice: “…I don’t really want to talk about the Sage too much, in fact. Well, no, I suppose. Perhaps, when it comes to the sage, it’ll be simpler if you met them in person, I suppose”

Subaru: “Y’know… I don’t remember ever having met face to face with any normal guy with the way you’re speaking about them. If I recall, I feel like I was told something similar by Emilia-tan when I first met with Roswaal.”

It had already been more than a year ago, but he remembered the conversation back then vividly. He remembered that she had explained it like this: “I think meeting and talking to him will be easier to understand him than talking to each other about him in relation to Roswaal. In reality, she thought that he wouldn’t have received the impact unless he met with him in person, and he’d be on the same wavelength if they spoke, but, well, it was far too late now for what happened back then.

Beatrice: “If you meet them, you’ll understand, in fact.”

Subaru: “…Understood. In any case, we should go and try and meet them. How do we get above?”

Beatrice: “Stairs, I suppose. If you look closely, there are stairs by the wall, in fact.”

If he squinted his eyes to where Beatrice’s words had pointed him to, he can just about make out that there’s something like steps—a staircase, on the outer edge of the circular room indeed. However, there were a huge amount of steps forming a spiral staircase that wound its way around the big, circular tower.

Subaru: “Eh…? Does this lead up?”

Beatrice: “Climb up this, I suppose. If you keep going up, it won’t take too long, in fact.”

Subaru: “Even if you say to keep going up… how many steps is it until the top?!”

Subaru shrieked this out, as it looked likely that he’d be made to get some heavy exercise, being made to go up and down all over again. His voice echoed around the tower in vain, most likely it echoed all the way up until to the top before sorrowfully fading away. Beatrice shrugged her shoulders uttering a Good Grief at Subaru’s lamenting.

Beatrice: “It can’t be helped, I suppose. If we could use something like a bit of magic for this, it may be possible to fly upstairs in some shape or form, but…well, Subaru you have no other choice, in fact.”

Subaru: “No, look, we can like use Murak here. How about we use something like that to climb all the way up to the very top without stopping with ease?”

Beatrice: “It’s not like we can’t, but when push comes to shove, I feel we’d be in danger… like of running out of mana, in fact.”

Subaru: “Even if we go up the stairs normally, when push comes to shove, won’t we be running out of steam, physically?!”

Even though Subaru’s physical strength compared to back when he had been a hikikomori was stronger, he was still a feeble boy who still has some ways to go before he reaches the standards of strength of this other world, and thus he can’t escape from it. He didn’t know how high above the fifth floor was from the lowermost floor, i.e. the sixth floor, but at least when he looked above at he couldn’t even see a ceiling. With how high he thought it is, climbing up would be a deed on the level of mountain climbing.

Subaru: “Damn it! Even so I have to go up and make sure that the likes of Rem and Patrasche are safe. I have to. Ah, goddamnit.”

Beatrice: “That’s the spirit, I suppose. Good luck, in fact. Betty will cheer you on, I suppose. It’d be really helpful if you call out to me when you reach the top, in fact.”

Subaru: “A shortcut?! I ain’t gonna let you! You come along too with me. Walk! Break into a sweat!”

Beatrice: “I’m sorry, but Betty is a cute spirit and sweating would be —”

Subaru steeled his resolve to tackle the stairs, left with no choice, as Beatrice almost dampened his enthusiasm. But, in the middle of their argument, Beatrice suddenly broke off mid-sentence, and looked up overhead.

Subaru: “Beako?”

Beatrice: “Oh no, I suppose. Subaru, get down in fact—!”

With her sudden change in attitude, Subaru’s voice trailed off, as both Beatrice’s expression changed as well as coming to jump up to him. Catching Beatrice by her chest, he lifted her up into his arms. And, Beatrice was open-mouthed, and then she beat at Subaru’s chest.

Beatrice: “Idiot! That doesn’t mean you can pick me up like a baby, I suppose! Get down, in fact!”

Subaru: “It was just on the spur of the moment…”

As he held Beatrice within his arms, Subaru gently leaned his body back. He doesn’t know what’s happening, Beatrice’s alertness was the only thing he had to work from. In preparation for that, he tried to think, but it was too late.

—Immediately afterwards, a terrible sense of pressure emanated from above them; Subaru held his breath.

The source of that pressure came ever closer with ferocity, and in the next moment something blasted towards Subaru, right in front of his eyes—a violent quake shook the enormous tower, Subaru was almost blown away by the shockwave which raised sand and dust up. He would have probably been thrown about over and over if not for Gyan’s enormous frame just behind them. Protected by the weight of the earth dragon and the dragon carriage, Subaru desperately pushed his eyes open in the midst of the sandstorm that was blowing against him.

And then, on the other side of the smoke plume, from where the impact had been which had been, the cloud of sand and dust that had risen up abruptly cleared. Something like a gust of wind tore through the smoke, and soon after from the other side, a majestic figure of a person could be seen. Tearing through the dense sandy haze which had enveloped them, the person’s figure started to become visible. Subaru’s cheeks stiffened, he was frozen in place.

That figure, their appearance, he recognized it.

Subaru: “Are you…?”

A tall woman was walking briskly across the hard floor, stepping ever closer to him. Her brown, moreso black, hair was tied up into a ponytail, she was marching forward boldly, her limbs, belly and back were exposed by her clothing, it’s safe to say that she was half-naked. Her chest and crotch area were just barely covered up, and she donned a black mantle over her clothes. She was a person who wore rather odd clothing.

In Subaru-speak, she looked like a nympho who was donning her mantle over a black bikini top and hot pants.

Long, slender, white arms and legs, along with large breasts which were liberally swinging about. She was around the same height as Subaru, maybe a little taller. A handsome face sat on top of her white shoulders, she was quite the looker, with eyes that albeit languid, were rather striking.

—That was definitely the last thing he saw before he had lost consciousness.

She was the one who had attacked and slaughtered the centaur without mercy. And those countless flashes of light that she had launched towards the centaur was something Subaru knew only too well.

Subaru: “…Are you the Sage?”

???: “…”

Feeling how parched his throat was, Subaru hoarsely raised this question to the woman who was approaching him in silence. However, the woman did not deign to answer Subaru until she came right up to where he was stood, she stopped herself in her tracks at a spot where if Subaru were to stretch out his arm he’d be able to touch her, she was just… looking at him intently.

Her gaze felt as if she was scrutinizing his entire body, honestly, it made Subaru feel quite uneasy. He hadn’t even heard the voice of this person, but her strength was such that she had made short work in burying the centaur that had attacked him, it was at an inhumane level. Make one bad move and this peculiar person would instantly turn you into nothing more than charcoal. He can't really figure out what her attitude was showing, all he knew from that was that the only emotion he can feel about her right now was fear.

???: "…"

In Subaru's arms, Beatrice's body remained unchanging, as she clung onto him tightly. Even in her, anxiety starts to seep throughout her small body. At least, he was lucky enough for the circumstances to have allowed him to come across Beatrice. In the worst case, it wouldn't be impossible that they'd have to get into another fight. Of course, there was no need to come to the point of initiating a fight for the sake of it. He shouldn't be all willy-nilly about such an exertion.

Subaru: "Are—Are you… listening? Hey, um, I heard my friends are being looked after, you don't intend to become hostile or stuff to us… right?"

???: "…"

Subaru: "Um, your silence is making me anxious, if you could say something… or perhaps do you communicate with something like telepathy, rather than words? If it's that, that's gonna be a bother! Hahaha."

???: "…"

Staring at him, the presumed Sage did not reply to Subaru's words, she just continued to stare. He felt extremely uneasy. The extent to Subaru's bewilderment and confusion could be seen from the confusion in his way of speaking. If things stay like this, they'd end up being killed by the uneasiness itself.

—Suddenly though, Subaru's anxiety was torn away.

???: "…Three"

Subaru: "Eh?"

???: "…"

While staring at Subaru, the woman suddenly muttered something that way. Her voice was a little husky, but if he could continue to listen to it, he could probably say that the huskiness in her voice was quite beautiful. However, it was relatively mysterious, with unreadable emotions coming from the voice of the woman who stood in front of his eyes; he thought there was a faint charm to it. In front of Subaru, the woman sighed quietly,

???: "Well, that's no problem. More importantly, I found you."

Subaru: "Uhh… Eh?"

Swiftly, the woman's expression changed, and she blurted out something. Her serious attitude had looked, until then, as if she was trying to peer inside of Subaru, but slowly, and steadily, time passed, as if it something frozen was melting away. The woman's lips then spread to the sides, forming a shape which you could call a smile. The woman stared at Subaru and said…

???: "—Master."

Subaru: "…Wha?"

She uttered a word which he had never heard being said to him before, and emotions which seemed to come out of absolutely nowhere. Subaru turned to look behind him, in mute astonishment at her unexpected outburst. As expected, there was only Gyan's figure there. Then… was Gyan the aforementioned Master?

Subaru: "Did you come here to suddenly setup important character flags?!"

Beatrice: "I don't think it's that, I suppose! Look at the facts, in fact!"

Subaru drew nearer to Gyan as Beatrice grew angrier, still in his arms. Even though her words were reasonable, Subaru couldn't wrap his head around it. Instead, he turned around to face the woman, still standing there as if nothing had happened, without having a clue what had been said, Subaru: “Wait, no, my bad, but perhaps you’re mistaking me for someone else or something like that… mmmmph?!”

???: “Master! Jeeeeeeeez! I have beeeen waiting∼!”

In the middle of his words, the woman jumps emotionally and embraces him with her arms. Rather than receiving her tackle in full as she came barging in, he was pushed down. Letting out a shriek, “Mkyaaaa”, Beatrice fell from his back, onto the floor. The woman, bouncing in joy, doesn’t detach herself from Subaru, who was darting his eyes back and forth in confusion.

The woman swished her long ponytail about, and while hugging Subaru with unnatural strength, she kept repeating over and over with delight in her voice:

???: “Master! Master! It has been so long! I missed you so much! I thought that my life was gonna be just meee shooting those approaching here!”

Subaru: “W-Wait! Wait wait! What?! What are you talking about?!”

Shaula: “How crueeel! Master ordered me, no? You said to stop anyone from getting near to the shrine… well, as for the means, well, that’s a different matter, buuuut”

Subaru: “Not that… I’m your Master…? What are you insinuating?!”

He was pressed against her soft skin, but he had no time to enjoy that lucky lewd encounter. Subaru desperately tried to escape from her clutches. However, there’s a saying that goes that women will always be women after all, and she doesn’t let go of Subaru. As a result, Beatrice ended up being sandwiched between Subaru and the woman on the floor.

Subaru: “Anyways, let go of me, you… This is ridiculous…!”

???: “No way! There’s absolutely no waaaaaay! As soon as you say that, you’ll disappear again as soon as I lose sight of you! Master hasn’t chaaanged at all!”

Subaru: “I don’t know what you’re on about!!”

The stubborn woman clung to Subaru as if she had gone through some sort of trauma. Whilst he roughly pushed her face away, trying to keep her away, Subaru snapped back at her.

Subaru: “In the first place, who are you?! What’s with all this!”

Shaula: “What are you even saying?! I’m Shaulaaa! The Star-Keeper of the Pleiades Watchtower! I am Master’s cute apprentice, Shaulaaa!”

Subaru: “I don’t remember you what so ever—!”

A woman—called Shaula, who’s name was supposed to be that of the Sage of the tower. The great so-called Sage in the Pleiades Watchtower could not be such a strange woman who doesn’t know such thing. Subaru firmly objected to this idea. However, in this place where there was no such thing as progress, a sudden interruption came about. That was…

Emilia: “—Oh no! Oh no! When I woke up Subaru wasn’t there! I need to hurry and tell everyone, we have to go look for him…”

Subaru: “Ah.”

Having said that, a sleepy-looking Emilia jumped out of the dragon carriage’s door. Exiting the carriage, she found Subaru and Shaula entwined with each other. Of course, Beatrice was there too, her eyes widened as she saw the two.

Subaru: “Emilia…Tan! Thank goodness you woke up! This is actually…”

Emilia: “Hey!”

Subaru: “That hurts?! Emilia-tan, what was that kick for?!”

Emilia: “I really am not sure, but I was reaaaaaally upset there!”

With Emilia awake, the shouting and yelling continued for a while —. Eventually, when Julius noticed the noise and joined up with them, the hard battle with the (assumed) Sage of the Pleiades Watchtower continued.

Bonus Short Stories

Those Remaining in the Watergate City, Priestella: Reconstruction Journal Number One (Edited Machine Translation)

1

Otto: “So, is the rebuilding of the collapsed city hall urgent?”

???: “Yes, I think so. Of course, this is only after the food, clothing, and shelter of the residents are in order, but it is not good for public image if the heart of the city remains in ruins forever. One thing that cannot be ignored is the anxiety of people’s minds. Just having one big pillar makes a big difference.”

Otto: “So that is that how it is?”

???: “That’s the way it is.”

And with a meek smile, Otto Suwen shrugs his shoulders. It’s Kiritaka Muse who responds to Otto with, “I see…”. Currently, Kiritaka is the head representative of the Watergate city… the young man, who has taken the position of the mayor of the city, repeatedly responded to Otto.

Kiritaka: “Thank you for your help. Originally, I was the youngest member of the Council of Ten, so I was unfamiliar with this kind of thing and couldn’t handle it. I’m hurrying to choose the next candidates, but …”

Otto: “It’s going to be difficult, considering that the other day the Council of Ten were targeted.”

Kiritaka: “You’re right.”

As Kiritaka bows his head with a worried expression, Otto looks out the window in the distance. The sky was lush and painfully clear. Under the clear, cloudless sky, the reconstruction work of the destroyed city continues, and in the past few days, aid from other regions has finally started to arrive. Thanks to this, they have been able to avoid having to worry about food and other basic necessities.

Otto: “I guess it’s a blessing in disguise. The time was right, to a certain extent.”

Kiritaka: “If this had been the fire season or the ice season, the damage would have been much worse. I don’t think the reconstruction work would have gone smoothly. That’s why we have to move quickly.”

Otto: “I agree.”

Even if the current season is good, over time the seasons will change. This advantage must be used effectively to prepare for when the weather actually becomes harsh.

Otto: “The current situation must be difficult, though. I’m grateful for all the support…”

Kiritaka: “There is no shortage of people who would like to take this opportunity to take advantage of the five major cities. I’ll keep that in mind. You warned me about this.”

After saying that, Kiritaka gave a deep breath to express his determination and then stood up. The young man, who carried the fate of the city on his shoulders, held out his hand toward Otto. In response to his request for a handshake, Otto shook the other man’s hand back.

Otto: “I’m sorry to say this, but I wish you the best of luck, Kiritaka-san.”

Kiritaka: “Thank you. I’m glad I was able to help you with your consultation. Besides, I’m sorry to have made such a request…”

Otto: “It’s okay. Please come again. After all, with my legs like this.”

Laughing, Otto pointed to his own legs, which were…wrapped tightly in bandages and strung above the bunk. Seeing this, Kiritaka gave a wry smile and…

Kiritaka: “From what I heard, your wounds reopened up from moving too much. Please take care of yourself.”

Otto: “It would be nice to have something to do here that would let me do that.”

Otto replied, half in dismay and half in concern, as he maligned himself.

2

And so, as the visiting Kiritaka, left the hospital room…

Otto: “Why don’t you come on in, Garfiel?”

Otto called out from his bunk towards the door that had been closed by Kiritaka after he left the room. Hearing Otto’s call, the door slowly opened. Not the door of the room, but the window.

Garfiel” “Not over there. This way, Otto-Bro.”

Otto: “What?! The window is not the entrance. Why are you coming in that way?!”

Garfiel: “That’s because you can hear what’s going on in the room better through the window than through the door.”

As he said this, Garfiel grabbed the window frame and slid lightly into the room. For a moment, Otto’s eyebrows furrowed, and he was about to complain about the look of his feet.

Garfiel: “Don’t worry. Took off my shoes before climbing the wall.”

Otto: “That’s not what I’m worried about… and eavesdropping on people’s conversations, too.

Garfiel: “Sorry. Got to do my duty as the camp’s military officer, you know.”

Garfiel dropped the shoes he had tucked under his arm and replied while putting them back on. The reason why Otto made a bitter face at his reply was because his excuse was the orders of none other than Otto's. Garfiel and Otto, who hadn't been good to each other in the battle for the Watergate city, vowed to become stronger and more useful. Garfiel as a military officer and Otto as an internal affairs officer, for the benefit of everyone in the camp.

Garfiel: "That's why I got to keep an eye on Otto-Bro's social life."

Otto: "If we start to spy on the private relationships of the members of the camp, it will give us a sense of the end of the organization. Doesn't it? Wasn't there some story about that?"

Garfiel: "Ah, "Magrizza's Guillotine" was a story like that."

Magrizza's Guillotine, one of the most famous stories passed down from generation to generation, is the story of royalty vying for power. In that work, there was a development in which the father-king, who had grown old and suspicious, began to control the actions of his family and entourage, and was finally forced to leave his throne.

Garfiel: "But it won't be like that. My amazing self is not doubting you, but believing you."

Otto: "I think that's also the logic of the so-called Mad King…"

Garfiel: "…My amazing self's just worried about you."

Suddenly, Otto fell silent as Garfiel lowered his voice like that. Narrowing his green eyes, Garfiel stared at Otto sincerely. Then, Garfiel's hand gently reached out to Otto's suspended leg.

Garfiel: "The day after making such a huge decision, my brother forced himself to open his wounds. I'm sure my brother is not too happy about it."

Otto: "Idadadadadada! Ouch, ouch, ouch! Wait, Garfiel?"

Garfiel: "Lately, been wondering if Otto-Bro likes pain as much as the captain does. Please be more careful."

Otto: "Ahhh! Your finger's in the wound! It's stuck inside! It hurts! It hurts!"

Garfiel was talking seriously, but it didn't enter Otto's writhing head. However, his younger brother's anger was justified, so he would have to accept the pain. A somewhat deadpan Otto, his attitude caused Garfiel to exhale long and hard.

Garfiel: "After all, Otto-Bro likes to feel pain…"

Otto: "After all the pain you've caused me, I refuse to accept your assessment!"

Garfiel: "Isn't that what they call a "Hot night in Mary Grey"?"

Otto: "Such is the list of people who are famous for dying because of their peculiar proclivities…"

It was the end of a nobleman who died in his private chambers at night due to a rather sinister hobby. For many years, the cause of his death was unknown, but it seems that the owner of a Divine protection that allows one to see the memories of objects revealed the truth. Afterwards, the owner of the blessing was said to have fallen into a life on the run due to the resentment of the man's family who were ashamed of his dishonorable behavior. Strangely enough, this is a story that Otto can relate to, but it was indeed unwelcome to be mentioned alongside that nobleman. Otto's disapproval was brushed aside by Garfiel with a curt, "Alright, alright". And then…

Otto: "So? What was your true motive for eavesdropping?"

Garfiel: "…No, just thought it would be a bad idea to interrupt."

Otto: "Garfiel"

Garfiel: "That's the truth. I'm depending on Otto-Bro. It's not right for me to interfere."

Crossing his strong arms, Garfiel spoke with a serious face. This was unmistakably Garfiel's true intentions. For the past few days, Garfiel has also been going around and lending his support to the reconstruction of the city. However, the most Garfiel could do was physical work. He has to carry piles of rubble out of the way, or carry safety equipment into broken buildings. As Garfiel labored, he realized how long the road to rebuilding the city was.

Garfiel: “My amazing self is strong, but I can only do the things that I can only do.”

Even if you work ten times as hard as a normal person, in the end it is only ten people. However, the number of people Otto, Kiritaka, and the others that are involved with the reconstruction of the city is not enough for ten or even a hundred people’s worth of work. Garfiel felt uncomfortable interrupting that with his concern for Otto.

Garfiel: “Besides, if we don’t let Otto-Bro do his job, he’ll do something stupid like make a fool of himself?”

Otto: “Isn’t that also misleading?!”

Responding with a shrill scream, Otto then let out a deep breath. The reason for Garfiel’s concern made sense to Otto… It reminded him of the decision he had made the other day when Garfiel and Otto had talked and vowed to each other. Garfiel had promised himself to be strong, he was determined to be strongest. However, this is probably a sign that he is struggling to find strength in his own way, something other than just his physical strength.

Otto: “…Garfiel, why don’t you ask Frederica-san and Ryuzu-san to join us?

Garfiel: “…”

Otto: “Of course, I won’t force you to.”

At Otto’s suggestion, Garfiel’s eyes widened. Seeing his reaction, which was all surprise, Otto loosened his lips at his brother’s ease of understanding. The true meaning of Otto’s current proposal stems from a change that occurred in Garfiel’s mind a while ago. Garfiel didn’t say much, but this made Otto sensitive to the subtleties of other people’s emotions. Otto knew exactly what Garfiel was going through.

Garfiel: “Otto-Bro, why…?”

Otto: “Did you notice that? I’m the kind of merchant who needs to be quick on the uptake. I’m always watching my surroundings, even more so when it comes to my younger brother.”

Garfiel: “Seriously…”

Otto: “It felt like it would be cool to say that…”

In front of the flustered Garfiel, Otto scratched his head and smiled. When Garfiel raised his eyebrows in suspicion, Otto said, “No”.

Otto: “Actually, this morning I had a visitor who came to visit me. They were very polite and took good care of me.”

Garfiel: “A visitor for Otto-Bro? Who the hell is this curious fellow.”

Otto: “I’d like to complain about the tendency that only people who want things will visit me, but the woman who visited me came with her children, including a lovely sister and brother.”

After a few moments of silence, Garfiel looked at Otto. Looking at Otto’s face, Garfiel was silent for a while.

Garfiel: “I should have never talked about what happened in the hospital room.”

Otto: “I heard that her husband worked at the city hall, and he told her about you and me through Kiritaka-san… She was very easy to talk to.”

Garfiel: “Otto-Bro”

Otto: “I didn’t say anything unnecessary. That’s not my role.”

With a shrug of his shoulders, Otto made a promise, at least verbally, that he would not go overboard. In response, Garfiel coughed, “Role, huh?”.

Garfiel: “That scrawny city mayor is counting on Otto-Bro, right? What about Otto-Bro? Maybe he’s going to join the Ten…”

Otto: “My goal is still the same: to be a merchant and own my own store. If one detour is enough for that. Even if someone else thinks I'm better suited for it"

Garfiel: "I guess that's right."

Garfiel patted his chest in relief, and Otto was pleasantly surprised by his honest reaction. It is true that the road may have many branches. The place where we are now must have been chosen by Otto from the countless forks in the road…

Otto: "If I had two lives, it might not be a bad idea to live the life someone else wants, but I only have one life. I'll do it without any regrets on my part."

Garfiel: "I have regrets, don't you?."

Otto: "Yes, I do… Garfiel, what are yours?"

There was no real subject of the question, but the truth of it pierced Garfiel painfully. Garfiel knew what Otto was talking about. There are things that are lost by putting them off.

"…"

If you look up at the sky, you will see a clear sky. But where is the certainty that the sun will rise again tomorrow? People believe like a monk without reason that they will see the sun again tomorrow. That unconscious indulgence leads to decisions that postpone the situation. So…

Otto: "Yeah, I know. I've already written it down and sent it to them…"

Garfiel: "You sent it? As in a letter?"

Otto: "It's not something I'm going to talk about in a letter, so I just wrote and sent a note asking them to come."

Otto looked lightly into Garfiel's eyes as he assured him. Otto did not know everything about the troubles surrounding Garfiel. Even so, just from what he could see, he could tell that it was a decision made after much anguish. Just before, Otto had suggested it as a way to show that he had a choice. But Garfiel was willing to jump over even that, to jump on the problem himself.

Otto: "…Speaking of Natsuki-san, I think he's the best cut-throat captain of the camp."

Garfiel: "You're right. Otto-Bro, you're the one who reminds me of the captain."

Otto: "That's not very nice!"

When Garfiel gave him the thumbs up, Otto fell back on his bunk. They have been talking a lot and using their brains a lot. Maybe Otto was getting a little tired.

Otto: "Hmm, I feel like I'm fading. Like, I've been talking to people for a while…"

Garfiel: "You're not in top form, so it's only natural that you should be. Go to bed, Sleep, Sleep. You don't have enough blood, so sleep and make some."

Otto replies pathetically as his head is pushed forcefully into the pillow. Hearing this, Garfiel decided not to stay much longer, and looked out the window.

Otto: "Garfiel, make sure you walk out the door when you leave."

Garfiel: "…It's a shortcut, okay?"

Otto: "If you want to be strong, in other words, you want to change. The first step is to do what you can. Start with what you can do."

It sounded like a sermon, and Garfiel scratched his head and had no choice but to follow it. And when he reached the entrance to the hospital room.

Otto: "Garfiel… Great, I think it's a great decision."

When he said that, Garfiel stopped in his tracks. He stopped, but didn't look back. He just waved over his back and walked away, closing the door roughly behind him. Laughing at his clumsy embarrassment, Otto crawled under the covers and closed his eyes. A drowsiness soon set in, and the busy internal affairs officer's consciousness drifted off into a dream.

END

Beatrice’s Everyone is Bothersome, I Suppose

1

“—Beako, I have something a bit important to talk about, do you mind?”

As she’s being called in that tone, Beatrice stops what she was doing and turns around.

In her line of sight, stood a boy with short black hair and characteristic sharp sanpaku eyes. At a glance, you couldn’t not get a sharp impression from just looking at his face. But in actuality, that was most definitely not the case, his character had a softness unrelated to that sharpness.

And that very soft him, was the great spirit Beatrice’s partner, Natsuki Subaru.

He wasn’t “They” who came before Beatrice who holed herself up in the archive for four hundred years. Choosing this gentle person—Choosing him was the single greatest joy of Beatrice’s spirit life.

“Beako? Heeey, you hear me?”

Doubting the unresponsive Beatrice, Subaru who was tilting his neck called her a second time. At that call “ahem” she cleared her throat. Just now, she could feel her habitual gratitude welling up at that loveliness.

But, Beatrice deliberately constructed a stiff tightened up expression,

“I hear you, I suppose. Though Betty may not seem so, she’s very busy with many things to do, in fact. Unless it is it is a matter of great importance, I do mind, I suppose.”

Replying with a cold and unconcerned attitude, Beatrice walks over to Subaru. At Beatrice’s attitude, Subaru gives a “Sorry sorry” while scratching his own cheek.

"I know my Beako's so pretty she's in high demand, but I at least want me to be thought of as number one there. C'mon, that partner trait thing."

"Good grief, in fact. Geez, it can't be helped since if Betty wasn't around Subaru couldn't manage anything for himself, I suppose. I will leave those who can manage for themselves to hold on for a while, in fact."

"Ooh, thanks"

Giving a broad smile at the lamenting Beatrice's response, Subaru pats down his chest with relief.

Different from their spirit and contractor relationship, Beatrice felt her heart at ease with Subaru's relief. She wanted for Subaru to be as healthy as possible.

She could wish for nothing more than if he could continue through each day with the tranquility of a nap, without a scratch.

Nevertheless, seeing as that boy had a personality that of his own volition chose to thread through the thorny path, that wish would not come to be.

And that's why—

"Betty has to do her part as well, I suppose. Otherwise, Subaru won't stop diving head first into bottomless swamps, in fact."

"Why did you say something so scary all of a sudden?!"

"Just talking to myself, I suppose. Subaru, eavesdropping is bad manners, in fact"

"You say something that scary to yourself?! You shouldn't pick up some weird habits while I'm not around you know?!"

At Subaru's bewildered response, Beatrice's lips slowly broke into a smile. Beatrice's one and only partner, had a bit too much of an overprotective side for Beatrice.

In age Beatrice boasted over four hundred years, though she's lived twenty times what the boy has, his approach towards her was almost like he was politely treating her like a frail and ephemeral dear child.

She realizes the fact that she's being treasured, so she will never particularly blame him for it.

"And so? This conversation isn't moving forward so I will move it forward, I suppose. Now what unreasonable problem could Subaru be bringing Betty this time, in fact."

"With that phrasing, it makes it seem like I regularly ask Beako for nothing but the impossible right?"

"In actuality, they're nothing but things that if Betty wasn't around no one would hear you out on, I suppose."

"It's just as you say."

With Subaru gesturing so by dropping into prostration, Beatrice pulls her chin in generously. And then, Subaru slowly bends his knees, and puts his lips close to Beatrice's ear.

"The truth is, Anastasia got possessed by an artificial spirit, what should we do though?"

"…"

And as she's truly being brought an impossible problem, Beatrice's lovely face furrows into a heavy frown.

2

Currently, the group Beatrice and her partner Subaru belong to, are in the middle of preparations for leaving from the Watergate City of Priestella to The Roswaal estate.

Since the great crisis that struck the watergate city, the attack from the witch cultists, several days have passed. Little by little, signs of the reconstruction efforts for the city are beginning to be noticeable. However, the scars left by the terrible believers run deep, the wounds that would not heal if left to be are not few by any means.

Seeking a method to deal with those wounds, they will travel to the land of the east, with Subaru as their core member. —Their goal, the tower of the Sage that resides at the easternmost edge of the world.

Foreseeing that this journey will be their most difficult one yet. literally, the members are in a situation in which they must tackle this problem together as one. —That said.

“Seriously, Subaru is so troublesome, in fact.”

Touching her own broad forehead, Beatrice grumbled a long, weary sigh that was uncharacteristic of her appearance.

Having heard Subaru’s shocking confession—that Anastasia had been replaced by an artificial spirit, Beatrice waveringly went directly to observe in great detail Anastasia’s condition.

In all honesty, Beatrice doesn’t know what Anastasia’s usual attitude is. They don’t interact, and so she wouldn’t have anything to compare even if her behavior or actions are unnatural. Because of that, she changed what she’ll have to see.

Her actions and personality, her way of being, those will not do. She had to keep an eye on the flow of the mana surrounding her.

The result of that is, she was able to perceive a faint interference with the gate that is invisible unless consciously focused on, she proved that what Subaru said was not the result of some bad dream.

“Most likely, there’s a problem with the girl’s gate itself, I suppose. That’s why, not just Betty, but nobody else could’ve taken notice of this, in fact.”

It’s not just her trying to make excuses, this is the sensation she acquired from observing Anastasia’s condition. A gate birth-defect, the humans carrying such deficiencies are not few.

Being that it was an organ that wasn’t there to begin with, it was a defect that ultimately arose from having the Gate added afterwards. For better or for worse, it wasn't stable, That precedent was well known by Beatrice.

"Between that girl and Roswaal, Betty can't judge which of the two is better, I suppose."

Being unable to use magic, or overusing it, which one would have a greater impact in one's life?

Beatrice as a spirit was closely tied with magic by nature. To begin with, conveniently, since her birth mother was a Witch, she couldn't fathom a life divorced from magic.

Magic, had given Beatrice a bountiful life. And at the same time, it also pushed her into loneliness.

In the end of it all, how you use it, and how you take it is what it will depend on, or so she thinks but—

"Overthinking each and every thing won't help anything, in fact."

"—Overthinking in what way?"

"Unkyaan, I suppose-!"

Right after whispering gloomily, a voice coming from right behind Beatrice made her jolt. Turning around with that momentum, standing there was a girl, staring in wonder with bluish purple eyes, Emilia.

She gave a light laugh with a "So sorry" at Beatrice shrieking and jumping away.

"I didn't think you would be so surprised, it suuuuper scared you."

"It- it's bad for the heart I suppose. It's not like Betty would be troubled if her heart stopped though, but if you continue you'll stop the heart of someone like Otto, in fact. Be careful, I suppose."

"Mmh, You're right. I'll be careful for Otto-kun's heart."

Taking a breath to calm herself, Beatrice having said so gave Emilia a very serious nod. Fundamentally, she was a girl who honestly lent her ears to what others had to say. Though she also had a side that was a bit too honest.

“That’s, Bubby’s raising at work there, in fact. As expected of Bubby, I suppose…”

“So then, what were you looking at so much Beatrice? …Ah”

Absentmindedly from above Beatrice’s head, Emilia who was peeking at the beyond raised her voice. What she saw in her line of sight, was the figure of a girl in a kimono with light purple hair.

—Anastasia Hoshin. Currently, a person whose flesh is being taken over by a different existence.

Beatrice, on Subaru’s advice, had gone directly to confirm the veracity of what he said. To do that, she had unexpectedly ended up taken to tailing Anastasia, but—

“Beatrice, why were you looking at Anastasia?”

“That’s, ummm, that, in fact. A reason taller than a mountain. deeper than the great waterfall, I suppose.”

“That response, it somehow seems suuuuper subaruish.”

With a hand to her mouth, Emilia snickered lightly. By themselves those were words of praise to Beatrice, but meeting Emilia here complicates things extremely. From the way Subaru spoke of it, it seemed like he didn’t want the situation with Anastasia to spread too much.

In the first place, for the coming journey Anastasia—was to be their guide to the Pleiades watch tower in the Augria dunes, the journey could not occur if she was missing.

It would mean, that in this case, the one in charge of guiding them would not be Anastasia herself, but the artificial spirit.

“…”

Artificial spirit—Beatrice held complicated feelings for even that title.

Of the artificial spirits that were created by the Witch, Echidna, in which Beatrice is included, only 3 exist in this world. The first of which is Puck, and the last is Beatrice.

Which would mean, the one inside of Anastasia, would be the third yet unseen one.

—The last of her kind, of whom her mother Echidna did not talk much about, and even Beatrice didn't know.

Different from Puck for whom she held strong feelings of affection for since birth, strangely, the last of her kind did not elicit any feelings of fellowship or familial bonds from her.

Or perhaps, that may change if she meets them in person—She did not have the courage to confirm.

And Beatrice was having great difficulty coming up with an excuse for that abundance of circumstances. Of course, with Emilia a simple excuse would be easy enough to fool her with, but she didn't really want to.

Fooling an honest, quick-to-believe girl with a lie would tug at her conscience.

"Grrrrr, in fact…"

And so, she was searching for a breakthrough while growling, however—

"—Geez, Beatrice you're so obstinate."

"Eh?"

"Don't frown like that. Y'know, I don't always need to be sheltered. I'm not as unperceptive as Beatrice worries I am."

"Emilia…"

Looking at the fretting Beatrice, Emilia began to say that. While putting a hand to her chest, her bluish purple pupils were staring fixedly at Beatrice who felt shame for herself.

In this year, Emilia who struggled earnestly in pucks absence, had shown Beatrice a growth above what she had hypothesized. Particularly, when she was taken away by an archbishop, and she still didn't give up, and eventually defeated a formidable opponent together with Subaru.

"Bubby's girl, has grown this much, I suppose…"

"Fufu, that's right. Because I am way taller than Beatrice."

"Don't you get carried away, in fact. Betty's looks have just been molded by hand by Mother into a perfect appearance, I suppose. This is my final perfect form, in fact!"

"Alright alright. —So then, should we go?"

And so the smiling Emilia grasped Beatrice's hand. That happening caused Beatrice's eyes to widen in awe, she looked up at Emilia's clasped hand and her smile.

"…Go? Go where, I suppose?"

"Geez, don't be stubborn. We're going to be traveling together to a far away place, and yet you haven't properly talked with Anastasia-san so you're nervous right? I'll come along with you so we gotta go get along with her."

"You absolutely did not understand, in fact!"

It wasn't to the point that you could call it a waste to be moved, though that she misunderstood made Beatrice irritated. However, Emilia tilted her head with a "Is that so?" and,

"So then, why were you looking at Anastasia-san?"

"Urgh, in fact."

Questioned by Emilia's round pupils, Beatrice was once again at a loss for an answer.

She couldn’t come up with a good excuse. That said, she couldn’t decline Subaru’s request. At the edge of that dilemma, Beatrice drooped her shoulders crestfallen.

“A-As expected of Emilia, I suppose… It seems you saw right through Betty’s thoughts, in fact.”

“See, I was right. Don’t worry. Anastasia-san is a suuuper good girl.”

At the innocently smiling Emilia, Beatrice returned a smile with tense cheeks. And then, dragged by her hand, she was taken to Anastasia who she had been tailing.

“…Seriously, every single one of you would be completely useless without Betty, so bothersome, I suppose.”

While anxiously thinking about her future, Beatrice weakly muttered so.

3

After that—

“But really it was quite unexpected. Who woulda thought Beatrice-chan wanted ta get buddy buddy with me. You’re so stuck ta Natsuki-kun after all.”

“The thing is, Subaru also talks about it a lot. How he wants Beatrice to make more friends outside of the mansion. That he wants to see her making mud cakes.”

“Heeh, that sounds nice don’t it. But, ya know that kinda, sounds like a married couple talkin’ about their daughter don’t it.”

Anastasia nodded as if moved by Emilia’s story. The way Emilia went “Married couple?” at that reply that went right over her head, made Subaru’s daily efforts clear.

In contrast, Beatrice who was being treated like a daughter by the two had inscrutable emotions.

“Beatrice, you’ve made yourself so small. Are you perhaps nervous?”

“Nervous? Those words would be the words most unrelated to Betty, in fact. In the first place, in this situation Betty would have no reason at all chu feel nervoush.”

“Ya fumbled a lot there at the end didn’t ya.”

Anastasia gave a wry smile at Beatrice who was hiding behind Emilia while hugging her arm. Looking closely at that smile, Beatrice continued to keep her guard up.

While patting Beatrice’s head, Emilia gave an apology with “I’m sorry”

“She talks a lot more usually, but she has a bit of a shy side…”

“Hmmm, Emilia really does seem like a mother don’t she.”

“Really? Is that so? Fufu, a mother. She says I’m a mother, Beatrice.”

Emilia relaxing her cheeks as she appears happy, Beatrice seeing her reaction breathes a heavy sigh.

If she was going to act like a mother, Beatrice wished she could consider her feelings more. Though, if she did, it would be an injustice to Subaru, so in the end she wished she wouldn’t after all.

And then, while Beatrice was having internal turmoil, Anastasia slowly bent her knees. Then, having met eye height with her she gave her a slight smile.

“—looks like ya spoke with Natsuki-kun, but don’t doubt me that much aight?”

“nurgh, in fact…”

“Personally, I want ta get along with Beatrice-chan. We’re comrades ain’t we.”

Anastasia’s slight roundabout manner of speech, left Beatrice with her mouth gaping open. Emilia was heard giving out a “Comrade?” after that exchange, but she brushed it off with some appropriate words.

Taking in that feeling of being cornered in its entirety, Beatrice once again, put a hand to her brow.

“The future, is worrisome, I suppose…”

And, as she polished her forehead, she looked up to the sky.

END

Julius Juukulius’s Promise Keeping Notebook (Edited Machine Translation)

1

…Forgetting or being forgotten, which one is more miserable?

Even if he pondered intently on this question, it would be meaningless, yet he can’t stop himself from thinking about it. It has been pointed out to Julius by others that he overthinks things too much, but it was a habit deeply rooted in his heart.

This is a habit that gives others a headache. However, while he had thought that he might have gotten over this habit, he was still somewhat grateful that it was not the case.

Even though he himself knows that he is in an extremely unhealthy state, but sure enough…

Anastasia: “…Natsuki-kun, do you recognize any of these children?”

Anastasia stood in the middle of the room and asked after taking an all-round look in the room.

The woman in a kimono asked the black-haired teen, Natsuki Subaru, who was also looking around in the clean and white room. He rested his chin and muttered in a low voice after thinking for a bit.

Subaru: “…No, sorry. Looking around this time, I didn’t see a familiar face.”

Anastasia: “Oh? This child looks like a dogman, not even him?”

Subaru: “I don’t remember how everyone looks, but I don’t think every demihuman is involved with Anastasia-san…probably.”

Anastasia: “…Hmm, that so? Thank you very much.”

Subaru scratched his cheek unconfidently, and Anastasia thanked him. However, this phrase of thanks made Subaru's expression grow even more tangled.

It is natural for him to be confused. After all, there was nothing gained at all right now.

However, persisting like this will definitely yield positive results. …Just like how he was saved by Subaru's memory.

Julius: "…"

Julius held his breath in deep concentration and looked around the room like Anastasia and Subaru.

This is a ward of a treatment hospital, housing a large number of wounded patients. There were only narrow gaps between the beds, and it was no exaggeration to say that the whole room was completely filled with people. However, the patients did not voice discontent. …No, it wasn't just complaints that weren't audible.

Compared with the numerous patients on the hospital beds, the whole room is eerily quiet, so quiet that it made other people's ears feel uncomfortable.

This is not because the patients were sleeping late into the night. The sun was already shining outside their window, and it's nearing the end of the day.

However, the patients in the hospital bed are indeed still asleep.

They were asleep, unable to wake up. This difficult to understand state is due to…

???: ""Sleeping Beauty" caused by the Authority of "Gluttony"…"

Anastasia: "This is a sickness that has been discovered all over the world for many years… I never expected the true cause to be the Witch Cult's doing. Even with the truth out there, it's hard to tie it with good news."

Hearing that unintentional murmur, Anastasia sighed without hiding her resentment.

As she said, the patients in this ward… No, most of the patients accommodated in the entire hospital are victims of the Authority of "Gluttony".

The "Name" belonging to them was taken away by "Gluttony". Moreover, the person whose name got taken away would fall into a deep sleep, and would not be able to regain consciousness, nor would they be able to wake up.

Whether it was calling out loud to them, or reaching out to shake their bodies, they showed no signs of opening their eyes. The disaster that has come to them is not only that.

Anastasia: "The people whose "Names" were stolen are forgotten by those around them… This feels extremely cruel, just thinking about it… Even I have forgotten, absolutely terrifying."

Julius: "…"

Anastasia: "Ah, I'm sorry, Julius-san. I didn't mean to sound… malicious?"

Julius: "…It's okay, I understand."

Anastasia turned around and frowned as she apologized, and Julius shook his head slightly. The moment of hesitation was not because of the pain of his wound, but because he took notice of what she called him.

The last time he was addressed respectfully like an outsider by her was when she first met him.

And this slightly alienated call, as what she said just now, did not contain any malicious intent. Julius knew that in his heart that she was being considerate of him.

However, the helpless reality slammed coldly before his eyes.

Julius: "But, we are not completely helpless. …His existence is ironclad proof."

Julius said to Anastasia, who was still being apologetic and pointed at the teenager standing next to her.

Natsuki Subaru… The only person who is not affected by the Authority of "Gluttony", is standing on a unique vantage point. Only he remembers the people who were plundered by the Authority of "Gluttony".

Therefore, the two of them accompanied him like this, looking around for the people in Priestella who have become "Nameless". In order for the pitiful victims forgotten by everyone and who remain in constant sleep, to not be left behind.

Anastasia: "Although it has caused a lot of trouble to Natsuki-kun, I hope you can understand. No one can do this other than Natsuki-kun…"

Subaru: "I don't find this troublesome at all. There must be people around with the opportunity to be reunited with their family… If only I had seen more people earlier."

Julius: "No one expected it to turn out like this. You have done your best, and there is no need to feel regret about it."

Subaru: "…If you were in my position, would you let it go if you heard that?"

Subaru did not accept this empty platitude and stared at Julius with his black eyes. This gaze made Julius take a short breath, then he slumped his shoulders and sighed.

Julius: "Indeed, this is something I didn't think about. If I was in your position, I wouldn't be able to relax."

Subaru: "Then it's the same for me. Even if I know it's too late to regret it…"

Julius: "…I want to do as much as possible."

In unison with Julius, Subaru nodded vigorously.

Julius truly understood the regret felt in Subaru's heart deeply. … That is the sense of failure, one that he has to grit his teeth and swallow because of his weakness. As long as he was lamenting that this is beyond their ability, they could definitely feel the blood-stained distress felt in Subaru.

However, Julius didn't want to lick each other's wounds like this, so he did not state that deliberately…

Anastasia: "…Okay, let's stop looking so gloomy. We should head to the next ward now."

Unwilling to let the atmosphere become heavier, Anastasia clapped her hands and proposed the next step. Neither Julius nor Subaru had any reason to oppose her, and they obeyed her obediently.

Just when the three people walked out of the silent ward.

???: "…Excuse me! Please give way!"

A young healer dressed in white panicked, leading the men carrying stretchers behind him, and approaching the group standing in the corridor.

Half a day after repelling the Witch Cult, reports of wounded and "Sleeping Beauty" continued to appear throughout the city. Especially for those with "Sleeping Beauty", there is no way for them to call out for help, and as long as people nearby didn't notice, there is no way to easily find them.

Even though the hospital is reaching max capacity, there is still a steady stream of new victims being found.

The person on the stretcher seems to be a newly found victim as well…

Subaru: "Joh…, wait!"

Subaru stepped aside to give way, but when he saw who was on the stretcher passing by, he cried out in surprise. He stopped the stretcher and stared at the person lying on it.

Julius and Anastasia stared at each other because of Subaru's shocked face.

Julius: “Subaru, have you seen him before?”

Subaru: “…”

Asked by Julius, Subaru slowly raised his head. The emotions in his black eyes turned from surprise to anger, and from anger to sadness.

Julius was confused and could not understand the reason for the series of changes in Subaru’s face.

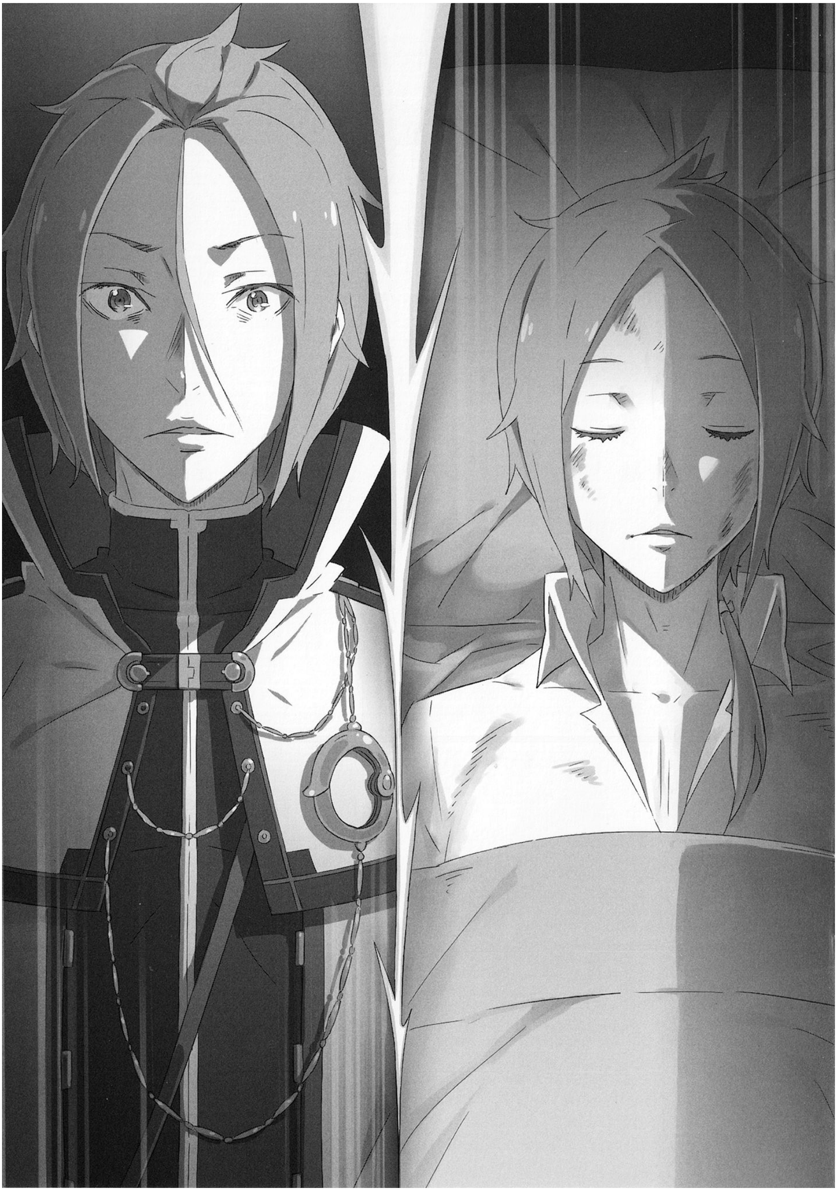
However, the answer was quickly spoken by Subaru himself.

The exact answer is…

Subaru: “This guy is, Joshua. Julius, he is your brother.”

2

…Forgetting or being forgotten, which one is more miserable?



Even if he pondered intently on this question, it would be meaningless, yet he still can't stop himself from comparing the two.

The pain of being forgotten, and the pain of not even knowing that you have forgotten, which one is more miserable?

Julius: "My disgrace, I forgot how strong you were…"

After being smacked in the head by Subaru, Julius smiled bitterly, ruminating the pain.

In fact, when he felt that he was saved, his heart was indeed deeply wounded. …As if he was the most unluckiest person in the world. Even though he did not feel that he had positioned himself to be that way.

Julius: "What is the truth? If that's the case, how funny would I be… For you to be embarrassed by your elder brother making a fuss by your bed, I am truly sorry"

As Julius said that, he bowed his head to the sleeping face of the young man who was lying quietly on the hospital bed… To his younger brother who he had no real attachment for.

Joshua Juukulius. This seemed to be the name of Julius's younger brother. To be honest, this fact caused severe damage to Julius's spirit.

Julius was robbed of his "name" by the Authority of "Gluttony". Although he kept his consciousness, his existence was completely forgotten by those around him. But his memories of those were not and he still has the consciousness of others.

Moreover, the forgotten party was his brother, which was beyond his imagination.

This was too shocking, and Julius's heart was exhausted and sentimentally criticized…

Ricardo: "…What's wrong, got scolded by the little bro?"

Julius: "…It's you, Ricardo."

When Julius laughed at himself, it was Ricardo, the gigantic dogman who accosted him.

He walked silently into the ward and sat side by side with Julius, who was sitting next to his brother's bed. Then, shrugging his nose…

Ricardo: "So that's how it is. He smells like you. It seems that you two are indeed brothers."

Julius: "You can smell it?"

Ricardo: "My nose is not so convenient that I can make a reliable judgment out of thin air. But because you two smell alike, I can only judge that you both have the same blood and ate the same things growing up."

Julius: "No, being able to get such an answer is already good enough…Thank you."

Ricardo's words caused Julius to accumulate a certain sense of camaraderie in his heart.

In Julius, as well as his brother who can't wake up, they had an invisible connection as brothers. Julius wanted to collect these broken shards of glass and convince himself that there was a definite bond between the two.

Ricardo: "This is not a problem that can be solved by collecting pieces to change the quality."

Julius: "…You saw right through me. You treat me…"

Ricardo: "I've forgotten you. Since for me, this is the first time we've met, please take care of me in the future. I was also your age when I met Anastasia, though I've grown to adulthood since then. I can tell you're one of us even though I have no memory of you."

As Ricardo said so, he stretched out his wide palm and placed it on Julius's head.

Julius couldn’t react for a moment, just like that, letting his firm palm rub his head roughly for a bit.

Julius: “…Ricardo, this is?”

Ricardo: “Your head is just about the right height, and your expression is just right for me to do this. In my opinion, the young lady and you are similar brats.”

Julius: “That way of saying it is a bit extreme.”

Ricardo’s rough words made Julius smile wryly, but he didn’t think about waving his hand away.

His head being touched in this way, Julius glanced lightly at Ricardo’s other arm, which was not on his head… That right arm was empty below the elbow.

Because his right arm lacked a portion, Ricardo looked asymmetrical. It was the moment when only Julius himself witnessed the severed arm. …This is an injury he suffered to protect Julius.

Even this sad fact was unnaturally blurred in his memory.

Ricardo: “Stupid boy. Why are you wearing such a face because of something that doesn’t matter? Can’t you think more positively? Even I forgot about my right arm being related to you. Isn’t it lucky?”

Julius: “That would be closer to irresponsibility than positive thinking, right?”

Ricardo: “Really? My arm is my own problem, right? If you want to talk about irresponsibility, in the end, if you think that you were responsible for my arm, then wouldn’t I be the one that’s irresponsible?”

Julius originally intended to tell him that his logic was too extreme, but then it was completely justifiably refuted.

Ricardo smiled boldly at the wide eyed Julius…

Ricardo: “Ghahaha! How about it? This is how an adult fights, scary right?”

Julius: “…You really haven’t changed at all. Even if you lost your arm, even if you don’t remember me, you’re still the same.”

Ricardo: “When people live a long time, naturally they can think like this. The same is true for you. Although it may be a little difficult, it is not good to always be immersed in troubles. After all, Ana-san is entrusted to you.”

Ricardo sharpened his sharp fangs and his eyes were full of seriousness. Bathing in the demihuman’s smileless gaze at close range, Julius nodded vigorously.

Ricardo said this because he knew that Julius was heading to the Pleiades Watchtower with her. It was a journey to borrow the wisdom from the “Sage” in order to save a large number of victims in the city.

The Iron Fang is full of seriously wounded members, they are unable to follow their master, Anastasia, on this dangerous journey.

Therefore-…

Ricardo: “I will never forget the entrustment I just made. You mustn’t forget it as well.”

Julius looked straight back into Ricardo’s eyes and exhaled.

Perhaps this is the first time he has talked with Ricardo seriously and face to face like this. He was always calm and was convinced that he could protect Anastasia.

Now, he has to delegate this responsibility to others. Entrusted to a stranger of a knight who does not exist in his memory.

He must also respond to this sincere wish. …As long as he is still called the “Greatest Knight”.

Julius: “Your trust, I sincerely accept it. Although it is not very pleasant to say comparatively, but…”

Ricardo: “Take care of your brother? We will stay in this city, so you can rest assured.”

Julius: “Hmm, you truly are reliable.”

Even if he didn’t say finish his sentence, the other party can understand the meaning and give a response. Julius savoured this happiness and took out a notebook from his arms.

Ricardo: “…? What is that?”

Julius: “I intend to take notes on the things I have experienced and the words I have talked with… After being stuck in such a situation, I’ve realized for the first time how noble those passing times were.”

Julius answered Ricardo while writing words on the white paper.

It sounds ironic because he has been forgotten, and does not wish to forget any more things. However, if one just stares at the negative side of things, then it’s just like standing still.

He will no longer choose to stop moving, He will no longer suffer from deep distress, He will no longer lament himself. …As early as more than ten years ago, He decided on that.

Julius: “So, well, this is a kind of promise keeping notebook that belongs specifically to me.”

Ricardo: “Aye, this is not a joke?! Seeing you like this, makes me feel like I can relax.”

Seeing the corners of Julius’s mouth raise slightly, with firmness in his words, Ricardo also smiled and rubbed the hand that hadn’t been removed from his head again. Julius let his hair be tossed around by the big hand and lifted the quill in his hand.

He must write down his thoughts of this moment as an unforgettable experience, so that he will not forget it again.

END

Ex 4:
The Great Journeys

Those Remaining in the Watergate City, Priestella: Reconstruction Journal Number Two (Edited Machine Translation)

1

…It was an unexpected request that came to Garfiel.

Garfiel: “You want my amazing self’s help?”

???: “No! That’s right! The famous master of the Vollachian Empire, the Kurgan of “Eight Arms” has been successfully defeated! A man of valor who still devotes himself to the reconstruction of the city! Let’s meet Garfiel Tinsel-sama, the cloud-bearer of the new age who heralds the dawn of a new era! By all means!”

Then she clasped her hands together, bowed her head, and asked for help in a flat-footed posture. Garfiel frowned and touched his sharp canine teeth with his fingers as he thought about it… It’s been ten days since the important events surrounding the Watergate city of Priestella came to an end and Natsuki Subaru and his party left for the Far East. Garfiel, who had stayed behind in Priestella, was helping with the reconstruction and sharpening his sense of smell in order to protect the peace of the city.

Even now, Priestella has many of her residents needing protection, including Otto. If they followed Subaru’s concern, there was no guarantee that the Witch cult would not come back to haunt them. In this sense, Garfiel, while contributing greatly to the city’s heavy lifting, remained vigilant in the shadows to prevent a stronger malice from turning its poisonous fangs on the city again. Nevertheless, contrary to Garfiel’s determination, most of the disturbances that occurred in the city were small, and could be settled by discussion among the city people. There was nothing to complain about. If nothing happens, it’s for the best, that’s what Garfiel thinks.

But on the other hand, if nothing happened to Priestella, Garfiel wanted to accompany Subaru and the others who were tackling a dangerous journey… There was definitely a part of Garfiel that felt that way. As Garfiel was struggling with the anguish of his situation and his own role in it…

???: "…Garfiel-sama"

And the person who looked up at Garfiel dexterously with her head bowed and her hands together… Liliana, the "Diva" of Priestella, had a request for Garfiel. Carrying her beloved instrument, the lyulyre, and encouraging the people of the city with her voice, Liliana is very busy, and is needed throughout the city in a different way than Garfiel. No matter how gloomy the faces of the people, when they hear her songs, they are instantly soothed. Garfiel was impressed by her performance and her solid voice, and he couldn't help but listen to her. When she wasn't singing, however, he was still dismayed at how poorly Liliana handled herself. Anyway, what Liliana brought to him was very welcome to Garfiel, who was searching for his role in this city. Anyway…

Liliana: "The remains of the witch. In order to preserve them, they are enshrined underground in the city. Please, please, please help us, Garfiel-sama! If you could lend it to us, it would be a tremendous help!

Liliana asks for help with a low-key attitude, and Garfiel ruminates on her words. The "Witch's remains" are said to be the remains of a real witch who died in this city hundreds of years ago. It was thought that even the existence of the remains was a myth, but one of the purposes of the witch cult's attack on this city the other day was to take the "Witch's remains". Fortunately, the Witch's remains were not stolen, but their existence and the fact that they were being targeted became clear. It is the foundation of the Watergate city, and if it is taken away, the city will be in danger of being destroyed.

Garfiel: "So I understand why you want to make it safer for everyone. "Abirabi's kneecap" is important for everything, you know."

Liliana: "That's right! That's why I went up to ask for help directly on behalf of Kiritaka-san, who is having a hard time deciding on replacements for the Council of Ten."

Liliana bites her tongue grandly in front of Garfiel, who is convinced of the purpose of the request. While the diva was writhing in agony, Garfiel twisted his neck and said, "But is it okay?".

Garfiel: "The witch's remains are the most important treasure in this town. My amazing self is a stranger mixed up in the handling of such an essential treasure."

Liliana: "Then there's nothing to worry about. Garfiel-sama and the other candidates for the throne have done their best to protect Priestella, and it would be pointless to doubt them now. If you try to hide it and do it within your own family, and it fails and the town goes down, you'll have no face to save!"

Garfiel: "Well, that's a nice, clean story."

Worry is just a hole in the ground when it goes too far. Liliana's answer and Kiritaka's idea of instructing her to do so were both correct. Then, Garfiel's answer was obvious.

Garfiel: "All right. Aside from visiting Otto-Bro, I've been doing little more than cleaning up debris and stuff. I'll do it."

Liliana: "Oh! That's what I'm talking about! Good answer! Thank you very much!"

Garfiel: "So what exactly do you want me to do to help?"

Liliana: "Mmm-hmmm. It is…"

Hearing Liliana's praise of his good form, Garfiel snapped his fangs and asked. In response, Liliana puffed out her nose and gently pointed to the ground. Then, in front of a quizzical Garfiel, she says it proudly.

Liliana: "Underground, in the depths of the canals, in the Great Temple there… it's there that we'll open the way to the "Witch's Remains". It's the beginning of a great adventure!"

Garfiel: "…So this is the entrance to the Great Temple."

Garfiel's green eyes narrowed as he looked at the iron door embedded in the wall at the end of the huge pile of rubble. It was the basement of the city hall, which had collapsed and completely lost its shape. Priestella was a city of water, with waterways running throughout the city, and this scene was supported by the existence of underground canals. Many of the shelters that were used to evacuate the city's residents during the Witch cult's attacks were also built during the construction of these underground canals, indicating that the city had been prepared for flooding from the beginning. In other words, the doors and passageways leading to the depths of this underground canal have also been in place since the city was first built…

???: "According to the literature, this city was built more than 400 years ago… when witches were still rampant throughout the land. However, at that time, the understanding of magic was not as advanced as it is now, and moreover, the building techniques were not yet mature. And yet, this design is marvelous."

"…"

???: "Mmm, what's with the face? Do you not understand the beauty of the design concept of this city? If so, I must say I'm saddened."

And then, behind Garfiel, who was clearing away the debris around the door, there was a terse, logical muttering. When he turned to listen to it, the person who had been muttering raised a shapely eyebrow. It was a small figure… a "Dwarf", even shorter than Garfiel, though Garfiel was not a tall man. The man with long green hair and a black cloak was Ezzo Cadner, one of the people who would accompany them on our journey to the Great Temple. Originally, he was from Felt's camp, one of the candidates for the royal selection. He was not in the Watergate City at the time of the recent incident, but he seems to have come to the city's aid, replacing his master, Felt, and Reinhardt, who had gone to the capital to escort the Sin Archbishop.

Garfiel: “I’m not sure what you can do, though.”

Ezzo: “…Are you sure you don’t want me to take that as a challenge? I’ll tell you what, I, Ezzo Cadner, the “Gray”, try to act like a gentleman all the time, but I don’t want you to think I’m so weak that I can’t smile at an insult.”

Garfiel’s cheeks twisted as he met Ezzo’s gaze, who stared at him with a strong will despite his childish face. Their gazes crossed each other’s, and a sense of urgency built up in the cold underground where the sound of running water dominated. However…

???: “…What’s the matter with ya two, you’re so tense. Get along better, little ones.”

Ezzo: “But”

Garfiel: “Ugh”

And then a slap struck both of them on the head as they stared at each other, and each of the two people who were struck let out a cry of pain. As they stared at their opponents to see what they would do, the vicious dog face opened its big mouth and laughed.

Ezzo: “What are you doing.”

???: “What the hell are you doing? Don’t get mad at me for fighting at work. And don’t bite the little guy’s hand when the kid says something.”

Ezzo: “Gu… you too, if you insult me about my size…”

???: “No mercy, huh? If that’s the case, Sensei, you have to be even more firm. You may be able to make your way to the remains in question, but beyond that, it’s up to you.”

Ezzo: “Mmm, hmm… mmm.”

When he said that, Ezzo fell silent with a difficult frown on his face. The person who can do this to Ezzo is Ricardo Welkin, a huge beast-man who looks down at him. Ricardo is carrying a large machete on his back and scratching his bare chest. Like Ezzo, he too is accompanying them on their journey to the great temple in the underground canals. Of course, Garfiel knew that he could count on him if it got rough. However, there was one element of anxiety that put a crack in that trust. It was…

Garfiel: “It hasn’t been long since you lost one of your arms. Can you keep up like that?”

Ricardo: “Oh, my, you’re worried about me? You have a kind heart, don’t you? Did you use that kindness to fool around with my Mimi, brother?”

Garfiel: “I’m not nice to her, and I don’t even like her!”

When he bit into the mocking remark, Ricardo waved his arm and said, “Just kidding, just kidding.” The waving right arm… from the elbow down was missing, and a metal hook had been attached in its place.

The wound on Ricardo’s right arm was also an honorable injury he received during the recent battle with the witch cult. However, the term “Honorable injury” is no consolation to those who have actually been injured. The fact was that he had lost his arm and could no longer act the way he used to. Garfiel could only imagine how much of a blow it would be for a mercenary, whose profession was to fight for a living, to no longer be able to fight the way he used to. Garfiel was really anxious to accompany him on the journey, not knowing what to expect.

Ricardo: “Brother, That thinking of yours is not anxiety, it’s worry.”

Garfiel: “Because…”

Ricardo: “Idiot, I’m not kidding. I mean it. I mean it.”

When Garfiel tried to argue with him, Ricardo dared to block his mouth with the hook of his right hand. The dull, rugged metal was no less fierce than his strong arm. In other words, he claims he can fight.

“…”

Garfiel fell silent as he realized his intentions. In fact, no matter what Garfiel said, it was only an outside opinion. If Ricardo himself insists that he can fight without being dragged down by the loss of his arm, that is all that matters. Ricardo has been a mercenary for a long time, and he knows what he is capable of.

Ezzo: "…I was absent from the city at the time of the recent battle. So, I will defer to both of you on this occasion."

Then Ezzo, who had absorbed the conversation that had just taken place, nodded calmly to him. Seeing his attitude, Ricardo's smile deepened, saying, "Please, Sensei."

Ezzo: "I'm not used to being called "Sensei," but I'll get used to it. More importantly, if you're worried about Ricardo-dono's arm, don't you have another problem to worry about?"

Ricardo: "Ah, well, that's right. That's a bigger problem."

Short arms and thick arms, Ezzo and Ricardo, each with their arms crossed, made the statement. Under their gazes, Garfiel looked at the pile of rubble that had been moved with a sigh. Then, there was a girl sitting on the rubble, playing with the strings of her tools of trade in a single-minded effort.

Liliana: "I'm filled with energy! I can feel my imagination and creativity fluttering inside me. I have a feeling that a mysterious, special, money-scented excitement awaits me ahead! Listen to me… Hold me! Great Temple."

Garfiel: "Shut the hell up."

"Huh?"

Liliana was about to get excited and start playing her lyulyre when Garfiel walked up to her and flicked her forehead with his finger. Liliana recoiled from the blow and turned her teary eyes in protest to Garfiel.

Liliana: "What, what, what, what are you doing? Sudden violence! That's violence!"

Garfiel: “You haven’t changed at all, have you? You’re not really going to follow me, are you… Diva-san?”

Liliana: “No! Of course not! A great temple that exists beneath the city! The importance of it, and the expectations and fears of the legend, there’s no choice but to go!”

Waving her hands, neck and feet dexterously from side to side, Liliana pleaded for desperate accompaniment. Garfiel looked at the two behind him for help with her attitude, but Ricardo and Ezzo shrugged their shoulders. Garfiel sighs as he realizes that he is alone. Anyway…

Garfiel: “My amazing self, Ricardo, the little wizard, and the diva… that’s the group that is going to face the underground, right?”

Ricardo: “I can’t believe I’m saying this, but I feel like we’ve got a lot of colors…”

Ezzo: But Garfiel-dono and Ricardo-dono are in the vanguard, I’m in the back as a wizard, and Miss Liliana is in the… back, and Miss Liliana is the chronicler? If you think about it, we’re not a bad force.”

Liliana: “Yes, leave it to me! I’m going to feel your activities with my eyes, ears, nose, and my whole body, and I’m going to make it into a poem that will be sung for generations to come!”

Garfiel stroked his fangs at the impetus of Liliana’s coughing, slapping her thin chest forcefully. To be honest, Garfiel was uneasy about taking someone who is not equipped to deal with the situation underground, where you never know what might happen. However, the fact that Liliana would be accompanying them as a representative of the city was a natural outcome considering that what lay ahead was Priestella’s most important secret. Also, Liliana’s declaration that she would write a song about them had an irresistible appeal to Garfiel, who adored heroic tales and biographical literature.

Ricardo: “Well, you don’t have to worry about that. Even though it had been closed for a long time, it was still in the basement of a city where many people live. It’s not like some villain’s hideout deep in the mountains.”

Ezzo: “I agree with you. I’m probably the only one who has a job. The witch’s remains… if true, could be considered a catalyst of tremendous power and value. Considering the impact on the city’s water quality and geology, it’s really a challenging task.”

Ricardo and Ezzo also expressed their own views on this task. At the moment, neither of them seemed to have any intention of turning Liliana away, and Garfiel’s mind was made up.

Garfiel: “All right. Let’s go. The captains are still working hard. Let’s get some work done so our amazing self’s don’t get laughed at by the returning captains.”

Liliana: “No! That’s the spirit! That’s the spirit! Let’s get out there!”

Liliana called out, and Garfiel pushed open the closed iron door. The door opened with a rather vigorous creaking sound, and the four were greeted by a passage leading to the great underground temple. And just when Garfiel thought the dusty air was blowing in from the back of the passage…

Garfiel: “Huh…?”

…The four of them were sucked headlong into the darkness beneath their feet, leaving a stupid voice in their wake.

To Be Continued

Beatrice's Everyone is Bothersome, I Suppose!

1

"Beatrice, could you tell me everything that happened in Priestella?"

And so, having readied tea and sweets in her private room she broke the ice with that. "So it indeed came to this" saying that Beatrice made a twisted face.

In front of Beatrice's twisted face, sat Petra holding a tea cup with a serious face.

This is her personal room in the mansion where, tonight, Beatrice had been invited to Petra's room for the purpose of a sleepover. Usually, at night she sleeps together with Subaru more often than not, however occasionally when she's invited by Petra or Emilia, she has changed the bed she sleeps on.

This time, Beatrice had been back at the Roswaal estate for a month, and so she couldn't find a real reason to decline Petra's slightly overbearing invitation. But somehow or other, she had a feeling that as a reward for their hard work in their journey they'd absolutely have to sleep together, and she was right on the mark.

"Beatrice?"

"…It's nothing, in fact. It was quite hasty of you, I suppose."

"I mean, we've been apart for a month. This much should be normal."

Turning her face away in a huff, Petra brings her own tea to her lips. Seeing the young girl's lovable jealousy, Beatrice's small lips break out into a smile, and she as well brings some tea to her lips.

She moistens her tongue, and notices how fragrant the taste is. Her skills have gotten better once again.

"In just a simple month, you've done well to change just this much, in fact."

Grumbling so, Beatrice was moved.

A single month, from all the time that Beatrice has lived through, was miniscule. To Beatrice who had spent most of that time in wasteful idle, a human's growth was remarkable. She felt that especially when in close proximity to Subaru and Petra's persistence.

"Well, Petra, I will repay you for brewing such delicious tea, I suppose. So then? What did you say you wanted to hear, in fact?"

"Alright! Then, tell me about Priestella. From the start, and then what happened after. I did hear that Mr. Otto and Mr. Garf had it rough but…"

"—I see, I suppose. Subaru is, really quick to try to hide his own troubles, in fact"

Having guessed the source of Petra's worries, Beatrice also agreed.

After the havoc in Priestella, Beatrice and the others were in the middle of their journey to the Augria dunes at the easternmost edge of Lugunica to visit the Sage seeking a solution to their problems. On the way, having returned to the Roswaal estate they gave them a letter—In there, the details of Priestella were not outlined.

Of course, Subaru wouldn't be so stupidly honest as to write everything that happened himself and worry Petra and the others. It was because she knew that, that she was worried.

Unsaid and unheard it goes unknown. And should Subaru want it that way, no matter what absurd, impossible, reckless actions he'd take Beatrice wouldn't know. That's why she treasures Subaru, he needs to know how important he is to the people he treasures.

Because she understands that feeling, Beatrice relentlessly, spilled everything about the events in Priestella. What happened to Subaru, how much he did for the sake of that city, and how he overexerted himself.

And, while listening to the stories, Petra who had turned pale and red as she swung from joy to sorrow said this in the end.

“Ok. And then, what happened to Beatrice?”

“…Betty?”

“That’s right? I mean, I know Subaru had it really rough but… If Beatrice was with him, he should’ve worked harder to reunite with her right? But even then, Beatrice never came up, I was just wondering what happened?”

“Th-That’s…”

“Mhmm, that’s?”

Having that interjection right at the end of her well told story, Beatrice was lost for words. Meanwhile, Petra’s wide eyes caught onto Beatrice, keeping her from escaping that question she just posed.

Petra’s questioning was a rude awakening to Beatrice of her own cowardice, which she reflected on.

In reality, Beatrice believed her own work in Priestella to be worth 0 points. She couldn’t be by her partner Subaru’s side at a crucial time, Emilia and Otto, and Garfiel’s family too had been all thrown into danger. So, it was a matter of course that Petra would criticize her for it, and though she had resigned herself to that so she intended to accept all her anger—

“C’mon! That’s not it! I’m not angry at what Beatrice did, it’s because of Subaru who forced Beatrice to do the absurd even after you got together!”

Being rebuked by the red faced Petra, Beatrice’s round eyes blinked in surprise. Then, Petra gave a great sigh at Beatrice who was making a face like she didn’t understand what was said to her.

“You know, Beatrice …Using a lot of magic and falling asleep for a long time… Fighting a really dangerous person together with Otto… From those, it wasn’t just Subaru who had it rough, but Beatrice too… I’m also worried.”

“Worried, you mean for Betty, I suppose?”

“That’s what I’ve been saying! Beatrice, you have no self-awareness!”

Being told something unexpected、Beatrice was pointing at herself while Petra was indignant at her. She shook her auburn hair, puffed her cheeks and glared at Beatrice,

“Lately, Beatrice is just like Subaru. I understand you wanting to imitate him since you’re always with him, but imitating Subaru is dangerous! You know that right?”

“Th-, that jab came from a completely unexpected angle, in fact…”

Having intended to sympathize with her regarding Subaru’s bad habits, Beatrice was aghast having had that cross over to worrying about herself. And at the same time, It was the truth that she considered it embarrassing that Petra’s worry was directed at her. But, beyond that、

“Petra…Betty is worried that if you keep worrying about everything around you, you’ll be too exhausted to properly sleep, I suppose.”

“Then stop making me worry! Geez! C’mon, come over here! Let’s sleep together! Don’t leave my side tonight!”

“G-Got it, in fact…”

Petra’s passion exploded, Beatrice did as she was told while being overpowered. They cleaned the tea up, ate the snacks, and having finished brushing their teeth she headed to bed with Petra.

While wrapped up together in the sheet, Petra held the hand of Beatrice who was laying on her side. Glancing at her, she gave a coy “Ehehe.”

"Beatrice's hand, it's so small and cute."

"…Alright then, don't you get too full of yourself just because you grew a little in this one month, I suppose. If you're going to tease me like this, then I won't sleep with you anymore, in fact."

"Ah, don't say that. But, I can't help the fact that I'm growing. Because I too, will grow big and pretty, like Big sis Frederica and Big sis Emilia."The drowsy Petra, who was lowering her voice. The fact that she didn't include Ram in her envisioning of the future, Beatrice didn't interject with the many reasons that could be for.

In any case—

"Geez Petra, you're such a worrywart, I suppose."

"I think Beatrice also has that side to her."

And so, exchanging smiles within the same bed, the girls fell to a slumber.

2

"…"

Night, Beatrice having remembered the dryness in her throat, quietly slips from the beddings, and exits the room.

Within the dark halls of the mansion, Beatrice touches her own pale throat, as she walks stepping on the rug, even she herself thought it odd that she remembered her throat was dry.

Beatrice is a spirit, one who needs neither food, nor drink. Of course, It's not that she could not break down what she ingests, then store it as mana, but it was awfully ineffective, and compared to the mana she collected from her contractor, it really was no more than an insignificant amount.

That's why, remembering this dryness in her throat, is simply a habit she has acquired.

She had been staying at this mansion with Subaru and the others, continuing life eating meals and drinking tea like it was obvious, having acted like a regular human, it has turned into a habit for her.

"—Oh my, is that Miss Beatrice?"

While holding onto that feeling, a voice called out to Beatrice who had stepped into the kitchen. Beatrice's eyebrows twitched up at the figure of this unintended previous visitor.

At the back of the tidy, well kept kitchen, the one who turned around was the maid with long blonde hair Frederica. She was out of her usual maidservant clothing, she stood there, a nightgown wrapped around her graceful figure.

"Frederica…It's not good to be up so late, in fact. You'll stunt your growth, I suppose."

"You need not worry on that front. For in my case, I don't wish for any further height… Rather, I even think I'd like to try shrinking a little, there are all kinds of people…"

"—?"

At Beatrice who was still ruminating on the exchange she had with Petra a few minutes ago, Frederica tilted her neck with a question mark over her . So she responded"Nevermind, I suppose"to her、

"Betty's throat was parched, in fact. I'll be taking, one glass of water, I suppose."

"Ah… In that case, would you like to accompany me, Miss Beatrice?"

Saying that, Frederica pointed out the existence of a pot placed atop the kitchen fire. A bubbling noise coming from the boiling contents of the pot, made a slightly warm and sweet fragrance waft around.

"What is that?"

"It's boiled Styroberry, dissolving this into tea makes a very sweet drink. This is something I learned from Master Subaru. It is called Roshan tee."

"Hee, Subaru did."

In front of Beatrice who was impressed, Frederica was briskly preparing their shares of tea. Slowly she lowered a spoonful of the Styroberry boiled in the pot, into the tea.

"Here, have some, Miss Beatrice. It is quite sweet and delicious."

"Since you've gone to such lengths, I will have some, in fact. But still…"

"—?"

"I heard from Petra, I suppose. That Frederica occasionally, ate sweet things in secret… I'm a little moved that I came across that right away, in fact."

"L-Miss Beatrice…!"

Cheeks turning red, Frederica got embarrassed at what Beatrice had pointed out. Her cheeks loosening at that response, Beatrice mouthed out "Roshan tee". Atop her tongue, the soft boiled jamew dissolved lightly, tasting that her gaze slackened absentmindedly.

"Certainly, it's delicious, I suppose… as expected of Subaru's selection, in fact."

"Yes, truly. Subaru is quite knowledgeable, I've also been surprised to no end…that said however, I try to be careful not to make it too sweet."

Similarly Frederica, while she had her mouth to the tea, grumbled while agreeing with Beatrice. That somewhat earnest surprise, made Beatrice narrow her eyes.

Frederica gripped the cup with the slender fingers of her hands. When out of her maidservant clothing, her usual air of a can do, graceful maid was toned down, she looked slightly unreliable, and wrapped by anxiety.

“I have heard what happened to Garf and Sir Otto. The events at the watergate city, how horrible they must have been, I can imagine a part of that, especially because of that, I think.”

“Imagine what, I suppose.”

“How much peril Lady Emilia and Master Subaru, must have been in”

Lowering the tone of her voice, Frederica met her gaze with Beatrice’s. Her beautiful verdant eyes, they were just like the eyes of her brother Garfiel. And so, when Beatrice was looked at by those same eyes as Garfiel’s, she expressed an honest sentiment.

Beatrice was weak, to those eyes. Those sincere eyes made Beatrice’s nature suffer. That her following words correspond to that, Beatrice could imagine so with ease.

“As far as I have known, Garf was built sturdier than a castle. While Otto’s astuteness could not be treated as that of a common man’s. That is why, that both of them would suffer such great injuries that they were rendered immobile, is evidence of how important that was”“…Well, Betty has no objection in fact”

“Having settled matters, you immediately rush to solve the next issue without break… What’s more, your next objective is that questionable land, Auguria Dunes. —Your hardships, are quite easy to foresee.”

“…”

“That is why, Miss Beatrice. I once again ask that you take care of those two”

While saying so, Frederica lowered her head deeply. Shutting her eyes at her bow, Beatrice breathed a sweet, warm sigh.

Frederica’s concerns likely echoed the mansion’s—Nay, the entire populace of the city of Priestella’s feelings as well. Subaru and Emilia, and Anastasia and Julius who are accompanying them as well. The bravery of overcoming the fierce fight at the Watergate city, then immediately jumping onto the next issue, while it was reliable, it also felt horribly dangerous. Somebody has to watch for that.

In that regard, Beatrice must indeed display the wisdom that comes with her age.

"—And also, Miss Beatrice, please take care of yourself as well"

"Myu-"

When she was resolving herself to do it, that one extra sentence struck her by surprise.

Beatrice who was stirring the tea with a long breath, became flustered and returned her gaze to Frederica. So, she engaged those serene verdant eyes. She was weak to those eyes. It was just like she said it was.

"Y-You're… that's cowardly, I suppose."

"Well. I'm worrying for you, Miss Beatrice, and you're calling me cowardly…"

"That's, that's now how I meant it, in fact… not how I meant-"

Her words of resistance losing all strength to them, Frederica crooked her neck at Beatrice's feebleness. Simply, That attitude of hers made Beatrice sorrowful. —It was those, straightforward eyes she was weak to.

"Don't make the same eyes, as Ryuzu, I suppose…"

A long time ago, there was a young girl who gazed at Beatrice with the same earnest eyes, and made of her a straightforward plea. That was to Beatrice, the reminder of the one repayment she regrets being unable to do for her first unforgettable friend. That is why that same plea, Beatrice could not turn down.

And besides, wasn't Frederica's concern, in the same vein as Petra's?

"…If that's case, you're the same vein of human that thinks Betty is in danger, in fact.”

“No, not at all. Simply, I believe you will be put into the danger with Master Subaru, and Lady Emilia getting involved as well will not be much remedy, is all.”

“That is the same, I suppose!”

At Beatrice’s rebuttal, Frederica placed her hand atop her mouth, and laughed elegantly. Turning her face away from that smile of hers, Beatrice put the sweet tea to her lips, and sated her thirst.

While sating, she ruminates over, Petra’s, and Frederica’s words each, and sighs sweetly, “…Geez, Everyone is so bothersome, I suppose”

Subaru, Emilia, and Beatrice herself too in there, the people she has to look over are too many.

END

Julius Juukulius’s Promise Keeping Notebook II (Edited Machine Translation)

…After the battle in the Watergate City of Priestella ended, several days have passed since their departure from the Watergate City.

Driving the dragon carriage, Natsuki Subaru and his party’s goal is to head to the Augria Sand Dunes, which is located at the easternmost edge of the Kingdom of Lugunica. Their objective is to borrow wisdom from the "Sage”.

As the aftermath and effect of the fierce battle still remains, the journey will be correspondingly long. Of course, there may be various problems on the road ahead, but for the time being, the most urgent problem at hand is.

That is…

Julius: “…Anastasia-sama, please come this way. There are steps there.”

Anastasia: “…Hmm, thank you. I’m saved.”

Julius: “…Anastasia-sama, are you tired? I’m going to prepare some tea now.”

Anastasia: “Ah, really? I’m just about thirsty. How intimate.”

Julius: “…Anastasia-sama, it is a little windy, please walk behind me.”

Anastasia: “Ah, you’ve really been watching out for me, I’m really sorry.”

From anywhere, you can see the figures of Anastasia and Julius, who are in a state of constantly talking no matter what they’re doing. Subaru squinted his brown eyes, and stared at them with a complicated expression.

From the current situation, the communication between the master and servant seems very smooth, and there aren't any particularly large problems. Although they weren't explicit, various ideas were intertwined behind their conversation.

Emilia: "Anastasia-san and Julius-san are already so close. It's great."

Saying that, Emilia looked at them along with Subaru and smiled. Of course, the reason why she had such a reaction was that some complex circumstances hadn't been disclosed to her. However, as far as Emilia is concerned, even if the truth was told to her, she would react in the exact same way.

Subaru: "Hmm, this aspect is also very E·M·T… Thank you for being born."

Emilia: "Hm? Subaru, did you just say something?"

Subaru: "No, I am just very grateful for the fact that the being known as Emilia-tan exists and is breathing here, and calling my name. I am really moved."

Emilia: "Sorry, I don't quite understand what you're trying to say."

Although she frowned inadvertently, these were Subaru's candid words. In any case, let's not talk about Subaru's numerous attempts at flirting every day. From Subaru's point of view, the dialogue between Anastasia and Julius is really disturbing.

As if perceiving Subaru's inner thoughts…

Anastasia: "…"

For a moment, Anastasia's eyes met Subaru's and she gently waved to him. After seeing that gesture, Subaru pulled his chin, coughed and said…

Subaru: "Emilia-tan, although it's a little sudden, can you call Julius over there to you?"

Emilia: "Huh? I can, but, what should I do?"

Subaru: “That guy, doesn’t he often frown and stiffens his face? If this continues, sooner or later, he will have permanent wrinkles, so I want Emilia-tan to clear them all with her hands.”

Emilia: “Julius has that many wrinkles between his eyebrows…? Well, I understand. If there are permanent wrinkles on someone’s face, it would be troublesome. I will try my best.”

After listening to Subaru’s request, Emilia walked towards Julius with an energetic expression. Subaru looked at her reliable back and winked at Anastasia.

After pulling her away from Emilia and Julius…

Anastasia: “Natsuki-kun… Julius is far too intimate.”

Anastasia’s previously soft expression and comfortable Kararagi tone disappeared, then she softly complained with a serious expression.

If this was the usual Anastasia, she would never have such an accent and attitude. This is a matter of course, because she is both Anastasia and not Anastasia. Strictly speaking, although the physical body belongs to Anastasia, its interior is inhabited by another existence.

That existence is called "Echidna". The same name as the wicked witch known to Subaru, but she denies having a wicked personality and claims that she is a kind-hearted artificial spirit.

This spirit has borrowed Anastasia’s body and was acting as a kind of accomplice with Subaru. They mainly share a relationship of sharing this secret.

Anastasia: “But, the ill-effects of this situation have been transferred to me so quickly…”

Subaru: “You say that as if it’s someone else’s business. This situation is not good for you. In order to avoid unnecessary confusion and suspicion, you and I have established a secret relationship.”

Anastasia: “Can you think about the way you phrased that? It sounds too suspicious.”

Subaru: “Oh, sorry, I will be careful.”

Anastasia lowered her voice while reverting to her original way of speaking. However, Echidna’s attitude always gets on Subaru’s nerves this way. If her wish for Subaru to believe that she has nothing to do with that devil comes true, then his attitude would change.

Anastasia: “Even if you say that, I don’t know anything about the creator that you’re speaking of. If we are like that, the foundation of my individuality will be shaken.”

Subaru: “Although your words were exaggerated, even your foundation is really shaky. Can’t you get along with Julius more naturally? It’s creepy to watch.”

Anastasia: “Isn’t it impossible? I’m also trying to recall everything I can about Ana, paying special attention to her etiquette… But I still don’t know how to get along with Julius.”

Facing Echidna, who lowered her head to argue, Subaru scratched his head.

Indeed, as she said, the current situation is very complicated. Affected by the authority of "Gluttony", one of the Sin Archbishops of the Witch Cult, Julius’s "name" disappeared from this world. As a result, Julius, like Rem, was in the state of being forgotten by everyone.

Now the only ones that can remember Julius in the whole world are probably Julius himself and the foreign entity of this world, Subaru. Therefore, it was difficult for Echidna to decide what kind of attitude she should treat Julius with.

Subaru: “If he knew you were in Anastasia-san’s body, I doubt he’d have the confidence to convince himself…”

Anastasia: “I also want to avoid injuring Ana’s body unnecessarily. However, I don’t know Julius’s flaws. This is where I have expectations of you."

Subaru: "…You, aren't you actually enjoying this?"

Anastasia: "Of course not? I'm serious, very serious, very very serious. It's really quite a pity to be suspected."

The more one argues, the more suspicious they seem, it's because the other party is Echidna. Without receiving a decent answer, Subaru sighed loudly.

Subaru: "I know, I know. First off, I will take a good look at the matter between you and Julius. Anyway, I will tell Julius after a while…"

Anastasia: "I'm sorry. But I can only rely on you."

Subaru: "You really are Echidna and not Echidna, right?"

Anastasia: "Your contempt towards my creator is really serious!"

Tolerating his casual doubts to her limit, Echidna raised her voice. To Subaru, that kind of emotional response feels very unlikely for the witch who doesn't understand the human heart, so he can dispel his doubts for the time being.

Then, under the weight of Echidna's gaze and expectations, Subaru turned over to the problematic Julius and called him over. From Julius's perspective, because he shouldn't remember ever being called like this, their conversation will be a little unreasonable, but how well Subaru can speak depends on the following question.

Subaru: "Hey, Julius, I have something to say…"

Julius: "Hmm? Subaru? Can you tell Emilia-sama to stop worrying about my face…?"

Julius, who said this, asked him for help with a troubled expression. In front of Julius, Emilia is wearing an expression filled with determination and is trying to get closer to Julius. Julius stopped her advances, and the two held hands, as if they were dancing.

Emilia: “Please don’t be shy, Julius. I won’t do anything bad! I just want to rub away the wrinkles between your eyebrows!”

Julius: “No, Emilia-sama, why on earth would you want to do something like that… Hey, Subaru, you tell Emilia-sama to stop too.”

Subaru: “You! Julius, you bastard! Why are you dancing with my Emilia-tan!”

Julius: “I am the one that doesn’t want to dance, isn’t your anger unreasonable?!”

Hearing Julius’s troubled words, Subaru quickly squeezed between the two. In place of Julius, Subaru took up Emilia’s hands.

Subaru: “Emilia-tan, calm down. Just leave Julius to me… Wow, your hands are so small! Your fingers are so thin! So cute!”

Emilia: “Ah, eh? But, Subaru said between Julius’s eyebrows…”

Subaru: “Ah, that was a mistake. Take care of Anastasia-san for me. She seems a little tired. Help her relax her shoulders.”

Emilia: “…Is this really all right? How should I put it… Subaru, are you hiding something?”

Subaru: “Exposed?! Actually…, I really like Emilia-tan?”

Emilia: “That…, that I know. I know it well… Subaru is truly a dunderhead.”

Emilia’s face flushed slightly, she turned her head and left in a hurry. She will probably run to Echidna’s side. After entrusting Echidna to her, Subaru breathed a sigh of relief.

Subaru: “Fuu, I kind of passed the round by misleading her…”

Julius: “You truly did your very best. And, although I know how you think, to think that you can confess so effortlessly…”

Subaru: “What’s the matter, is it unexpected? You think I don’t know my place again, right?”

Julius: “No, I admire it. I can say that this is respectable. You truly are outstanding.”

He commented this way with a serious expression, and Subaru’ mouth puckered as he said nothing.

After being praised by him, instead of being happy, he felt very uncomfortable. Probably because Julius can truly understand the meaning of his confession better than Emilia.

Subaru: “Ah, forget about my passion for Emilia-tan. I have something else to say.”

Julius: “If it’s the matter of Emilia-sama just now, it seems that the cause was you…”

Subaru: “You’re annoying, don’t always just stick to the past. The most important thing is the present and the future… Uh, sorry, I didn’t mean that just now.”

Stabbing at his sore spot, he apologized for what he couldn’t help but blurt out. In response, Julius frowned his handsome eyebrows, while shrugging his slender shoulders.

Julius: “No. Actually, I think you are right. Even if I recall the past, I can’t get back what I lost. I can’t just stop walking just to get back to the things I want.”

Subaru: “…Well, if you can think of it so positively, I won’t say much. I am trying my best to not tell you, but I still have something that I noticed.”

Julius: “What is it that you noticed?”

Julius narrowed his yellow eyes and urged Subaru to speak. Just now, Subaru just chose the wrong wording. He chose his next words carefully while saying:

Subaru: “That is the sense of distance from Anastasia-san. I know that you and Anastasia-san have a master-servant relationship, and Anastasia-san also knows this information.”

Julius: “…Sure enough, did it seem unnatural to your eyes as well?”

Under Subaru’s accusation, Julius took the lead as he knew it. Facing this answer, Subaru frowned, but he quickly changed his way of thinking.

This is the relationship between Julius and Anastasia. In this case, although the other party is Echidna it is impossible for him to not notice the trouble in her heart. Even if he is in a difficult situation, Julius will not change the quality of how much he cares about her.

Subaru: “If you understand, then I didn’t have to say it. Your relationship with Anastasia-san needs to be rebuilt. When the foundation will be unstable, if you build strenuous blocks atop of it…”

Julius: “A collapse is inevitable. …I understand your opinion, Subaru.”

Subaru: “So…”

Julius: “However, for me, there is indeed a path I have travelled. Even if it disappeared briefly, only a part of it is in me and you.”

Speaking in a calm voice, Julius, who seems to be reexamining himself, weaved words. Savoring the color of grief contained in his echo, Subaru could not continue and say the second sentence.

Subaru thought about Echidna. Given the situation between her and Anastasia, his priority was not to create unnecessary confusion among the group. Although the result of this behaviour is forcing Julius unreasonably. To Subaru, this is far too unreasonable.

Julius is also fighting a lonely battle that no one else knows about and is in a state of being injured.

And Subaru who knows his situation very well, if he forgets to be considerate for him, then who else will actually remember the fact that the existence known as Julius Juukulius certainly existed.

Julius: “If it makes Anastasia-sama feel troubled, it is due to my incompetence as a knight. But even if the people around me forget how they used to treat me, I will remember how I treat the people around me. I thought… I won’t lie about this feeling.”

Subaru: “…Even if it turns out to be blunt?”

Julius: “Even if the result of the behaviour appears to be blunt… I respect Anastasia-sama, have pledged my allegiance to her, and believe that I have established an amicable relationship with Ricardo and Mimi. I am reluctant to let go and turn a blind eye to all this… Is this greed?”

From his attitude towards this question, Subaru could feel Julius’s honest thoughts.

If Subaru calls it "greed" to Julius here and makes him pay attention to his behaviour, Subaru thinks that he will probably accept it sincerely, and choose to leave after careful consideration.

Concern about one’s surroundings and restraining oneself. Moreover, what is the correct way of existence for a knight to serve his master to the best he can?

And so…

Subaru: “…No, it’s not greed. Of course you can want more.”

Julius: “…Is this true?”

Subaru: “Of course. You are right. Why do you have to listen to the words of someone who is inexplicable and accept the loss you don’t want to. That’s unreasonable.”

Facing Julius’s question, Subaru finally decided to answer with his own feelings. Hearing these words, Julius opened his eyes slightly, then nodded deeply. Then…

Julius: “If you say that to me, I would think so too. …This is my wish.”

Subaru: “I feel like you’re trying to put the responsibility on me? I am not responsible for your memory.”

Julius: “I don’t want to hold you accountable. It’s just that I want to remember what happened today.”

Julius said this while writing smoothly on the notebook he took out from his pocket. That thing is a "notebook" that Julius uses to record various things recently.

Subaru: “I heard that you are writing a notebook. It feels strange. What did you write?”

Julius: “Indeed… Your appearance frequency is quite high for the time being.”

Subaru: “You’re not the kind of person who would describe a roast book as a notebook or something like that, are you?!”

Julius smiled faintly, and did not respond to Subaru’s cry, and jotted down in his notebook. Seeing his somewhat happy look, Subaru stopped scratching his cheeks in protest and sighed.

Although he feels sorry for Echidna, it’s best to let her suffer a little. …Subaru will also work hard.

END

Volume 22

Chapter 19-33

Chapter 19:
Whereabouts of the Sage

1

At the unforeseen fight against heavy odds, spread out were the winds of the aftermath of the battle at the sixth floor of the Pleiades Watchtower.

An enshrouding cloud of dust, the man and woman grappling with each other were covered in sweat and mud.

And, looking at those two with cold eyes, from every other direction—.

Subaru: "What's with that look in your eyes?! You're saying that I've… That I've done something wrong?! I've done nothing wrong, I've done nothing wrong—!!"

Julius: "Subaru, don't try to fool us so much."

Ram: "There are some good sides to him is what Ram thought, but in the end, Barusu is Barusu."

Those were the comments made by the newly-arrived Julius and Ram in regards to Subaru, who had been grabbed by Shaula.

Regardless,

Julius: "We were fortunate to be able to reunite safe and sound. It's also good news that you woke up, but… the situation is difficult to comprehend unless you explain it with words."

Subaru: "I would if it was something I could explain… shit! Let go!"

Shaula: "No~pe~!"

Seeing Shaula clinging to Subaru's arms, Julius, whose hand was at the grip of his sword, shrugged his shoulders. He must have perceived that she didn't have any intentions of attacking them.

Even Subaru understood that point, but it was true that he was having a hard time trying to get her away.

Subaru: “Don’t just watch, help me get her off…! She has goddamn super-human strength…”

Ram: “Your lips are curving into a smile, Pervusu.”

Subaru: “They’re not, don’t team up with her! Don’t take it at face value! Emilia-tan, that hurts! I don’t think it’ll be too much of a help if you pull my hair?!”

Emilia: “Ah, I’m sorry. I wasn’t trying to help you, at all.”

Subaru: “You’re apologizing for that?!”

The stubborn Shaula did not let go of Subaru’s arm, and Emilia, with a somewhat blank expression, continued pulling Subaru’s hair. Aside from that, Beatrice, who got trapped between the jostling Subaru and Shaula, was turning her eyes in all directions, in a state of being crushed, saying “Kiyyuu”.

Anastasia: “What’s this… Even after all that trouble, seems it’s all been changin’ into a pretty good mood.”

Meili: “What’s onii-san doing just after waking u~p? I don’t do well with noisiness, but I’m gla~d onii-san woke up.”

Having slowly come down the stairs, Anastasia and Meili had also joined up with them. With this, all except Rem and Patrasche, who were supposed to be undergoing their treatment, had gathered here.

It was all well and good that they’d been able to reunite, but at this rate they wouldn’t be able to calm down and have a proper conversation.

Subaru: “A-ny-way! Everyone, calm down!—Let’s talk!”

2

Overworking his throat after just waking up, Subaru managed to get everyone to follow his lead, as he tried to take control of the situation.

With that being said, within the group sitting in a circle, Shaula kept latching onto Subaru's right arm, and on his left was Emilia, sitting seiza style, at a distance enough to make him shiver. And Beatrice was settled on his lap; it would be an extremely extravagant battle formation in the eyes of an outsider.

Ram: "Repulsive."

Subaru: "Did you even see the disaster a minute ago? Does it look to you that I wanted this to happen to my right side? My bones hurt real bad. At this rate, my arm's gonna necrotize."

Saying that to Ram, who'd spat those words out, Subaru looked at his constricted right arm.

Being hugged by a half-naked girl, would be a dream-like experience for many, but in reality, rather than experiencing the softness of her skin, the flesh of his arm that had been squeezed and the pain of his joints that went to the limits had a scary effect on his bones and nerves. Frankly speaking, they could have been torn off.

Subaru: "Well then, before my arm gets torn off from its roots I would like to proceed with the conversation, but… before that, first of all, everyone, thank goodness you're all alright. Though it's scary that Patrasche and Rem are unconfirmed…"

Beatrice: "You're still being doubtful, I suppose. It's alright, in fact. Everyone is alright, I suppose."

Julius: "It is just as Beatrice-sama says, though your uneasiness and concern are justified. You can properly visit them afterwards. —As you'd expect, this time we were all scared to death."

Beatrice and Julius nodded at Subaru, who was delighted at their reunion.

Julius, once again, put on a grim expression on his face, as if reflecting back upon the moment straight after they had been separated back at the sand sea, Julius: “Immediately after the space fissured, all of us, except for you, Anastasia-sama and Miss Ram, fell onto the other side into the flower garden of the witchbeasts, you see. There, after many twists and turns, we arrived at the Watchtower and were able to get shelter.”

Meili: “Bu~t, onii-san and the others weren’t there, and since we knew they couldn’t fight, we were worrie~d.”

Julius traced Beatrice’s earlier explanation, and Meili agreed as well, pouting.

Their uneasiness was only a matter of course as well. When they had fallen into the underground area of the sand sea, Subaru and the rest had been outside and disappeared, which had made them worry, though that went for both sides.

Meili: “Onee-san really lost her composure. We had a tough time when she snapped a~t that Sage-san. Such that, when thinking back to it now, it sends shivers down my spi~ne.”

Emilia: “Hey, Meili. You don’t have to say all that.”

At Meili’s flirtatious glance unsuitable for her age, Emilia objected, her face going red. Her comments were no exaggeration: that could be easily understood by looking at Emilia, who was blushing all the way up to her ears.

Though imprudent, he was genuinely happy to see her worry for him.

Subaru: “I see~ I see~, so Emilia-tan was worried. It looks like Beako was worried to the point of crying her eyes out as well, I’m such a lucky guy.”

Emilia: “Geez, Subaru, joking about again like that… Also, Beatrice wouldn’t have cried her eyes out. Just around half of that. Yeah that’s right.”

Beatrice: “If you want to look out for others then do it properly till the very end, in fact, you natural airhead…!”

Emilia: "—?"

With the truth that she'd been driven to tears exposed, Beatrice pouted while Emilia remained clueless. Loosening his cheeks at that pleasant exchange, Subaru looked up at Julius.

Subaru: "If that's so, then you must have had gotten pretty worried too, isn't it. It's unfortunate I couldn't see that expression of yours."

Julius: "Of course, I was greatly agitated. Regardless of you, because of Anastasia-sama and miss Ram. It was regretful to lose the two frail ladies somewhere beyond reach. Without showing you all my form of having a pale face and walking about in worry, currently I am only experiencing relief in my fragile spirit."

Subaru: "Why'd you make a conversation about you getting scared so graceful?"

Subaru twisted his lips at Julius, who was touching his bangs as if out of habit, with a bittersweet smile on his face.

Without him putting up a strong front, and without even showing a weak side of his, it was an absolutely boring result. With that, Meili started laughing lightly at the exchange of the two.

When they questioned her by merely gesturing through their eyes, she placed her braided hair against her mouth, and

Meili: "Oh it's nothi~ng."

And, she deceived them with a smile which seemingly held deep meaning.

Subaru: "Well, from this I get that everyone who got separated was worried for us. Nobody is missing in the end, so it's something which we can look back on and smile now."

Ram: "Only Barusu can be so boldly shameless. Even now, Ram's petite figure and soft heart is about to break apart with uneasiness and fear just by thinking about it."

Subaru: "Is the nee-sama who, among all the people I know, the one which seems to have the toughest heart, saying something?”

The truth is, amongst all of Subaru’s acquaintances, Ram was the one who wielded the utmost mental strength. Her remarks seemed to be a silly joke as if a matter of course, but he ended up intently looking at Ram’s face, who was sitting right in front of him.

White skin with light crimson eyes. And of course well ordered facial features, along with refreshing beauty. Beautiful facial features like a suspicious berry found in the valley of sweetness and elegance. No matter how you look at her, she was the same Ram as always.

Ram: “—Put an end to that unpleasant gaze. Looking so intently, what do you want?”

Subaru: “Well, I was just thinking that you’re really Ram.”

Ram: “This is totally hopeless now, isn’t it?”

Subaru: “Stop making judgements without any proper subjects! Not that, I mean…”

Subaru replied in a flummoxed manner back at Ram who’d cut off and cast aside Subaru’s words.

The incident that had occurred just before he had lost his consciousness in the underground area came up in his mind—Ram had protected Subaru with her injured body by standing in front of the Centaur.

Her delicate figure seen from the back, which had been peppered with wounds, had faced that formidable enemy without any prospects of victory. Back then, he’d felt the terror of losing her, seeing her figure that showed no fear of being wounded; and now, both of them had made it back alive safely.

He’d realized that fact by talking with the usually fearless her.

Subaru: “Sure enough, there’s still this sense of distance between us. It did get strangely loathsome and worse, but when I think back on it, that too was…No, that still shouldn’t be a good memory to reflect back on.”

Ram: “I don’t understand what you’re trying to grumble out. Spit it all out. Like a man.”

Subaru: ““I’m glad we’re both safe” is what I mean. Plus, I’m also glad you protected and saved me at the end there.”

Ram: “…That was a waste of time.”

Subaru: “How can you say that?!”

Even though he’d honestly expressed his gratitude, it meant absolutely zilch to her.

Following that, Emilia let out a stifled giggle seeing Subaru get miffed like that.

Emilia: “It’s okay, Subaru. It’s just because Ram’s a little embarrassed.”

Subaru: “Nee-sama’s embarrassed…? Wouldn’t the heavens and earth switching places be more believable?”

Emilia: “N-Not really. Perhaps it’s because you kept hugging Ram till she woke up, so she’s like to be embarrassed. Even when separated, ‘twas rough.”

Ram: “Emilia-sama!”

Emilia, had secretly whispered that into his ear, but Ram had reacted angrily to her words. She raised her eyes up unusually in anger as if she’d read Emilia’s lips or something,

Ram: “I think it would be better that you didn’t judge things using your own criteria. Because I don’t think I want to work for a dunderhead who doesn’t understand people’s feelings.”

Emilia: “…When you say “dunderhead”, you aren’t referring to me right?”

Ram: “I’m not. Emilia-sama, you do properly think about people’s feelings, if there's anyone who's got nothing to do with being a dunderhead, it would be you; it'd be so ridiculous of me to say otherwise."

Emilia: "I see. Erm, wait up, let me think for a bit."

Emilia began to brood in earnest thought at what Ram had said, whose words had been plastered with great sarcasm. Meanwhile, Ram glared at Subaru with a glint in her eye as sharp as a blade, and then stirred her lips into speech, saying, "Forget this."

Subaru reflexively nodded at her threatening attitude. When he'd woken up, he remembered that there'd been the traces of someone who'd been lying on the bed together with him. He'd thought for sure it'd been Beatrice, but it seemed like according to what she'd said now, it—.

Subaru: "Uh-oh, I've forgotten it, I've forgotten it. I said I've forgotten it."

Ram: "Good. You're not a dunderhead… Emilia-sama. Let's leave it here."

Emilia: "Ergh, has it come to Ram gradually becoming more outspoken about me….?"

Emilia looked at her with reproach, but Ram turned her aside with a look of feigned ignorance.

In any case, Subaru turned his eyes away from Ram, who seemed like she didn't want to touch on this subject anymore, and looked towards the last of his companions, at Anastasia.

She sat beside Julius, fiddling with her Pon-Pons that adorned her hat as usual. But, when she noticed Subaru's gaze, she gave him a graceful smile.

Anastasia: "Aah, so yer done talkin'? Natsuki-kun, I thought yer'd forgotten about me."

Subaru: "I hope you can forgive me for my ego in prioritizing my own. I'm glad that you're safe too. Speaking of the last battle in the underground area, I haven’t got a clue about what happened after”

Anastasia: “Are you goin’ ta make me remember those scary thoughts where I too was thrown down into that pitch black darkness? Natsuki-kun ‘n Ram-san, ‘n… Ah, ‘n Patrasche-chan were fightin’ their damndest, so the witchbeast was ignorin’ me. I wasn’t of any use there, but I was goin’ to be of use for the negotiations.”

Subaru: “Negotiations?”

Anastasia: “With the “Sage-san” who helped us, ya know.”

Anastasia pointed at Shaula, who was still nestling her face against Subaru’s right arm.

When he heard negotiations with this, Subaru frowned, but Anastasia gave him a wry smile.

Anastasia: “Ahnono, we’re also quite confused. ‘Cause, she wouldn’ answer anythin’ till only a few minutes ago regardless of me pushin’ ‘n pullin’ her, but with you Natsuki-kun, she’s madly in love.”

Subaru: “She wouldn’t speak with you? This thing?”

Shaula: “It’s not this thing, it’s Shaula. Master~”

Subaru: “Shut up…”

Subaru responded dejectedly at Shaula getting miffed, and Anastasia shrugging her shoulders.

Certainly, when he only looked at the situation, she had barely said a single word to Anastasia and the rest. However, she’d been nattering away at Subaru. So in reality, just about everything of this situation was unexpected.

Subaru: “When someone suddenly nestles over to you with 100 Favorability, even if they happen to be a beautiful woman, this one’s Favorability is zero, so it isn’t something worth me getting perplexed over…”

Shaula: “—! Just now, did you say that I’m a beautiful woman?!”

Subaru: “You sure have sharp ears when it suits you, HEY!”

Once again, Subaru tried to push Shaula’s head off with his empty left hand. However, the more he struggled to do that, the more Shaula’s strength increased, eventually leading Subaru to give in.

In the end, the out of breath Subaru shook his head, saying, “It can’t be helped” with Shaula still clinging to his right arm.

Subaru: “For now, let’s put off all these trivial matters and talk about what should be talked about. I don’t want us to keep going around and around in circles with a lack of explanation. I want you to tell us about various things.”

Shaula: “Suuuuuure thing, if it’s something Master has to say, then let’s hop to it!”

Julius: “Indeed, your collaboration is a great help. So, I wish to ask about this. You are the “Sage” who retired to this Pleiades Watchtower… Is my understanding correct?”

Shaula: Turning away SFX

Subaru: “Answer him! Didn’t you just say you’d talk!”

Quite in contrast to her friendly smile, Shaula turned her face away sharply from Julius’ question. Straight after Subaru got pissed off at her poor attitude, Shaula turned her pouting face towards him.

Shaula: “Mymy, what happened Master. Master didn’t you hammer it into me not to tell, speak or say anything unnecessary to anyone no matter what they ask. I’m just loyally abiding by what you told meeeee. I can’t believe you’re angry! I’m gonna file a case against you!”

Subaru: “Your Master is absolutely awful!”

Shaula: “Yeah, yeah. Master’s suuuuch an awful person. I should demand an apology from him, and for him to deeply reflect on himself.”

Subaru: “So, calling people Master Master as you please is just…

Huh, Emilia-tan, what's with those eyes?"

Emilia had narrowed her round eyes at Subaru and Shaula's strange spiel. Subaru braced himself in case it was another inexplicable outburst, but Emilia continued by saying, "Well,"

Emilia: "It may not really be a big deal, but… How can I explain it. Isn't the way you both talk quite similar?"

Subaru: "Does it look like I'm talking with such a chavvish tone?!"

Emilia: "That's not what I mean, the expressions you both use is what I meant. You see, you always joke about even during serious conversations, right? That's the feeling I'm getting."

Subaru: "You think of me like that?!"

Subaru was horrified by that completely unexpected evaluation of hers, but Emilia paid no heed to him. On the contrary,

Julius: "Hmmm…Surely now that you mention it."

Ram: "Barusu's typical conversational ability? There's trouble lying in wait ahead, then."

Meili: "But I really li~ke Onii-san's way of talking?"

Anastasia: "Though, everyone's got some manner that sits heavy on yer stomach, dont'cha think?"

Subaru's mouth gaped wide open as everyone appended their own evaluations on top of each other. However, a little girl had furiously lost her temper in Subaru's stead—And that girl had been Beatrice.

Beatrice: "Really, don't go saying just whatever you feel like, I suppose. Not only are all of you acting way too familiar with Subaru, you're also acting far too clingy ever since a while ago, in fact. How hard you think this is for Betty, despite taking Subaru's hand, I suppose! It's unfair, in fact!"

The topic had changed quite a bit midway, but Beatrice's had a gleeful disposition to her. However, Shaula turned Beatrice's protests aside, with a look on her face that a beautiful girl shouldn't be making.

Beatrice's already lacking amount of patience reached its limit when she saw Shaula's complete lack of concern completely expressed on merely her face.

However, before that, Subaru's karate chop hit Shaula square on her forehead.

Subaru: "That's enough!"

Shaula: "Ow… Though it doesn't actually hurt, isn't that abuse?! It is abuse…! Master used violence against meeeee! I'll be seeing you in court!"

Subaru: "Pipe down! You can speak with other people properly from now on! Or this talk will go nowhere!"

Shaula: "…Would that be okay?"

Subaru: "Yes it would! Rather, I recommend it! It's about time for you to start speaking seriously!"

Shaula's face turned to one of complete surprise towards the frowning Subaru's complaints. And then, little by little, her facial expression changed, first surprise, then comprehension, then assent, and finally deep gratitude.

Then, she said,

Shaula: "Yippeeeee! Yaaaaay~! I got permission to taaalk! Now I don't have to play the act of the deeply mysterious femme fatal anymore~! Hip, Hip, Hoooooray!"

Subaru: "Now not even a fragment of it is left behind when it comes to that factor!!"

Her face was lit up in a deep smile, if she had a tail, she'd probably be wagging it around in full swing.

Though as a matter of fact, Shaula's ponytail was swinging about in delight as she still held on tightly onto his arm, with her ponytail smacking against his forehead, his cheeks, and god knows what else repeatedly.

3

Subaru: "—So, it's okay to say that you're the "Sage" from the rumors, right?"

The racket had died down for a bit, and finally, they'd truly reached the discourse that they should have undertaken before said racket.

Shaula, who'd let go of Subaru's right arm, was sitting cross-legged in the middle of the group, now sat in a circle, surrounding her. Incidentally, his right arm had become numb, and he couldn't raise it. Nor would it move.

Shaula: "…"

Subaru: "Answer me. You're the "Sage" right?"

Shaula: "Hmm~ The answer to that question is difficult."

Having been greeted with silence to his question Subaru had once again repeated the same query. Following that, Shaula replied vaguely, putting on a sour expression as if she'd ate a pickled plum.

Subaru frowned on receiving that answer, revealing his bewilderment. However, it was Emilia who raised her hand up, in place of him. She spoke out, prefacing her words with, "In which case"

Emilia: "Setting aside whether you're the "Sage" … The one they say guarded the Sand Dunes all this time inside of this tower would be you, right?"

Shaula: "Ah, that's meeeee for sure. For 400 years, every single day forever and eeeever guarding the midst of this sand, and each barren day I've spent would be something that would make both the one reciting it, and the one hearing it cry….!"

Emilia: "Poor thing…tch"

Subaru: “Emilia-tan, don’t get affected by it. And you as well, don’t go exchanging unnecessary feelings.”

The empathetic Emilia’s eyes teared over at Shaula who gave her response as she shook her fist. As he calmed Emilia down, Subaru, based off Shaula’s current answer, exchanged looks with Julius.

Julius gave a nod at that exchange of looks, and took charge of the conversation, speaking out a: “So,”

Julius: “Would I be right in recognizing you as having bore the burden of working as a “Sage” for 400 years, as is typically well-known? Shaula-sama.”

Shaula: “You’re making me blush, attaching stuff like “Sama”. I’m not used to it, so you can address me without using any honorifics like normal. Using Shaula-sama…Dhehehe”

Julius: “Then, I shall correct myself. Surely the one that is typically known as the “Sage” is you? Shaula.”

Shaula: “Weell, I’m not so sure about that? Even if that’s what’s typically said, I don’t ever leave the tower, so I don’t know anything about rumors from the outside. It feels unexpectedly strange, doesn’t it? Like I’mmmmm being called a “Sage.””

Shaula’s facial expression, which had been completely at ease, completely changed to one tinged in thoughtfulness, and the atmosphere did too. Julius also narrowed his eyes, facing the depth of her gaze which seemed like it was searching for that.

Her current remark wasn’t the kind which you could ignore, even if you weren’t Julius. Because, what if Shaula’s words were the truth…

Julius: “If you aren’t the “Sage”, then it’d turn out that the legend of the “Sage” Shaula is a completely incorrect rumor. Or, is it saying that there’s a Shaula who’s considered to be a “Sage” besides you?”

Shaula: “The “Sage” Shaula from those rumors is someone I’m not aware of, buuuuut, as far as I know, there’s no acquaintance of mine named Shaula other than meeeeee. I was given this name from Master as well, so Master must've given it just to me…Buuut."

Shaula's gaze had fleetingly turned towards Subaru, but Subaru hadn't ever named anyone Shaula in the first place, nothing nor nobody.

However, it was a fact that there was a certain ring to the name, "Shaula". Shaula too was the name of a star, it was the star name that formed Scorpius—and its meaning was "The Stinger".

Naturally, his thoughts extended to the true colors behind the white rays of light which had been fired from the Watchtower, however, when it came to getting that information out her, he wouldn't mind postponing it until later. Right now, what had to take priority was a different issue.

Shaula: "Since Master seems like he has no clue, Shaula is just myyyyyy name of course. Master gave that name just to meeeee… There's no need for any other Shaulas."

Julius: "I see. You seem to be really fond of that Master. —Must've been a sinful guy, huh."

Subaru: "Quit looking at me when saying that. Those are false accusations. Innocence presumed."

Ram: ""Guilty as proven"… That's what I think."

Subaru: "Don't you take pride in being a lawful nation?!"

Setting aside the interruption, he couldn't catch any glimpses of there being a lie in what Shaula was saying. If that was the case, then was she different to the one from the legends?

Suddenly, Anastasia started to rummage through her chest pocket, without any consideration for the individuals conversing with each other. Then, lo and behold, she pulled some coins out from her purse for some reason or other.

Subaru: "Don't tell me… you're suddenly counting your money?"

Anastasia: "Even though it's my hobby, 'n feelin' my change makes me work better when I'm deep in thought… That ain't my intention. Here ya go, you'll get what I mean when ya properly see the coins of the Kingdom."

Saying that, Anastasia tossed the coins on her palm over at the befuddled Subaru. He hurriedly caught them; what she'd thrown over to him were 4 coins: a copper coin, a silver coin, a gold coin and a holy gold coin.

There was probably no way that it could be something like a bribe for Shaula, or an alternative of a tip. Making sure to check the coins as she had told him to, Subaru noticed the designs engraved into them.

He hadn't really taken a good look at their money up until now, but —.

Subaru: "So it's common just about everywhere to engrave pictures and designs and stuff on money. How strange."

Anastasia: "I don't see what's strange about it? We've gotta know from where the money comes from… Besides, it's 'cause money always comes with the history of its country. That's why stuff that's intrinsic ta the country's history is engraved on it."

Subaru: "Hmmmm…?"

Subaru turned his attention to the engravings on the coins whilst he listened to Anastasia's explanation. And when he looked closely…, I see, the coins each have different designs engraved on them—.

Emilia: "The Holy Gold Coins have the "Divine Dragon", the Gold Coins have the "First Generation Sword Saint", the Silver Coins have the "Sage" and the Copper Coins have "Lugnica's Royal Castle" on them. Didn't you know?"

Subaru: "E-Emilia-tan is speaking like a super-learned character with what she's saying…!"

Emilia: "Or more so, it's obvious stuff I'd say. Were you so unaware when you were shopping that you never looked at the money properly?"

Subaru whistled innocently, covering his tracks, at Emilia's painful inquiry. And just after he checked them as he did that, the engravings on the money were exactly as she'd seemed to explain them.

A Dragon was engraved on the Holy Gold Coin, a man with a sharp look was engraved on the Gold Coin, the Royal Castle was engraved on the Copper Coin, and finally, engraved on the Silver Coin was a…

Subaru: "A young, handsome dude, I guess. They don't bear the slightest resemblance to Shaula."

Beatrice: "But, the guy on this drawing is what appears as Shaula to the world, in fact."

A handsome man with long hair, and intrepid features was carved there on the coin. Naturally, even if you were to try and change the angle of it, it seemed unlikely that they'd be mistaken as a half-naked hottie of a woman.

Shaula herself was pestering him with a "Lemme see!", so he handed the coin over to her. When he did so, she gazed at the Silver Coin close up, and said,

Shaula: "Heeh, rather well made huh? It looks exactly like Master."

Subaru: "Where are you seeing that?! Ah, no, if the "Sage" that's engraved there is your Master, then what do you mean by me resembling the Master inside your memories?"

Shaula "Geez, what are you talking about? Myyyy Master is the only Master."

Subaru: "So, let me restate myself once again. WHERE ARE YOU SEEING THAT?!"

He cleared his throat, and shouted at the top of his lungs at Shaula, who was comparing him with the design that was engraved on the Silver Coin. Even if they differed in hairdo, their expression and in the first place even their race seemed to be different. The thing they matched in was their gender it seemed. Were he to judge it only by the category of having a good-looking face, then Julius would be much closer than Subaru was to it.

However, Shaula looked at him with dissatisfaction, saying "Eeeeeh" to Subaru's opinion.

Shaula: "Looks fairly accurate from what I can seeeee. You have hair, two eyes, two ears, and a nose and mouth."

Subaru: "That sort of level?! Aren't you complimenting it like a preschooler's portrait?!"

Emilia: "I guess that I too still don't think that Subaru and this Sage resemble each other…"

Though Shaula had grown sulky, Subaru's verdict, and of course, Emilia's outed it. Their verdicts were reasonable. However, Shaula still didn't look convinced,

Shaula: "It's because I'mmmm not very good at comparing people's faces. Men and women are just about different, but after that, isn't stuff roughly the same? … After that, it'd come down to size, wouldn't it?"

Beatrice: "She looked at Betty right now and came out with that, I suppose, this woman."

Subaru: "It's okay, since Beako being cute and small is unique. Putting that aside, you have such a sense of telling beauty and yet you call me, out of all people, your Master. You're mistaking me completely for someone else!"

Taking advantage of Shaula's excuse, Subaru shook off some of the dishonor he'd accrued so far from the false accusations. It had been a ridiculous suggestion in the first place. Of course, he didn't even need to consider it, Subaru had nothing in common with Shaula, and that was a relief.

Or so he thought, but Shaula shook her head at that, and said,

Shaula: "Ah. Meeee having found Master wasn't a question about appearance, so there's no issue with that."

Subaru: “Not about appearance, you say, then how did you find out? By aura?”

Shaula: “Your smell.”

Subaru: “…”

Shaula: “Well no, I mean, I can’t think of anyone except Master who’d let such a dark, pungent smell, to the point that my nose seems to scrunch up, hang off from them.”

Subaru: “Honestly, that the first time I’ve had my feelings hurt like that! What, am I that bad?!”

When that keyword, smell, had come out, Subaru had readied himself up for just a moment. However, his readiness was shattered in one blow by Shaula’s choice of words straight after.

Shaula had a mystified look to her set towards Subaru, whose face had turned red at her unexpected evaluation.

Shaula: “Why did you get mad? Ah, is it because I said “pungent”? It’s fine! Master’s smell is really bad, but it’s the type of smell I wanna keep smelling and smelling! It’s that of the unusual cooking variety, not the sort that makes you spew, so it’s cool!”

Subaru: “Girls don’t say “spew” and “it’s cool” together! You didn’t need to follow it up after that!”

Subaru covered his face with his palm, about to break down crying on the spot, feeling rather ashamed.

Subaru: “Urghh… I thought I’d just about gotten used to people saying that, but being humiliated like this is far too much. What did I ever do to you…”

Emilia: “I-It’s okay, Subaru. I perfectly understand. So, shall we bathe properly afterwards? “

Subaru: “Perfectly understand it my ass!”

The anguishedly, dented Subaru had become useless. Beatrice let out a sigh as she looked at Emilia consoling him from the side. And then, she grabbed ahold of Subaru's underarm, and leaned her weight on his back,

Beatrice: "I understand the reason why you mistook Subaru as a complete stranger, I suppose."

Shaula: "I haven't mistook him. You sure are impertinent for a lil' ankle-biter, arentcha?"

Beatrice: "Sorry, but that lil' ankle-biter is your precious Master's partner, in fact. Oops, you mistook him for someone else, so he isn't actually your master or anything. Pardon me, in fact."

Shaula: "…"

Beatrice: "…"

Silently, sparks from their gazes flew up between Beatrice and Shaula.

The subject of their talk had ended up completely scattered all over the place, but even if they tried to get it back on track, the people they had who'd put the conversation back on course were too few. Given the situation, the face of common sense would get the short end of that stick.

Ram: "Beatrice-sama, let's leave the strife until after we're done. After our important discussion, you'll be free to decide who owns Barusu."

Beatrice: "Subaru isn't owned by anyone, I suppose. That is the point, in fact."

Ram: "…Yeah, yeah."

Ram let herself take in Beatrice's anger whilst her eyes filled with shock. And after she replied, Ram narrowed her eyes and called out to Shaula, who was still looking at Beatrice with a thorny look in her eyes.

Ram: "In any case, if you could speak to us, then that would be a godsend. Up until now, you couldn't go along with having a serious conversation with us, but don't you think now would be okay to do so?"

Shaula: "Mhm, I have Master's permission, so that would be OK. Saying that though, even I'mmmm not so nice as to answer absolutely everything. Or rather, I should say I don't know that much stuff."

Ram: "Merely that answers makes it clear to me that you being called the Sage is a mistake."

Proudly puffing out her ample chest, Shaula unabashedly declared her ignorance all the more. Ram puffed out her small chest as if she were rivalling Shaula's. She snorted her nose showing an air of superiority more than anyone else here.

Ram: "You're Shaula, but not the "Sage". Then, I wonder, do the "Sword Saint" and "Divine Dragon" ring a bell?"

Shaula: "Sword Saiiin' and Divine Draagon?"

Ram: "Their names are Reid and Volcanica."

Shaula: "Ewwwww!"

Shaula stuck her tongue out at Ram's question with a face that looked like she'd chewed something sour.

It was easy enough to understand from her response that both of those names rang a bell. When Ram silently urged that knowledge out of her, Shaula rocked her body from left to right, still sat cross legged, and said,

Shaula: "I know them. The Stick Swinger Reid, and the Cynic Volcanica are old friends of mine. I haven't at all seen them since we parted, but they must be doing great, right?"

Ram: "One of them… Reid is dead; a long time ago."

Shaula: "Seriously?! He's dead, even though he was a guy who was nigh unkillable?! How did he die?! Did he eat something strange?!"

Ram: “His lifespan. No one can go against the decree of the heavens above.”

Shaula: “His life span… Ah, I see. That’s right. Reid was a human being, wasn’t he?”

Having been told about the “Death” of her acquaintance, Shaula had cast her eyes down with a solemn attitude to her. She seemed somewhat sad, having dropped her shoulders, drooping down in dejection all over all the way to her ponytail.

Regardless of what she’d been saying and her behavior up until now, her figure mourning her friend’s death was neutrally, a sad thing.

Whilst he finally regained his footing, Subaru too felt something panging inside his chest when he looked at Shaula’s face from the side.

Shaula: “So, Volcanica is doing well?”

Subaru: “It’s because they’re a Dragon.”

Shaula: “Aah, a Dragon, huh. Though, it would have been better if Volcanica had died rather than Reid~”

Subaru: “Those words seem to be way too much, Hey”

Having shown only a mere touch of sadness, Shaula quickly went back to herself. Her face had gone clear, as she bitterly spoke about her other acquaintance.

To that, Ram closed one of her eyes in thought, and said,

Ram: “You remember Reid and Volcanica… In that case, you should know your Master’s name, right?”

Shaula: “…”

Subaru and the others all held their breaths on hearing Ram’s question.

Only the questioned Shaula's face remained blank, replying with an "Obviously."

Ram's question was indeed quite effective at unravelling the mystery of the "Sage".

The "Sage" = Shaula system had collapsed now, so if there was someone who had accomplished the deeds required to be called a "Sage" other than her, naturally, they would need to meet that individual.

Shaula mistook Subaru as that individual for some reason, but a name probably wasn't something which could be falsified. Subaru prayed that a miracle where a "Sage" with the name Natsuki Subaru wouldn't come out of her here.

And, his prayer would be fulfilled. —In a strange way which he couldn't possibly imagine.

Shaula: "That's weird that Master's name is on your mind. Considering he's right there, and though all of you are Master's companions, you don't know it?"

Ram: "I'm sorry, but your Master hit his head on the toilet bowl, and forgot a bunch of stuff."

Subaru: "Is there a meaning behind having restricted it to toilets?"

Shaula: "Master, you did it again…?"

Subaru: "Again?!"

With Shaula looking at him sympathetically, Subaru tasted humiliation which he shouldn't have received. However, she hopped up as if she'd understood that reply, and said,

Shaula: "Then you'll hear it from meeeee. Master's name… That's right, even that name is that of the famed Great Erudite. Certainly being called something like a "Sage" is only befitting of Master!"

Subaru: "Get to the point!"

Shaula: “You’re so impatient~ But, that too is like Master.”

Shaula gave off a gaudy gesture which contained irritation, but she stuck her tongue out with a pouty face at Subaru’s demand. And then, she placed her finger on her cheek, and said with an awfully childish gesture,

Shaula: “Flugel”

Subaru: “…Huh?”

Shaula: “Master’s name is Flugel. The Great Erudite Flugel, Shaula’s Master.”

Shaula’s whole face lit up into a smile and she delightfully puffed out her chest the moment she spoke those words.

There was no shadow of a doubt that Shaula was putting deep love, gratitude and pure respect into that, and held reverence and affection towards Flugel.

However, Subaru and the others’ reactions varied in respect to that name.

At any rate, he knew that name.

Subaru: “…Isn’t that the name of the person who planted the tree?”

Saying that, Subaru craned his neck at hearing the name of that historical figure whose fates had crossed only once before.

Chapter 20:
Shaula ≠ Sage = Flugel

1

—The eminent “Great Erudite” Flugel.

As soon as Shaula had mentioned his name with a proud puff of her ample chest as she gave them an open-looking smile, Subaru and the others had exchanged looks with each other, wrapped up by an uncomfortable feeling in the air.

Shaula: “Huh? What’s up with that response? Did I say something weeeeird?”

Subaru: “No, it’s because, what the?”

Shaula widened her eyes blankly on hearing Subaru and the others’ dismal response. He felt bad for her, who was the very picture of confidence, as if to say that there was nothing mysterious to her words. However, the emotions that Subaru and the others harbored towards the name of that “Flugel” were rather complex.

“The Great Erudite” Flugel.

Though the title she’d given him was unfortunately different, Subaru was familiar with that name.

It was the name of that individual whom he’d crossed fates with just once ever since he’d been summoned into this different world. However, he didn’t have any acquaintanceship with that individual, he only had a one-sided “Debt” with him.

In any case, the reason he knew his name was down to the fact that he’d had an experience where his life had been saved thanks to that individual’s deed.

Subaru: “Flugel’s Great Tree…That Flugel-san, right?”

Everyone except Shaula gave a curt nod at the keyword that slipped out from Subaru's mouth. Although, Meili had inclined her head in doubt as if she didn't know, saying: "Wh~at's that?"

Meili: "I've never hea~rd that term before. "Great Tree", does it just mean tree?"

Subaru: "Yeah. Right, there's a damn huge tree that grew on the Lifaus Plains in the Kingdom of Lugnica, and it was called Flugel's Great Tree. It's so huge that it's said that it may have almost reached past the clouds; it was something that could really tickle at your male instincts."

Meili: "Heeh, I se~e. When you say it like that, I'd very much li~ke to see it."

Subaru: "Sorry. About that, I cut it down."

Meili: "Onii-san's so mean!"

He'd ended up swiftly shattering Meili's wish, and as a result, treated as something less than human.

Strictly speaking, cutting down the tree hadn't been Subaru's responsibility. However, it had been Subaru who'd proposed cutting it down and using it, so when it came to talking about who was the most responsible, Subaru was the one.

—Flugel's Great Tree had ended up being his trump card a year ago during the "Battle to Subjugate the White Whale".

The Great Tree's existence had been cardinally important in subjugating that witchbeast of "Fog", the White Whale, considering that the tree was larger in size than that colossal beast. In the end, he could say that they'd cut down the Great Tree, pinned the White Whale underneath it so it couldn't move, and finally delivered to it its finishing blow.

Subaru: "I do feel bad for Flugel-san, who they say planted it, but… In no shape or form did I ever think I'd hear his name in a place like this."

Emilia: "It's the spot where you can see the stump where the negotiations that followed the subjugation of the White Whale took place, right? I’ve heard that they used the chopped tree for various stuff, though…”

Julius: “At the present, only the stump is left there known as the “Vestiges of Flugel’s Great Tree”. It’s in a status-quo where it’s protected as an important historical landmark, but after several 100s of years, it ought to go back to how it was before, one should think.”

Emilia and Julius replied about what had happened after following Subaru’s wonderment.

Straight after the subjugation of the White Whale, they’d subjugated “Sloth” as well, and the attack of the Sin Archbishops that had dragged Crusch and Rem into it had overlapped with that. And to make matters worse, straight after he’d joined back up with the Emilia Camp, there had been that commotion that he’d ended up right in the middle of in the “Sanctuary”. However, after all these unfortunate series of events, the spoils of war negotiations had taken place.

There, a discussion regarding the great deeds against the “White Whale” and Sloth” had been the pièce de résistance, but naturally they’d also ended up discussing compensation for the damage they’d incurred. One of the matters they’d discussed was Flugel’s Great Tree, namely taking care of the remaining stump and effective uses of the felled tree itself.

Incidentally, they’d deemed the White Whale as having no practical use, so its huge carcass had been cleaved up by a bunch of people and incinerated. Only its skull had been presented to the Royal Castle as evidence of its subjugation.

In any case, setting aside the Great Tree’s treatment, and moving back to the more crucial Flugel-san.

Subaru: “Come to think on it, I’ve definitely heard him referred to as the “Sage” Flugel.”

Beatrice: “But, he’s a “Sage” who no one really knows what he’s done, in fact… So, speaking of strange to begin with, it's strange that he's being treated as a "Sage", I suppose."

Ram: "When you consider his achievements alone, it's true that his accomplishments pale in comparison to the title of "Sage". Perhaps he liked to toot his horn too much on his achievements… A guy just like Barusu, eh?"

Subaru: "When have I ever exaggerated my achievements?!"

Subaru grew rather sullen at having received that unexpected evaluation. However, Ram's faced remained nonchalant.

And whilst listening to that exchange, Anastasia spoke out with an: "I see." She was the only one whose face showed some understanding,

Anastasia: "Certainly, from what the story that circulates aroun' says, Flugel-san may be lackin' in bein' called a "Sage", but… I wonder if things ended up bein' like what I suspect now that Shaula-san, whose been treated as the real "Sage", turned out to be a person like this."

Emilia: "What do you mean by "Things ended up being like what you suspect?""

Anastasia: "The achievements that are circulated are the opposite… Hmm, no that ain't right I suppose. They're weighted ta one side, rather than bein' the opposite. I reckon it may be very likely that they were more or less pushed onto her on purpose."

Emilia: "So, in other words, you mean that it was made to look like Shaula-san did those things that Flugel-san actually did?"

Emilia opened her eyes in surprise as she heard Anastasia's hypothesis. After Anastasia nodded at her understanding, she turned around to face Shaula once again.

Anastasia: "I've got my suspicions about this, but Shaula-san, what do ya think? I wonder, was yer Master the sort ta try 'n do these sorts of things, Shaula-san?"

Shaula: “Yeah~, though I don’t quite understand this difficult talk.”

Subaru: “You better not be…”

Shaula: “Nonononono! You’re jumping to conclusions! Let me continue properly with what I was going to say!”

Right after Subaru narrowed his eyes at her vague reply, Shaula shook her head as if in fright. And then, she lifted both of her hands up and as she nonsensically blinked her palms open and closed, she said,

Shaula: “If I’mmmm being honest, there’s much that I don’t understand about Master’s thinking. But, when it comes to Master, he was a person who didn’t really like to stand out. So, I think~ it’s quite like Master to aim the brunt of the annoying gossip onto meeeee and run away.”

Subaru: “I don’t think a person who didn’t want to stand out would’ve planted a tree called the Flugel’s Great Tree, though…”

Julius: “Subaru, you’ve got the wrong idea. It’s not like Flugel’s Great tree was a Great Tree from the moment it was planted. Many months and years passed by, until finally it attained its majestic appearance from its growth into full bloom. Given that the name of the person who planted it was left behind, it’s not that strange that future generations began to call it like that.”

Subaru: “…I don’t even know what to say to that.”

Subaru’s face grew sour as he comprehended Julius’ explanation.

Indeed, back then, it would have been one of many, but after many long years, it had ended up growing into a magnificent Great Tree. They’d probably wanted to give it a name, and when they came to do so, they’d gone with the: “Then, let’s name it after the person who planted it” option. That felt like what would’ve been natural.

If that was the case, then he felt like it had been an oversight of Flugel’s to have left his name behind.

Subaru: “If he feels like hiding, then I feel like he should’ve avoided leaving the name Flugel behind in the first place. Isn't there something missing here?"

Julius: "I read this in a book, but if I'm not mistaken, the reason why we know Flugel-san's name is… because "Flugel was here" was carved onto that Great Tree, right?"

Subaru: "As if there's something missing! He's like a student on a field trip?!"

Subaru was taken aback by this episode where it seemed like he had craved the limelight more than expected.

He recalled that he'd wanted to do something similar back when he'd been standing next to the Great Tree, however when it came to him actually putting that into motion, well, that was another story. When Flugel would have carved it in, the Great Tree still shouldn't have been a Great Tree in the first place.

Julius: "That name stood alone, and thus, the "Sage" Flugel ended up being passed down in legend as an enigmatic historical figure that has next to no information about him other than having planted the tree."

Subaru: "So, isn't the belief that Flugel was the one who planted the tree unclear too?!"

Julius: "With that, time passed, and it was verified as being correct from the mouth of a different "Sage". Now that I think about it… Hmmm. We're standing in a place which is chock full of missing history, doesn't it make your heart leap just a little?"

Subaru: "Don't start talking as if you're a history otaku…"

Being acquainted with obscure historical facts from several centuries, Julius was deeply moved.

Julius had the tendency to speak too much when explaining things regarding magic rather than him having deep insight into it, however perhaps he did have a knowledgeable otaku side to him here.

Emilia: “But, even though I get that the “Sage” of antiquity was actually Flugel in reality… this still doesn’t change much, right?”

When their opinions came to match each other in regards to Flugel doing that, Emilia diffidently glanced over everyone’s faces. Receiving her gaze, Subaru nodded his head in agreement.

As Emilia said, the fact that it had actually been Flugel who’d really been behind the legendary exploits of the past didn’t hold much meaning for them at the present. —No, that wasn’t true at all.

Subaru: “Nope, Emilia-tan. This fact is a pretty big problem.”

Emilia: “Huh?”

Subaru: “I mean, shouldn’t it be? Our purpose from the start was to come here to hear various things from the famed “Sage-san” who is said to be omniscient. But, since the “Sage-san” from the rumors has turned out to be a different person, and all he’s left behind is this obviously air-headed girl, we…”

Shaula: “Oooh, Master~, I want you to not shake my head. You’re making it go clatter-clatter.”

Shaula gave off that reaction, full of jest, as he shook her shoulders.

If he put it without mincing his words, she was far off being omniscient by any stretch of the imagination.

Subaru: “To start with, our original purpose can’t be fulfilled. —If the “Sage” isn’t here, then it means we came all the way here for nothing.”

Everyone: “…”

Emilia and the others kept their mouths shut at Subaru’s conclusion. Subaru gritted his back teeth at his own conclusion whilst he looked at everyone’s reactions.

Over a month had passed, and Subaru had already died four times.

Only a guardsman who was a “Sage” in name only had been left behind in the Pleiades Watchtower, which they'd surmounted so much hardship to get to. They wouldn't be able to bring back any results due to this.

The reality of history, the true state of the "Sage". Those things weren't of any value to him.

Since Subaru only desired for a way to save the people important to him.

Subaru: "Shaula. This may be a long shot, but just tell me this. Your Master… The one who should be the real "Sage", Flugel, where is he?"

Shaula: "Right now, If I were to answer with… "Right in front of myyyy eyes", I get the feeling you'd be mad at me! But, I gotta answer it! The one right in front of myyyy eyes is my Master, Flugel!"

Subaru: "I thought you'd say that."

Subaru could merely sigh at Shaula's undiscouraged response.

In fact, Subaru's current feelings were similar to that of a barren wasteland, overwhelming any urge he had in wanting to burst out in anger at the upbeat Shaula. Their circumstances were such that they could say their leads had come to nothing.

The glimmer of hope which had been the "Sage" had blinked out, and it looked like things would just go back to them fumbling around blindly. However, the subsequent darkness that came after they had seen a dazzling glimmer once in the dark had a different weight to it.

Hope gave people the strength to step forward, but perhaps the dark when hope covered it was something which dyed people's vision in black, rather than always being in the darkness.

Either way, for Subaru it meant that—

Emilia: “Subaru, listen. It may surely be like that, but in truth it doesn’t mean that we’re at an impasse.”

Subaru: “Huh?”

Emilia placed her hand on Subaru’s shoulder and spoke out to him from the side of his face, which had been drooping down gloomily. Turning his face to look at her, he saw that Emilia’s amethyst eyes were full of unwavering hope.

Giving Subaru a short nod whilst she still touched his shoulder, Emilia continued speaking, saying “Isn’t that right?” to Shaula.

Emilia: “Although you’d barely spoken anything to us until a little while ago, the current you should be able to speak to us in a quite a bit more detail, right?”

Shaula: “Sure thing. I dislike it when Master’s feeling down tooo, but also I was all alone for such a long time, so I’d love to chat.”

Shaula replied to Emilia’s meaningful questioning with a genial look to her, keeping her attitude unchanged. She sat cross-legged, swaying back and forth; then, she moved her right hand up, and pointed it up overhead.

Shaula: “I said a bit of this to the others, but we’re on the bottommost floor of the tower here. This is the Sixth Floor, “Asterope”. As you go up, there’s the Fifth Floor “Celaeno”, then the Fourth Floor “Alcyone”, and at the tippy-top there’s the First Floor “Maia”.”

Subaru: “You named each of the floors? Wasn’t that a hassle?”

Shaula: “Didn’t you name them Master?”

Subaru: “I ain’t got such bad taste, but I don’t want to talk about that right now. So?”

There was hope in Emilia’s eyes, and Subaru’s mood grew in impatience at the flow of Shaula’s conversation that promoted that. Shaula broke into a delighted smile as if she’d perceived that change in his expression.

Still pointing up above, she stuck out her other hand, her left hand, and showed him her five fingers,

Shaula: “The Fifth Floor “Celaeno” is straight above, on that floor you’ll find the doorway that leads outside. The Sixth Floor “Asterope” is underneath it, so in fact it connects straight to the underground area. If you hit it in the wrong place, you’ll end up buried alive, so It’d be best that you don’t do anything reckless like trying to break the wall.”

Julius: “Incidentally, the wall and floor seem to look like they’re made out of stone when you first look at them, but they have an unusual strength to them. Let me just say now that they wouldn’t be chipped even a bit with either Emilia-sama’s magic, or mine of course.”

Of course that probably didn’t mean he’d tried to destroy them, but Julius nevertheless supplemented Shaula’s explanation. He didn’t have any intentions of destroying the tower at all, but he nodded with an “I see”, just to be safe.

Subaru: “So, I get that the Fifth Floor has the doorway, but what about above that?”

Shaula: “The Fourth Floor “Alcyone” is like myyyy dwelling area, a simple place for my ins ‘n outs. I like to leave it messy, so I’m gonna get embarrassed if you look at it too hard∼”

Subaru “…”

Shaula: “Master, your eyes look serious. How scary…U-Usually I stand watch over the Sand Dunes from here. And, then I take aim and fire fire fire at anyone who gets near to the tower!”

Subaru: “So it indeed was you then.”

He’d already half-guessed it before, but he could be fully convinced now thanks to her testimony. White light from that Pleiades Watchtower had killed Subaru twice in the Sand Dunes, and it had also been the cause behind their team being separated into two after—The culprit had been, as he’d thought, Shaula.

Subaru: “We went through so much suffering thanks to that, how the hell do you plan to make up for that?”

Shaula: “Sorrysorry, I was juuuust following Master’s instructions, when you say that, you’re just fussing about what I’ve been doing here for the past hundreds of years~”

Subaru glared at her, speaking in a harsh tone, causing Shaula to quiver back, her face growing disheveled. There was no ill will showing on her face, and moreover, she showed no signs of remorse either.

Rather than lacking in a sense of guilt, she didn’t seem to have one in the first place.

It wasn’t an issue where she lacked emotions, but rather…

Beatrice: “Subaru, there’s no use in this, no matter what you say, in fact. There’s no sense of remorse or guilt in this one, I suppose. They just do as ordered…It doesn’t make sense to ask a tool their uses, in fact.”

Shaula: “Yepyep, I’mmmm Master’s tool! The lil’ ankle biter says it well!”

Shaula had a big smile which said “That’s exactly what I thought” all over her face as she heard Beatrice’s savage opinion.

Her moods and facial expressions changed fickly, and with that, his understanding of her current way of being—Perhaps Shaula just had different values. That was probably why they seemed to keep conversing as if they were on different wavelengths.

In other words,

Subaru: “It’s getting real tiring talking with you.”

Shaula: “You used to say that all the time before! It’s been aaaages.”

Subaru: “Is that so? Y’know I used to say that all the time, donkey years ago.”

He felt like he still did now, but Subaru brushed aside that point.

In any case, he understood that the white light that had come from the Watchtower had been Shaula's doing, as well as that he'd never get any kind of apology or remorse from her.

In that case, there was no meaning in cutting their conversation short. He'd just have to move the conversation forward.

Subaru: "About the Fourth Floor, your dwelling area… Like, your living quarters. What's above that?"

Shaula: "The examination hall from the Third Floor "Taygeta". —To test one's rights to enter the library."

Subaru: "…The library?"

Subaru frowned, repeating the word back to her as a question. Shaula calmly nodded back at him saying "Yeah" without paying heed to Subaru's change in attitude.

Shaula: "A library. From the Third Floor "Taygeta" and up, there's trials, and each one has a corresponding library. If you fulfill the conditions to enter the library, then you can read the books inside at your leisssure."

Subaru: "What's written in those "books inside"?"

Shaula: "Errrrr?"

Subaru: "Errrrr?!"

It was frustrating that she'd finished with an "Errrrr" considering that she'd told him this much whilst assuming an air of importance. Shaula reluctantly shook her head, along with her hair, at the frowning Subaru, and said: "It's because∼"

Shaula: "I can't read the books 'n stuff, I've not been told more than to guard the tower."

Subaru: "Was that from your Master… From Flugel as well?"

Shaula: “Yeah!”

It would be impossible for Subaru to answer, regardless of how she had put it so proudly.

Though Subaru had only inclined his head in doubt at Shaula’s words, Emilia and the others’ still kept serious looks on their faces, the hope they held in their eyes was still there.

Beatrice: “Subaru, what lies inside the books of the library is knowledge, I suppose.”

Subaru: “By “knowledge” you don’t mean it in a literal sense, right?”

Subaru asked the obvious back after he heard Beatrice’s expression.

Typically, what was written down in books was knowledge, barring fiction of course. What you got out of books was either a wealth of knowledge, or deep, moving impressions.

But that probably wasn’t the meaning behind what Beatrice was trying to say.

Beatrice shook her head on top of Subaru’s lap.

Her long drill curls traced her head’s movement, she spoke out to Subaru, who was following that motion with his eyes.

Beatrice: “This is the place where the knowledge written down by the “Sage” known as being omniscient sleeps. I’ve heard that the Pleiades Watchtower is a name used in the outside, in fact.”

Shaula: “Yeah. Since Master’s came back inside, the tower will go back to its original role. A Great Library where you can search for anything you like, be it something you want to know or something you’d like to be aware of—You can do that in Pleiades.”

2

Subaru: “So that means the Third Floor is at a Beginner Level. The Second Floor is at an Intermediate Level. And that you can get access to the top class information on the First Floor, I think. So it must mean that the Trials are Qualifications Trials to obtain the clearances, right?”

Shaula: “Ohhh, as expected of Master! Even I keep getting more and more confused with what you’re talking about! But perhaps it’s Mucho mejor that you keep it simple.”

—The Great Library Pleiades.

The name of the Watchtower had gone from something quite affable to something quite suspicious. Subaru and the others, line astern, had left the Sixth Floor and had started climbing the stairs up towards the upper floors.

The spiral staircase carried Subaru and the others up towards the upper floors, coiling around circularly within the tower. However, since there was no manner of railing, the higher he got, the more his blood ran cold.

Subaru: “This is scary.”

Emilia: “Subaru, if you’re scared, then hold my hand? Since you still haven’t fully recovered, and you’re unsteady on your feet, you might actually fall off….”

The ground of the Sixth Floor was getting far in the distance, and Gyan along with the Dragon Carriage looked pretty small down there. Emilia called that out to Subaru, who had looked down below, holding his breath.

To tell the truth, he wanted to take her hand and enjoy the feeling of her pale fingers, but…

Subaru: “Thanks, Emilia-tan. But, I’m alright right now. For the time being it doesn’t seem like I’ll fall off since the stars are fairly wide, that, and I’m also still full of vim and vigor, don’t you think?”

Emilia: “Really? But, if you think it’s getting tough, you’ll tell me straight away, right? I can carry you on my back if it comes down to it.”

Subaru: “Is that so… Then I won’t make it come down to that.”

The impression of being carried up the stairs on Emilia’s back was as expected too horrifying. He would rather make that loan out to Julius, were he to make such an unmanly move.

Julius: “What is it?”

Subaru: “That’d just be the worst way too though. Oh, it’s nothing in particular. Keep moving, keep moving!”

Noticing Julius’ eyes on him, who’d just turned his head around, Subaru shook his hand at him. He shrugged his shoulders and continued to lead them up the stairs, still holding Anastasia’s hand.

Right now, they had their eyes set on the upper floors of the tower, progressing on foot. They weren’t in a rush, so they went about it at a leisurely pace, which contrasted their feelings of apprehension. Julius and Anastasia were at the front, then after them came Ram and Emilia line astern, with Subaru and Beatrice walking behind them. And finally, Shaula and Meili were bringing up the rear.

Meili: “Who~a there, naked Onee-san, don’t shake about so much.”

Shaula: “Huuuuh, you sure are a bossy lil’ ankle-biter for someone whose riding on my shoulders~”

Meili: “Be~cause, I’m sle~epy. We’ve been wa~lking for ages, and I can’t make it up and down the stairs with how many stairs there a~re.”

Shaula: “Yes, but why do I have to carry you….! Quit pulling on my hair!”

Fussy as she may be, there was no sharpness in their exchange.

The Shaula/Meili group bringing up the rear was, rather incredibly, such that Shaula was carrying Meili on her shoulders as they climbed the stairs. Initially, when they’d decided to move up, Meili had taken the opportunity to complain that her feet were tired. However it had been Shaula herself who had said she’d be okay with carrying her on her back, so he’d left it down to her.

Subaru: “When it comes to actual physical strength, it looks like Shaula is likely the strongest…”

Beatrice: “That’s for sure, I suppose. —Subaru, don’t let your guard down, in fact. Despite her appearance, we don’t know when she’ll show her fangs, I suppose.”

Subaru: “This woman? You get that impression from her?”

Beatrice: “We don’t know how she will react if it comes to light that you’re not Flugel, in fact.”

Subaru: “That’s…”

Subaru ended up stammering his words as he heard Beatrice’s response, her having urged him caution in a low voice.

It wasn’t that he hadn’t thought about it, but he didn’t think it was a problem if he left it at the edge of his thoughts. In fact, Shaula was acting pretty friendly towards his group—No, towards Subaru, and that was only because she kept mistaking him as being her Master.

And, Subaru and the rest knew that his relation with him was something she was completely misunderstanding. He’d denied it to her many times till now, but Shaula would just smile and disregard it. Actually rather than disregarding it, it was more like she didn’t care at all no matter how many times she heard it. But, in any case, it hadn’t gotten through to her.

Therefore, Shaula’s attitude hadn’t changed, and he could even consider it a security—

Subaru: “That means that we won’t know what trigger will bring everything crumbling down.”

Beatrice: “There’s no doubt that things will end up quite worrisome if she were to become hostile, I suppose. We’d have no choice but to combine mine and your strength, as well as Emilia and that knight’s… Julius’, in fact.”

Subaru: “Shaula’s strength, huh?”

He took a quick glance back at Shaula messing about with Meili.

She had a friendly, and defenseless look to her improper appearance—Ever since their first encounter, all the way to their conversations afterwards, she had been an individual that had been difficult to judge in every manner.

However, although Subaru currently couldn't decide what attitude to hold against Shaula, there wasn't any harbored animosity which stood out in her, that much is what it looked like.

Although she was acting friendly to them due to mistaking him for someone else, and although they'd been met with such an unguarded reception from her, it was more difficult to dislike her than be bewildered by her.

However, he mustn't confuse such touchy-feely emotions with there being a lack of looming danger.

Subaru: "…"

Turning his eyes at their defenseless limbs whilst sneaking glances at Shaula's condition, Subaru broke into thought.

She'd confessed that it had been her who'd set her aim on Subaru and the others back at the sand dunes and thrown those flashes of light at them from the tower. The speed of those flashes of light, along with the accuracy of their aim had been unnatural, they'd been plenty enough to give him an impression of the height of Shaula's true strength. Right now, Subaru didn't even know whether those things had been magic or not.

And to add on top of that, there'd been those final moments back at the underground area of the sand dunes.

That which remained in his awfully turbid consciousness, just before he had lost it, must have been Shaula who had come to blows with that repulsive-looking Centaur.

That monster was one which could only be thought of as being either the embodiment of absurdity or outrageousness was abruptly torn to pieces by a more powerful force, and he witnessed it being blown away out of existence with his own eyes.

He didn't want to admit it, but if he ended up in direct combat against Shaula, any visions of being able to win against her were all but gone.

Regulus, Petelgeuse and such had been far easier opponents.

Subaru: "…Urgh I don't know why I start to pretty repulsed whenever I recall those guys. No, feeling that is perfectly reasonable, but it's a familiar repulsed feeling that I'm getting."

Beatrice: "I don't know what you're thinking, but we need to be careful, I suppose."

Subaru: "Yeah. If that's the case…, then I guess asking her is quicker."

Beatrice: "Huh? In fact."

Straight after Beatrice replied in confusion, Subaru turned both himself and her around at the same time. Whilst swiveling his feet around on the stairs so they faced back, Subaru faced straight towards the double-stacked Shaula and Meili.

Shaula stopped in her tracks and tilted her head.

Shaula: "What's up Master? It couldn't be that Master's also tired right? It wouldn't be an issue for me to carry you, but my back is already taken by this girl who acts like a little princess, you know?"

Subaru: "That in itself would make quite an impression, so I'll pass. Ah, though I'm sorry to get in between you happily playing with your ponytail with Meili…"

Shaula: "It's not a ponytail, it's a scorpiontail."

Subaru: "…"

Shaula: "It's a scorpiontail."

Shaula repeated herself to the taciturn Subaru as if she was a broken record.

Grabbing ahold of one of her ponytail’s tufts, Shaula readily moved it in front of her face, and said,

Shaula: “A scorpiontail…”

Subaru: “I understand! What’s up with this insistence! Anyways, I’m sorry to get in between you making friends with Meili, but there’s something I want to ask you.”

Shaula: “Mhm! If it’s something Master has to say, I will listen to anything! I’mmmm glad that you’re speaking to me like this, Master~”

Shaula swung her ponytail… Er, rather, her scorpiontail about delightedly.

As a result of that, Meili, who was on her shoulders, was hit by one of the tail’s swishes. Subaru had already experienced that unexpectedly soft, good feeling tail, but putting that aside,

Subaru: “You’ll listen to what I say right?”

Shaula: “Not lewd stuff, right?”

Subaru: “Don’t even begin to go there. What are you braindead?”

Shaula: “It’s pretty dumb of Master to say so, isn’t it? Now we’re even!”

Subaru was left floored as he couldn’t keep up pace with Shaula who’d had a comeback to spare. Usually, most people ended up getting thrown quite out of sync when they mixed in with the pace of Subaru’s conversations. Because of that, suitably finding a thread to start a conversation came down to Subaru, but it would be tough to do this time.

The difficulty in this line of approach would still be different than with aberrations like the Sin Archbishops. In their case, it was difficult to establish a conversation with them in the first place, but it was different in Shaula’s case.

He felt a delay in proportion to not understanding his opponent whatsoever, whilst she understood him.

Truly as if Flugel, Subaru, and god knows who else had a lot of points in common.

Subaru: “Anyways, I have a question and a request. I need you to answer them as honestly, and obediently as possible.”

Shaula: “That doesn’t seem like a request. They could be an order, though.”

Subaru: “I ain’t that bossy. So, about the question… You attacked us from the tower, right? What the hell was that?”

Shaula: “It was Hell’s Snipe, a sniping attack used so that pesky flies don’t get near to the tower.”

Subaru: “…What?”

Shaula: “Hell’s Snipe.”

With her having said it in English whilst beaming, Subaru’s face grew sullen.

Well, uhm, it was a name he knew.

Shaula: “Thooough, if I think about it now, I’m so glad that Hell’s Snipe didn’t hit Master. If the Dimension Gate didn’t get lifted, I may’ve flung blow after blow until they struck Master.”

Subaru: “Waitwaitwaitwait, there’s too much new vocab! Dimension?”

Shaula: “Dimension Gate. It’s a trick to prevent people from reaching the tower.”

From Shaula’s way of talking, Subaru grasped that this Dimension Gate, and whatever else, had cut off their path to the Flower Meadow thanks to that “Sand Time”, but even so, the space distortion had been lifted by the efforts of E□M□T in the end.

Shaula: “But, thanks to that, I knew that Master was actually Master, so everything turned a’ight in the end. If Master’d been struck, Master would definitely have been mad at meeee, wouldn’t he?”

Subaru: “Uh huh, yeah, probably. I hope you’d get away with just me being mad at you.”

In actual fact, he had been struck and died twice, so he was uneasy about whether he could even get up to those anger levels.

It was rare for his anger to not spike up rapidly when meeting the culprits who killed him. Part of the reason why it hadn’t now was because he understood that it had been some kind of accident, and that it was pointless even to pursue Shaula’s responsibility.

Meili: “Bu~t, if you’d managed to strike him, Onii-san would’ve ended up dead, wouldn’t h~e? If that happened, then I don’t think we’d be talking about getting mad or not he~re.”

Perched on Shaula’s back, Meili interjected into the conversation in place of Subaru, who was half embroiled in his forgiveness. Upon hearing her words, Shaula let out a fit of rather unlady-like, uncontrollable laughter.

Shaula: “What are ya saying lil’ ankle biter? There’s no way myyyy Master would die from something like that? Cuz’ from the start, Master’s always been someone who you can never tell whether he’s dead or not dead.”

Meili: “Butbu~t, Sandworm-chan got hit so much, and he ended up dying, s~o…”

Shaula: “I don’t really give a damn about stuff like Worms or Bears ya know. Myyy Master wouldn’t die, that is what’s important. —If he’d died, then it’d just mean he’s not my Master.”

Smiling absentmindedly, Shaula gazed at Subaru with delighted looking eyes. Subaru’s spine shivered when she’d turned her innocent, smiling face towards him.

Innocence like that of a child’s, and faith tantamount to defenselessness. That which she put into Flugel was an ideal that she'd rigidly built up at her core more than he'd dared to imagine.

In accordance with Beatrice's worries, if there ever came a time where she'd come into disagreement with the current Subaru, then…

Shaula: "I apologize that I was late in picking you up from the Sand Palace afterwards. Whilst I let in the other group into the tower, Master and the rest with him ended up advancing into its depths, so I was all in a fluster."

Subaru: "Aah, no, it's fine… Though, wait, you said "Sand Palace"?"

Shaula: "Indeed. It's really dangerous over there, so it's better if you don't go into it. It's reckless to approach without having all the keys, even if it's you Master. There are Hungry Horse Kings prowling about there too."

Subaru: "Hungry Horse Kings…You mean those horse-like monsters?"

Sand Palace, Keys, Hungry Horse Kings. There were a lot of words which were weighing on his mind, but his mind wandered to the last one of them, the Hungry Horse Kings.

Perhaps it referred to that Centaur.

Shaula nodded at his question.

Shaula: "Those things weren't here around the time Master was here, so I thought you'd be surprised. In essence, they just prowl about inside of the Sand Palace, so you won't come across them unless you go to there. But once in a while one of those guys will venture outside, so I go and destroy them without any mercy."

Subaru: "Is there a lot of them?"

Shaula: "There's tons and tons."

Subaru felt truly revulsed from the bottom of his heart hearing Shaula confirm that without any hesitation.

The Centaur = Hungry Horse King's fighting strength, and of course it's appearance and ecology were all things which brought feelings of indescribable unpleasantness. He'd hoped that there'd been just one specimen of them if possible, but that didn't look like it was the case. She'd told him that from using the expression "tons and tons".

Meili: "Hungry Horse King… I'm also not familiar with that na~me. I'd like to see one, ma~ybe."

Subaru: "Stop it! That's not something a kid needs to see…"

Meili: "O-Onii-san…"

Subaru gave Meili a very stern warning, who'd spoken out those rash words. Maybe those words had tugged on Meili's heartstring who was something like a witchbeast Collector, but he wouldn't recommend her trying to get in contact with them to fill them in for a picture book.

Shaula nodded in agreement at Subaru's words.

Shaula: "I think it's best not to. The Hungry Horse Kings are a witchbeast with the concept that their horns can regenerate over and over again, so you can't make arrangements with them like with other witchbeasts. Kill all enemies on sight, this is their justice."

Meili: "Blegh, I understa~nd."

Pouting with a gesture appropriate of her age, Meili retracted her curiosity.

Whilst feeling relived by that situation, Shaula once again spoke out to Subaru, saying "So,"

Shaula: "Master, was that all you wanted to talk about?"

Subaru: "Aah, for now that's a-… No, wait, that's not all."

Shaula: "—?"

With her head still inclined, Shaula prepared to receive his question with a “Bring it on!” attitude. Considering that she had opened her heart to them till now, it was quite insincere of him to continue keeping his guard up. But sometimes you had to steel your heart no matter how painful it was.

If he could change something by just saying one thing in preparation for the future, then doing so would be fortuitous.

Subaru: “Shaula, this is my request. Don’t cause me, or my companions any harm.”

Shaula: “…”

Subaru: “Your Master’s order was to attack anyone who approached the tower…So I would think? Since we’re inside, we are not covered by that. So, there’s no need for you to attack us anymore. Don’t cause us any harm. Absolutely none.”

Shaula: “…”

Shaula narrowed her eyes at Subaru, who’d repeated his words once more to make absolutely sure.

As he looked on at her narrowed eyes, he saw that their color was of a deep green hue. Shaula, whose expression had been pretty much all smiles since they’d met her, had stopped smiling as if she was in deep thought for the first time.

For a while, there was silence. Subaru, who’d been holding his breath due to this strange tension, couldn’t stand it any longer, and let out his breath. Then,

Shaula: “Mhm, OK. I’veee memorized it word for word as a new command from Master~”

Subaru: “…”

Shaula: “Master?”

Immediately after she decided to accept it, Shaula’s features changed, turning back to her frivolousness. Shaula brought her face super close to Subaru's, whose eyes had widened without following her sudden change in attitude.

Their eyes stared at each other's at point blank range, but he couldn't find any deception or dishonesty in her green eyes. At least, as far as Subaru could see.

Subaru: "Is it okay with you?"

Shaula: "I have no choice. It's what Master's said. It's not particularly hard. Non-violence, non-obedience."

Subaru: "Since you're going to follow the order, don't you mean that you'll obey?"

Shaula: "Even if you could do as you pleased with my body, I wouldn't let you snatch away my heart!"

Subaru: "What a pain in the ass you are…!"

He prodded Shaula in the forehead, whose face had tensed up, so to make her take a step back. Shaula fell back letting out an "AAUUUUH", causing Meili to panic on her back, even though she was safe.

In any case, Subaru's request somehow looked like it had been readily accepted. It wasn't clear how effective it was going to be, but, at least…

Subaru: "Like, as long as I don't let her down, the promise should be kept."

Beatrice: "If that's the only requirement, then things will be fine, in fact. You expect to let her down, but you won't, I suppose."

Subaru: "I'm really grateful for being held to that high esteem, but in this case, isn't that part of your expectations where you think I won't let her down being far too optimistic? What would Flugel do? Should I grow wings? He sounds like he's German."

On that topic, to Subaru it felt like Flugel was a German word that meant "Wings".

He'd never expected that he'd be pulling stuff out from there, but that was suspicious as well. At any rate, this Flugel, altogether with Shaula's name smelled fishy as hell.

Subaru: "That's right, Shaula. I've got just one last question to ask you."

Shaula: "What is it~?"

Shaula's cheeks were getting pinched by Meili, her face looked completely vapid.

With his back still turned to Shaula, Subaru spoke with a casual gesture,

Subaru: "Maia, Electra, Taygeta, Alcyone, Celaeno, Asterope."

Beatrice: "…Subaru?"

Beatrice, who was beside Subaru, had a puzzled look on her face as she heard Subaru reciting those words out.

They were just a string of words which should have no meaning when hearing only their sounds.

Of course, they had just heard about four of those words a while ago, but they wouldn't be words which were so easy to remember as to recite them from memory. —Given that they were unfamiliar words.

Subaru: "All of those, in order from top to bottom, are this Pleiades Watchtower's…Err, I mean this Great Library Pleiades' floor names right?"

Shaula: "Correct~"

Subaru: "So, where's Merope?"

Shaula: "…"

Shaula once again kept her silence on hearing Subaru's question. However, this silence was different to the one before, it was a silence of surprise like she'd been caught completely unaware.

You could faintly hear the sound of her breath being taken away; Subaru deemed that he'd managed to touch on the truth.

Beatrice: "Subaru, what did you ask her, in fact? What does Merope mean, I suppose."

Subaru: "It's the name of the last one of the seven sisters. It'd be strange to not have seven in Pleiades."

The floors had been allocated six names from the first floor to the sixth. However, the names that followed that motif were from the start, the seven sisters—A floor with the seventh name attached to it should exist.

Subaru: "If it's not the Seventh Floor…, then I guess it would be a Floor Zero."

Shaula: "There's a Floor Zero. Master named them, so it's natural… However, the place was made after Master left, so you shouldn't know where it is."

Shaula replied to Subaru's guesswork with a hoarse voice. Subaru felt Beatrice beside him startle in surprise, but he licked his parched lips and narrowed his eyes.

He felt no sense of achievement at having found something hidden. After all, it was because it wasn't something that was hidden for Subaru.

Subaru "If the First Floor is the highest floor, then Floor Zero must be the super-highest floor? In regards to entering it, h-……"

Shaula: "—No."

Shaula quickly interrupted Subaru's words, who was about to ask her how to enter it. Feeling the strength in the tone of her voice, Subaru took a quick glimpse back at her. When he did, he saw that Shaula's facial expression hadn't changed.

She was still smiling with a look of honesty about her. However, there was a faint look of loneliness plastered around her eyes.

Shaula: “You haven’t fulfilled the conditions yet. Master came back to see me in the middle of his journey, and I’m satisfied with that. That’s why Floor Zero is a No.”

Subaru: “…”

Though her tone of voice still hadn’t changed, it instead felt like a firm wall to the point that it felt queer.

The promise they’d exchanged a few minutes ago, and the pervading danger that was quite capable of shaking him even at his core, strongly appealed to him of the sense of danger that was drifting off her.

Thus, Subaru gave up on inquiring her further about this place.

Subaru: “Gotcha. I won’t speak such nonsense anymore. We’ll just keep to our earlier promise.”

Shaula: “Roger Roger~ I shall keep it~ I shall super-keep it~”

Shaula broke into a broad smile, in high spirits as if she’d forgotten their current exchange. Subaru let out a deep sigh as he listened to her upbeat voice from behind him.

Beatrice: “Subaru, if it gets too much, you’ll say so, right?”

Subaru: “Mhm, it’s alright. Just so much stuff is on my mind.”

He gave a weak smile as he heard Beatrice’s words of worry, before then affectionately patting her head. When he did so, Beatrice couldn’t say anything, but this was also a rite for Subaru to settle himself down.

Flugel’s abnormalness had become apparent in his conversation with Shaula. It was no big deal. He too was the same as Subaru.

Subaru, Al, Hoshin, and Flugel.

A person who’d craved the limelight who’d brought knowledge that shouldn’t be in this world, and ostentatiously left it behind. He had no more doubt, Flugel was a person from the same place as him.

Subaru: “Centuries ago, huh?”

After reflecting back on that for a long, long time, Subaru violently scratched his head.

What had he felt in this different world, what had he thought, what had he aimed for, what had he sought for—.

What had this man, who seemed to have renounced the name “Sage” and planted the tree, desired?

Whilst he thought about those kinds of things, he wondered whether he still lived on in this world.

Then, coming from Subaru’s back, was—

Shaula: “Master”

Subaru: “Mhm?”

Shaula called out to him casually. Without stopping in his tracks, Subaru just turned his face around to glance at her. Shaula looked up at Subaru looking a little bashful.

Her expression was adorned by a truly delightful looking smile,

Shaula: “Welcome home again, Master. —This Shaula has been awaiting the “Great Erudite” Flugel’s return with all her heart.”

Chapter 21:
Monolith's Trial

1

Regarding Shaula's welcoming words—While Subaru did understand that they'd been misdirected to a different person, he decided that he'd receive them without denying them in the end.

There was also Beatrice's advice.

There was no doubt that in practicality allowing Shaula to mistake Subaru as Flugel was rather convenient for them. With this in place now it meant that an outcome where Shaula became hostile and commenced battle wouldn't necessarily end up in them being scattered about by her overwhelming strength.

Since she was treating them favorably for now, Subaru could at least dullen his hand of attack. Though if he were to do that, considering that he lacked in actual strength even under the best of circumstances, it'd probably be enough to end up as a main factor in him making a colossal blunder.

Emilia: "You needn't worry, Subaru. Even if Shaula realizes that in truth you're not her Master, I'm sure she wouldn't do anything awful."

Those were Emilia's words, who seemed to have been eavesdropping on their conversation behind them.

Emilia, who had her silver hair styled in long braids, confidently assured that to Subaru, whilst she fiddled with the end of one of her braids with her fingers.

Subaru: "I'm glad of Emilia-tan's seal of approval, but…What's the rationale behind it?"

Emilia: "I don't really fully understand what you mean by the expression "What's the rationale behind it", but, Shaula's a good girl, isn't she? She saved you, and us as well, so I can say that we will all get along. If we do, there shouldn't be any need to fight, right?"

Subaru: "…Right."

Her opinion was a little too optimistic, but he could say that being too pessimistic was also enough of a bad habit.

Even if Shaula found out the truth, it didn't mean that she'd get aggressive straight away. Even if the facts came to light, Shaula should keep herself from coming to blows at her own judgement. So, Emilia's thoughts that they should all get along weren't so misguided, at least he could allow himself to think so.

The reason behind that intent wasn't a calculating goal like appealing to one's emotions, but rather because he didn't want to fight against her.

Ram: "Don't take Emilia's rough ideas word for word, Barusu. We're in the "Sage's" Watchtower here, and we need to challenge it to even make our way back to the sand dunes. We lose nothing by keeping our guards up as much as possible."

Emilia: "Jeez, you sure were quick to put it like that, Ram. You should really loosen up a little…"

Ram: "The result of having let down my guard was that I ended up being thrown down to the underground area with Barusu and Anastasia-sama. With how delicate I am, that feeling of despair was unbearable…perhaps that's why Emilia-sama you have no clue about that."

Emilia: "Mhm, I guess so. But, surely if it's an underground area around this place you're talking about, then shouldn't it be no big deal for you? I don't know why, but I've been in reaaally good shape since coming to the Augria Sand Dunes, ya know?"

It seemed like Emilia had replied to the sharp Ram's words in a rather relaxed manner. Emilia and Ram's relationship as master and vassal had been pretty good since a year ago. The way Ram spoke and behaved towards Emilia showed a little lack of respect, but Emilia looked like she couldn't help but be happy receiving that treatment.

Emilia, who should have experienced the trauma of discrimination and contempt, may have contrarily felt that Ram's words didn't contain that sort of animosity.

Subaru: "At any rate, Emilia-tan, what do you mean by you being in good shape?"

Emilia: "How should I put it, the air goes well with my skin, I guess. Mana too has a slightly different tone to it depending on the country or region you're in, so I think something like that's happening, but…The mana in this place especially seems to go well with my skin. Though I guess I shouldn't be very happy about that."

Subaru: "Well, I suppose so. But considering that this is the place where the Witch is sealed, full of these witchbeasts…"

Emilia had clenched her fist as if she'd felt a surge of strength go through her. However, straight after, a bitter looking smile appeared on her dismal-looking face. Her opinion had been an emboldened one, for sure, as he sympathized with the mood she was in.

Following what he'd mentioned above, he was silently grateful that Emilia's strength had grown in this area they were in, which was chock-full of danger with the Witch and the witchbeasts. Yet even so, the figure which Shaula had defeated had been engraved in Subaru's mind, so that wasn't a reason that could end up giving him some optimism.

Subaru: "Though, the conditions have changed. Unlike before where she could attack us from the tower without us being able to do anything, now that the distance is such that you can see each other's faces, Emilia-tan shouldn't end up losing against her."

Shaula: "What is it? What is it?"

Subaru: "Nothing, was just talking about how you have crazy good eyesight. You managed to throw attacks at us from the tower with pinpoint accuracy when we were really far off, didn't you? How the hell does that work?"

Shaula: "Ohhh, that's just done by linking myyyyy aim and myyyy stingers with mana, and that makes it so it's pulled to where you are. Hell's Snipe was Master's invention, ya know?"

Subaru: "…I see, you didn't even have to train her, eh, Flugel."

He'd gone through hell and back again thanks to that. He'd probably never get a chance to talk to Flugel, but if he did get a chance like at the tea party, he'd definitely be giving him some very colorful, choice words.

Subaru let out a sigh as he heard the upbeat Shaula humming. Then—

Julius: "Sorry to interrupt you in the middle of your chat, but we've arrived."

Subaru: "Oh?"

On the spiral staircase which led to the upper floors of the tower—He heard Julius' voice, who'd been at the front of the group, leading them up.

Lifting his face up at the knight's words, who was escorting Anastasia by the hand, he could suddenly see the ceiling from the other side of Julius who was standing diagonally up from him.

Subaru: "No, it's not the ceiling, but the floor part of the floor above, I should say."

Beatrice: "We must be on the Fifth Floor, "Celaeno", I suppose. All there is here is a door to the outside, Betty and the others first entered from here, in fact."

Betty, who was next to him, commented that to him just as they neared the Fifth Floor. As he nodded in agreement to her words, Subaru immediately noticed that something was out of place, and said, "Uh?"

If she was implying that after they'd been separated Emilia and the others had entered the tower from the Fifth Floor, then…

Subaru: "How did the Dragon Carriage and Gyan get down to the Bottom Floor? I mean, there's no way that this staircase is wide enough to let a Dragon Carriage roll by, right?"

Spreading his arms out across the spiral staircase he'd walked up, Subaru checked its width. The width of the staircase was reasonably wide, but even so it wouldn't fit two Subarus with arms stretched out abreast. It might have been barely possible to let the huge body of an Earth Dragon pass down it, but there was no way that the carriage part of the Dragon Carriage was getting through.

And of course, letting the Earth Dragon walk down this long staircase itself was a path which really shouldn't be trodden even if it was theoretically possible.

Subaru: "Is there some sort of contraption like an elevator poking around here in fact? If there is, then we need to use it next time. Keeping healthy is great and all, but it ain't good to always disregard modern conveniences."

Emilia: "Sorry, I don't really get what you're saying… But, how the Dragon Carriage got down there is simple. Shaula lifted it up and carried it down."

Subaru: "…Pardon?"

Subaru felt like he'd missed something, and so he asked her again. Emilia frowned at his reply which had been said in English, but she nevertheless grasped that he seemed to have asked her to repeat herself, so she continued her words by saying, "So,"

Emilia: "Shaula effortlessly lifted the Dragon Carriage along with the Earth Dragon up, and simply brought them down to the bottom."

Subaru: "Nonononononono, there's no way. Wouldn't a Dragon Carriage weigh over a ton with how huge it is? And you said she did it as a set with the Earth Dragon too…"

Subaru peeled his eyes wide open at those horrifying remarks, but no one from his companions denied it. Finally, Shaula puffed out her ample chest in pride, and flared out her nostrils.

Shaula: “It’s as she said, the one who carried them down was meeee. Oh man, it was a piece of cake. If I’d left the lizard near the doorway, he may have ended up becoming loopy due to the miasma streaming in from the outside, dontcha think? I was just a lil’ worried. You can praise me you know!”

Subaru: “I do feel grateful, but now I know that your slender arms aren’t actually slender arms, and it weirds me out. A person with superhuman strength… I imagine even Reinhardt wouldn’t be able to do this!”

Though in Subaru’s mind the most frightfully-shocking human was indisputably Reinhardt, but wouldn’t it likely be impossible even for him to lift up something that weighed over what you’d expect a human could lift?

Even if he could cut the world into ribbons with his sword pressure, even if he could walk on water, even if he could revive himself again, carrying a Dragon Carriage with one hand for him would be —

Subaru: “I guess he’d be able to do that. That makes me feel just a bit uneasy. Is that guy really human?”

Shaula: “Hmmph, despite myyyy story, Master’s thinking of someone else. Jealousy.”

In any case, he now understood how the Dragon Carriage had been carried to the bottommost floor. He hadn’t in actuality seen her carrying it, so the impact of the scene was diminished, but he had to take it as a new threat potential in the eventuality that the enraged Shaula problem cropped up.

And, just as they’d finished talking about that, the group arrived on the Fifth Floor. “Celaeno”, as had been pointed out many times, was where the entrance that led to the inside and outside of the tower was.

A huge door was built in one place at the back of the tower which was cylindrical in shape.

It was large enough that you had to look up at it, and its width was easily close to 10 meters. It was an unnecessarily huge door, but how much strength it would take to open it, that too was an issue —.

Subaru: “Doesn’t it look difficult to enter this via the trial doorway?”

Julius: “At least, when I tried pushing it, it wouldn’t give an inch. Thanks to that, we weren’t able to search for you, Anastasia-sama, and the others.”

As he gazed at the super-huge door, Subaru let out a sigh, and Julius nodded at him. With it being as heavy as it looked, it seemed like this door would stop any challengers in their path.

Opening it may have been possible for Shaula, who could easily carry a Dragon Carriage in one hand, but for the average Joe it would have been impossible. Therefore Emilia and Julius had ended up being unable to leave to search for Subaru and the others, and that looked like it had ended up worrying them a lot.

Beatrice: “But, it sure does look like it’s a bit creaky here and there, I suppose.”

Anastasia: “I think it’s ‘cause the Sand Wind’s kinda strong, the sand that gets blown up by the wind must be streamin’ in, don’cha think? When ya take a bit of a deep breath, it immediately feels like the inside of yer mouth is fulla’ sand, ‘n so it’s darn unpleasant.”

Sticking her tongue out, Anastasia traced it with her finger and cleaned some sand grains from it. Just like she had said, the inside of Subaru’s mouth too felt like it had sand in it. He’d taken notice that minute grains of sand always whirled around the Fifth Floor that led to the outside.

Julius: “The sand from the sand dunes is full of miasma. If you don’t take it seriously because you think it’s just a small amount, it could end up eating into your body from the inside. We should move away from here as quickly as possible, so long as we have nothing to do here.”

Subaru: “In that case, let’s hop to it! My goal isn’t here, but rather on the Fourth Floor “Alcyone”… Though yet more stairs sounds exhausting.”

Shaula: “The same ol’ weakness~. But, you needn’t fret. The staircase between the Fourth and Fifth Floor is way shorter than the one between the Fifth and Sixth Floor. If they were too far apart, even I’d feel tired going back and forth, so that was taken into consideration~”

Meili: “Stop shaking me abo~ut.”

Shaula, who’d spread her arms out wide inside of the sand cloud and ran about in it, was met with a karate chop to the back of her head from Meili. Looking at that scene from the corner of their eyes, the group went through the Fifth Floor and headed to the staircase that led up to the Fourth Floor.

The breeze gently streamed in, and through his sight that was clouded over in a yellow haze by the gloomy above, where he looked up, there was a ceiling that didn’t look so far away—He could see the floor of the floor above, and it looked like her opinion had in fact been true, in that it wasn’t too far away.

And so, as they set their sights on the Fourth Floor “Alcyone” whilst chatting, the group continued to march on upwards—And before long, they reached their target floor.

The constitution of the Fourth Floor itself wasn’t too different from the Fifth or Sixth floor.

The cylindrical constitution of the tower hadn’t deviated from what it had been, and even its size hadn’t changed dramatically.—Nevertheless, there was still an obvious change of atmosphere.

First of all, the size of the floor that went up the stairs was quite different to that of the lower floors.

The circular floor had become much narrower compared to them. And that wasn't too surprising, because a circular wall had been built up as a partition like the main one of the building, and it used the space differently compared to the lower floors which had just been one big floor with nothing else to them.

The spiral staircase from the lower floors had connected straight to the heart of the Fourth Floor, and a great number of doors were dotted across the wall that encircled the surroundings, indicating that there were multiple rooms on this floor.

Shaula: "This is the Fourth Floor, "Alcyone", that I use as myyyy dwelling area. And, the "Green Room" which I think is what Master came here for is right here."

Subaru: "The Green Room…?"

As Subaru stood in bewilderment looking on at the Fourth Floor's new look, Shaula, who was standing on the floor after having come out after him, pointed out one of the doors in front with an overly-dramatic gesture.

The doors that were on the Fourth Floor were all of a normal size compared to the doorway on the Fifth Floor. It didn't look like they'd need any special powers to open them, but there was a strange feeling floating about the door she had pointed out.

Just like the name "Green Room" implied, the door was covered in countless green ivy, and it had ended up in a state that looked similar to what an unexplored region of a jungle might look like that had been left untouched for centuries.

Subaru: "By saying this is what you think I came here for, do you mean that Rem and Patrasche are here?"

Shaula: "I don't know their names, but the girl and the lizard are here."

Ram: "You needn't worry. You can rest assured that Rem and that Earth Dragon are inside."

For the hesitant Subaru, Shaula's testimony felt like it had lacked in reliability just a tad. Ram snorted her nose at them as if looking down at them like idiots, cut into the lead of the group, and headed towards the Green Room.

She stretched out her hand over to the door that was covered in ivy and pushed it (which looked like it was made of stone) without any hesitation. Even with how thin her arms were, the door opened readily as if gliding open, and therefrom the Green Room came into view.

Ram: “Aren’t you coming in? Barusu.”

Subaru: “I’m coming, I’m coming.”

Subaru let go of his apprehension when he heard Ram’s question, which had felt like she was testing him, and moved forward. Then he confidently entered inside of the Green Room, following Ram who’d entered ahead of him.

However, straight after Ram and Subaru entered inside, the door slammed shut. Subaru turned to look behind him in surprise.

Subaru: “Oy, we’ve been split up.”

Ram: “There’s no need to be scared.—This room seems to have a limit on how many people can enter it. The proprietor of the room seems to hate having more.”

Ram said that about the debacle that had happened behind them, and brisky kept on moving forward. Subaru scratched his head at her explanation, and then immediately set out after her.

The Green Room didn’t betray the bizarreness of that door, its interior was covered in a copious amount of green. Wriggling plants stretched out just about everywhere you looked, across the ceiling, the walls and the floor. Every so often, he would need to stoop down to avoid the dangling ivy that got in his way, and side step it.

And, laying at the depths of this room dominated by such greenery was—.

Subaru: “Rem… And Patrasche.”

There was a small plant-free space at the far back of this room immersed in greenery. Green grass grew dense and thick there, and some beds had been made, covered in small flowers that had taken bloom there.

Rem, her sleeping face ever the same, lay on top of the bed which was made up from greenery and flowers.

Her white cheeks hadn’t changed in color, and neither had her sleeping face. Her chest was rising and falling with each faint breath, but when it came to proof that she was alive, those were her only vital signs barring the warmth she gave off.

Yet even so, he felt a great sense of relief to the point that his strength fizzled out of him.

Subaru: “She really was safe huh…”

Ram: “I did tell you so. Or, did you think that I’d lie about Rem or something? What meaning would I have in doing that.”

Subaru: “I ain’t saying that, but I couldn’t help worrying until I saw her with my own eyes you know… And Patrasche, I’m glad that you’re safe too.”

Subaru gave a faint bittersweet smile as he heard Ram’s words, and then he walked further in towards where Rem was sleeping on her bed of grass and Patrasche sat crouched down.

She too was lying sprawled on a bed of green, just like Rem. The situation wasn’t all too different than when she’d lie down on top of her rushes in a barn. However, one thing was definitely different—

Subaru: “…This grass is different to ordinary grass, isn’t it?”

Patrasche: “…”

Patrasche nuzzled her nose against Subaru’s palm, who’d stepped over to her to make sure she was alright. Whilst affectionately receiving his beloved dragon’s response, Subaru felt a faint surge of warmth coming from the sprawled bed of greenery which Patrasche was on—he cocked his head in thought.

Ram: “It appears like the Spirit’s power can speed up the healing process.”

Subaru: “There’s a spirit here? Where?”

Ram: “You’re a Spirit User and you don’t know? This whole room is the Spirit.”

Subaru: “…”

Subaru briskly looked around the room at Ram’s words as he stroked Patrasche. He couldn’t see the Spirit’s existence reflected in his eyes amongst the moss that grew on the walls or in the overgrown ivy, however straight after he’d been told that by her, Subaru took notice of the overwhelming amount of Mana there was.

His breathing and body felt at ease as if he was in an area which was rich in oxygen.

There may have been a similar effect to that in the Healing Mana. Even the uninjured Subaru felt like he was receiving that grace when he relaxed himself and took deep breaths.

Subaru: “I think I get it. This is the Spirit for sure… Can’t it talk?”

Ram: “The Spirit here is of a different kind… Though, I guess you could easily say that there’s no such thing as spirits who don’t differ in some capacity. Emilia-sama’s esteemed Great Spirit, and Beatrice-sama…They’re special, it doesn’t seem like the Spirit over here has any sort of volition. It just tries to cure the wounds and illnesses of anyone who enters inside.”

Subaru: “H-eehh.”

Ram: “What’s the matter?”

Subaru: “It’s nothing important. I just thought that sounded like a Witch I know of.”

Ram snorted her nose at that, as if she’d thought hearing the word “Witch” was just some nonsense of his, then she walked over to Rem’s side. Following that, ivy started to grow right behind her, rapidly knitting itself together until it became a green chair that propped her body up, as if it had been cognizant of the elder sister's intentions to watch over her younger sister.

Ram bowed her head in consideration for the Spirit, and said: "I really appreciate it" as she let herself slump on the chair.

Subaru: "Whooooa, awesome."

Ram: "At least they're certainly the most gentlemanly amongst the Spirits I've known up until now, don't you think? You too should follow their example just a tad, Barusu. From both this Spirit, and that Knight Julius."

Subaru: "I'd rather not from either of them."

Subaru drove both of those individuals away from his head, and stroked Patrasche. He stroked her head, and tickled underneath her chin with his palm, before slowly letting her drop her raised head.

Subaru: "Get some rest now. You saved me once again, and overworked yourself. There's no drawback in taking some paid leave every once in a while ya know."

Patrasche: "…"

Patrasche curled her body up, closed her yellow eyes and fell asleep after she heard Subaru's gentle words. She'd brought them all the way to the tower, and they'd been able to confirm each other's safety.

Just that had been plenty, Patrasche's work had been plenty.

Subaru: "Any changes to Rem? If curing people is this room's raison d'être, then I wonder if it can have that sort of intervention on how Rem is right now…."

Ram: "I'm sorry, but that's a slim hope. It's neither good nor bad… But there's been no progress in her treatment. It can't cure something which is neither a wound or an illness. Seems like that sort of judgement, doesn't it?"

Subaru: “…I guess so.”

Even so, it didn’t look like the Green Room’s spirit was unwilling to take care of the still sleeping Rem. It was also devoted towards Ram, who watched over the sleeping Rem.

Subaru: “In the end, this means nothing’s changed still, doesn’t it?”

Ram: “…If we want things to change, then we have to fulfill the aim that came up in the tower, don’t you think?”

Subaru: “The Great Library Pleiades, its trials, huh?”

Their original purpose had been to get in touch with the “Sage” who was in the Pleiades Watchtower, borrow her sagacity that had been stipulated to be omniscient, and save Rem and the victims of “Lust” and “Gluttony” that they’d left behind in Priestella.

However, Shaula, the “Sage” of the Pleiades Watchtower had been one in name only, and in actuality what they’d encountered was just one weird girl who’d mistook Subaru as the “Sage” Flugel. The Pleiades Watchtower had turned out to be the Great Library Pleiades, and the knowledge that had been stipulated as Shaula’s omniscience was sleeping inside countless books that were kept in the libraries, or so had been said.

That’s right, their purpose had become really distorted, and their end-goal had shifted in a direction which they couldn’t even predict.

Subaru: “I’ll get ahold of this knowledge and get Rem back.—I haven’t wavered in that purpose.”

Ram: “…Yeah. So I hope.”

Ram cast her eyes down at Subaru rotating his shoulders, and nimbly stretching. With that, she tenderly took ahold of the sleeping Rem’s hand without glancing at Subaru.

Closing one of his eyes at Ram’s attitude, Subaru pointed his finger at the ceiling.

Subaru: “I’ve decided to challenge the trial above. What about you?”

Ram: “Don’t you think it’d be too much of a cause for anxiety if no one is looking after Rem? Considering that, I will take on that duty. Since from the start it was for watching over Rem that I came on this journey and even went as far as asking such unreasonableness from Roswaal-sama.”

Subaru: “That’s, well, yeah I guess so. In that case I’ll entrust Rem to you.”

Ram: “I can’t really do much other than watch her, though.”

Subaru: “You watching over has meaning you know.”

Saying that to Ram, who had unusually disparaged herself, Subaru looked over at Rem’s sleeping face just before he exited the room. She was in a dream where her facial expression had been extinguished, and he couldn’t say she looked either peaceful or anguished.

He stretched out his hand to her forehead which her fringe rested against, and gently touched it as if he were tickling her.

Subaru: “Well then, I’m off, I’ll see you later.”

Rem: “…”

Of course, she didn’t reply.

Ram understood that he’d been talking to himself as well, so she didn’t callously interject. Satisfied with that, Subaru turned towards the room’s exit.

He couldn’t help himself from stretching his hand out to the wall, and as he touched the ivy, he asked the spirit, “Please take care of Rem and Patrasche”, lest the Spirit forget.

Then, just before he exited the room, he suddenly stopped in his tracks.

Subaru: “By the way, you said something like you couldn’t leave Rem alone, but just now you’d left the room empty. Why did you bother to come downstairs?”

Ram: “…”

Subaru: “No way, could it be that when you heard that I’d woken up, you came to see me as quickly as you could? If there was something up, then please let me know…”

Ram: “Get a move on and leave.”

Subaru: “Huh? No, but, if there’s something on your mind, then won’t you tell me.”

Ram: “Hurry up and leave.”

Overwhelmed by the ghastly aura that was spouting up from her, Subaru couldn’t say anything more to her, and thus was left with no choice but to flee from the Green Room crestfallen.

2

Subaru: “I never really get what Ram thinks about, but I especially don’t understand her well as of late.”

Emilia: “Hmm, I don’t think so, Ram is surprisingly open with that sort of stuff. I find it cute that she tries to hide that open part of hers.”

Subaru: “It’s quite rare for you to speak as if you’re her elder… Though I guess you really are her elder.”

Emilia: “Yeah, it’s a little bit like I’m her big sis. I’m older than anyone else here…Oh, wait.”

Beatrice: “Mhhhm, Betty is definitely the big sis here, in fact. That’s carved in stone and no one can paint over it, I suppose. You should all adore me, in fact.”

As soon as he’d left the Green Room, he’d joined back with everyone waiting outside, which had led to this conversation.

Emilia looked a tad frustrated at having had her seat of being the oldest in the Team taken away from her, whilst Beatrice puffed out her flat chest in satisfaction. Though, to be honest, neither of them had big sister like demeanors.

Besides, a conversation of who the oldest was in light of their circumstances was in fact quite a delicate matter.

Anastasia: “Hmm? Natsuki-kun, what is it? D’ya have somethin’ ya want ta tell me?”

Subaru: “Not really. Just meant to say that there’s many faces here that don’t match their real age in appearance.”

Anastasia: “Oh? I get told “You look younger than you actually are” quite often. It’s a lil’ hard for me ta take ‘em as a compliment, but I look down on bein’ looked down on, so dependin’ how they say it, I may accept it.”

Though Anastasia smiled with a strong look of business about her face, how she was really feeling was unclear.

Anastasia was just over 20 years old, but she looked about 14 or 15 However, what Subaru had wanted to point out wasn’t what lay on the outside, but what lay on the inside. Anastasia still had her body hijacked by Eridna currently.

If Eridna’s birth had been the same as Beatrice, then it wouldn’t be difficult for her to enter into the race for the oldest. However, it’d be impossible for him to reveal what he’d concealed up until now over such a trifling matter, so Subaru didn’t say anything else.

Moreover, there were other prominent candidates for the race for the oldest when confined to the present.

Shaula: “Hey, what’s up Master? Uh huh, hm, didn’cha like the grassy smell of the Green Room? I get that. I toooo find that room nasty and dislikeable~”

Subaru: “Didn’t you say there was a pungent smell coming from me too? You’re cool with mine?!”

Shaula: “Master’s is a smell I’ve gotten used to. Truly. This time it ain’t no lie!”

Subaru: “Shut your trap.”

Keeping Shaula away from him, who had nestled up close to him and sniffed him, Subaru looked up at the floor above. Those left on the Fourth Floor would challenge the trial above barring Rem and Ram—.

Subaru: “What about you? Are you coming with us?”

Shaula: “Meeee? Weell, I don’t particularly need to, but since it’s been so long, I do think I want to come with you. Cuz it gets lonely not being able to talk despite being perfectly able to. I’ve been cooped up in silence for centuries, so I want to talk and talk and taaaalk~”

Subaru still couldn’t get cold at her with her having said such a heartrending thing with a friendly smile plastered on her face. He imagined that Emilia and Beatrice both knew that sort of loneliness all too well. His feelings towards Shaula were deeply tinged with sympathy, so he didn’t really have any intentions of actively keeping her away.

Meili: “I rea~lly like this Onee-san, so I thi~nk she should come with us.”

Julius: “It’s only natural that the examiner is present there if we’re going to take the trial. It’s just for her to accompany us to make sure that we don’t commit any irregularities.”

Support for that came in an unexpected form from Meili and Julius. With them having done so, it meant that the majority of them backed Shaula accompanying them.

Lastly, Subaru looked over at Anastasia, who hadn’t made any comments about it, so to unite their consensus.

Receiving that gaze, Anastasia tilted her head and said “Me?”

Anastasia: “I don’t think there’s any meaning in just me opposin’ this here, ‘n I ain’t got any reason ta oppose it in the first place, ‘n it’s not particularly a problem? Besides…”

Subaru: “Besides?”

Anastasia: “That girl seems way too attached ta ya Natsuki-kun, so if we take her with us, she may tell us stuff about the contents of the trial. She may inadvertently come ta our side.”

Shaula: “I’m sowwy, but I haven’t the foggiest about the contents of the trials, so I’m gonna have to let you down there.”

Subaru: “Jeez, did you really have to say it like that.”

Anastasia laughed with a Tahaha, and Shaula looked smug as if she had been praised.

It was questionable whether Anastasia’s anticipations boded good fortune or bad, but for now, no one seemed to have any objections to Shaula accompanying them.

Although he couldn’t deny that it was a little careless, leaving her alone was also an anxiety in itself, so the only difference came from leaving the danger far away or near at hand.

Subaru: “Okay. We shall go together. It doesn’t look like we can count on you, but I have high hopes of you coming up with ideas.”

Shaula: “He’s talking to you, lil’ ankle biter. Do your best!”

Beatrice: “He’s talking to you, I suppose! What were you listening to, in fact!”

Shaula curled her lips with a look on her face of having brought up a topic that she shouldn’t have. Whilst listening to Beatrice’s angry yells, the group opened the door of a room opposite to the Green Room—and when they peered inside, they found the stairs that led up there.

Subaru: “We’re done with spiral staircases?”

Shaula: “The Fourth Floor “Alcyone” and the Third Floor “Taygeta” are directly connected. I don’t really go up unless I got business, so I’ve seldom been.”

Subaru: “What this business you refer to?”

Shaula: “It’s a young maiden’s secret.”

Moving his gaze away from Shaula as soon as she started to show signs of her inanities, Subaru looked over at Julius. Him and the others should have already challenged the Third Floor whilst he’d slept.

He expected that he’d be able to hear something useful out of him, but that knight calmly shrugged his shoulders.

Julius: “I apologize for this when you have expectations, but we understood very little about it. Immediately after you climb up to the Third Floor, you’ll come across the room that’s referred to as a trial, but…”

Subaru: “But?”

Julius: “What lies there is an unintelligible enigma. The honest truth is that we weren’t able to find any clues to solve it, and we ended up having no idea what to do.”

Subaru: “An unintelligible enigma…?”

Subaru shifted his attention to the top of the stairs without getting the point in Julius’ words. The floor above was dark, and he wasn’t able to tell how it looked from below. However, that stillness made it look more sinister.

Emilia: “But, it doesn’t look like you can just enter and see what to do. Nothing really changed even when we went in and out… We were simply just given the cold shoulder.”

Beatrice: “It makes me so irritated when I think on how we were ignored, I suppose.”

It seemed like Emilia and Beatrice also agreed with Julius’ impression.

In reality, although it was said to be a trial, none of them had been able to challenge it. His levels of wariness had just shot up as the word “Ordeal” closely resembled it.

Subaru: “Well it can’t be helped. Nothing ventured, nothing gained. —Then let us go?”

Emilia: “Yeah, that’s the spirit.”

Beatrice: “That’s the spirit, in fact.”

Shaula: “That’s the spirit.”

Receiving all three of their affirmations each in their own manner of speaking, Subaru took the initiative and put one of his feet on the stairs. Then, step by step, he headed up towards the floor above— Unlike the spiral staircases from before, the number of steps to get to the Third Floor was about the same as an ordinary building.

Thus, in contrast to his preparedness, Subaru stormed straight into the Third Floor “Taygeta” to the point that it felt he’d gotten there way too quickly.

Subaru: “I’m in a…”

Immediately after he entered, Subaru felt an overwhelming sense of unease. A clump of unease, or rather should he say that it was an expanse that invited nothing but unease?

—It was a white, white expanse.

Although it must be an extension of the tower that had up until now been cylindrical in shape, what greeted Subaru after he’d climbed the stairs was a strange expanse completely dyed in white in every direction.

The expanse-like vastness shouldn’t have been that different in size to the tower so far, but neither its walls, nor the end could be seen in this incredibly white expanse. When he looked up above, he couldn’t tell where the ceiling was, when he looked down at his feet, only the part where the stairs were was a slightly ajar black. Other than that, the floor was so white that it made him scared to walk on it.

He couldn’t tell that the floor was the floor, or he’d end up being hit by an illusion that felt like he was in continuous free fall just about everywhere. The ceiling and the walls were the same—Subaru felt like he’d probably end up going crazy if he lost sight of the stairs that led downstairs here

And, at the front of this white expanse—right in front of the stairs, there was a strange object floating up.

Subaru: “A stone slab…?”

That was the impression that slipped out from Subaru’s mouth when he looked at that object. In fact, the object was such that it could only be expressed like so.

It was a single, black slab, that had been built in the shape of a quadrilateral, and had an incredibly smooth feeling to it.

He couldn’t call it a “Stone slab” if it wasn’t built from stone, but he had no other way of calling it considering that it wasn’t metallic as well.

If he really had to call it something else that was more flashy, then he’d probably use the term “Monolith”.

The silent Monolith had acquired a strange floating power and was floating up dozens of centimeters above the floor.

Or at least it should be. His eyes were thrown completely out of whack in checking how far it was off the ground due to the whiteness of the floor, and it became more and more unclear to him. However, the Monolith that was floating in mid-air was there cool as you like.

It was roughly the same height as Subaru, and its width was about the size of two people lined up together—If he had to put it as something that was similar in size to it, then the impression he got was like as if a tatami was floating up.

Subaru: “What the heck is this strange thing?”

Julius: “If I were to try and put it into different words, I’d say this is the contrivance that stuck out this enigma before us.”

Julius glared at the Monolith, standing beside Subaru, whose awareness had been gripped by this strange spectacle.

Julius’ face looked sterner than usual, as if he’d been already made to experience great hardship by the Monolith many times over. The rest of them had made it up to the Third Floor now, and were huddled together in an effort to ward off the indistinct atmosphere present inside of the white expanse.

Subaru: “This ain’t a room I want to stay long in.”

Julius: “That I agree. If we stay here too long, it’s quite likely that we’ll lose our sense of balance. And if you end up running towards the stairs and your feet slip, I imagine your life could end up being cut short, wouldn’t you think?”

Anastasia: “Yoohoo, Julius. Stop with the unnecessary prattle.”

Anastasia puffed out her cheeks in protest at Julius’ prattle. It looked like she’d slipped on the way back before, which is what Julius was referring to.

However, Subaru had no intention of laughing at that mishap. In actual fact, this room had been clearly made with the goal of putting people’s senses out of whack. The room seemed like it embodied the wickedness of the nature of the person who’d made it.

Subaru: “So, what should we do about the main mystery?”

Beatrice: “You should touch that slab, in fact. The trial begins if you do, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Should I really touch the Monolith?”

Julius: “Monolith? That’s a name that fits quite well with its mysteriousness. Let’s call it like that from now on.”

Subaru stepped away from Julius, who was in admiration of that strangeness, and moved forward on their behalf. Since no one stopped him he walked all the way over to the Monolith.

He'd expected the Monolith to let off a strange, ominous feeling when he approached—But it wasn't like that, it was pretty much just a plain old slab of stone other than the fact it was floating. When he thought of it like a tatami floating about, he felt the fear he'd had at first fade just a little.

Subaru: "Anyways, so I'll go ahead and touch it? Can I get a countdown?"

Emilia: "Ah, right, I'd like to do it. Three, two, one…"

Subaru: "So damn quick! I got this, though. "

Emilia raised her hand up and volunteered to Subaru's appeal; then her countdown began. As she counted down, Subaru panicked and turned around to face the Monolith.

And then,

Emilia: "Zero—!"

Subaru touched the Monolith at the same time she counted zero—And the next moment, the surface of the black slab glowed from the inside. Just as it did, the scene in front of his eyes grew blurred.

No, it wasn't exactly blurred.

The Monolith which Subaru had touched started to grow in numbers whilst glowing with a black radiance.

The Monolith shot out replicated Monolith after Monolith from its back whilst making their surface glow. They were all hurled across the room at an incredible rate of knots, scattered in strange positions, all floating.

Countless Monoliths had been strewn out across the white expanse, and Subaru had been taken by surprise by that change. Then, passing through the awestruck Subaru's eardrums—straight to his brain, a voice echoed.

???: “—Touch the brightest of the hero destroyed by Shaula.”

Subaru: “—hk?!”

Subaru jerked his hand away from the Monolith in surprise when he heard that voice ring out so abruptly. And, as he staggered back, someone propped his back up from behind.

He turned around to look at them. There, he found Julius’ face. Julius touched his fringe with his left hand as he propped Subaru up with his right, and said,

Julius: “Well look at this. Our first surprise, can I count on you sympathizing with it, I wonder?”

Subaru: “What an assholish thing to say—!!”

Subaru’s protests only made Julius’ sardonic smile grow deeper.

In any case, the “Trial” had genuinely started now.

The trial of the Great Library Pleiades, Third Floor “Taygeta”.

Time-limit: “No Restrictions”. Number of attempts: “No Restrictions”. Challengers: “No Restrictions”.

—Trial, start.

Chapter 22:
The Asterism of the White Starry Sky

After he untangled himself from Julius, and stood unaided, he turned to face the “Trial”.

In front of Subaru’s eyes, the figures of countless replica Monoliths were spread out across the white expanse from the heart of the Monolith he’d touched. To be honest, there were so many of them that he’d get sick and tired were he to count them.

Subaru: “This would be the “Trial” you meant… right, Shaula?”

Shaula: “Looks like it right? I wanna see Master flaunt his forte!”

Subaru: “Don’t start saying stuff like a band would at a drinking party…”

He wouldn’t know since he’d never been to one, but that was probably how things went there.

Subaru looked around the room behind Shaula, who’d cheered him on with her easy-going manner. The floor was still enveloped in white, with everything from their ability to tell distance to their ability to tell height going haywire.

The only change that stood out were the Monoliths that were dotted about the place, but those too weren’t particularly different from the first one. There seemed to be a bit of a difference in size between them, but other than that, they were the same in that they both floated in mid-air and were made of a strange material.

Subaru: “Speaking of stuff that we were given as a clue other than those, there’s still that thing from before.”

What he’d recalled was the voice that had echoed inside his brain when he’d touched the Monolith.

???: “—Touch the brightest of the hero destroyed by Shaula.”

The sound hadn't come through his eardrums, but rather it'd been whispered straight to his brain inside his skull; it'd been closer to that. The voice he'd heard hadn't been a sound, so the general concept of it being "Someone's voice" couldn't be applied here.

If he were to put it in other words, it was like the words had been jammed into his brain like a sentence that he'd thought of. There was no sound in his thoughts. Thus, you couldn't comprehend who the voice belonged to. If anything, it was from himself.

Subaru: "That voice which could be heard was the trial question, you reckon? If that's the case…"

Julius: "Subaru, I'm sorry to interrupt whilst you're thinking, but there's a few important things I have to say. I don't think it'll hurt to go ahead after hearing those."

Julius, who'd played a practical joke on him earlier, said that to Subaru whilst he racked his mind. Nearby the stairs which led down, Emilia and the rest of them were circled around the Monolith frozen around it. Everyone of them looked puzzled. Subaru shrugged his shoulders in appreciation of Julius, who was beckoning them to his side, and said "Oh?"

Subaru: "Is that so? All of you challenged it before whilst I was sleeping. Did you make any progress?"

Julius: "I guess I can't really call it progress. Anyways. Subaru, please try and touch the stone slab… I mean, the "Monolith" that's right here."

Subaru: "Does doing this please you that much? Well, sure whatever…"

Subaru narrowed his eyes at Julius, who'd stuck to referring to it as a Monolith, and walked over to the Monolith that was on his right hand side. The slab was one of the replicas of the original Monolith. As he got closer, he could see that this one was just a little smaller than the original.

Subaru: "What if it's a trap, where the moment I touch it my arm gets swallowed up?”

Beatrice: “It’s okay, in fact. If something like that happened, Betty would become your right arm for the rest of your life, I suppose.”

Emilia: “Ah, then I’d become Subaru’s left hand. You can rest assured.”

Subaru: “Both of my arms would be gone if we suppose that though!”

Thanks to Beatrice and Emilia’s reassuring pledges, Subaru summoned up his courage and stretched out his hand to the Monolith. He wasn’t really worried about the act of touching it in itself.

So long as his companions had recommended him to do this, and didn’t try to stop him, he had no reason to doubt his safety. The issue was simply the chance that they were concealing the truth as with the Monolith’s replicating themselves—.

Subaru: “Oh?”

Still full of anxiety, as soon as his fingertips brushed against the Monolith, the black stone slab shone so brightly that it almost scorched his eyes. In fact, its radiance had caused Subaru to hold his breath and immediately cover his face with his arm.

Then, after the light faded away, what remained in front of Subaru’s eyes was…

Subaru: “Huh? Where did the Monolith go?”

Shaula: “Hehehe, behind youuu Master.”

Subaru: “Behind me…?”

After that flash of light, Subaru affirmed that the Monolith that should have been in front of him had disappeared. Surprised by what had happened, he turned to look behind him at Shaula who had nonsensically shouted out in triumph.

When he turned around, at the front of the stairs—In other words, at the place where the original Monolith had stood, the first Monolith stood alone. All the rest of them had disappeared from the room.

Subaru: "So, in other words… this means?"

Julius: "That everything went back to its original state. To put it shortly, it looks like we've been deemed to have messed up by the "Trial". Of course…."

Stepping away from the dejected Subaru's side, Julius carelessly approached the original Monolith. And then, immediately after he stretched out his hand and touched its surface, that voice echoed out through his mind—.

???: "—Touch the brightest of the hero destroyed by Shaula."

Once again, at the same time which the challenge was posed to them, Monolith after Monolith were replicated from the original and scattered all around the room with the same force as before. The "Trial" was distributed around therefrom.

In other words, they could call this a "Retry".

Subaru: "I see. It must mean we can think as much as we want until we find an answer."

Julius: "That's our guess right now. There happens to be this Monolith, but I can say that even when we went around touching Monoliths at random… We couldn't find an answer."

Subaru: "Ah, so you've already tried brute forcing it?"

Subaru broke down Julius' mild manner of speaking to the bread and bones of it. Emilia and Meili, who'd heard that explanation, were patting their heads with what seemed to be a look of embarrassment about them.

Just try touching and checking every single one of them, certainly it looked like they'd tried to carry out that tactic. Nevertheless, it didn't seem to have done the trick.

Subaru: “It’s a “Trial” after all. It means we have to solve the problem and answer it.”

Julius: “It looks like our examiner doesn’t appreciate answers that are just given out at random.”

Subaru: “Yeah, seems so. So like a Sensei who doesn’t give you credit unless you write down all of your working out, and doesn’t allow you to just put answers in the test’s answer column. The anti-cheating measures sure do appear quickly though.”

Reaching an answer without showing how you derived it could only come as a result of cheating or a hunch. Often times, till Primary School, he’d come across problems which he’d find answers to using his hunches, but the main point to Mathematics was to learn how to derive the problem, not to regurgitate the problem willy-nilly on the spot.

One time during Primary School, when he’d been marked down for the lack of clarity in his working out, he remembered how resentful he’d been about it, but—

Subaru: “After all this time, it looks like my Sensei was right…”

Anastasia: “I’m sorry ta butt in when yer still absorbed in yer thoughts, Natsuki-kun, but rather yer turn ain’t from here. Come on, snap back to reality, snap back.”

Subaru: “Huh, ah, oh, my bad. But, what do you mean by my turn?”

Anastasia called Subaru, whose eyes had glazed over, back to reality, and then clapped her hand on his back. As Subaru tilted his head at her appeal, everyone looked around at each other, and broke into mutters.

What they were saying was the same thing, so combining it and paraphrasing it into other words—“It’s down to Subaru to find out who the hero destroyed by Shaula is”.

Emilia: “We challenged the “Trial” many times over until Subaru woke up. However, that girl wouldn’t even tell us whether or not she was Shaula when we did.”

Beatrice: “As far as we were concerned, Shaula was the “Sage”, in fact. We thought they were the person on the drawing engraved on the Silver Coin, so we didn’t connect this woman with Shaula, I suppose.”

Those were Emilia and Beatrice’s replies, both of whom hadn’t been able to hear Shaula’s story till then.

Ever since Subaru had woken up, he’d seen Shaula communicate with him with an air of over-familiarity that was way off the marks of typical friendliness, and because of that it was hard to believe for him that she’d refused to say anything to them. However, her not telling them anything more couldn’t be helped since she’d kept her mouth shut towards those in the tower.

Having said that though, Subaru was still worried.

Even if Shaula had had her tongue unsealed, and became able to talk about that…

Subaru: “I guess it doesn’t hurt to ask. Hey, Shaula. If you know anything, please tell me everything about the hero you destroyed.”

Shaula: “Leave this to me. Remembering stuff like each of the names of the guys I’ve killed is second class work… For a first class individual like meeee, I don’t remember past the 100 mark.”

Subaru: “Of course you’d say that!”

Shaula gave him a thumbs and then winked. Receiving that vigorous response, Subaru slapped his knee.

Just as he’d expected and feared, her reply was an air-headed Shaula-like one.

He had suspected that was likely going to happen with how she’d acted and talked till now. There was the chance that she, who would seemingly know the answer to “The hero that Shaula destroyed” didn’t remember it anywhere in her head.

Julius: “However, we won’t make any progress if we end it with that. Miss Shaula, do you really not remember anything? It doesn’t matter even if it’s a tiny little detail.”

Shaula: “That’s easier said than done. I juuuust Hell’s Snipe everyone who comes near to the tower, and their corpses end up being cleaned up by the witchbeasts outside.”

Anastasia: “Okay, but isn’ that strange? Could it be a “Trial” ta see whether we can reveal the tower’s knowledge in the first place? It’d be a strange sequence of events for it ta require us ta show somethin’ that happened after Shaula-san’s tenure in protectin’ the tower started.”

Shaula had pouted, saying she didn’t have any clue, but Anastasia pointed out the out of place feeling in what she’d said. Everyone other than Shaula had agreed with her opinion with an “I see”. For sure, it was difficult to imagine that the problem posed inside the tower came about after her tenure in the tower had started. Then naturally that meant the period of time which “Shaula had destroyed the hero” came before the tower’s construction.

Beatrice: “In other words, that means it’s from before you started firing at people at random, in fact. Come on, remember, I suppose. It’s like all of your nourishment ended up just in your buttocks and breasts, so your memory’s become poor, in fact.”

Shaula: “This appearance was chosen by my Mother~. Butbut, even if you say “Remember”, it’s not gonna honestly come out. Before the tower was built, right?”

Emilia: “Yeah, that’s right. Before the tower was built. During that time, do you happen to know of anyone that you kille…I mean destroyed?”

Gathered near the stairway with Shaula in the middle of them, they desperately tried to awaken her memories. However, Shaula, who was basked in everyone’s expectations, gave no signs that they’d been successful, and she groaned out with an “Ahiiin”

Subaru: “Is it true or not that you’ve been around since 400 years ago? If I name a bunch of the noteworthy people around that time, you wouldn’t happen to have killed 2 or 3 of them, would you?”

Shaula: “Master, are you thinking that about meeee? I’m a maiden who likes to dabble with flowers ya know.”

Subaru: “That’s no maiden, more like a caterpillar.”

Emilia: “Subaru, I think your way of speaking just now was ever so rude. If she doesn’t want to remember, then don’t push her and force her to…”

Subaru: “Emilia-tan, your kindness is your super-virtue, your best feature, but this woman is the more you pamper her, the more useless she becomes type, don’t you think?! I can tell! ‘Cause I’m the same!”

Emilia had firmly puffed out her chest and declared that. But, it wasn’t that Shaula couldn’t remember because she didn’t want to in the first place, but rather that her memory was so poor that she just couldn’t.

The topic was one which he’d wanted to handle delicately since one of his members had a bunch of difficult problems in regards to memories, but it was a different matter when it came to Shaula.

Subaru: “Practically, it’ll be no problem if I fire off some random names, right? I don’t know how one of them striking the answer would react with the Monoliths, though.”

Anastasia: “It’s definitely gotta be as Natsuki-kun says. I wonder though, even if we find out the answa’, how can we then touch “The Brightest”?”

Considering that the Monolith he’d touched had disappeared, and the “Trial” seemed to have adjudicated them as having messed up, he could predict that their answer’s final form would probably be to “Touch the correct Monolith”.

The issue then was how they would find the “Correct Monolith”. Even if they chipped at Shaula’s memories he didn’t get the feeling like it’d become clear, one could say.

Meili: “Bu~t, even if we think forever, we won’t make any progress, ri~ght? Since Naked Onee-san is pretty cooperati~ve, I thi~nk we might as well ask her.”

Still holding onto Shaula’s bare shoulders, Meili butted in between the adults who were stumbling over what to do. She looked at the group of Monoliths with a look of boredom on her face as she fiddled about with Shaula’s scorpiontail.

Meili: “There’s n~o ickle witchbeasties around, there’s n~o progress, and it’s really not fun he~re. Speed things up, I wanna go back to the Mansio~n.”

Everyone: “…”

Everyone was at a loss for words at the words which Meili had uttered. Following straight after that, Meili said ““What is i~t?”, as Subaru patted her head.

Meili: “What is it I wo~nder?”

Subaru: “Nothing, I just think it’s as you say. You’re right. This place is sandy as hell, and on top of that, there’s a bunch of scary witchbeasts prowling about outside. We’ll quickly take care of things here, settle all our problems… wake up Rem, retrieve a means to save the people in need, and then we shall skedaddle out of here.”

Treading around things with anxiety before attempting them was a waste of valuable time. It felt to him like the “Trial” had been set up by someone rather ill-natured and that he was playing right into their hands.

Shaula: “Master, Master. You do know that there’s an easy-to-stroke head right next to that lil’ ankle biter.”

Subaru: “I said this already. You’re the same as me in that you’re the type which when pampered falls unendingly into corruption. That’s why from here on out we’re doing this the Spartan way. Hurry the hell up and remember.”

Shaula: “Do I have toooo?”

Puffing her cheeks out in dissatisfaction, Shaula seemed to be in full-pout. However, she'd be easy to handle since after a few dozen seconds she'd start humming with a face like she'd forgotten.

Julius: "Well then, our young lady requests it too. Shall we try and get on with testing out the possibilities we have in front of us without dithering about?"

Anastasia: "Mhm, that's probably a good idea. It's relievin' that it's okay even if we fail a buncha' times. In most cases in human life, things are decided in just a single bout… So, this is quite a generous problem don'cha think?"

Although Meili had set things off in motion, Julius and Anastasia had also came into agreement with her. Thus, it was time to make her remember "The Hero destroyed and forgotten by Shaula" once again.

Subaru: "For now let's go with a name that you remember…Yeah. Ah, how about Reid? That dude was the first ever "Sword Saint"; You killed him, didn't you?"

Shaula: "AIIIIIIIIIIIIEEEEEE!!"

Meili: "GYAAAA!"

Subaru: "Third Base Cleanup."

Straight after he'd nonchalantly pulled out that name, Shaula let out a high pitched shriek and leapt backwards. Subaru performed a diving catch on Meili, who'd been dropped having been unable to withstand that injection of momentum.

After he safely brought Meili back to the ground, Shaula, who'd jumped up and fled far away into the room, had gotten smaller in view.

Subaru: "Hey! I'm sorry! I don't really know why you're acting like that, but get back here!"

Shaula: "P-Please don't say such scary stuff. Master's a real mean guy. The absolute worst. A maiden's distress. A liability issue."

Even though she spoke frivolously, Shaula’s voice as she skulked back was shaking feebly. She sure did act tough, but she wasn’t all that. Unmistakably, fear and dread had caused her to react like that.

Naturally, the reason behind her fear could only be but one.

Subaru: “Huh, is the First “Sword Saint” such a scary person?”

Julius: “How foolish. Reinhardt, Wilhelm-sama and such are esteemed individuals worthy of the forefather of the Astrea family. He definitely wasn’t just skilled with the sword, but a man of character as well. Certainly, there are some parts sprinkled into the anecdotes that were left behind as rumors that indicate that he was rather strong-willed which don’t overlap with Reinhardt and the rest, but… If it’s not like that, then wouldn’t that’d mean the history of the Astrea Family has been twisted till this current generation?”

Subaru: “Not really, but when you unravel history, and the viewpoint of prominent statesmen also changes, you’ll find that Japanese History is sufficiently cruel too. If we compare it to that, then I mean we can’t really start speaking about definites here…”

Julius: “Dear goodness, let’s not delve into this sort of talk. It’s alright. We can get a clarification to the story if we get her to talk as she’s a living witness here. Come now, let’s listen to her.”

Julius started to ramble on with tremendous vigor at Subaru, who had hazarded a guess at Reid’s temperament from Shaula’s reaction. And to make matters worse, he’d handled things by dismissing Subaru, who’d tried to defend his point, with a laugh.

After so long, Subaru could once again see a glimpse of the figure of that gaudy knight which he’d first seen at the Royal Selection. He now knew that his attitude back then had been down to him playing the villain. Though, whenever he saw him like this, he sure did get the impression that he still was like when they’d first met.

In any case,

Julius: “Your impressions regarding The First “Sword Saint”, Reid

Astrea. Miss Shaula, I'd like you to tell us your candid impression of him."

Shaula: "He was human garbage."

Julius: "I'd like you to tell us your candid impression of him."

Subaru: "Don't pretend like she didn't say anything!!"

Subaru shoved Julius' shoulder, who'd tried to ignore that inconvenient tidbit, and made him face the facts. Pointing his finger at Shaula, who had a troubled look on her face, Subaru continued.

Subaru: "Hey, listen up. The truth about the history you wanted to know about is right here. She's a living witness to it. Go on, tell me as many anecdotes about Reid Astrea as you like, of that magnanimous man of character skilled in the sword."

Julius: "…Those who hold exceptional talent end up having confidence in themselves, more or less. That shouldn't be chastised, rather, it should be something you take pride in. If you end up becoming the greatest swordsman recorded in history, even acting like such is, yeah, when you take into account how things were back then, it would be suitable—"

Subaru: "It's the first time I've seen you so desperate."

Julius too became flustered as if he was considering just how unconvincing he sounded.

Setting Julius aside, who'd been betrayed by the history which he ever so loved, Shaula's "Truth of Reid Astrea" was pouring out of her without an end in sight.

Shaula: "Well, anyways, he was a nasty guy. His personality was like that of an unruly brat's in adult-form, and he loved to bully the weak. Or I guess if we look at it from that garbage's point of view, almost all of his opponents were weak, so he'd be bullying the weak no matter who he fought against. He did that a lot to meeee too."

Emilia: "But, he was able to keep doing that to you even though you're so strong? Ah, since it happened over 400 years ago, you must've still been small then too?"

Shaula: "I'veeee been like this ever since I was born. So, between now and back then, I'veeee not changed, however… That thing was just out of the ordinary. A total piece of shit."

Garbage, piece of shit, the hero of yore had been harshly evaluated as such.

The darkness wasn't vanishing from Shaula's attitude, as if many hateful memories had come flooding back to her. It was the same as when a person who'd been bullied recalled what the bully had done to them.

Shaula: "You should always keep that piece of shit in mind. Even if the bully forgets, the one bullied absolutely never will, and that's a fact…"

Subaru: "I'm not really surprised since there's a precedent in Reinhardt, but it'd take quite a monster to knock you down a few pegs, and Reid Astrea's one too."

Shaula: "He really was the worst. But, I was able to get him to use both hands once every ten times we fought."

Subaru: "…I see."

He could only answer with that. Had she set her goals high or low in making him use both of his hands once every ten times, and not to gain victory once every ten times?

Subaru felt like he wouldn't be able to make Reinhardt use both his hands even once every hundred times, so he could admit that her putting up a fight like that had been plenty enough.

Subaru: "Well, we can put off asking about Reid. It's pretty pointless for us to ask if you didn't destroy him."

Julius: "—. —. I agree. There's other things we ought to prioritize right now."

Subaru: "Didn't you waste time doing that just now?"

Subaru couldn't tell whether he had a scholarly interest in it, or it was a curiosity spurred from a simple hobby, but he judged that for now, perhaps Julius wouldn't be of any use.

Although he felt sorry for Julius, who'd had his illusions shattered, unfortunately for him, Subaru had no reason to care about Reinhardt's ancestor right now. To begin with, Reinhardt himself was already more than plenty enough amazing no matter how amazing his bloodline was. At least considering his "Father's" nature, he was sure that Reinhardt had been abounding in it.

Subaru: "Then, let's leave all speculation about who the hero is to the guy who knows best."

Julius: "Gotcha. I shall humbly accept."

Subaru: "I still wasn't talking about you, but sure. Go for it. Beako, help him out with it."

Beatrice: "Gotcha, in fact."

He left the task to Julius since he was willing to do it. And getting Beatrice to assist him as a helper, who boasted 400 years of knowledge, was ideal.

Emilia: "Then what shall we do?"

Subaru: "We'll take a closer look at the surroundings."

He'd leave the hero-related stuff to Julius and Beatrice, who'd remain by Shaula, and meanwhile he wanted to take a look at the arrangement issue.

Namely, how the replicated Monoliths were arranged—If there was some significance to their uneven arrangement, then taking the time to search for the pattern behind it probably wouldn't be a waste.

Subaru: "First of all, the first one… is in front of the stairs."

Emilia: "It's the Monolith that hands out the question, right?"

The Monoliths weren't lined up in a narrow enough space to the extent that they had to be careful not to bump into them, nevertheless, Subaru took Anastasia and Emilia and looked around the Monoliths inside the room.

There was a surprising difference in size between the scattered Monoliths when he double checked. However, there wasn't a single one of them that was as large as the series of original Monoliths, the figures of countless Monoliths which were one or two times smaller were scattered about after them.

Subaru: "When you take a look at it… I guess there's about 7 or 8 Monoliths that are about the same size as the first Monolith?"

Emilia: "I guess so? Yeah, I think so too. I think the ones that are reaaaally far away are all quite small. We'll end up restarting things if we touch those too, though."

Subaru: "From the way you're talking about it, it looks like you've done that before… Ah, Sorry. Nevermind about that."

Seeing sadness build up in Emilia's eyes, Subaru caught himself before he said too much. Returning back in front of the first Monolith, Subaru turned to face the two girls and plunged into thought.

Subaru: "Touch the brightest of the hero destroyed by Shaula…I feel like it's trying to say something 'cool'."

Anastasia: "I guess it must be sayin' somethin' abstract. Unfortunately, we can't go overlookin' the question when we take into account what comes out of relyin' on Shaula-san's memory."

Subaru: "Well, I suppose so."

In essence, relying on others, or on the being that had been left behind in the tower as its warden, to get that answer was really unfair with it being labelled as a "Trial".

Subaru and the others hadn't expected friendly contact when they'd made it to the tower—However, they ended up making it into the tower without coming to blows with Shaula; if it hadn't ended up like that, they would have fallen into a quagmire of massacre. Even if they'd successfully made it into the tower in that case, they likely wouldn't have been able to defeat Shaula.

Emilia: "If we do that, passing the "Trial" is going to be forever impossible, right?"

Subaru: "That's correct if you're saying they have no intention of letting us solve the "Trial". They could put a strong Guardian as a defense mechanism, and worse, were we to kill said Guardian, they could put a terrible barrier that wouldn't let us pass...."

Emilia: "But, you don't think that... You think it's different to that?"

Subaru: "Mhmhm."

Emilia turned her eyes in anticipation towards Subaru, who'd touched on this issue of security. Receiving her gaze, Subaru confirmed her thoughts with a chuckle.

Those eyes were Subaru's weakness. Subaru grew weak whenever Emilia and Beatrice gave him those looks. Rem, Garfiel and Otto would occasionally look at him like that too. Coupled with Petra, that made far too many. The only ones who didn't look at him like that were Patrasche and Ram.

Subaru: "Ahh, it somehow feels like I could see a trend."

Emilia: "—?"

Subaru: "It's nothing, just talking to myself."

Subaru's bluff wouldn't have worked against those who could see through him. Of course, he was bailed out thanks to Emilia not being one of those who'd question him about it.

Anyways, putting that aside and going back to the problem of the format of the "Trial"—

Subaru: "Exceptions aside, fundamentally the problem was constructed with the assumption that it can be solved. If you really wanted to hide things properly, it'd be smarter not to leave them somewhere where there’s a chance of finding them.”

Anastasia: “But, Natsuki-kun, yer’ve eyeballed this place as not bein’ like that?”

Subaru: “What was it that the keeper of this place, Shaula said? She said this is a Great Library where you can get all the knowledge you desire. I don’t think Shaula herself could come up with such a fancy-looking phrase, so I think she’s splurging out words that were told to her by someone else. Meaning that “Flugel”, who built this library and entrusted it to Shaula, intended for it to be used.”

The more he unraveled the possibilities, the more unnatural the current situation became to him.

The creator of this Great Library Pleiades must have taken steps to set it up so that the purpose of the building worked. He’d left behind the “Trial” and Shaula here as a means to screen people for that.

Subaru: “Does this mean that no one but those who get along well with Shaula can use it to begin with?”

Emilia: “But Shaula said that she attacked everyone who approached the tower, right?”

Yeah, that was right.

The command that had been given to Shaula was to “Eliminate anyone who approached the tower without any exceptions”, and Subaru and the others coming into friendly contact with Shaula had just been a stroke of luck. If he recklessly concluded that people wouldn’t get the qualifications to challenge the tower unless they abounded in fortuity, then…

Anastasia: “So what ya need is strength, luck, ‘n charm so that yer able to make friends with Shaula-san? I think our lineup is pretty unfit for that challenge.”

Subaru: “…It sure is.”

If they’d been defeated by Shaula, killed by her, or been unable to get her to cooperate with them, then they'd have lost the qualifications to challenge the Great Library Pleiades…

Although it was irrational to think so, if he listed all the conditions up till now, he could only come to that conclusion.

However, Subaru couldn't help but have a bad feeling in just accepting that.

And,

Emilia: "Hey. Heey."

Subaru: "Emilia?"

Emilia: "I'm feeling quiiiiite a bit uneasy. I've got a real bad feeling in and around my chest."

Emilia placed her hand to the pit of her stomach and anxiously spilled that out. As he was about to draw his eyes to that, Subaru restrained himself before he ogled her pale skin.

Clearing his throat with an Ahem, he frowned at Emilia and said, "A bad feeling?"

Subaru: "Huh, is something on your mind?"

Emilia: "To tell you the truth, there is. But, this may have nothing to do with everything, and even if I say it out loud, I think only you would understand me…"

Subaru: "I think I'd like you to say whatever's on your mind right now, so you can say it to me. My thoughts aren't necessarily correct, and it's honestly a good thing to think about things from multiple different angles."

Emilia: "Really?"

Having been immersed in her thoughts about what she was holding back, Emilia's face brightened a little as she heard his words. Then she continued speaking saying "In that case," Emilia: “When you touched the Monolith, you guys could hear a voice inside of your head, right?”

Anastasia: “Yeah. It’s an uncanny contraption, but I wonder what the heck it is.”

Emilia: “It’s that voice but… Isn’t it similar to the one back at the “Ordeal” of the Sanctuary?”

Subaru & Anastasia: “…”

Subaru and Anastasia both kept their silence when they heard Emilia’s suggestion. However, even if both of them had ended up staying silent, the reason why they’d done so had been different.

Anastasia had plunged into silence because she had no clue what those words meant, but Subaru’s silence had been because he’d been taken by surprise and understood her words.

The “Ordeals”—Those had taken place at the Witch Echidna’s graveyard, who’d lived in the “Sanctuary”.

Those mystifying phenomena that made you confront the past/differing presents, Subaru didn’t know the full details of them as he’d retired halfway through, but according to Echidna back at the graveyard, there’d been a third “Ordeal” too, which Emilia had overcome.

No, in this case the details and hardships of that “Ordeal” weren’t what was important here.

What was important was that refrain that had informed them about the details of the Ordeal using “Their own voice” was pretty much the same as when they’d challenged that “Ordeal”.

Subaru: “Now that you mention it, you’re right. Why did that slip out of my mind… I guess ‘cause they’re bad memories?”

Emilia: “Subaru, that’s because you reaaaally dislike Echidna, no?”

Anastasia: “—hk”

Subaru: “Going through an experience where a savior turns out to actually be an éminence grise is gonna end up making you look like me!”

Since the “Sanctuary”, Emilia and Subaru had spoken about the “Witches” only once or twice. Even after they’d touched on the subject of the Ordeal, Emilia liked to skirt around it, so he hadn’t pursued the topic too much.

The point that they both shared in common was that they thought “Echidna was an ill-natured fiend.” Emilia sugarcoated it more when speaking, but Subaru spoke about her as it was.

Anastasia: “Why, ya freaked me out ‘cause ya mentioned Echidna’s name.”

Emilia: “Ah, I see. Anastasia’s Artificial is called Echidna too… She does speak in a reaaally similar manner, right? ‘Tis strange.”

Subaru: “Yeah, it’s strange, but let’s settle this another time, alright? So, it’s similar to the Ordeal…”

When he’d heard the word “Trial” mentioned, he’d thought that it sounded similar to “Ordeal”.

When it came to the parts that resembled the “Ordeal” till the start, this was probably one part of a system, or perhaps it was a great part of it that resembled the one at the graveyard.

Subaru: “Come to think of it, the “Ordeal” too was practically unlimited in how much you could challenge it.”

Emilia: “And what’s more, about the “Trials”, there’s the Third Floor, the Second Floor and the First, totaling three here too, right?”

Subaru: “…”

Subaru and Emilia looked at each other as if they were saying Yeah, it’s definitely like that.

The “Sage’s” name, and the 400 years time period. When he looked back on it, it felt inevitable that history overlapped with the period of time of those “Witches”.

Emilia: “Yeah, though I’m sorry. Even if we know that much, it still doesn’t bring us any closer to the answer, huh.”

Having thought all the way up to there, Emilia cut her story short with a flustered look on her face.

Just as Emilia had concluded, even if there was a chance that this place had some relation to the graveyard, it still had nothing to do with the “Trial” of “Taygeta”.

The name of the “Hero who was destroyed by Shaula” was still something that they had to rely on Shaula for—.

Subaru: “…Actually, isn’t it not like that?”

Emilia: “Subaru?”

Subaru: “If we presume this place is something that’s supposed to be solvable, then isn’t saying that it can’t be captured unless Shaula manages to a mistake in the first place?”

This was the tower of the “Sage”, and that had been the graveyard of the “Witch”.

Both of these examiners shared in the same wicked disposition, but if that wasn’t only what they had in common, they had a conceivable chance to overcome them.

The “Witch” had tested people out in her “Ordeals” but she didn’t give them any hardships that couldn’t produce results.

Then if the “Sage” tested people in his “Trials”, then he shouldn’t give them any hardships that couldn’t produce results.

Subaru: “A chance for us to be able to capture the tower without needing Shaula…”

Anastasia: “Natsuki-kun, what did’ya think of…”

Emilia: “Shhh”

Plunging into his thoughts, Subaru placed his hand on his chin, closed one of his eyes and sunk into speculation. As he did so, Emilia waved her hand and silenced Anastasia, who’d seen a ray of hope glimmering in what was occurring and spoken up.

Emilia put her finger to her lips and made a shushing gesture at her telling her to stay quiet, and after that, she turned her head back to look at Subaru. Her amethyst eyes sparkled with anticipation.

Not taking any notice of Emilia’s anticipation, Subaru’s head spun in thought.

In this “Trial”, “Shaula’s” presence wasn’t important. Perhaps there was even a chance that those challenging the tower could destroy Shaula were she to attack them. If he presumed that they still didn’t even know Shaula’s name…

Subaru: “Even if we didn’t know that Shaula is Shaula, if we assume a Shaula was involved…”

Emilia & Anastasia: “…”

Subaru: “We mistakenly believed that Flugel’s achievement had been Shaula’s. The “Sage’s” achievement was that he sealed the Witch with the help of the First “Sword Saint” and the “Divine Dragon”. However, “The Witch of Envy” ain’t something that we’d ever call something like a “Hero”, nor was she ever destroyed.”

He cut out that possibility as being an incorrect hypothesis right here.

Maybe there’d been another heroic tale which the “Sage” Flugel had forced on Shaula that he just didn’t know about. However, it didn’t make any sense that Beatrice and Julius hadn’t recalled something like that—An inevitable possibility floated up in his mind.

Subaru: “Even if we didn’t know that Shaula is Shaula, if we assume a Shaula was involved… that’s it.”

He once again repeated what he’d said.

That didn't mean his thoughts were going around in circles. It was the opposite. He'd cut out one of the possibilities, and another one had surfaced. And, what that meant was—

Subaru: "Beako! Come here for a sec!"

Following the possibility that had struck him, Subaru lifted his face up and called Beatrice over.

Julius was trying everything he could to try and pry open the lid on Shaula's memories. Next to him, Beatrice sprung up when she heard Subaru's voice that indicated he'd managed to find something. She rushed over to him, and said,

Beatrice: "That face is Betty's favorite Subaru face, I suppose."

Subaru: "Shouldn't all of them be your favorite?"

Beatrice: "This one especially, in fact."

Beatrice said that without any traces of embarrassment to her, and Subaru stretched out his hand over to her as she stood in front of him. Beatrice took his hand and looked at him with her round blue eyes.

Her eyes were asking, "What do you want me to do?" Thus, Subaru nodded, and said,

Subaru: "It's quite simple. —I'd like to jump a bit higher with Murak."

Beatrice: "…Don't tell me you're going to say "I've given up, so let's break the ceiling and go up that way", I suppose."

Subaru: "Don't be so shocked. Of course not. I just want to look down on the Monoliths from above."

Emilia: "Look down on the Monoliths…"

Behind him, Emilia turned around to look at the Monoliths and muttered that out.

Even if she didn’t know what he expected to get from it, Beatrice didn’t show any intent of wanting to ask anymore about it. She let out a small sigh and gripped his hand more tightly,

Beatrice: “Murak, in fact.”

Pale, light purple waves faintly wrapped themselves around Subaru’s body following her incantation.

Murak was magic which kept the effects of gravity at bay and made you far more agile. Just by jumping lightly he’d be able to float up by about one meter, and if he kicked off from the floor with all his strength, then…

Subaru: “Up we go!”

Still holding Beatrice’s hand, Subaru leapt up towards the top of the tall room. Although he’d made it up by 6 or 7 meters, his body didn’t crash into the ceiling as he’d expected.

The layer had expanded as if there’d been no ceiling at all inside of this endless white expanse. Thus, Subaru was able to look down on the entire room from above.

Subaru: “—It’s as I thought.”

Beatrice: “Were you able to find what you were looking for, I suppose?”

Subaru: “Of course. This place is the absolute worst.”

Subaru frowned and nodded seeing Beatrice’s gaze who’d heard his mutter wrapped inside of his arms.

The two of them turned towards the ground and dropped down; their lightness of body that had helped them leap up also helped grace their landing. They landed without any issue, and he lowered Beatrice, who he’d been princess-carrying, down to the floor,

Subaru: “I know the name of the Hero.”

Emilia: “Really?!”

Subaru said that with conviction to Emilia, who'd seen him muse about it and then leap up. Emilia reacted in surprise to his words, and Anastasia rounded her eyes as well.

Hearing them speak, Julius and the others with him who'd been captivated by their talk gathered over to where Subaru and the others were.

Meili: "Onii-san figured it ou~t?"

Subaru: "I solved it. Along with the line of thinking of this errant examiner, for now."

Shaula: "That's Master for you! You're makin' me feel all tingly! Oh how I yearned for this!"

With Meili on her back, Shaula gave him a thumbs up and replied, then she shook her head vigorously. Looking at that from the corner of his eye, Julius looked over to the group of Monoliths, and said,

Julius: "I don't mean to doubt you right now. But please tell me how you managed to get the answer."

Subaru: "It's nothing spectacular. Y'all needn't feel bad for not solving this. Because in the first place, the people who have a chance at solving this are few."

This problem was the most contemptible in that sense.

The challengers had to overcome the obstacle that was Shaula, understand the details of the problem and yet from the start, they'd been narrowed down by the "Likelihood of knowing the answer to the problem."

Subaru: "The hero destroyed by Shaula, his name is Orion."

Everyone: "Orion…?"

Everyone looked at Shaula in confusion after they heard the word that Subaru had spoken out. However, Shaula vigorously shook her head as everyone's gazes converged on her and said "I don't know them!"

Shaula: “Nopenopenope, I’ve no idea who that is. And even if for a sec we assume I did kill them, what sort of person who can’t even make it all the way here gets called a hero, it’s totally ridiculous. Soooo, I don’t think I’m the one to blame here. How you may ask, well by this argument from theory! I’m suuuuper smart!”

Subaru: “As you can see, this woman’s not smart at all. At first, I’d suspected that she may have actually forgotten, but that’s not the case. Reason being that the “Shaula” from this problem isn’t this woman in the first place.”

Shaula: “I’mmm the only Shaula! I got this name from Master!”

Subaru: “Even the name that your Master gave you came from someone else.”

He prodded out his finger to the tip of the protesting Shaula’s nose and pushed her away before she could get closer. Following that, Subaru walked over to the original Monolith and stood in front of it.

Emilia: “Maybe once again… only Subaru knows the origins of Shaula’s name?”

Subaru: “It isn’t just me who knows, though I suppose not everyone would know. —The name of a star in my hometown is called “Shaula”. The meaning of its name is the “Stinger”, but if I had to specify which kind of stinger, then it’d be the “Scorpion’s” stinger.”

Shaula had insisted on calling her hairstyle a scorpiontail, had that been a hint of some sorts, or was that some natural airheadness of Shaula’s? Whichever one it was, there’d been a few things that had made him recall that “Shaula” = “Scorpion” = “Stinger”.

Subaru: “According to legend, the Hero Orion was stung by a scorpion which had been sent out to besiege him due to his boastfulness, and he ended up dying. After his death, he became a star. So, the scorpion that killed Orion also became a star due to its deed, and it’s said that even now in the sky Orion lives in fear of the scorpion …”

Beatrice: “Now that you’ve explained things, this legend has a pretty depressing vibe to it too, in fact.”

Subaru: “Anyways, think of it as having constellations where stars are illustrated by the figures of animals and people and such. You can even think of them as an asterism. —So, that’s how it looks when you look down on the Monoliths from above.”

Becoming practically weightless as a result of Beatrice’s magic, he’d jumped up and looked down at the group of Monoliths.

The scattered black Monoliths in this world of white—Although their colors were inverted, a series of black stars floated about in this white world, forming a pattern which he was familiar with.

There were eight Monoliths in total which had the same size as the original one.

The number of major stars as well as how they were laid out both matched with how the constellation of Orion was shaped.

And when he linked it to the last part, “Touch the brightest”…

Subaru: “The original Monolith is right in the middle. Well, I just gotta keep my eye on Alnilam and if I keep following the shape of the constellation… If I keep following Orion, then…”

Emilia: “Then?”

Subaru: “The phrasing ‘The brightest’ is a bit of a roguish expression. In actual fact, stars shine in various different ways, sometimes they’re always bright, other times they shine brighter only every so often. Considering that, there are two stars that fit the bill for the brightest in Orion…”

When viewed from above, the two stars that fit the bill were the right shoulder of Orion located in the upper left part, “Betelgeuse”, and Orion’s left knee located in the lower right part, “Rigel”.

“Rigel” was always invariably bright, whereas “Betelgeuse” was a variable star that sometimes shone brighter than Rigel.

Solving the problem by picking both of them wasn’t a pretty one, but…

Subaru: “I guess I’ll go for “Rigel”.”

He had bad memories of a name that was similar to “Betelgeuse”.

Subaru: “…”

Setting his answer in stone, Subaru touched the Monolith on Orion’s left knee, “Rigel”.

This wasn’t necessarily the only answer. But, most likely it should be the right one.

And at the same time he realized that, he readied himself for the precipitousness and difficulty of the obstacles that awaited them on the Second and First Floor, when considering the maliciousness of the person who'd cooked up these "Trials".

Subaru: "…"

The white room was filled with a dazzling light.

Both sound and landscape were left behind, everything was blown away, before finally—.

Subaru: "…Whoa."

When the light died down, Subaru and the others were left standing in a room made out of stone—in the middle of a room that was encompassed by countless bookshelves.

Chapter 23:
The Third Floor Library, Taygeta

1

The surrounding world of white evaporated, leaving behind a room carved of stone and uncountably infinite shelves.

Feeling the stone he had been touching disappear, Subaru took this to mean that his answer had been correct.

Then in that case—

Emilia: “Amazing! Subaru, good—”

Subaru: “The examiner’s personality, is just too wicked!!”

Emilia: “Eeeeh?! That’s your first reaction?!”

Ready to celebrate the solving of the third floor Taygeta, Emilia was stunned speechless. Echoing through the tower, was Subaru’s vitriolic cry.

Looking back to the surprised Emilia and everyone else watching him, Subaru gave a “my bad” as he continued to talk.

Subaru: “Although it’s as everyone suspected, and I’ve indeed solved the riddle… but that it was solved like this is a huge issue. Or rather, it’s unfair to all of you.”

Emilia: “Is that so? Subaru used esoteric knowledge to solve the riddle… is how it seems to me.”

Subaru: “Rather than saying I solved the riddle with my own knowledge, it’s more like only someone specifically like me can solve this, is the issue here.”

Tilting her head in confusion, Emilia faced Subaru as he scratched at his head.

To consider it in detail the best way to explain this, turned out to be a bit of a problem.

The Exam of the third floor Taygeta, was just as Subaru had answered, the myth of the Orion. The notion he had set aside was “the person who riddled this might have been an astronomist or a romantic”, with the reason being that the myth of Orion did not exist in this world.

Whether Orion or the celestial name of Shaula, or any of the other constellations, all of them were astronomical knowledge from Subaru’s original world.

And this current world, perhaps was the far future, set after the civilization of Subaru’s original world had long been lost to the past. Subaru had long affirmed that this world’s night sky contained different stars than the ones he had known.

Subaru: “So, the passage of time completely changed the layout of the stars… in that case there’s no option but to just wave your hands in surrender, since Orion or whatever doesn’t exist anymore.”

After an extensive period of months and years, Orion had long since vanished from the night sky, and anything like his myths had disappeared too. If this were the case, one conjecture could be made.

The poser of the riddle, was someone who knew the same sky as Subaru.

Furthermore, all those aside from those who knew the stars of the previous world, were born naturally defeated by the Exam’s riddle.

And the one who had designed the riddle, according to Shaula’s report, was without doubt the Sage Flugel.

Subaru: “Your master, seems to have been a guy with a decidedly wicked personality.”

Shaula: “Nononono, why would you say that ~ssu. It’s unlike Master to be self-deprecating ~ssu! Although the wicked personality bit can’t be denied ~ssu, it’s still reasonable for the riddle to be solved ~ssu! If it were Reid it would indeed be unsolvable… something about revealing another self and being unable to pass without victory in battle?”

Subaru: “That’s horrifying, either way the tests would go nowhere…”

All in all, the heroes of the past who had subdued the Witch of Envy all had terrible personalities.

With this person, using knowledge from another world would probably work better.

Anastasia: “Alright, and now.”

As Subaru sighed over Shaula’s explanation that wasn’t an explanation, Anastasia interrupted the pair to glance around. Stroking her scarf, she examined the shelves crammed with books.

Anastasia: “Thanks to Natsuki-kun’s labors, the “Exam” was solved… That’s excellent, but what’s the point of the library? What kinds of books does it have? I find this quite curious.”

Julius: “According to Shaula-san, this place is a trove of knowledge without bound and without break (unironically considered “lacuna” here)—is what she had said.”

Nodding in accord with Anastasia’s words, Julius glanced toward Shaula. Bearing an expression as if she had forgotten her own earlier words, Shaula had her skin pressed against Meili’s as she played with her.

The expectations hadn’t been high to begin with, but it seemed that Shaula’s explanation of this Taygeta library was not forthcoming.

Beatrice: “From that reaction, it seems that this is the first time Taygeta’s been opened, in fact. Let’s walk around and take a look, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Indeed. Hey you… could it be that you can’t hold back anymore?”

Beatrice: “That… might be the case, in fact.”

Clutching her dress from beside Subaru, Beatrice seemed to be speaking a tad faster than usual.

Eyes gleaming softly, gazing about the library with fascination—upon realizing the reason, Subaru forgot their circumstances and began laughing.

Subaru: “Seems like, the Forbidden Archive wasn’t some unpleasant memory to you.”

Beatrice: “…it’s not a particularly pleasant memory, I suppose. However, in any case, it’s a place where Betty spent four hundred years, in fact. In addition…”

Subaru: “In addition?”

Beatrice: “It’s where Subaru told Betty to ‘choose me’, I suppose. It’s not a place that can be so easily forgotten, in fact!”

“…”

The unexpected words had Subaru’s eyes go round, and Beatrice’s turned her face away. But even from behind her reddened ears were plain to see, a clear sign of embarrassment.

Subaru: “Saying words that would embarrass you of your volition, just what are you trying to achieve?”

Beatrice: “Betty remembers everything about the Forbidden Archive, that is proof of memories of Subaru… is all, in fact.”

Subaru: “You are… too cute!”

Beatrice: “Kya—I suppose!”

At the sudden declaration of affection, Subaru gently began stroking Beatrice’s head. Beatrice’s feline cry gradually softened, and Subaru saw an expression filled with satisfaction. The scene had Anastasia and the others glance at them with amazement.

Subaru: “Alright, enough of the idle chatter, let’s check out the library now.”

Anastasia: “What a sight for sore eyes. It really seems like a gentle exchange between parent and child, doesn’t it…”

Subaru: “It’d at least be considered brother and sister, wouldn’t it.”

Sticking his tongue out at Anastasia’s opinion, Subaru straightened and glanced about at his surroundings.

Where Subaru and the others were located, was the center of a stone carved circular room. The structure itself was an extension of the tower, and the expansive design created a feeling of being left without boundaries.

Aside from the large spiral staircase, the fifth and sixth floors had no particularly striking features to fill the vast empty spaces. And the fourth floor was in fact divided into several rooms, what Shaula had described as a versatile nest.

Yet the third floor filled the same empty space with rows upon rows of shelves, each tall shelf crammed with countless books. The circular room was designed to form small floors. Subaru’s group was located on the lowest, surrounded by layers raising outward.

The books were so numerous as to be uncountable. Beatrice’s Forbidden Archive was also fairly crowded, but in terms of solely counting books, this place was by far victorious.

Subaru: “In order to find the book you want, it’d be nice if you could search with a computer.”

Beatrice: “Within in the Forbidden Archive, Betty knew exactly where every book was, in fact.”

Subaru: “Amazing, you. A genius!”

After praising Beatrice’s little show of smugness, Subaru approached the bookshelf beside him.

Looking over, Emilia and the others drew close as well, although it didn’t seem as if anyone felt daring enough to pluck a book from the shelf.

Emilia: “Wasn’t Subaru was the one that solved the riddle? Maybe something would go awry if it wasn’t Subaru that touched it.”

Subaru: “Ah, indeed anything could happen, but if only the one who had answered the riddle were allowed to read anything, wouldn’t it be off that Emilia-tan and the rest were even allowed into the library?”

Emilia: “Ah, right. Then it seems like entering this place is akin to permission.”

Subaru: “Mm, that’s what I think—hey, Emilia-tan?!”

At Subaru’s theory, Emilia who had kept her guard up nodded in understanding. Then, letting down her guard, she immediately pulled a book from the shelf.

Then she began flipping through the contents of the book, right before Subaru who had been struck speechless.

Emilia: “Hmm, it’s just a normal book… Subaru, what is it?”

Subaru: “No, nothing, it’s just that Emilia’s boldness was shocking but quickly became mesmerizing. I only said that ‘that’s what I think’ is all.”

Emilia: “—?? Subaru said so, so wouldn’t it be fine? Eh, is saying so that odd?”

Emilia’s conscientious expression bore a confusion that left Subaru speechless. With complicated feelings, Subaru brought a hand up to cover his face with an “uwah—”.

Subaru: “It constantly feels like, that piercing gaze of trust is painful.”

Julius: “You built it up bit by bit, is how it is. Furthermore, that you solved the riddle of Taygeta which no one else could is fact. Such an achievement is undeniable.”

Subaru: “That was like a blind cat swatting a dead mouse. That I solved it was just coincidence.”

At Subaru’s bewilderment, Julius shrugged his shoulders, the knight’s words causing Subaru to avert his gaze.

Emilia’s faith, Beatrice’s closeness, Julius’s sincerity—each one of them, did not align to Subaru’s expectations, and each of those words conveyed an inexplicable sense of wariness.

Subaru often doubted that kind of value being placed upon himself.

Anastasia: “Just as Emilia-san said, it’s just an ordinary book. It’s not some strange object that would immediate set your body on fire upon contact.”

“What the book is made of… is difficult to discern. As is its age. As for the content…?”

Inspired by Emilia’s proactive attitude, the others too had begun picking up books one by one. Even so, to skim all of this myriad of books, was hardly such an easy task.

Anastasia and Julius both examined the book’s composition and binding and the like.

Subaru: “Beako, what do you think?”

Beatrice: “It seems that the composition of the books are identical. Only the titles are completely different. This is Noah Libertas. This is Libre Fermi… They don’t seem to follow any particular pattern in their ordering either.”

Her librarian soul dripping blood, Beatrice expressed dissatisfaction with the one who had arranged the books so haphazardly. The absence of any memory of her sorting through the Forbidden Archive, suggested that it had been organized long ago.

Putting aside Beatrice’s indignation for now, Subaru sudden noticed something about the spines of the books.

Subaru: “The titles of these books… could it be, that they’re all peoples’ names?”

“Mmm… it seems to. This is Palma Eule, and here’s Coyote.”

Julius “All these names from the past, aren’t familiar ones. Not that I hold any wealth of knowledge, but none of these names are ones I know. Of course, looking around more closely might yield some kind of discovery…”

“If you don’t recognize them, it’s likely that no one here would.”

Whether that was true or mere humbleness, of late Julius had been revealing more of the historical pedigree of his house.

If these names were not in his knowledge, perhaps they were just randomly given ones.

Subaru also offhandedly grabbed a book to leaf through. The text written inside was composed of the common イ(I) glyphs, ロ (Ro) glyphs, and ハ (Ha) glyphs, the unique language of this world.

Had it been a gospel, no one aside from the owner should be capable of reading it, and only text composed of what seemed to be pictographs would have been visible, but this book did not seem to use such petty tricks.

Since the text was miniscule, and the content itself was too boring, it would not register in the brain even if read properly, a common issue with uninteresting books.

Subaru: “Once again, to check with Anastasia-san… are there any names you recognize?”

Anastasia: “Mm, nope?”

Subaru sought confirmation from Anastasia. Or course, rather than from Anastasia herself, it would be better to say he sought confirmation from Echidna who held control over her flesh.

Echidna should be possessed of more knowledge than Julius. And though it was possible she was concealing the truth, from the very beginning the spirit had not shown any hints of hostility.

Believing her answer for now, Subaru began to feel rather impotent.

Subaru: “Out of tricks already huh. A tree hidden in a forest… it could be that a vitally important book is hidden somewhere in these shelves, this really is troublesome.”

Emilia: “Giving up halfway through won’t do. Facing an unsolvable problem means that you have to try even harder. Work hard!”

Faced with a vast amount of books, Subaru who had already felt uneasy had his soul assaulted by exhaustion. Emilia raised a tiny fist for Subaru to cheer him on.

The encouraging pose that Emilia struck grew more and more accurate, and Subaru turned to face the shelf. The titles of these books all contained unfamiliar names. At the very least, should he come across a name he recognized, he would look into it with care—thinking so, Subaru brushed his fingers along a row, book by book.

Subaru: “…?”

Suddenly, Subaru’s fingers came to rest on one spine.

Grabbing the spine of the book, then easing it out from the stuffed bookshelf. The book’s title was a name that Subaru knew.

Subaru having reflexively grabbed the book flipped it open. Then, the familiar name of the book met his eyes—and afterward, it came.

—A dimming of the consciousness.

2

—A woman, a sole woman existed.

A woman so young, one would hesitate to call her a woman.

Humble clothes upon a skinny figure, green hair along with a skin tanned in the shine of days.

The woman seemed to be at an age to be a called a little girl, however, her heart was commanded by unending distress.

Unable to find the answer for it by any means, for the woman, it was an inborn argument.

“…”

Evermore troubling her mind with it, was the unending supreme argument.

It was the logic omnipresent in the world, that contrast of white and black—namely, good and evil.

Righteousness, deeds of err.

Though there were innumerable choices in the world, all deeds are eventually decided to be on either of those positive and negative poles.

For the yet youthful woman, there was a reason to continue to anguish over that logic. It was inevitable for her.

The one who had divided the woman’s world into white and black, good and evil, the righteous and the sinners, was the woman’s father.

“…”

The woman’s father decapitated the necks of sinners, and made a living by delivering punishment appropriate for the errs.

Delivering the end of their life, the punishment suitable for their err, upon the sinners who had sinned, meant livelihood to her father.

“—Executioner.”

The woman had seen the actions of her father, who was named that, and the state of affairs of the execution site, before even the days of youth.

The repulsive and cruel deeds, the death wails of the sinners granted quietus, the execution site ruled by blood and death.

—What made the woman witness Death there, was none other than her father's own will.

Punishment casted upon the committed sins, evil deeds met their result through the means of evil deeds.

The father attempted to convey the rightful state of affairs he believed in, of the world's good and evil, as an executioner, to the woman.

Noble was her father's will, a pure ideology without question.

However, keeping the mind the woman's youthfulness, it seemed to be conceited, it was yet too early to seek ideals.

The woman saw the deaths of many with her own eyes, scented the odor of blood, and burnt the punishment casted upon sinners into her memory.

The result, the woman, before she could study in depth the value of life, and the principle of life and death, learnt punishments befitting the sins.

Benevolence gave birth to good cause, wrongdoings called upon roots of evil, the souls of sinners were corrupted, worthy of punishment.

Comprehending the teachings of her father through that interpretation, the woman desired the rightful state of affairs for Punishments Befitting the Sins. For that she sought something which would become her guiding principle, the balance of virtue which would establish evil deeds as evil.

"…"

However, the balance which the woman sought, existed nowhere within her sphere of search.

The good and evil of affairs had no simple answer, but the correction, sin and punishment possessed many factors determining them.

"…"

However, the woman, yet youthful and unknowing of compromise or resignation, did not to come to a halt.

She must obtain the answer. She must conceive the balance befitting good and evil in her heart.

She must present the answer to the undissolving doubt present within the interior of her chest.

"…"

Days of agony continued, however, she gained the answer suddenly, as if a blessing had been granted to her from the heavens above.

Shattering her father's vine cup, the woman was greatly frightened by the sin she had committed herself.

Preparing herself to face beheading, the woman confessed her own sin to her father.

"—Speaking up your own sins, and apologizing for them is correct."

Said the woman's father while expressing a smile, forgiving the woman's err.

At the smile of her father and the sensation of his palm patting her head, the youthful woman came to understand.

—The balance for measuring the weight of the committed sin was nothing else, but present within the heart of the sinner himself.

Even if nobody lies witness to it, the heart of the sinner himself knows of his sin.

Good and evil, she did not understand. They're complicated. Corrections, have no certain guidelines. They can't be found.

However, the consciousness of the sin is within one's self.

There are no standards for punishments befitting the sins. However, the consciousness of sins deserving of punishments is within one's self.

The woman understood, she was satiated, and finally obtained the balance.

Remaining ignorant of the value of life, and the principle of the life and death of people, the youthful woman disclosed punishments befitting the sins.

"…"

Under the light of days the woman walked, learning through observation from her executioner father, for delivering punishments befitting the sins.

For disclosing the hearts of those sinners, who had been judged worthy of punishment.

"…"

For the woman, the division of good and evil, corrections, sincerity and falsehood into two halves, was the natural order of things.

At the question the youthful woman asked, some smiled, some were troubled, some were bewildered.

However, the result of the answer to the woman's question, was the same for all.

—The sins worthy of punishment, lied within their selves.

She looked around. Nobody was there. There no longer was anyone present here, aside from the sinners who had received punishment.

Trampling over the people who had been torn into tiny fragments, and finally over the fragments of her father, for the sake of fulfilling the longstanding desire bestowed upon her, the woman continued walking further, seeking sins worthy of punishment.

—The Witch of Pride questioned sins, delivered punishment, and cast judgement upon sinners.

Upon seeing the beginnings of the Witch he recognized, Subaru's consciousness returned alongside a pain.

Subaru: "Aaaa—!!"

Subaru's consciousness was ejected from he the book with a snapping sound. Accompanied by a feeling of having blood drained dry one the one hand, and a feeling of being externally torn into bits on the other.

Pain resonating not from the head or body, but the soul.

The soul entering into the book, then painfully torn away from it.

Emilia: "Subaru!"

Subaru: "—Aaaa!"

At the same instant that a cry came from beside him, his wrist took a fierce strike. That was Emilia knocking his wrist with a karate chop.

Subaru's hand shook under the impact, and the book he held fell to the ground. It landed spread facedown on the ground, and Subaru stumbled into a bookshelf.

Subaru: "Oh, ah?"

Emilia: "Are, are you okay? Just now, you looked suuuper uncomfortable…"

Subaru: "Somehow, it's over… right? I don't get it either."

Nodding at Emilia who supported him with unease in his eyes, Subaru caught his breath. Although he hadn't done any sprinting, his heartbeat was in a frenzy.

Pressing a hand against his chest to feel the jumping of his heartbeat, Subaru breathed deep. His gaze swiveled around, finally landing on Emilia.

Emilia: “Is everything fine?”

Subaru: “Gazing upon Emilia-tan’s face puts me at ease. Could you give me a hand?”

Emilia: “Alright. What is it?”

Accepting Subaru’s flattering words, Emilia supported his shoulder and asked. As she queried on, Beatrice reached a hand toward the book on the ground.”

Beatrice: “Just now, your expression grew odd after touching this book…”

Subaru: “Wait, Beatrice! Don’t touch it!”

Beatrice: “—?”

Wanting to call Beatrice to a halt as she reached for the book, she had taken it into her lap before he could. Casting her gaze downward, Beatrice read the book’s title aloud under Subaru’s furious gaze.

Beatrice: “—Typhon. Is this the name of someone Subaru knows, I suppose?”

Subaru: “It is, could it be that you…”

At Beatrice’s question, Subaru wanted to ask, ‘Could it be that you don’t know’. However, whether her answer would be in the affirmative or negative was already obvious, and Subaru frowned as he considered what should be said next.

In that period, Beatrice had already opened the book to check its contents.

Subaru: “Idiot—!”

Beatrice: “Idiot is a rather rude thing to say, in fact. There’s nothing special about this book, it’s just the same as the others, I suppose.”

Beatrice would have the same shocking experience that Subaru had

—although that was what had been expected, the girl had no reaction whatsoever to the book's contents. She disappointedly shoved the book back at Subaru. she was dissatisfied with the book and sent it back to her.

Beatrice: "However, Subaru hasn't read any of the other books… is how it seems, in fact."

Subaru: "…Right. But why is it just me?"

Emilia: "Could it be, that just like the riddle of the room, only Subaru can see it? Or, that it only works for Subaru, who solved the riddle…"

Subaru: "If that's so, that personality just seems more and more wicked huh…"

Considering Emilia's words, Subaru shook his head as an unpleasant hunch came over him. In any case, he had no courage to peruse the book that had been shoved at him once more.

—Swimming through his mind, all too vividly, was a firsthand experience of the woman's memories.

The scents, taste of the air, tread on solid ground, as well as the weight of shattering a life.

To awaken after such immersion in the memory of a person, was truly a miracle.

It felt as if drinking down another person's life.

That terror and disgust beyond imagining, had come into existence through experience.

Emilia: "Subaru, where is this Typhon?"

Subaru: "It'd be hard to explain properly… or rather, it may not be so hard if it's Emilia-tan? Maybe you saw her in the tomb?"

Emilia: "Tomb—"

Upon hearing that word, Emilia and Beatrice froze simultaneously.

Tomb was to Subaru, and Emilia and Beatrice in addition a place laden with significance. Thus, considering the Tea Party of Witches that had been held in that ancient tomb, the other two knowing of Typhon would not be so odd.

That said, perhaps Echidna wouldn't have been so candid with Emilia, and as for Beatrice, she had probably known a different Echidna than Subaru had.

Subaru: "Typhon was one of the historical Witches. The Witch of Pride who looked like a loli like Beako with dark skin. However, she was a child who could reify innocently cruel words."

Hearing Subaru's explanation, Emilia and Beatrice both shook their heads after considering.

It seemed Echidna's display of witches, had been reserved especially for Subaru. Although it had just been to make use of Subaru, there had indeed been much preparation but into it.

Subaru: "Innocently cruel, huh…?"

As he spoke, Subaru recalled that he had only had a brief period of contact with Typhon himself.

Although it hadn't happened in the physical world, the sensation of his arms and legs being shattered by her was unforgettable. Although it had been subsequently fixed, the impact of his limbs being taken had still hit at full force.

However, after catching a glimpse of her abnormal origin through reading, the reasons for such behaviors could be explained. Of course, to instantly understand the complex and nuanced reasoning, was no easy feat.

Subaru: "In any case, that book I read just now, were that child named Typhon's… memories? Life? Origin? In summary it was the experience of her entire life. Hardly something easy to come to terms with."

Emilia: “It’s clear from seeing Subaru’s reaction… experiencing the memory of another. This is feeling more and more like some kind of Trial.

Subaru: “In that case, it was just a struggle with your own memories. We~ll, hardly anything so difficult.”

Emilia: “Ri, right. An easy victory.”

As for sobbing cries, countless failures one upon another, body and mind collapsing under pressure, Subaru and Emilia both nodded and chose not to mention them.

As she rolled her eyes at the pair’s attitude, Beatrice wiped at the book’s stains.

Beatrice: “A book showing experiences of another’s memories… in other words, it’s a way of accessing the past, I suppose. In that case, what we need to know is likely contained in the library…”

Subaru: “Beako, have you thought of something—”

Hearing Beatrice’s murmurs, Subaru rose and prepared to ask her for her thoughts. However, before Subaru had a chance to speak, someone else’s voice rang out.

Julius: “…”

The sound had come from the direction of Julius’s group, who had been examining the other bookshelves. Following the direction of the cry, was the sight of Julius kneeling on the ground, with a book in hand.

From beside him an alarmed Anastasia shook the knight’s shoulder, snatching the book away.

Anastasia: “Julius? Julius, pull yourself together! Can you hear my voice?”

Julius: “…Anastasia, -sama.”

Anastasia: “It’s me, good. Slowly, deep breaths… Are you alright?”

In precisely the same way Subaru had just been, Julius's awareness returned to the present. Gazing at Julius's form that was elegant even in weariness, relief shown on Anastasia's expression.

Calling out 'is everything okay?', Subaru dashed toward the pair.

Subaru: "Is your head's spinning after reading a difficult book? I get it I get it."

Julius: "Certainly, of late I have not read anything. A deplorable state for a knight who must be versed in civil affairs and warfare I ought to learn from you who managed to solve the riddles with such ease."

Subaru: "What words, delivered like that…"

If he had felt what Subaru had, his spirit would have borne quite the burden. As such, that he could maintain such elegance afterwards was just uncool.

At the extraneous thoughts contained in Subaru's heart, Emilia knocked at the back of his head with a karate chop.

Subaru: "Gah!"

Emilia: "It won't do to say naughty things on reflex. Julius, is everything really fine?"

Julius: "My sincerest apologies for having worried you. Such an exaggerated reaction truly cannot be excused… Even so, this is truly an unpleasant experience for the heart."

Hiding his internal weariness, Julius's response to Emilia was elegant. However, a thin film of sweat coating his forehead was evidence of a shock that could not be concealed. Anastasia stood on her tiptoes, pressing a handkerchief to Julius's forehead, while Julius hurriedly lowered his head with an air of consternation.

Anastasia: "Although stubbornness is a boy's nature, speak up when you're feeling poorly, won't you? If you insist on doing something beyond you, you'll cause trouble for everyone else too."

Julius: “Right. My gratitude for your attentions.”

Emilia: “Mmm, it’s just as Anastasia-san says. Right, Subaru?”

Subaru: “Though I don’t know why you need me to agree, that’s how it is!”

The exchange between master and vassal of two factions coming to a close, everyone’s attention turned to the book in Anastasia’s hands.

Julius had looked over the contents of the book, and perhaps had had the same experience as Subaru. Looking at the spine, the title inscribed upon it was—.

Emilia: “—Balleroy Temeglyph. Someone you know?”

Subaru: “It’s not a name I’ve heard. For certain.”

Subaru glanced at Emilia who read the title aloud from beside him, then responded confidently.

Indeed, Subaru was confident in his excellent memory. When it came to remembering relationships in this world, from Arlam Village to the fruit stall owner in the capitol, not a single one was missing.

Contained within the list of memories, was no such name as Balleroy. However, Anastasia swiveled her head after hearing the name, wearing a thoughtful expression.

Anastasia: That name, is one I’ve heard. Perhaps… hmm, that’s right. be… um, right. Isn’t that the name of a General of the Vollachian Empire?”

Julius: “—More precisely, he is a former General.”

At Anastasia’s answer borne from vague recollections, Julius added a supplement. Hearing such words, everyone would guess that was someone who Julius had a relationship with.

Only, the distance of that relationship had Subaru frowning.

Subaru: “Vollachia, is the country to the south? You even know a General from there?”

Julius: “Once more, he is a former General. Is that so odd? I am after all one of the royal knights. Since Lugunica and the Vollachian Empire neighbor each other, it shouldn’t be unexpected that I one-sidedly know the name.”

Subaru: “So that’s the case, someone known one-sidedly… huh.”

Accepting Julius’s explanation, Subaru nodded. Then he exhaled lightly and suddenly reached a hand out to snatch Balleroy’s book from Anastasia.

Anastasia: “Natsuki-kun?”

Subaru: “Sorry to startle you. But there’s something that ought to be checked.”

Having had the book snatched from her, Anastasia widened her eyes. Subaru checked the cover of the book, then flipped the book open with a snap to read its contents.

In that moment, Subaru had prepared for the realizing of living vicariously that may have followed. However, he also considered the idea of perhaps it won’t happen. The correct answer proved to be the latter.

Subaru: “I also tried to read the book after one-sidedly hearing the name, but nothing happened.”

Julius: “…Subaru.”

Subaru: “Right now, what matters most between us is trust, no? The trust you and I share… wouldn’t be nonexistent, and only I had thought it was there?”

Julius: “—What a horrid way of putting it.”

Toward Subaru who glared fiercely at him, Julius closed his eyes and answered thus.

He stroked his bangs as he spoke.

Julius: “Compared with the people here, I currently have no one else I can trust more. The support of Anastasia-sama and yourself who provides what even Reinhardt cannot, I would of course accept.”

Subaru: “…To be spoken of like that, can’t help but feel disgusting somehow.”

Julius: “Saying so makes my tongue itch as well.”

Subaru scratched as his nose, and Julius continued to finger at his bangs with eyes his eyes closed. Then he loosened a high, and proceeded to formally bow to Anastasia and Emilia.

Julius: “I apologize for my thoughtlessly offensive behavior, Anastasia-sama, Emilia-sama. Just now, I allowed my own feelings to cloud answer. In these circumstances, the contents of the book ought to be shared by us all, and so my behavior is unforgivable.”

Anastasia: “Whether or not you’ll be forgiven depends on mine and Emilia’s tempers. What do you think?”

Emilia: “What I want to say, has already been said by Subaru and Anastasia-san. So, think about what you should do now. That’s all.”

After Emilia and Anastasia readily accepted his apology, Julius once again bowed low. Subaru knew exactly what lay within his heart.

After making a mistake, taking mitigation from those who accepted an apology, was a weakness that could be forgiven. Subaru well understood this feeling, which he had experienced before himself.

Julius: “Balleroy Temeglyph, General of the Vollachian Empire… is a dead man. And, the one who took his life, is none other than myself.”

Anastasia: “To have killed another country’s General. This is quite a shock to take in.”

Julius: “Anastasia-sama is… no, please forget what you just heard.”

Anastasia: “…”

At Julius’s frankly described recollections, Anastasia narrowed her eyes.

Based on Julius’s reaction just now, it seemed that this had been something he had already shared with Anastasia, before his memory had been taken, and before Echidna had assumed control of her body.

Naturally, that Anastasia was the first to know was unsurprising, and instead Subaru and Emilia were quite shocked.

Emilia: “That’s, if what I recall from my studies is correct, I know that the relationship between Lugunica and Vollachia is su~per poor, but…”

Subaru: “Shouldn’t killing the Empire’s General, have started a war or something?”

At the pair’s candid and simple questions, Julius’s expression became more assured as he nodded lightly.

Julius: “This was the result of a very delicate situation. Reinhardt and Ferris were also dragged into it, to put it directly, the General had prepared to launch a revolt in the Empire. And I had met him face to face, and stayed in the Empire for a brief period.”

Subaru: “So those two were there too. Isn’t Reinhardt banned from being exported?”

Julius: “Since the foreign emperor wanted to meet him, he was granted permission… moreover, don’t you think the words exporting Reinhardt are off?”

Subaru: “Just a slip of the tongue. What else should I call it. Smuggling?”

Something that couldn’t be exported, such phrasing wasn’t wrong in usage. In truth, after having felt Reinhardt’s logic defying combat ability in Priestella, it wasn’t difficult to imagine that Reinhardt would be a nightmare for the forces of other countries to contend with.

Not allowed to approach the border, was a perfectly understandable stipulation in international treaties.

Julius: “In short, that General’s name was Balleroy Temeglyph. My apologies. Due to the sensitive nature of the issue, details of the incident cannot be shared, and in addition the memory is painful to myself as well.”

Subaru: “So it’s something that can’t be discussed openly huh. Got it. I’ll keep my mouth shut.”

Emilia: “Mm, understood. I’ll also keep it a secret.”

With Julius’s circumstances clarified, Subaru and Emilia swore themselves to secrecy on this shared confidence.

And, what allowed Julius to live vicariously was also clear—

Beatrice: “It makes sense now, in fact. The books here, are books that allow a reader to experience the life of someone familiar, I suppose.”

Subaru: “I had the witch, and Julius had the General. Sounds about right.”

Anastasia: “It feels as if, I’ve heard words I can’t quite let go. Natsuki-kun, are you acquainted with a witch? They’re no good, such relationships. They’re all related to the witch cult.”

Subaru: “I’m beyond scared myself, but the relationship with that one is shallow so please rest assured. Recently there hasn’t been much contact to be a bother.”

Subaru shrugged at Anastasia’s words. However, Emilia and Beatrice, and finally even Julius’s expressions looked as if they had just eaten something sour.

The unexpected reaction left Subaru frowning, as Anastasia deeply sighed and continued, Anastasia: “The meaning of the books and this library seem clear now. To share it I’ll have to say something scary, is that okay?”

Subaru: “Hearing it would be really off-putting, but what do you want to say?”

Anastasia: “Every book in this library, is inscribed with a name, yes?”

Saying this fact that everyone knew, Anastasia looked to Subaru for permission to continue. As Subaru nodded in assent, he thought that what would be coming next were those scary words.

Then, Anastasia leveled a finger at Balleroy’s book and Typhon’s book, currently held by Beatrice.

Anastasia: “The Empire’s General, and Natsuki-kun’s witch friend.”

Subaru: “Hey not a friend here!”

Anastasia: “The common point with that witch friend’s book, is that it’s the book of someone deceased.”

Subaru: “…”

Having Typhon be referred to as deceased was actually a little off-putting, but the place where the witches’ tea party of the tomb had been held was no more, so she could be thought of as completely gone.

As for Echidna, since many doubts yet rested on ScarfdonaFoxdona, Subaru couldn’t feel at ease about her.

Setting aside Subaru’s internal thoughts for now, Anastasia spread her hands to gesture at the entirety of the library as she continued.

Anastasia: “The books here, include the names of every single person from past to present in this world, indeed? If so… to find one specific book, how long would it take?”

—Correction. The one who had made this library, did not have a poor personality.

—Rather, they had the worst.

Chapter 24:
The Perverse Examiner

1

—There was a woman, all by herself.

Sensitive to pain, she was always crying, always emotional.

The sole reason for her grief, was that she could not forgive her own lack of strength. All around her, was always a world full of strife, of violence, of war.

No matter how much she pleaded, no matter how much cried out, no matter how much she tried, no matter how much she prayed, the sorrow never ended. So, she began to curse fate.

While cursing it over and over and over, she noticed; It was pointless, no matter how many tears she shed. And when she realized, she began wishing for something else.

Raw power.

To obtain power that would let her throw all away, that would let her overwhelm all others, she struggled to her limits and ran, heading towards the power she so desired.

She was not chasing after the power to harm, nor the power to take. She had no use for that.

She chased power no one could catch up to, which she believed she could use to put an end to violence.

The woman who cried so much, wanted the power to stop crying.

She knew she that if she remained powerless, she could never stop a fight where power was pitted against power.

Her voice remained silent. Her wishes went unfulfilled. Even if her own sorrows were kept distant, sadness still clouded the sky.

How could they be okay? How could they hurt one another? How could they think to live with those scars? How, how, how? Why could they not realize they have other ways to live?

Woman: “Children are crying. The elderly are crying. Men are crying. Women are crying. Everyone is crying. Then, why—!!”

To stop exactly that, she solely desired for power.

Training herself, she endured all pains to finally obtain an iron—clad will.

Eventually, she found the end of her path. The pinnacle of strength where none else could reach.

Standing on the battlefield, she shouted to stop the fight.

To overwhelm all other powers with her own, to crush all grief, shatter all malice and to stop before her, the endless stream of tears, she struggled to her utmost.

Punching those who brandished their swords, kicking those who flung magic, breaking those who bared their fangs, she pulverized all and any who came to seek battle.

But, the more the woman fought, the stronger became the swordsmen, the mages and the bearer of fangs, ever increasing their numbers.

As if she had entered a never—ending spiral of violence.

No one knew how to save themselves other than to answer violence with violence. That was why, no one knew of a way to save themselves aside from victory in battle.

Woman: “Why—!!”

In the end, the woman herself, despite knowing this, also answered with violence. Lowering her fist that dripped crimson, she turned her blood—smeared face to the sky, and wailed.

The fighting would not stop. Her efforts, her hard work, all had been in vain; neither others nor her own tears would stop flowing.

Finally, in the chest of the woman who had been ceaselessly running, despair crept in.

Dripping down her cheeks, tears overflowed.

The tears that continuously streamed were not warm, but rather cold, the tears of someone powerless, drowning in despair.

However, alongside them flowed out a different, deep emotion.

Dyeing her heart pitch black, her vision red and her mind white, a tempest awakened within.

Face still wet with tears, the woman came to know of that emotion.

As she came to know its name, its origins, she came to understand it.

She had not been shedding tears of sadness.

She had merely been drowning in the madness of rage.

People called that emotion Fury—no, they called it Wrath.

To this world that forced others to tears, to those who refuse to stop fighting, to the absurd unfairness that is the end of life.

—Let them, have a taste of my iron fists.

At some point, she stood up, wiped the dirt off her knees, and took off running.

Diving into the fray of the still ongoing battle, she punched everyone's faces whilst shouting.

Stop fighting. Look at the sky. Feel the breeze. Smell the flowers. Live, with your families and loved ones.

For the first time, the woman's voice swept unrest throughout the battlefield.

Fists that could break apart the Earth, kicks that could cause the heavens to roar, all only to let others live.

Wounds closed, screams silenced and knees bent in the face of the spreading warmth as battle lost its meaning.

Soon the voices that wept disappeared from the battlefield, life returned to the mundane.

When the people’s tears stopped, they felt gratitude towards her. They raised their voices, waved their hands and smiled.

However, the woman was suddenly no longer there.

That was only natural.

The woman still had things to do. She had no reason to turn back, no reason to stop walking.

To fulfill her desire to create a world where no one cries, where there is no conflict, where no one has to take from one another, she ran, and ran, and kept running, as she threw around her fists.

Till the day everyone stops crying. Till the day the warm droplets rolling down her cheeks stop.

—The Witch of Wrath, who had declared war on sadness itself, continued to run ever, evermore.

2

“…”

Yet again, after finding a Book of the Dead and gaining the knowledge it held, Subaru returned to reality.

From within the confines of its bindings had poured out the name of whose life it recorded, the many battlefields she had crossed through, and the conviction she once held when she was alive, albeit, all of it being only a drop in the ocean of her entire life.

Even though he understood that—

Subaru: “…that was heavy.”

He felt as if a lump of dense, heavy lead was clogging up his chest.

For humans, no matter who, a second is a second, a minute is a minute, a year is a year. There is no scale that can measure the weight of a life differently, and thus time flows equally for all.

Such a scale of time, could not simply be contained within such flimsy paper, nor could it be transferred to the mind from it, no matter how special the technology.

Still, even though he had simply touched it, Subaru had to clench his teeth to keep his mind, so as to not be swept away by the rush of memories that flowed in.

The footprints of their lives that one left behind, were indeed great and heavy.

Emilia: “Subaru, are you okay?”

Subaru: “…ah, yeah, I’m fine. Feeling okay. My head just took a spin, that’s all.”

Emilia: “That’s not what feeling okay means…”

Closing the book in hand, he returned it to the shelf as Emilia watched. Meeting her gaze with one eye closed, Subaru pointed to the book he just put back,

Subaru: “I found another volume of the Witches’ books. This time, well, it was one of the better Witches, if that’s possible. She was still a little weird, though.”

Emilia: “The weird one… Sekhmet?”

Subaru: “Hey, that’s one of the weirdest of the bunch. Wait, you know Sekhmet?”

Back at the Tomb of the Sanctuary, Emilia was supposed to have met Echidna in the Witch’s Tea Party, but Subaru never asked if she had met the others. He had assumed Echidna made an exception for him, and so, had not allowed Emilia to meet the other five Witches. So it startled Subaru when Sekhmet's name slipped from her mouth.

The Witch of Sloth Sekhmet, was a woman with long, flowing magenta hair, owner of a deeply self—indulgent personality. Putting that and her demeanor aside, she was the most reasonable person among the Witches.

Subaru: "If you know Sekhmet, what about the other witches? Like, the one from this book, Minerva, or something."

Emilia: "Er, no, sorry. I didn't meet anyone else but Echidna and Sekhmet at the Tomb. I didn't talk to Sekhmet all that much either."

Subaru: "That so. No, it's fine either way. Even if you did know her, this wasn't something you'd enjoy seeing anyway."

Flashing a dry smile at Emilia who hung her head, Subaru tapped the side of the bookshelf lightly.

The shelves that stored the memories of the dead were made of a strange material. Under his palm was not the sensation of wood, nor of iron, and the bookcase itself refused to budge when pressed.

Currently, while going through the Library on the 3rd Floor Taygeta, Subaru and co. came to understand that the numerous books that were stuffed into the bookshelves both recorded and invoked the memories of the dead. Despite that, they steadily continued their search for something very simple.

Emilia: "That aside, I wonder where the stairs to get to the upper floor are?"

Subaru: "Right now, I have zero leads on that."

Emilia tilted her head, deep in thought, while Subaru stood opposite, gazing downward as he sighed.

At present, everyone was worrying their heads over, not on how to get past the 3rd Floor Taygeta 's next Trial, but on where the location of the stairway that led to the 2nd floor would be.

The white area where the Monolith was had faded, leaving open Taygeta ‘s Great Library.

Thanks to that, they now had access to the memories of the dead, a concept that was surely very desirable, which was good and all but,

Subaru: “Well, for now, we don’t really have a use for this place.”

To search for the information everyone wanted by digging through the memories of the dead would be a herculean task, given its nature, as one could not even choose the memories they wanted to see, due to the absurd amount of time, and even luck, it would take.

Neither of those could be spared at the moment. Time was obviously short, but also that Subaru did not have enough faith in his own luck, no matter how much he was blessed with it.

Subaru: “So that’s why the info we want might be on the upper floors. It’s supposed to be.”

Emilia: “But, there’s no way to get upstairs. I tried to get on top of the bookcases, but it didn’t work out.”

Subaru: “You’re pretty bold, aren’t you, Emilia-tan…”

Emilia pointed to the ceiling while recalling what she had tried to do.

In the midst of their brain—wracking search for the staircase that led to the upper floor, she had climbed up on top of the tallest bookcase there was in the Library. The cases were arranged in a circular fashion, with small steps elevated to lead inward, placing the tallest bookcase at the center. However, even that had not reached the ceiling of the room.

It should be noted that, despite how Emilia had climbed the bookcase, and despite how her short skirt was waving about boldly during the action itself, her movements were such that nothing was visible underneath, strangely enough.

When Subaru poked at it in a roundabout manner, Emilia simply touched the hem of her skirt and, Emilia: “Puck taught me. Um, what was it again? A lady must always act with beauty and grace? I’m always careful about it, don’t worry.”

Subaru: “I feel kinda conflicted about this. I want to praise him, but I want to blame him too… Anyway,”

Emilia had already failed in her attempt to physically force a way to the next floor.

In other words, there was a hidden gimmick to the appearance of the staircase. This was not only limited to the appearance of the Library, but extended to the process of going up further.

If it were too hard, the challenger’s motivation would likely fall, but the creator of the Watchtower, Flugel, must have taken that into account as well. The nerve.

Subaru: “Man, I really wanna see this guy’s face… But how he looks is a mystery too, damnit.”

Julius: “—Subaru, can you come here a bit?”

While he grumbled, a voice called from behind him. On the opposite side of Subaru and co., rummaging through a separate bookcase, was Julius. Seeing him approach with Anastasia in tow, Subaru raised his hand.

Subaru: “Sure, what’s up. You found something?”

Julius: “Unfortunately, nothing worth mentioning. I have not been able to find a single volume with a name I know, since that first one. Your side seems to be in a similar situation as well.”

Emilia: “That’s not really accurate. Subaru did a good job, he really did find another volume, then looked through it and started looking kinda wobbly. Right, Subaru?”

Subaru: “I’ll take Emilia-tan’s praise to heart, but that’s how it is.”

Julius: “I see. Please take care of yourself.”

Subaru knotted his brows as Julius turned away from him, disinterested. While watching the two from aside, Emilia spoke,

Emilia: “But, Julius and the others haven’t found the stairs too, huh. We’re really in trouble.”

Julius: “I understand where Emilia-sama is coming from. However, if we are to believe that this Library does indeed record the names of all the dead, from the past to the present, although it is quite hard to digest, I’m afraid we alone cannot make much progress. We need many more people, like the entire population of a country, or so.”

Julius proposed with a serious face. Subaru had no objections with the proposal’s idea, feeling that such a number was more or less necessary. The Augria Sand Dunes have already been conquered, and if one needed to only reach the Watchtower, one only had to avoid the nest of witchbeasts. That alone could be a great adventure by itself but—

Julius: “Unlike before, the way to the Tower is as good as open. I believe that it is worthwhile to report the existence of this mysterious Library to the capital. We could make much more effective use of it that way.”

Subaru: “The value of this information is definitely nothing to joke about… But I’m also pretty sure a lot of history buffs just like you will be born from this, eh.”

At Subaru’s rapid fire words, Julius stopped, and after a moment, shut his eyes and sighed,

Julius: “…to say I am not expecting that, would be a lie. Apologies. I had a selfish motive for that proposal.”

Subaru: “Come on, don’t get down like that. What’s wrong with being self—centered? If you’re feeling so sorry for that, what are you gonna make of me? I’m working just for my own sake, 100% of the time.”

Never truly acting out of duty, always expecting some kind of reward, that was how Subaru behaved. It was already his way of life, his philosophy.

That was why he could not compare to knights like Julius or Reinhardt.

Subaru: “Anyway, there’s no point in keeping yourself from it. I mean, the reason Anastasia-san herself wants to become the Monarch is pretty self-centered, right?”

Anastasia: “Yup, that’s right. I want to become the Monarch because I want to satisfy my greed. If I do, I can profit a lot more. That’s all there is to it.”

Anastasia laughed at Subaru’s crass remark, then softly patted the white fur of her scarf.

Anastasia: “That’s why I think it’s so amusing that Julius became my Knight. At least, I think that way. Is that so for Emilia-san too?”

Subaru: “Personally, it’s better for us if you guys’ paces don’t match, so just go along that and fall apart—Ouch! Emilia-tan, it hurts!”

Emilia: “Don’t say mean things—I’m personally not acquainted with Anastasia-san and her faction from before, so I can’t say anything carelessly. But, no matter how better my opponents are, I’ll win my way, alongside my knights.”

At the part about her knights, Emilia tugged at Subaru’s sleeve and puffed up her chest. Looking at that face from the side, Subaru exhaled a long sigh.

Emilia: “We might be greenhorns, but we won’t lose!”

Subaru: “No one says greenhorn anymore these days… Ouch! It hurts!”

Emilia pinched Subaru’s arm for making fun of her, so he quickly bounced away to escape the punishment. Looking at the two’s behavior, Julius and Anastasia’s expressions relaxed.

Especially Julius, who looked to have dropped his air of self-reflection.

Julius: “Sometimes, I truly do feel afraid of you two. How much is an act, and how much is genuine, I can never tell.”

Subaru: “My case aside, Emilia-tan is always serious. That’s what makes her so cute, right?”

Julius: “I’ll take it to heart.”

As Julius pulled in his chin, the derailed conversation came to a stop. Instead, Anastasia clapped to bring everyone back on topic.

Anastasia: “Anyway, bringing it back to where we were… We’re short on people, so there was talk of bringing in others from the outside, right?”

Julius: “Yes, that is so. Right now, as there are few things to worry about for the Dunes, I believe it would be possible to bring a large investigation team into the Tower. It would not only help with solving the mystery of this Library, but also further in as we go above…”

Anastasia: “That’s right, but I feel a tad bit anxious.”

Julius: “Anxious, you say?”

Cutting off Julius’ fervent speech, Anastasia nodded. Julius frowned as she raised her finger to point.

Anastasia: “I’d welcome an increase in helping hands, been wondering about that myself. Going around this Library’s taking a toll on my neck. Ya know, I’m small and all, so it’s a real pain.”

She spoke as she rubbed her nape,

Anastasia: “But, in the first place, I’m wondering if it’s possible to even fit a lot of people into the tower.”

Julius: “…”

Anastasia: “Thinking about what’s in it for the other party’s one of the basics of business. Well, I might be calling it business basics, but it'll come in handy no matter where you are in life. So, let's start thinking along those lines."

Julius: "Think about where the other party stands? But, who's that?"

Anastasia: "The one who built this tower and set up the Trial, and left behind Shaula-san… That one. Let's think about being in his shoes for a moment. You'll see."

Subaru: "That, his personality's crap?"

Anastasia: "Yup, I think he's completely out of it."

As Subaru's lips twisted, Anastasia nodded in affirmation.

Upon hearing those words, the always—serious Emilia and Julius became stiff. But, with how twisted Subaru and Anastasia's personalities were, they both seemed to be in perfect sync.

Anastasia's opinion seemed to be the most apparent case, if the person with the awful personality really did try to raise the difficulty of conquering the Tower.

Subaru: "Shaula! I've got something to ask. Come here."

Shaula: "Master? Aye, aye—! Coming right away!"

Once called, Shaula hopped over from the other side of the large bookcase, her figure leaping up.

Arms outstretched, her long ponytail waving in the air, she grinned as she jumped towards Subaru's chest—

Shaula: "Ma—s—ter!"

Subaru: "Nope."

Shaula: "Ughyah—!"

With a nimble step, Subaru dodged the incoming glomp. However, as Shaula was still going, she dove face—first onto the floor, her arms splayed across. She quickly turned to shoot a glare at him.

Shaula: "Uu—Master is super mean."

Subaru: "No, no, I didn't move away because it was you, but because you were gonna crash into me full force, so my reflexes kicked in."

Shaula: "So you'll let me hug you if I come at you slowly?!"

Subaru: "Eh? Don't wanna, though."

Shaula: "Why not! What part of me is lacking! Even though I look this glamorous! Even though I'm this bitchy!"

Subaru: "You're bitchy, huh… Then that's why."

Whining at the top of her voice, Shaula boo-ed at Subaru's cold attitude. And, while she pouted, two small girls came around from where she had jumped.

Beatrice and Meili, foregoing their appearance, were an uncommon pairing indeed.

As if noticing Subaru's thoughts through his gaze, or maybe having realized it on her own, Beatrice put a bit more distance between herself and Meili.

Beatrice behaved that way with Petra as well, even though they were around the same age (outwardly). She maintained a clear line between herself and Meili.

Of course, it would be impossible for her to treat Petra and Meili in the same way. Petra was an ally from the same camp, while Meili was originally sent as an assassin from somewhere, who was even involved in the burning of the Forbidden Library and the Roswaal Mansion.

Subaru: "If you keep shying away from people like that, you're never gonna make friends, you know."

Beatrice: “What are you spouting all of a sudden, I suppose. Anyway, Shaula disappeared in the middle of talking, so we quietly came back, in fact.”

Subaru: “Ah—I ruined the convo over there, my bad my bad. Well, did you guys find anything good?”

Beatrice: “…There was nothing in particular, I suppose. And, thinking back, it might’ve not even been worth calling a conversation, in fact. Yup, that’s all that was, I suppose.”

Subaru: “—?”

Snapping away her face, Beatrice cut off answering Subaru’s question.

Before the alienated Subaru could further question her cold response, Shaula had gotten back to her usual self.

She stood upright by the strength of her abs alone and,

Shaula: “Well, Master being mean isn’t anything new. I can pull myself together alone. Getting back up fast is one of my selling points.”

Julius: “That, alongside your cooperation, Miss Shaula, is something that helps us. By the way, may I ask something?”

Shaula: “What’s up? I’ll warn you beforehand, I won’t fall for someone who’s not Master.”

Julius: “I admit that you are an attractive woman, but I’m afraid I’ll have to take a rain check on our date for now. —I would like to ask and confirm a few things about this Tower.”

Julius elegantly added in a few sweet words but tastefully avoided the topic altogether. This surprised Shaula, who lauded herself as being stubborn as a bitch. As she was not expecting such an answer, her eyes widened, something that was very unlike her usual self, and meekly gave a “Um, sure,”

Julius: “My thanks. Then I begin. Firstly… Do you know the location of the stairs to the 2nd Floor?”

Shaula: “The stairs to the 2nd Floor, Electra ? No clue. Never went up beyond the 4th. So don’t know.”

Julius: “That by itself is quite the shocking statement.”

If she was to be trusted, then Shaula had been at the Watchtower for about 400 years.

If, within that time, she had not once gone off to explore the Tower she lived in, but instead focused on keeping the Sand Dunes under her observation, then she was just too loyal to the one she followed.

Frankly, Subaru felt very conflicted about being mistaken for that same Master.

Anastasia: “Julius, if you’ll let me interrupt for a moment.”

This time, replacing her knight was Anastasia. Standing in front of her, Anastasia’s light blue eyes reflected Shaula’s figure.

Anastasia: “Shaula-san’s position is that, right? To be accurate, you’re the watchman of the Watchtower… No, of the Great Library Pleiades, right?”

Shaula: “Eee~xactly.”

Anastasia: “I see. Then, according to my calculation… It’s four, no, five?”

Anastasia lifted her right hand up to show five fingers. Shaula, who could not grasp what she was getting at, simply stared down at her and blinked.

However,

Anastasia: “—the secrets Shaula-san was told to keep, to protect the Tower, there’s five of em, right?”

Shaula: “…”

Anastasia beamed widely as Shaula fell silent, coming at a loss for words.

As the two stared at one another, eye to eye, all it took was but a slight jerk of her shoulders to tell Anastasia that she was completely correct.

3

Shaula: “In the first place, I wasn’t really hiding anything. I just didn’t say anything because I wasn’t asked. I want that on paper, please.”

Subaru: “Just spit everything out already.”

While Anastasia brought her secret—keeping to light, it was Subaru who crushed what few excuses Shaula was trying to make.

In response to his forced demeanor, Shaula pressed the tip of her fingers together and answered,

Shaula: “Like, for example, if Master and everyone secretly tried to get out of the Tower, I’d have to kill everyone, no mercy.”

Subaru: “The hell, what’s with you suddenly?!”

Shaula: “I wouldn’t do it because I wanted to! We’re just talking about what-ifs. In the first place, I can’t even go against that order.”

At the sudden revelation of hostile intentions, Subaru intently stared at Shaula, who shrunk back as she shook her head. Her bountiful chest pressed against her knees, she cradled herself into a ball.

Shaula: “I can’t even kill you in the first place, Master. I’d get killed before that even happens, and it’ll be over with that, so the whole order’s messed up…”

Subaru: “If you’re really that against it, why not just… not…? Unless, wait, you’re not gonna say it’s a Contract, right?”

Feeling something off, Subaru brought those words to his lips.

In the first place, if one thought about Shaula's identity, then it would be very clear. For 400 years, in place of the Sage, she lived at the Tower, looking over the Witch's Seal as the Tower's watchman.

Given such a role, and actually having acted upon it for the past several centuries—Neither her lifestyle nor her lifespan were humane.

Subaru: "You, are you a spirit just like Beako?"

In lieu of a fake promise, Beatrice was locked up inside of the Forbidden Library for 400 years.

If, just like her, Shaula had spent the past 400 years shooting down any who dared approach the Watchtower, waiting for those who would fulfill the conditions, then possibly, she and Beatrice were the same kind of existence—.

Shaula: "No way. Not gonna stand being compared to those fluff—ball things called spirits. I absolutely refuse… Everyone's eyes are looking pretty scary suddenly!"

Subaru: "That's because 80% of everyone present here is related to spirits!"

As it stood, counting the amateur as well, there were three Spirit Users. Furthermore, one particular young girl was a Spirit herself, and another who was possessed by an Artificial Spirit herself. The only ones unrelated to Spirits were the Oni sisters who waited downstairs, and the small girl who was looking at Shaula with a mischievous expression for some reason, Meili. None of what Shaula said had sat well most with those who were present.

However,

Subaru: "Let's leave that at that, anyway, what the hell are you. If you're not a Spirit, then I don't see why you'd so desperately keep up your Contract."

Emilia: "What are you saying, Subaru. Even if you are not a Spirit or a Spirit User, if you make a promise, you have to keep it. Promises are important. Now, repeat after me."

Subaru: “No, wait, that was my bad just now. It was just a figure of speech and…”

Emilia: “Promises are important. Three times.”

Subaru: “Promises are important. Promises are important. Promises are important.”

Getting unexpectedly rebuked by Emilia, he repeated her words three times to get forgiveness.

Either way, both Emilia’s and Subaru’s unwitting charade, and Shaula’s strictly obstinate attitude, were difficult to understand by outsiders.

It was not simply a matter of messed up sense of duty, too.

Julius: “Right now, what is important is to learn more about the orders Miss Shaula had received. It’s a bad habit of yours to derail the conversation. Be aware of it.”

Subaru: “Like all of it’s my fault… Fine! That was my bad, all of it was my bad! I’ll admit it was my fault, so just leave it at that, damn you!”

Shaula: “Wow, that’s totally a big outburst, but that’s just expected of Master! I’ll talk.”

To Subaru who approached with a pathetic and sour face, Shaula beamed and dealt her hand. Then, she cleared her throat, and in a strangely decent manner, “Now then,” she opened her mouth,

Shaula: “I humbly present that, I will now speak of the orders I was given. First, I am to never let the challenger of the Great Library Pleiades get out.”

Subaru: “We’re suddenly stuck here!”

Shaula: “It’s alright! There’s a proper way out! As long as you properly clear the Great Library’s Trial, and reach the 1st Floor Maia, there’s no problem. It’s all OK.”

Shaula said as she gave a thumbs up.

Shaula: “By the way, if this condition is violated, then I’ll turn into a cold—blooded killing machine pretty quick, so it’ll invalidate my promise with Master. I’ll get in the way.”

Subaru: “That’s got a bigger priority than my promise, huh? Kinda hurts.”

Shaula: “Ooo—to think I’ve managed to hurt Master, I must’ve gotten stronger~! This is clearly an evolution! The fruits of 400 years!”

Subaru: “I’m joking!”

Shaula: “Me too~!”

After indulging in the fast back and forth, Shaula raised a second finger and waved around her hand and spoke,

Shaula: “Continuing, well, I’m getting tired of this, so I’ll rush it. First, it’s forbidden to leave without completing the Trial. Second, it’s forbidden to break the rules of the Trial. Third, it’s forbidden to disrespect the Library. Fourth, it’s forbidden to try to destroy the Tower itself. Fifth, ah—fifth was… Oh. There’s no fifth.”

Emilia: “All of that makes four rules… but,”

Somewhat taking in Shaula and her butchered explanation, Emilia turned towards Subaru and the others. The anxieties and fears she embraced, were ones Subaru understood too.

The rules Shaula spoke of were, roughly, easy to stand by, but there were several curious statements mixed in. The problem was especially with—

Subaru: “I’m really curious about the ‘It’s forbidden to violate the rules of the Trial ‘ bit.”

Julius: “Seems like it is a hidden rule we are unaware of.”

Julius agreed with Subaru, who touched his chin, lost in thought.

At least, for the Trial of the 3rd Floor, Taygeta, Subaru and co. had not received any information about the Rules during it, and had not faced any problems with the Monolith and its Asterism.

Speaking of which, the moment anyone touched the wrong Monolith, they were disqualified.

Anastasia: “Rules, regulations… they all sorta sound like bad news, at least to me.”

Emilia: “…The Ordeal from back at the Tomb would close down for the day if the challenger failed to pass it. It somewhat seems quite similar to how we redid the Trial from earlier, so maybe—”

Emilia stopped herself at that point, and bit her lip. Her trembling purple eyes darted to Subaru, who gave a slight nod.

Subaru: “If you’ve got anything on your mind, now’s the best time to speak up. Don’t worry, I won’t make fun of you, no matter what you say.”

Emilia: “Mmh, I know. Um, you see, Subaru and Anastasia—san were saying that, the person who made this Tower is reeally mean… right?”

Subaru: “Your choice of words is turning pretty cute, but that’s right. What about it?”

Emilia: “Thinking from the point of view of the other party is also important. In other words, if you try to look at what Shaula said, while imagining how that reeally mean person felt, it’s kinda like —”

As everyone’s gazes turned to Emilia, she licked her lips, then she clapped together her hands, and pointed to the ceiling.

Emilia: “There are rules we have to follow, but we don’t know what those rules are… That’s really mean, isn’t it?”

Subaru: “…in other words,”

Emilia: “We have to imagine what could be the possible rules, and go on without breaking them.”

“…”

Everyone’s faces tightened with anxiety at Emilia’s words.

To their response, Emilia’s long eyelashes fringed as she looked down.

Emilia: “I feel like, Echidna would do something like this.”

Subaru: “…Emilia—tan, to think we’d think of the same person when it comes to crappy personalities. We think alike.”

That one sentence lent a bit more credibility to Subaru’s own thoughts, at the very least.

The owner of the malicious personality Emilia mentioned—He felt it was close to being right.

Establishing rules that were not meant to be broken, but not telling the Challenger themselves the contents of the rules.

It was quite the distasteful disposition.

Subaru: “By the way, are you the one who’s going to judge whether the rules are broken or not?”

Shaula: “You’re coming to get the hang of it. All the stuff I just said, I’m supposed to just get it if there’s any violation of them. Absolutely no way to trick me. Goes for both Master, and his friends.”

The meek voice expressed a mysterious power in the latter half of her words.

That was not the physical prowess of Shaula, but rather the opposite.

—That there was someone much stronger than Shaula, who could make her act like that.

Subaru: “It was already a bad joke, but now another bad joke got piled on top of it. Too late anyway.”

Julius: “At times, I feel envious of the frivolous way you speak.”

Julius sighed as he spoke. Looking at his handsome profile, Subaru shrugged.

Julius: “Perhaps it is because of how you’re always looking up, that you developed such a persona. If that is so, then I am afraid I will never be able to gain such an experience.”

Subaru: “You need to be more afraid of what’s around your feet. You’ll stub your toe on the corner of a desk. I really hope you do.”

Anastasia: “Yes, yes, good friends getting into arguing’s fine and all, but let’s not be forgetting our main topic.”

Splitting Julius and Subaru up, Anastasia stepped up to gaze down upon Shaula.

Subaru: “That’s all there is? It’s all fine till now, right?”

Shaula: “Cross my heart. Not lying this time. Besides, so long as the rules aren’t broken, my body’s still gonna be mine. No wait, that’s wrong. It’ll still be Master’s.”

Subaru: “Don’t want it.”

Shaula: “I got rejected! But, my heart’s always with Master!”

Subaru: “Don’t want that either.”

Hands on her waist, Anastasia reconfirmed everything Shaula had spoken of in short, with a few unnecessary words added by Shaula, alongside her own position in recent events. It took a while, but she managed to confirm that Subaru’s promise with her—To not harm him or his comrades, remained intact, and she planned on keeping it.

Of course, with the condition that none of the rules have yet been broken.

Emilia: “Either way, to think we can’t get out unless we complete the Trial … It’s coming to look pretty similar to the Ordeal from back at the Tomb.”

Subaru: “Nah, worst case scenario, so long as we beat this here, we all get to go home, right? That’s a lot easier than the one at the Tomb.”

Shaula: “Master would never do anything like that! He was the kindest ever! Had the biggest heart ever! Uwah, my body’s itchy because I lied!”

Shaula fluttered around, reaping what she sowed, as Emilia and Subaru looked on with disappointed expressions.

For the time being, that was all they got from Shaula.

Meili: “Are you all finished talking? Can I go get on the barely clothed Onee—san now?”

Subaru: “We’re done, we’re done. Go ahead. Do what you want. Wait, you’ve already gotten super attached to her.”

Judging that the talk was over, Meili, who had been staying out of the conversation, ran up to Shaula and climbed on top of her thin shoulders.

That was the place Meili felt most comfortable, ever since arriving at the Tower. To Shaula, who had lifted the dragon carriage like it was no big deal, Meili ought to be as light as a feather.

Meili: “Whenever I’m with Onee—san, I feel kinda safer.”

Shaula: “Well, I don’t think much of it. I can look after ankle—biter number two just fine.”

Subaru: “Number two?”

Shaula: “Ankle—biter number two’s this one here, and number one is that one over there.”

With Meili still on her back, Shaula pointed to Beatrice as number one.

Beatrice made no comment on Shaula's belittling remark. Normally, considering her personality, she would have snapped at her at full force, face red and puffy.

Subaru: "Wait a sec, she hasn't been talking for a while now. Is everything okay?"

Beatrice: "…"

Subaru: "Beako? Oii, Beatrice. Pay attention, come on. I'll kiss your forehead if you don't."

Beatrice: "…do what you want, in fact."

Subaru: "…"

As if barely listening, Beatrice answered. Finding it unamusing, Subaru frowned.

And then,

Subaru: "Mwah—"

Beatrice: "Ngyah—I suppose?!"

Feeling somewhat annoyed, he really kissed her forehead. Immediately, Beatrice came to her senses, covered her forehead and leapt away. Then tripped. Then got up. Then tripped again.

Subaru: "You're overreacting…"

Beatrice: "Wha, wha, wha, what are you doing all of a sudden, in fact?! Your train of thought makes no sense, I suppose!"

Subaru: "My train of thought makes perfect sense. I even got permission from you. Are you really okay?"

Feeling a little hurt at how she desperately scrubbed the part where he had kissed, Subaru worried about the little girl.

Putting in a little thought, this Tower, a place with a shady backstory, was in the middle of the Sand Dunes. Subaru did not understand it very well, but there was some kind of Miasma flowing through here, so that might be the cause.

Subaru: "If you're not feeling good, just hold my hand. You get better that way, right."

Beatrice: "That's impossible, it won't happen, in fact! Give me a little time to calm down, I suppose!"

Her face beet—red, Beatrice squealed at Subaru, so he turned away with a shrug. That she refused to hold hands came as a bit of a shock, but the rest of her attitude was that of her usual self.

If there was something really worrying about her, he would just ask again later.

Subaru: "Now then, the problem is…"

Julius: "That in the end, we have no choice but to fumble through the unknown in search of the stairs to the 2nd Floor, is it."

Julius finished Subaru's sentence as the two turned to face the bookcases once more.

The reason they looked a bit down was that, they needed a bit more manpower to tackle this, but because of the orders Shaula had been given, they had to relinquish the thought.

If they did not clear the Trial, they would not be allowed to get out of the Tower. Naturally, one could not go out to beyond the Sand Dunes to call for help.

Ultimately, there was no choice but to continue the search with the members present.

Subaru: "Will you get it if I say, 'It's like looking for a single grain of gold in a mountain of sand.'?"

Julius: "Speaking in such poetic words is unlike you. However, I can honestly agree with them."

Rare as it was, faced with the great hurdle that obstructed them, Subaru and Julius got along.

Nothing could be accomplished by dawdling, so they prepared to dive once more into the sea of books to find a way to the next floor, or so they had decided when,

Emilia: “Heey, I put a little thought into it, and,”

Emilia interrupted the two who were going back into the Library with a slightly raised hand.

She tilted her head towards them, put a finger to her lips, and spoke,

Emilia: “I thought about how the person who built this tower, his personality is a little dishonest, right?”

Subaru: “Your word choice is turning adorable again, but that’s right. So?”

Putting together everything that was discussed from the previous conversation, Emilia added “So,” and continued,

Emilia: “The staircase, I think it might just be at that spot—”

4

Subaru: “I’ll say it again. The guy who made this Tower has the shittiest personality ever!!”

Standing in front of the long and winding staircase that led to the 2nd Floor Electra, Subaru spat out various colors of abuse.

The staircase that led to the 2nd Floor, the location which Emilia had thought of, was—

Emilia: “I thought it’d be in the places where we hadn’t looked, like maybe on the 4th or 5th Floors.”

Emilia spoke, feeling elated, yet somewhat perplexed.

Her guess had hit the nail squarely on its head. The staircase had appeared right beside the Green Room, where Rem and Ram were waiting, in a previously blank space.

Chapter 25:
The Man Who Waits on the Second Floor, Electra

1

—There was a woman, all by herself.

Oppressed was the woman; by her family, her clan, by her race who should have loved her. All saw her with disdain, all ostracized her.

Prior to being born, expectations were laid upon that woman. Alas, her birth turned her traitor to them.

What remained was dejection and disappointment, what bestowed upon her was only scorn and ridicule. Those were the sole possessions of the woman.

There existed a dearest wish of her clan. To bring back the symbol of their former glory and prosperity, the second coming of their founder whom they called god.

All kinds of secret arts and all types of inhumane atrocities, unfathomable, the number of taboos committed, all of its fruits was the woman.

However, the birth of that woman betrayed their dearest wish, and the clan abandoned the woman with disappointment and despair.

Clansmen: “Go somewhere and live and die. For that is your sin.”

Abandoned by her family, by her race, she was released into the fields as a child.

Cast away with no means of survival, the child was not supposed to survive.

However, even if she lacked means of survival, she possessed the strength to survive.

Ironically enough, it was the feast of what betrayed the dearest wish of the clan, the taboos and offences they had committed.

Unknown to words, lacking all wisdom, merely abiding by her instincts, the woman survived to live a long life in the fields.

Killing beasts, sipping on their lifeblood, crawling on the earth, tasting muddy water.

Before a long time passed, the child became a young girl, the young girl became a woman, and it became difficult to live in the fields.

Hearing the rumors of a woman laying waste to the mountains as if it were a beast, men aimed for that life, and the woman was captured.

The captured woman appeared beautiful, the men abstained from taking away her life, and the woman was proceeded to be kept by them.

While becoming a yes—man of the men, gradually the woman's consciousness descended onto a human environment from the fields.

Losing the indispensability of struggling to survive, exposed to the desires of the men, days of merely living.

Eventually the woman, upon the bed, came to acquire things unacquainted from the men.

Words, wisdom, way of life, and emotions.

Eventually her treatment altered, conferred with things to adorn her body, the woman was treated like a precious jewel.

Among those days, the woman embraced queer thoughts for the men.

Whether that was something resembling gratitude or obligation, the woman then had no lead to understand that.

While embracing those thoughts, the woman snapped the necks of all the men dwelling in the residence.

Easily, in one breath, without making them suffer, in an instant, grouping them all together, she consigned them to oblivion.

Sneaking away from the residence, proceeding towards the fields, lacking all doubt, the woman returned to her own hometown.

The woman attained queer thoughts regarding the race residing there, the clan possessing the same blood as her, the people who had bodies distantly larger than hers.

That they were feelings of hatred and desire for revenge, the woman then did not realize.

Merely, their weeps and wails, voices begging for forgiveness were quite thrilling. For the first time, the woman smiled from her heart.

Woman: “Fall apart here and die an unsightly death. —Because that is your sin, you see.”

For the sake of attaining that felicity, from one after the other, the woman pulverized the dearest wish of her race, her blood relatives, her clan by herself.

Politely and courteously, not leaving a single one, not sparing a single one, taking her time, one by one, with certainty.

Before long, when all of her race died out, when anything and everything had come to an end, the woman returned to the residence where she had lived with the men.

Though she had abandoned the corpses of her race, she buried all of the corpses of the men courteously.

And once merely she alone was left in the residence, the woman took a deep, deep breath.

That was relaxation, tranquility, the woman, for the first time, experienced utter bliss.

Nobody would interfere with her now. Thinking and taking action, both lay in futility, so she will merely fall asleep.

—The Witch of Sloth continued to indulge in everlasting inactivity, untiring peace.

2

—The stairway that led to the 2nd Floor Electra ought to be called the Great Stairway, because of its grand presence.

Compared to the spiral stairway used to get from the 6th Floor to the 5th Floor and furthermore to the 4th, the Great Stairway was much much wider, and much much longer.

As it took the space of an entire room, the intimidating feel it gave off was a given.

What was supposed to be an empty room, was now the Great Stairway.

With it in front, Subaru folded his arms and sighed. Then—

Subaru: “It kinda feels like it’s been a long time since we last came here.”

Emilia: “Eh? We just found the stairway. What’s wrong all of a sudden?”

Emilia’s eyes widened with surprise at Subaru’s remark.

Subaru shook his head and turned to his companions, with whom together they had experienced the general nastiness the creator of the Tower gave off.

He recollected a bit of peace at the sight of their unchanged faces.

Beatrice: “—? Subaru, why are you wrapping your fingers around Betty’s?”

Subaru: “Kinda wanted to feel like I’m really here… Ahem, I’m good. My bad.”

Faced with a rising suspicion in her face, Subaru forced a smile at Beatrice, but still kept her hand in his.

Then, he turned around and pointed to the Great Stairway.

Subaru: “Now then, getting back on track… The Great Stairway was always here, and no one just really noticed, is not what the case is here, right?”

Julius: “I believe it is quite unthinkable to have not noticed such an obvious spectacle. —However, if it were to be limited to only this room, then I cannot deny that possibility.”

Subaru: “Say what?”

Anastasia: “That uncertainty in the middle of exploration, huh? I get that.”

